Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTHS
BROOKSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, REV. CHARLES
VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Romanism a Corruption of Christianity.

BY PROFESSOR F. W. NEWMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—You send to me your little pamphlet, "Truths for the Times," and invite me, if I understand you, to say whether I agree with it. I am sure you desire that every one will speak his mind out, and therefore I say, shortly, that I agree substantially, and in all that is properly religious; but I do not agree in all that is historical and critical, concerning which I think there is danger that you may dogmatize, as in the past other religionists have dogmatized. Moreover, it crosses my mind (but I say it diffidently and under correction), that the element called odium theologicum may unawares sway you. Of course you understand this phrase. Theologians are charged with hating most those who, without entire agreement, come nearest to them, and enduring more easily an extreme enemy than an almost-friend. So, it is my surmise, you ill endure Unitarian Christians, and are better inclined to admire Romanists. I regard your opinions concerning Romanism to be unhistorical, unjust and pernicious. This is the point to which I address myself. My text naturally consists of the paragraphs which you number twenty-six and twenty-seven. In twenty-six you say that the process which developed the Catholic Theology and Hierarchy "was not, as is claimed, a corruption, but a natural and logical development." Here, I maintain, there is a false contrast. Grant that it was "a natural and logical development;" it will not thence follow that it was not a corruption. Nothing is easier than that it should be both.

If indeed a system is perfectly harmonious within itself, all truly logical deductions from parts of it will forever be in harmony with it, and cannot be corruptions. Yet even so, a disproportionate dwelling on one side of a moral system may so distort its practical results, as to have quite the effect of positive error. But if (as happens to all human systems) inconsistencies are admitted into a religion unknown to the founder, then the most logical developments may be most unjust and disastrous corruptions. John Wesley firmly believed in ghosts; Jonathan Edwards in reprobation; Calvin in the right and duty of religious persecution; Paul saw nothing in slavery that needed a religious protest. If you choose to select the weak points of great and good men, and "logically develop" them, you may produce portentous and hideous errors, which they would have been the first to disown and denounce; which also are violently opposed to their most cardinal teachings. This, I maintain, is to corrupt their doctrine. Their sound sentiment kept a control over their erring intellect; he mere logician who "develops" their errors overthrows the balance. He may do good service in confuting them; but if he pretend that his "developments" are what the preacher intended, he is false and absurd.

Next, the pretended logical developments which produced Romanism are in the most vital points utterly illogical. Coleridge admirably said that the worst errors of the Church of Rome were generated by mistaking rhetoric for logic. "This bread is my body; this cup is my blood." If Jesus ever actually used these words (which is not to me a historical certainty), he undoubtedly meant it as a strong metaphor. The author of the Fourth Gospel, apparently wishing to reprove the very gross interpretation already rising in the church, represents Jesus as saying: on a wholly different occasion (John vi: 33, 51, 53, 54) and as reproofing the material literalism (vi: 63) with which he was understood. Although the Catholic Church has accepted the Fourth Gospel as the writing of the Apostle John, and as pre-eminently valuable (nay, as the sole sufficient basis for Trinitarianism), yet with the grossest stupidity, if not base policy, it has built up Transubstantiation on the texts in the first three gospels.

Again, the worship of the Virgin, and her elevation to an almost divine position, is a logical development out of their other development, which had made a God of Jesus; but it has not a shadow of foundation in Biblical Christianity. I surely need not argue this point.

Then, Trinitarianism took nearly four centuries to elaborate, and nothing can be more illogical than the processes used. First a "Canon" of Scripture is arbitrarily settled, and every part pronounced of equal value and certainty. Books wholly anonymous, and claiming for themselves no special dictation by God, are pronounced to be the divine handwork; and then are commented on and interpreted in the illogical spirit of Rabbinism. The plainest words are forced out of their sense to make them agree with other texts somewhere else. The Hebrew Scriptures are pressed into the service, and all their rhetoric is accepted as logic, whenever convenient, and applied quite uncritically, and, as every Jew will say, falsely. The most positive texts which declare the human nature of Jesus are set aside by the most illogical assumption that contradictions can be and must be simultaneously believed. Human ignorance and weakness (it is pretended) do not exclude Divine omniscience and power. Read the "Athenasian" creed, and ask whether it is "logical." That spurious creed is pre-eminently the creed of the Latin Church of Catholic Rome; the Greek Church was never so frankly illogical. How any opponent of Rome can praise her for her consistent logic, I have never been able to understand, except in the sense of our acute Scotch divine, Dr. Campbell, of Aberdeen, (author of "Lectures on Ecclesiastical History"), who says that Rome, with eminent consistency, in a long series of ages, always took that side in every controversy which would best aid in building up her Power.

When you say (paragraph twenty-two): "Christianity is the historical religion taught in the Christian Scriptures and illustrated in the history of the Christian Church," I find a double fallacy. First, you assume that the history of the Christian Church illustrates the religion taught in the Christian Scriptures. I judge, on the contrary, that it most certainly obscures and depraves it. Next, you speak of "the religion" taught, as if a consistent system were taught. I allow and maintain that much was held in common; but the most prominent doctrines held by James and Paul in common have been thrown over entirely by the Christian Church for sixteen centuries. (To this I shall return.) Also there were strong diversities between James and Paul. Here the Catholic Church and the Roman Church have laid hold of just so much as they pleased, to incorporate and develop. Moreover the Historical Church, since the second century, stands on a totally different foundation from the Apostolic Church—I might perhaps say from the Church of the first five generations. Spiritual freedom and absence of an authoritative letter was the apostolic basis; a Canon and an authoritative Hierarchy are the Catholic basis. The religion preached by Jesus, by James, by Paul, by Peter, by John, (so far as we can learn what is genuine) was above all things a personal religion, addressed to, and to be judged of by, the individual conscience; a religion in which the human soul came into direct and personal contact with the divine. The Catholic religion is essentially a corporate religion, in which the individual soul is receptive of what the priest or "Church" says or does. According to its theory the individual in himself has no spiritual life, or judgment, or contact with God: all depends on sacerdotal intervention.

I say, one has but to read the New Testament, however cursorily, to see that the religion preached by Jesus, and by every apostle was a strictly personal religion. Individuals were called on to listen with their own ears, to judge by their private judgment, to cast aside the creeds or ceremonies in which they had been educated and as it were born, and devote themselves to a nobler morality. Judaism and Christianity alike attracted converts by purer and higher doctrines presented to their intellects and consciences; and nothing can be more opposed to this than to pretend with the Church of Rome that private men must not judge of doctrine, but must look for an external body which is to judge in their stead. No such submission was made to apostles in their lifetime, as has been claimed after their death. The first preachers of Christianity called their hearers to believe in God or in a heavenly Christ; the Romish preacher calls on them to believe "in the Church." (I shall say more of this afterwards.) Paul invited men to spiritual freedom and counted it his main business "to minister the Spirit;" "the Spirit (as he calls it) of wisdom and revelation;" that is, to develop in them a power of spiritual judgment. On the contrary, the Church of Rome invites us to become spiritual slaves, dependent on the priest or director. Paul looked with extreme scorn on hereditary ceremonies, and declares that even those of Moslem, which he believed to have been from God, are carnal ordinances and are repealed by the mere fact of a Christian's higher spiritual teaching. The Church of Rome loads us with ceremonialism and every kind of frippery, from a Cardinal's gold brocade to the Holy Coat of Treves, which, with the apparel of the Hierarchy, was in our recent memory carried in procession, accompanied by the solemn cry, "Holy Coat, pray for us!"

Paul did not preach to his heathen auditors about any sacred book. The books of the New Testament were not written; those of the Hebrews were not held out by him to the Gentiles as authoritative. The Church of Rome grounds her pretensions on two or three misquoted texts of the New Testament, and having thus established her right over the hearer's conscience, kicks the book away, as far as he is concerned. Moreover, however dogmatic in form and tone the precepts of Jesus are, as now handed to us, it is certain that Jesus never intended those precepts to become a sacred letter to future and distant nations; else he must inevitably have taken precautions that his words should be accurately committed to writing and revised by himself. He evidently never thought of providing us with a new authoritative code; for he has left us to guess, as we best may, who wrote what has come to us, and when, and with what means of knowledge; and nothing can be critically clearer than that much presented to us is variously erroneous. The Unitarian Christians, who discern the great inaccuracy with which the words of Jesus are reported, seem to me more logical, more just, more reverential, in sifting and rejecting and holding much with a loose hand, than Catholics and Bibliolators who insist on sticking to the letter. The Church system, built up on the New Testament, ever since the last quarter of the second century, is necessarily quite different in spirit and in basis from that which prevailed before the books of the New Testament were written. Paul's rule (1 Cor. xiv. 29) is: "Let two or three prophets speak [at a single meeting of the church] and let the rest [the private members of the church] judge between (them)." Even prophecy, which he so extols, was not intended to supersede the individual judgment. "Try the spirits, whether they be of God," is the doctrine ascribed to John.

I said that the Church of Rome grounded her pretensions on two or three misquoted texts, in contrast to the statement of paragraph twenty-six, which calls her development "logical." I must verify my words.

The first weapon in her armory is the text—"Hear the Church,"—utterly, absurdly and ridiculously misquoted from Matthew, xviii: 17. Jesus is speaking of two men who have quarrelled, and the authority here vested in "the Church" is not that of pronouncing upon religious doctrines, but of adjudicating in suits of law. He did not speak in Greek, but in the vulgar Hebrew; and it is even possible that by "the Church" he meant the Jewish Synagogue; as James in his epistle (ii: 2) calls the Christian Church—"your synagogue." I say, it is possible that Jesus was teaching his Jewish hearers not to go to law before the Roman tribunals, but to be satisfied with the decision of the synagogue. However, the compiler probably thought that Jesus spoke prophetically of the Christian Church which was to be, and that the precept was practically idle and useless to the immediate hearers. Let us admit that Jesus did speak it, and that the narrative as we have it is correct (though both may be doubtful); what then follows? Why, that in the celebrated formula of the verse immediately following—"Whatsoever ye shall bind in earth shall be bound in heaven,"—Jesus meant simply that the verdict of the Church in worldly quarrels between her members ought to be received as ratified by God; the "Church" being not a hierarchy, but the ecclesia, which means a democratic congregation. Catholics have perverted the meaning of the Greek word ecclesia.

And now for the second cardinal text of the Romanists: "Thou art Peter; and upon this Rock will I build my church; and I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, &c., &c." (Matt. xvi. 18, 19). Suppose that Jesus really uttered this extravagance; to whom did he give this supernatural power? Clearly to Peter. Does he say anything of Peter's successors? Nothing. There is, then, no basis here for any continued hierarchy, even if the Church of Rome could make out (which she cannot) that she is Peter's heiress. I find nothing whatever "logical" in this attempt to step into Peter's place.

Besides which, logic ought surely to criticize. To vest in any man the keys of the kingdom of heaven is in violent contrast to the entire teaching of Jesus; and in the Apocalypse (i. 18) Jesus is represented as saying—"I have the keys of Hades and of Death;" and again more pointedly (iii. 7)—"I am he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth." The Apostle John, whose genuine writing this is, can have had no suspicion that Jesus had given this key to Peter. Also in the "Acts of the Apostles" it is abundantly manifest that no one, at the time of its composition, had any idea that Peter held this wonderful supremacy over all the apostles, and that the church was built upon him, any more than that Jesus was a person of the Divine Trinity. And how does Peter himself speak in his first epistle (which I suppose to be genuine)? Does he assume any special authority? Nay, but he says—"The elders who are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, not to be lords over God's heritage, but ensamples to the flock." And of the Christian people collectively, he says: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, &c." No single element of sacerdotalism appears throughout. If it be denied that this epistle is genuine, yet at any rate it is very ancient, and contains the doctrine received by the Church as Peter's in the second century certainly, earlier than the subjection of the Church to any hierarchy or code.

These two texts, "Hear the Church," and "Thou art Peter," are the foundation stones of the Roman Catholic Church. Grant her the authority of these texts, and her interpretation of them, and she wants no more of the New Testament. Thenceforward she is supreme arbitress and has sufficient resources from the Holy Spirit within herself. It may be necessary for me to confirm what I said above, that Rome does not demand belief in God or Christ or indeed in any definite doctrine, but only belief in the Church. This is most clearly seen in the doctrine of Implicit Belief, which few Protestants understand. It was fully discussed in the Council of Trent. The difficulty to be met was this. Some doctrines of the Church are so puzzling that pious Catholics are liable unawares to fall into heresy. A man means to be a good Athanasian, but unluckily he is so stupid as to receive the Nestorian or the Eutychian heresy—or something else which the Church has anathematized—supposing himself all the while to be a pious Athanasian. Will he then fall under the awful curse of the Church and of God? The reply is, "No; for although he has not explicit faith in the true doctrine, he has implicit (or virtual) faith, inasmuch as he means to believe what the Church believes; and this gives to his implicit faith all the merit of explicit faith." Thus we have the doctrine laid down, that it does not signify what pernicious heresy, cursed by the Church, a man believes, if he do but believe in the Church. Naturally, therefore, I deny your twenty-seventh paragraph, which calls the Romish doctrine the most perfect form of Christianity.

I have yet to remark, on one grand and cardinal doctrine, characteristic of the whole early Church, which the Catholic Church has rejected. It was the kernel and heart of Christianity with James, Paul and John—the belief in the speedy return of Jesus in the clouds of heaven, to set up the kingdom of God on earth and overthrow all the heathen royalities. The first resurrection of saints was to take place at this crisis, who were to be joined with their heavenly Master in judging (i. e. governing) the world. This doctrine kept the first Christians in great indifference to all political events and all attempts to improve the course of the world. To take out of the world a people chosen for God was their sole and sufficient task. To live looking for and hastening unto the coming of that day of God, to keep the faith until Christ's appearing, to wait for God's Son from heaven, to be patient unto the coming of the Lord, to love his appearing—were perpetual exhortations of the apostles; and were enforced by the declaration so often attributed to Jesus, "Behold, I come as a thief." It was inculcated that those were "the last days," "the last time;" that "the time was short." The doctrine pervades the whole New Testament; and most efficacious it was to string up the early Christians into an unearthly exaltation, in which they should live for religion alone, be indifferent to kinsfolk, to country, and to life—take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, and even covet the crown of martyrdom.

But such a religion was not made to last. It was disproved and worn out by the mere passage of time. In the third century it began to yield; in the fourth the millennium, the first resurrection and the reign of the saints, was exploded, though so clearly taught in the Apocalypse and assumed by Paul. No moderns can recover the state of sentiment, judgment and belief, which actuated the Church of the first two centuries. Our very astronomy and geology suffice to make it impossible. But I think it very unjust to deny that of all Christian sects the Unitarians come nearest to the Church of Jerusalem in its general doctrine. The epistle of James and Acts of the Apostles suffice to prove it. The Unitarians do not much agree with Paul; but the doctrine of Paul was vehemently, indeed violently, rejected in the primitive centre of Christianity, which was for a while most influential; and it ought not to be forgotten, especially considering how prominent and important the doctrine of an eternal Hell has been, with the Catholic Church, that the Unitarians were the first in modern times to renounce this, and that, according to any just interpretation of Romans xi. 25—26, the doctrine was no part of Paul's belief. From not understanding this, Augustine, Luther, Calvin and those who are called Calvinists, have done great injustice to Paul's doctrine of election. Paul believed in universal salvation, in the last result, though in the earlier stage there was arbitrary election.

I fear I have been rather diffuse in expounding the ground of my difference from you on this historical question. I think it very mischievous that we, who stand outside of Christianity and seem to be impartial judges of Christian sects, should give moral aid to the most pernicious by far of them all, by avowing that its system is a legitimate development and the perfect form of Christianity. Perhaps you esteem Jesus more than I do. I could not use the language of your paragraph 18. Yet I write with a sort of indignation at the assertion that the Church of Rome logically carries out his doctrines. I judge much of his moral teaching to be exceedingly mean, and much of it fanatical and mischievous; all of which Rome has greedily appropriated. His claim to be Messiah has drawn after it results which he did not foresee, and cannot have wished. I do not palliate the gravity of his error. But to regard a hierarchy, a corporate religion, an outward ceremonial, an earthly kingdom and enslavement of the mind to a code, to be the legitimate development of the religion of Jesus,—does seem to me a great injustice to his memory and in the present state of the Christian mind a hurtful error.

Yours,

FRANCIS W. NEWMAN,

Emeritus Professor of University College, London.

CLIFTON, BRISTOL, Jan. 29, 1872.

NATURE: APHORISMS BY GOETHE.

[By Professor Huxley, in the first number of "Nature," November 4, 1869.]

Nature! We are surrounded and embraced by her: powerless to separate ourselves from her, and powerless to penetrate beyond her.

Without asking, or warning, she snatches us into her dancing dance, and whirls us on until we are tired, and drop from her arms.

She is ever shaping new forms; what is, has never yet been; what has been, comes not again. Everything is new, and yet nought but the old.

We live in her midst and know her not. She is incessantly speaking to us, but betrays not her secret. We constantly act upon her, and yet have no power over her.

The one thing she seems to aim at is individuality; yet she cares nothing for individuals. She is always building up and destroying; but her workshop is inaccessible.

Her life is in her children; but where is the mother? She is the only artist; working up the most uniform material into utter opposites; arriving, without a trace of effort, at perfection, at the most exact precision, though always veiled under a certain softness.

Each of her works has an essence of its own; each of her phenomena a special characterization; and yet their diversity is in unity.

She performs a play; we know not whether she sees it herself, and yet she acts for us, the lookers-on.

Incessant life, development and movement are in her, but she advances not. She changes for ever and ever, and rests not a moment. Quietude is inconceivable to her, and she has laid her curse upon rest. She is firm. Her steps are measured, her exceptions rare, her laws unchangeable.

She has always thought and always thinks; though not as a man, but as Nature. She broods over an all-comprehending idea, which no searching can find out.

Mankind dwell in her and she in them. With all men she plays a game for love, and rejoices the more they win. With many, her moves are so hidden, that the game is over before they know it.

That which is most unnatural is still Nature; the stupidest philistinism has a touch of her genius. Whoso cannot see her everywhere, sees her nowhere rightly.

She loves herself, and her innumerable eyes and affections are fixed upon herself. She has divided herself that she may be her own delight. She causes an endless succession of new capacities for enjoyment to spring up, that her insatiable sympathy may be assuaged.

She rejoices in illusion. Whoso destroys it in himself and others, him she punishes with the sternest tyranny. Whoso follows her in faith, him she takes as a child to her bosom.

Her children are numberless. To none is she altogether miserly; but she has her favorites, on whom she squanders much, for whom she makes great sacrifices. Over greatness she spreads her shield.

She tosses her creatures out of nothingness, and tells them not whence they came, nor whither they go. It is their business to run, she knows the road.

Her mechanism has few springs; but they never wear out, are always active and manifold.

The spectacle of Nature is always new, for she is always renewing the spectators. Life is her most exquisite invention; and death is her expert contrivance to get plenty of life.

She wraps man in darkness, and makes him forever long for light. She creates him dependent upon the earth, dull and heavy; and yet is always shaking him until he attempts to soar above it.

She creates needs because she loves action. Wondrous! that she produces all this action so easily. Every need is a benefit, swiftly satisfied, swiftly renewed. Every fresh want is a new source of pleasure, but she soon reaches an equilibrium.

Every instant she commences an immense journey, and every instant she has reached her goal.

She is vanity of vanities; but not to us, to whom she has made herself of the greatest importance. She allows every child to play tricks with her; every fool to have judgment upon her; thousands to walk stupidly over her and see nothing; and takes her pleasure and finds her account in them all.

We obey her laws even when we rebel against them; work with her even when we desire to work against her.

She makes every gift a benefit by causing us to want it. She delays, that we may desire her; she hastens, that we may not weary of her.

She has neither language nor discourse; but she creates tongues and hearts, by which she feels and speaks.

Her crown is love. Through love alone dare we come near her. She separates all existences, and all tend to intermingle. She has isolated all things in order that all may approach one another. She holds a couple of draughts from the cup of love to be fair payment for the pains of a lifetime.

She is all things. She rewards herself and punishes herself; is her own joy and her own misery. She is rough and tender, lovely and hateful, powerless and omnipotent. She is an eternal present. Past and future are unknown to her. The present is her eternity. She is beneficent. I praise her and all her works. She is silent and wise.

No explanation is wrung from her; no present won from her, which she does not give freely. She is cunning, but for good ends; and it is best not to notice her tricks.

She is complete, but never finished. As she works now, so can she always work. Every one sees her in his own fashion. She hides under a thousand names and phrases, and is always the same. She has brought me here and will also lead me away. I trust her. She may scold me, but she will not hate her work. It was not I who spoke of her. No! What is false and what is true, she has spoken it all. The fault, the merit is all hers.

So far Goethe.

When my friend, the editor of Nature, asked me to write an opening article for his first number, there came into my mind this wonderful rhapsody on "Nature," which has been a delight to me from my youth up. It seemed to me that no more fitting preface could be put before a journal which aims to mirror the progress of that fashioning by Nature of a picture of herself, in the mind of man, which we call the progress of science.

A translation, to be worth anything, should reproduce the words, the sense and the form of the original. But when that original is Goethe's, it is hard, indeed, to attain this ideal; harder still, perhaps, to know whether one has reached it, or only added another to the long list of those who have tried to put the great German poet into English, and failed.

Supposing, however, that critical judges are satisfied with the translation as such, there lies beyond them the chance of another reckoning with the British public, who dislike what they call "Pantheism" almost as much as I do, and who will certainly find this essay of the poet's terribly Pantheistic. In fact, Goethe himself almost admits that it is so. In a curious explanatory letter, addressed to Chancellor von Müller, under date May 26, 1828, he writes:—

"This essay was sent to me a short time ago from amongst the papers of the ever-honored Duchess Anna Amelia; it is written by a well-known hand of which I was accustomed to avail myself in my affairs, in the year 1780, or thereabouts.

"I do not exactly remember having written these reflections, but they very well agree with the ideas which had at that time become developed in my mind. I might term the degree of insight which I had then attained a comparative one, which was trying to express its tendency towards a not yet attained superlative.

"There is an obvious inclination to a sort of Pantheism, to the conception of an unfathomable, unconditional, humorously self-contradictory Being, underlying the phenomena of Nature; and it may pass as a jest, with a bitter truth in it."

Goethe says that about the date of this composition of "Nature" he was chiefly occupied with comparative anatomy, and, in 1788, gave himself incredible trouble to get other people to take an interest in his discovery that man has an intermaxillary bone. After that he went on to the metamorphosis of plants, and to the theory of the skull, and had the pleasure of seeing his work taken up by German naturalists.

The letter ends thus:—

"If we consider the high achievements by which all the phenomena of Nature have been gradually linked together in the human mind, and then, once more, thoughtfully peruse the above essay, from which we started, we shall, not without a smile, compare that comparative, as I called it, with the superlative which we have now reached, and rejoice in the progress of fifty years."

Forty years have passed since these words were written, and we look again, "not without a smile," on Goethe's superlative. But the road which led from his comparative to his superlative has been diligently followed, until the notions which represented Goethe's superlative are now the commonplaces of science—and we have a super-superlative of our own.

When another half-century has passed, curious readers of the back numbers of Nature will probably look on our best, "not without a smile;" and it may be that, long after the theories of the philosophers whose achievements are recorded in these pages are obsolete, the vision of the poet will remain as a truthful and efficient symbol of the wonder and the mystery of Nature.

FREE THOUGHT IN TOLEDO, OHIO.

[From the March number of "The Reasoner; a Secular and Co-operative Review," edited in London by George Jacob Holyoake.]

There are in America many signs of organization of the higher class of Free Thought adherents than are as yet to be found in England. An expression of Mr. Cobden's is well remembered, which was—"That he could put into his drawing-room all the Free-Thinkers of England." Mr. Cobden, most likely, had only in view those persons who boldly took upon themselves the name Free-Thinkers. Undoubtedly—if we count all the great names and voices which show independence of thought—the Free-thinkers form a mighty party. An eminent German visiting England, with very high introductions, was, on his returning, asked by a member of Parliament, what had most struck him in England? He answered, "It was finding many persons of intellect yet believing in Christianity." There are very few now, of any mark in the world of thought, who do not modify Christianity considerably before believing in it. But in America there exists a school, indeed schools, of what we may designate pious Free Thought. THE INDEX, of Toledo, Ohio, edited by Francis E. Abbot, is a representative of Reverential Heresy. Its belief is free from superstition, and it holds at once the doctrine of Theism and Progress. THE INDEX troubles itself more about Christianity than is interesting to us. The Duke of Somerset could not be induced to respect all the Fifty Affirmations this Journal puts forth. We pass wholly by them, as not being within the Secular province. We have no doubt the affirmations have their uses to those whom THE INDEX immediately addresses. Its own editor's professions of opinion have interest for us, and many in England will be glad to read them. Here is one of them:—

"THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and brotherly Love.

"The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussion on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers."

The following are two impressive statements. The first treats of Christianity as a system, the second treats of Free Religion as a system:—

CHRISTIANITY AS A SYSTEM.

"The chief features of this (the Christian) system are the doctrines of the fall of Adam, the total depravity of the human race, the everlasting punishment of the wicked, and salvation by Christ alone. Through the transgression of the first man, all human beings lie under the consuming wrath of God, and are condemned to an everlasting hell, from which the only escape is by the atonement of Christ.

"This system demands absolute and unreasoning submission from the human mind. It teaches that doubt is sin, and that disbelief is damnation. It everywhere condemns freedom of thought, and persecutes it in proportion to its power. It is the worst enemy of liberty, science, and civilization, because it is organized DESPAIR OF MAN."

II. FREE RELIGION AS A SYSTEM.

"The chief features of Free Religion as a system are the supremacy of liberty in all matters of government, the supremacy of science in all matters of belief, the supremacy of morality in all matters of conduct, and the supremacy of benevolence in all social and personal relations. It puts the church on a level with all other institutions, the Bible on a level with all other books, the Christ on a level with all other men, leaving them to stand or fall by their intrinsic merits or demerits.

"This system encourages the largest activity of the human mind, and asks no assent that can be withheld. It is the best friend of progress of every kind, because it is organized FAITH IN MAN."

All this is expressed with a power of thought and discernment which is an addition to Free Thought exposition.

THE INDEX has many terms of tenderness and eulogy of Christianity which we do not quote because we do not care to controvert them, and cannot accept them. Christianity seems the weak point of THE INDEX. Just as Unitarians are fulsome to Christ as an apology for not crediting him with participation in the Godheadship, so THE INDEX seems to overrate Christianity in excusing its departure from it. Here is a fine passage of its own, which shows that THE INDEX needs no excuse or apology for its own independence of faith and thought:—

"The unity of character requires that the intellect shall make experience its point of departure, reason its road, knowledge its goal, and the love of truth its inspiration and guide; that it shall count all questions open which are not shut by positive demonstration; that it shall reject all answers which have no better basis than ignorant assumption or dogmatic authority; and that it shall seek answers to all questions through the patient study of universal Nature according to the laws of scientific thought."

The Investigator, of Boston, America, answers to the National Reformer of this country. THE INDEX represents a different class of Free Thought, as our readers will now perceive. THE INDEX is too naked a title. We took it to be a commercial publication. It needs another word joined to it to show of what it is THE INDEX. The Editor has done us the honor to ask our opinion of its principles. We trust he will see no discourtesy in the freedom with which we have indicated what we dislike as well as the statements we admire. We congratulate Mr. Abbot upon so conducting his work that Canon Kingsley's epigram cannot apply to it. Mr. Abbot's Free thinking is not "Loose Thinking." His Free Thought has the noble passion of propagandism in it. It unites construction to criticism, and its freedom of belief has purpose and dignity in it.

CURIOUS, IF AUTHENTIC.—A writer in an Eastern paper credits the following letter to L'Esperance de Rome:

SAINT THOMAS OF CANTERBURY, {
ST. LEONARD ON THE SEA.
TO M. LOYSON, FORMERLY FATHER HYACINTHE, AT ROME:

SIR,—To call you a liar would be to say nothing new, since the Devil, the father of all such apostates, was a liar from the beginning. To call you a conspirator would be only to recognize your proper aspirations. To call you a Protestant would be only to apply to you an epithet common to all who have opposed the Faith. I prefer, then, to recognize your proper character as a child of Satan, and to call you damned. By this title I salute you, I salute you.

As a priest of the Holy Roman Church, Catholic and Apostolic, I experience a supreme pleasure in awaiting the day of death and of the last judgment, when I shall see you and your collaborators of the Esperance de Rome cast into the pit and its torments forever. When I reflect on the existence of such apostates as you, I bless the justice of God that it provides a hell. Your career and success in this world will probably be brief. Rome will be delivered from such miscreants, and much sooner than you think.

But, oh, what a glory it will be for the Christian Church when the Last Judgment shall publicly justify the condemnation of all apostates, even of one so insignificant as you!

(Signed) REV. ALEX. HENRY.

At the recent session of the New York Methodist Conference, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

Whereas, Communism, the Liquor Interest, and kindred influences, evidently act on the idea that the Sabbath is the chief obstacle in their paths in this country; and

Whereas, Sunday railway trains are among the most powerful of their aids to remove this obstacle; and

Whereas, The Sunday mails are the main excuse for the Sunday trains,

Resolved, 1. That as Christian patriots we hereby protest against the Sunday mails as dangerous alike to our civil and our religious liberty. 2. That we deem this subject of such importance as to demand the attention of the approaching General Conference.

The above is only one of many indications of a general revival of bigotry and intolerance in this country. All such questions as these must be ultimately settled by constitutional law; and they can never be settled favorably to the pretensions of the evangelical Christians of the country, unless the United States Constitution is first amended. Hence the irresistible logic of the appeal now made to all the churches, and through them to the community, by the nascent party of Christianizers. Are the liberals going to let their cause be defeated by their own supineness, indifference, and mole-eyed incredulity? If, having now possession of the ground, they allow themselves to be driven from it in apathy and insensibility to the demands of the times, they will richly deserve the oppression that will follow. O for a "Pentecostal outpouring" of clear-headedness and grit! That would bring us by the first of June a million signatures for the counter-petition, instead of a paltry thirty thousand.

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"Allow me to congratulate you on the success of your efforts thus far, and also to add my mite of one share towards the fulfilment of your wishes. I am sorry I am too late to put my name among those of the first fifty thousand dollars. I did intend subscribing sooner, but was prevented by causes beyond my control. I am a mechanic, working for day's wages; but if an annual instalment of ten dollars will help along the cause of universal religion and lift the masses by taking off their load of senseless bigotry and superstition, I cheerfully give it."

"Between you and me, there is a religion which some folks call 'Christian,' which is pretty much in the same way. The Christian religion (or eaving off 'the,' in deference to Mr. Towne) is a humbug. I can't help that,—facts will report themselves. Go ahead, and puncture all shams—religious ones especially."

"If your creed has anything in it contradictory to known facts which exist in the great volume of Nature, or offensive to reason, it will not suit us. Mystery, miracle, and prophecies we discard as foundations of faith."

"I have been reading Mr. Voysey's lecture on the Bible to an audience of eight,—three Rationalists, three Orthodox, and two liberal Unitarians. They all endorse it."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the new EXPRESS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WHEATON OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

RECEIVED.

HOW THE WORLD WAS POPLED. Ethnological Lectures by Rev. EDWARD FONTAINE, Professor of Theology and Natural Science; Member of the New York Historical Society, and the Academies of Sciences of New Orleans, Baltimore, etc. New York: D. APPLETON & COMPANY, 549 and 551 Broadway. 1873. pp. 311.

THE INVENTOR AND THE IDEALIST. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, preached at Lyric Hall, April 14, 1873. D. G. FRANCIS, 17 Astor Place. 1873.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. Conducted by E. L. Youmans. May, 1873. No. 1. New York: D. APPLETON & Co. $6.00 a year.

OLD AND NEW for May, 1873. Published Monthly. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS, 148 Washington St. $4.00.

THE REASONER: A Secular and Co-operative Review, edited by GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. April, 1873. [London.]

MONSIEUR THOMAS. Blätter für freies sittliches Leben. Eigen-thümer, Herausgeber, und Redacteur FRIEDRICH SCHULTZE, Sprecher der Deutschen Freien Gemeinde von Philadelphia. 1. April, 1873. Jahrgang 1. No. 1. $1.00 jährlich.

MONTHLY SCIENTIST. A Journal of Science, Culture and Progress. April 15, 1873. Rev. LEICHTEN A. SAWYER, Whitesboro, N. Y. $1.50 a year.

HOLLEY STANDARD MONTHLY SOUVENIR. Published by C. & G. F. MARSH, Holley, Orleans Co., N. Y. May, 1874. Vol. 1, No. 1. $1.00 a year.

ADVOCATE OF PEACE for April. Boston: 34 Bromfield St. $1.00 a year.

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE, for April, Chicago: Mrs. M. CORA BLAND, Editor and Proprietor. $1.50 a year.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the Week ending April 27th.—H. H. Austin, $1.10; Jno. Austin, 10 cts.; Giles B. Stebbins, $7; E. B. Elder, $3; W. Wilkinson, $3; J. C. Oehlrich, $1.10; Geo. Blinkhorn, 25 cts.; Thos. L. Sprague, 10 cts.; Jno. Pennington, $1; Hedderly & Vroman, $3; Geo. Blinkhorn, 60 cts.; Geo. O. Black, 60 cts.; D. Thorne, 50 cts.; E. A. Davis, 50 cts.; Thos. Wentworth, 50 cts.; L. F. Haskell, $3; A. Hope Whipple, $3; A. H. Blair, $3; Nathan Taber, $1; Wm. C. Oliver, $2.25; Mrs. M. J. Perry, 60 cts.; Rev. B. S. Huntington, $5; H. E. Mann, $1; Geo. F. Delaplaine, $3; Levi Sharp, 50 cts.; Robt. Avery, $1; Mrs. M. J. Wilcox, 50 cts.; Allen H. Wilson, 50 cts.; New England News Co., $2.11; James McKenzie, 10 cts.; J. F. Ruggles, $1; B. F. Horton, $1.50; G. N. Jennings, $1.25; A. W. Hawley, 50 cts.; Chas. Bonsall, $1; Rev. Z. Masters, 50 cts.; E. C. Sillies, $7.50; D. C. Roundy, $3; T. H. Callahan, 50 cts.; W. Freeman, $5; A. A. Bell, $5; John Jackson, $1.15; T. M. Lamb, $4.25; J. D. Zimmerman, 50 cts.; A. F. Hartman, $1; P. Grapdolph, $3; Ch. Nopper, $1; Ch. Villbauer, $3; L. Tanke, $3; S. S. Linton, $3; L. Sebastian, $3; Ch. Woehler, $3; Ch. Dietman, $3; F. J. Scott, $4; A. Holman, $3; Geo. Stetter, $3; J. T. Mory, $3; A. Stephan, $3; G. Wittstels, $3; Chas. H. Mayhugh, $3; J. D. Zimmerman, $1.00; T. C. Sanders, 50 cts.; S. Maria Person, 10 cts.; Mary C. Shannon, $3; Miss J. F. Titcomb, $3; L. T. Wells, $3; E. T. Sleight, $1; F. Smith, $1; H. W. Rust, $3; A. H. Wallbur, $3; Mrs. E. R. Palmer, $3; R. B. Ranney, $10; Milan Bentley, $1.50; Geo. Plimleigh, $3.50; Wm. T. Miles, $3; American News Company, $4.11; Chas. D. Gambrill, $5; A. A. K. Butte, $101.25; A. S. Wheeler, $5; A. Huff, 10 cts.; J. N. Chonysky, 50 cts.; Elvira Jones, 50 cts.; Peter Leethin, $3; E. H. Welch, $3; H. L. Green, $3.50; Chas. T. Weeks, $3; F. B. Abbot, $150.00; Anna Hancock, $3; Richard Soule, 50 cts.; Parker Pillsbury, $2.50; Chester A. G. senleaf, $3; Wm. D. Balch, $3; J. L. Swayze, $4; H. L. Green, 50 cts.; Achash Thompson, $3; Mary D. Patton, $1; J. Gileky, $3; H. Hockmeyer, $3; M. O. Waggoner, 50 cts.; Chas. Josephus, $3; E. P. Bassett, $3; F. Diebele, 50 cts.; J. M. Cornstock, $3; M. Knight, $1; P. Johnson, 50 cts.; A. Wood, $3; Milan Bentley, 40 cts.; J. M. Smith, $3; Reuben Tomlinson, $3; Wm. A. Parker, 50 cts.; H. S. Mayan, 10 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

Poetry.

TO LIFE.

BY MRS. BARBAULD.

Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear;
Perhaps 'twill cause a sigh, a tear.
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time:
Say not good night, but in some higher clime
Bid me good morning.

The Index.

MAY 4, 1872.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000.

SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 30, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000			One Share, 100
THOMAS MUMFORD,	New Harmony, Ind.,	One	Share,	100
D. AYRES, J.R.,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT,	Evansville, Ind.,	One	Share,	100
—	Dedance, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
J. T. BRADY,	Bryan, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
—	Sabetha, Kan.,	One	Share,	100
MAX FRAGOT,	Northampton, Mass.,	One	Share,	100
O. —	Cincinnati, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
H. HETTERMANN,	Boston, Mass.,	One	Share,	100
C. FOLSOM,	Toledo, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
B. C. EASTMAN,	Zanesfield, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
J. O. MARTIN,	Palmyra, Mo.,	One	Share,	100
L. T. IVES,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	One	Share,	100
E. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit, Mich.,	Two	Shares,	200
A. FOLSOM,	Detroit, Mich.,	Two	Shares,	200
W. F. HEIKES,	Dayton, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
HERMAN COLT,	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
SAMUEL COLT,	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
CHARLES NASH,	Worcester, Mass.,	Two	Shares,	200
—	Livonia, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
E. F. WOODARD,	Osborn, Ohio,	Two	Shares,	200
H. A. MILLER,	Mt. Carroll, Ill.,	One	Share,	100
J. W. BARTLETT,	Dover, N. H.,	One	Share,	100
OSCAR ROOS,	Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	One	Share,	100
MRS E. S. MILLER,	Geneva, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
JAS. R. STONE,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
D. K. INNER,	—	Five	Shares,	500
A. TAFT,	—	One	Share,	100
B. L. WILDER,	—	One	Share,	100
PETER H. CLARK,	—	One	Share,	100
G. K. WITTINGTON,	—	One	Share,	100
J. T. SUTTON,	—	One	Share,	100
WALT. F. AUGUSTIN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	One	Share,	100
MRS C. E. NOURSE,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two	Shares,	200
JAS. FISCHER,	Shreveport, La.,	One	Share,	100
G. B. HOLTZMAN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	One	Share,	100
L. VON BLESERHOFF,	N. Y. City,	Five	Shares,	500
W. H. BOUGHTON,	—	One	Share,	100
W. P. CHAMBERLAIN,	—	One	Share,	100
TITUS L. BROWN,	Binghamton, N. Y.,	One	Share,	100
A. McD. YOUNG,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	One	Share,	100
G. W. PECKHAM,	—	One	Share,	100
C. T. HAWLEY,	—	One	Share,	100
W. H. FISCHER,	—	One	Share,	100
MRS. G. D. NOURSE,	—	Five	Shares,	500
MORT. C. SPENCER,	—	One	Share,	100
C. M. LAWLER,	—	One	Share,	100
E. R. LELAND,	—	One	Share,	100
W. M. BLACKMORE,	Patneville, Ohio,	One	Share,	100
R. H. RANNEY,	Boston, Mass.,	One	Share,	100
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,	New York, N. Y.,	Five	Shares,	500

$37,400

The leading article of our present issue is by Professor Francis W. Newman, and discusses a subject which we are very glad to see treated by so able and distinguished a writer,—namely, the question whether Roman Catholicism is a development or a corruption of Christianity. Although he gives an answer to this question which we are unable to regard as the correct one, we most cordially welcome his article to our columns, and bespeak for it the closest attention of our readers. It is our intention next week to say something in support of what we consider the correct answer to that question, which in our opinion is one of great importance. We regret the delay in the publication of Prof. Newman's valuable paper, but reasons unnecessary to rehearse made it unavoidable.

Mr. Pillsbury, in a recent visit to Toledo, said to us that, in recommending THE INDEX to persons unacquainted with it, he warned them not to expect light reading; "because," to use his own pithy language, "THE INDEX pays its readers the compliment of supposing them to have brains." From the rapidity with which its circulation is increasing, we suspect that brains are at par.

FOR OR AGAINST.

The relationship which true liberals ought to sustain towards Christianity is a subject of increasing thought among them. We submit the following points as worthy of earnest reflection from all those of them who, as a matter of conscience, resolutely repel the influence of sentimental or personal considerations.

1. All branches of the Christian Church which have collectively declared their faith, from the great Catholic hierarchy down to the tiny Unitarian sect, unite with one voice in affirming that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God, the Savior of the world and the Divinely appointed Lord of every soul. Except in the case of a few individuals among the "Liberal Christians" who disregard the meaning attached to this "Christian Confession" by all the rest of the world, this one fundamental article of the Christian religion is held to include at least the absolute sinlessness, the absolute infallibility, and the absolute authority of the Christ. The words of Jesus are held to be above the possibility of error; his will, as revealed in the Scriptures or the Church, is held to be the supreme law of God, binding all Christians to obedience not only in their outward conduct, but also in their most secret thoughts and feelings.

2. To doubt the infallibility or to question the authority of the Christ, as just explained, is to strike a blow at the central idea of Christianity, as held unanimously by the Church. To reject deliberately any one of his sayings, as recorded, or to own the authority of any law whatsoever as superior to his will, is to resist and defy its fundamental claims. Whether Jesus ever really said what is put into his mouth by the Bible or the Church, is of no consequence. The Christian religion, as an acknowledged, organized force in history, forbids that question to be raised; and he who raises it is already a "rebel" in his heart. Beyond what the Bible and the Church declare to have been his commands, no means exist of knowing what they were. To dispute them as thus delivered is to put oneself at once above his religion; for he who undertakes on his own independent judgment to decide what the law is, makes the law himself instead of accepting it.

3. Towards Christianity, therefore, there can really be but one of two consistent attitudes. He who accepts unreservedly the revealed will and words of Jesus as explained by the Church, and does not venture to test the revelation, either as to its substance or its form, by his own independent reason, is the only thoroughly consistent Christian. He who cannot or will not thus accept it is, in spite of his own toying with words, a non-Christian. Between acceptance and rejection there is no mean. The only apparent mean is a confused mingling of the two. The moment that Luther protested against the Catholic Church in the name of his own reason, he began to be a non-Christian; and the imperfect protest then heard clearly for the first time can never be arrested until it ultimates in conscious, complete and consistent rejection of Christianity as an authoritative religion.

4. But this is not all. The distinction is sometimes drawn between "extra-Christians" and "anti-Christians." It is not meaningless, since it indicates a difference of degree in active opposition to Christianity. The "extra-Christian" is one who rejects in toto the authority of Christianity so far as he is personally concerned; but he makes no protest against it in behalf of others, confining his protest to the assertion and exercise of his own individual liberty. The "anti-Christian" is one who not only emancipates himself, but demands emancipation for the world also, declaring open war against a religious system which he finds to be an insupportable tyranny in his own case, and which he believes ought to be insupportable by every human being. Strictly speaking, therefore, the "extra-Christian" is an "anti-Christian" to some extent, since his very "extra-Christian" position is a practical protest against Christianity in an individual instance. The only difference is that the avowed "anti-Christian" enlarges this protest so as include all mankind, and demands for the whole world that freedom which he finds so sweet and precious for himself.

Need we say, then, that we regard the "anti-Christian" position as the truer and the nobler? If freedom is good for one, ought it not to be good for all? And ought we not to do our best to extend to the entire race the blessings which, in our own case, we would throw away life itself rather than lose?

To this conclusion have we been compelled by the logic of thought and of events. At first we tried only to be a "non-Christian," having been driven from the religious home in which we were born through ecclesiastical encroachments to which self-respect forbade us to submit. We tried to be satisfied with our own liberty, and to leave others in the slavery they manifestly preferred. But the ghastliest curse of slavery is that it breeds self-content in degradation; and the longer we have been free from the slavery of Christianity, the more clearly we discern its baneful power in robbing men of their native manhood, in crippling their minds and misdirecting their wills and darkening their consciences. We have been obliged, on pain of forfeiting the approval of conscience, to make our protest against Christianity not in our own name, but in the name of humanity itself.

We do not wish to insult the sincere convictions of the community or to outrage its religious sentiments—least of all to lower its moral tone or to impoverish its spiritual life. The task at hand has no attractions except those which are inseparable even from the humblest and hardest duty. But, impossible as it is to perform this task without arousing bitter and violent resentments, the work of emancipation, education and enlightenment must go on. Argument, ridicule, sarcasm, persuasion, appeal, and every other weapon in the armory of thought that is not dipped in malice or falsehood, are all for use in this warfare; and the banners of Truth will most rapidly advance in the battle when all liberals shall discern and accept the inevitable duty. No man can affirm the great universal truths of Free Religion without opposing the tyranny of Christianity and every other special religion; and no man can work for the former without working against the latter. To free the captive involves breaking the chain; and, although breaking is not in itself beautiful work, they who are too pre-occupied, inert, or indifferent to help break the chain practically conspire with the oppressor in strengthening its iron links.

Shall the world be freed from spiritual slavery, and blessed with liberty and light? Then help to break the chain!

MORE PETITIONS.

Since our last issue we have received the following lists of names to the remonstrance against the proposed Christian Amendment:—

Mr. A. H. Blair, Texas, Ohio, sends seven names (obtained mainly by Mr. W. J. Crozier); Mr. John Hammett, Ceresco, Nebraska, twenty-five; Mrs. B. R. Palmer, Geneva, New York, eleven; Dr. S. S. Wilder, Cincinnati, Ohio, twenty-eight; Mr. T. C. Sanders, Westfield, Pennsylvania, forty-six; Mr. Albert S. Brown, Worcester, Massachusetts, thirty-three; Mr. E. F. Blaisdell, Winterport, Maine, five; Mr. N. T. Bomar, Gainesville, Texas, twenty-six; Mr. William H. Franklin, Northport, Michigan, nineteen; Mr. E. D. Church, Ashfield, Massachusetts, thirty-five; Rev. G. W. Richmond, D. D., Pinfield, Michigan, thirty-three.

In addition to the above, Col. Edward A. Davis, of Philadelphia, has sent eight hundred and fourteen names, appended to a remonstrance differently worded from that we have circulated, but to the same purport. Most of these names were obtained by various parties to whom Col. Davis forwarded printed copies of this modified remonstrance. The rest were signed at his office. When we first published our counter-petition and solicited signatures, some of the Philadelphia radicals, although cordially approving its general object, objected to the phrase—"dismiss all petitions,"—as not consistent with proper respect for the right of petition; and they therefore preferred a remonstrance differently expressed. Of course we intended nothing inconsistent with the largest liberty or most clearly recognized right of petition; nor do we now exactly understand the objection raised. But the phraseology used is a matter of no consequence in comparison with the general ends to be attained. The Philadelphia remonstrance to which the eight hundred and fourteen signatures were appended is as follows:—

Your petitioners, Citizens of the United States, have reason to believe that a formidable combination has been made to overturn the Constitution of the Nation, by the introduction of the theological and religious tests in the preamble and body of the fundamental law. We do therefore protest against the introduction of any such tests, and pray your Honorable Bodies that you will repel this radical innovation, as dangerous to the peace of the country; and that you will preserve inviolate to us, and our posterity.

the guarantees of religious liberty contained in the preamble, constitution and laws of the United States, under which the people of every Church, Creed and Belief may, as heretofore, enjoy equal religious security and peace.

This raises the total aggregate of names acknowledged in THE INDEX to over THIRTY THOUSAND.

F. M. A. ANNIVERSARY.

The Free Religious Association will hold its annual meeting as usual in Boston in Anniversary week, beginning in Parker Fraternity Hall on Thursday evening, May 30, and continuing its sessions the next day in Tremont Temple. Fuller particulars will be given in THE INDEX hereafter, as in the Boston journals. But it is desired thus early to call the attention of readers of THE INDEX who are distant from Boston to this meeting. This is the anniversary of the American Free Religious Association. It is not merely a Boston or New England society. It has members in California, in Louisiana, in Iowa, and in all the States between Iowa and Boston,—a membership not numerous indeed, but widely scattered and widely representative. Let some of these distant members try to be at the annual meeting. Let us come together from various parts of the country and compare notes. May and June are good months for visiting Boston. The Peace Jubilee soon follows Anniversary week, and everybody will want to be at that. And let our distant friends who come to the annual Convention fail to make themselves known to the officers of the Association. The Association has no "delegate" system—asks for no "credentials." It is a mass meeting. Let all interested and able to do so, come. Arrangements are in progress that promise a good Convention.

W. J. P.

A LAST REFUGE.

An able, thoughtful, and conscientious writer who repudiates all attempts to fasten a dogmatic peculiarity upon Christianity, but is unwilling to admit that it possesses no moral or spiritual peculiarity, enshrines the soul of the faith in a new statement, thus: Christianity shares with other religions its grand intellectual features, and even its leading sentimental qualities; it has no monopoly of lofty ideas or profound principles, but, like the other great faiths of mankind, has in its veins the red blood of common humanity. Its peculiarity does not consist in any original revelations of knowledge, principle, experience, but in a certain strong emphasis it lays on humane qualities, such as kindness, peacefulness, charity, goodness, long-suffering, brotherly love—qualities which all religions celebrate, but celebrate faintly. These qualities, says the writer, Christianity exalts to supreme honor. To use his own expressive and admirable simile—"Christianity weaves into a garment what other religions append to their garments as a fringe."

The task of hunting faith from its delicious hiding places is not a pleasant one; but it must be undertaken by those on whom it has been imposed. We grieve to take away the pillow from beneath a weary head; but the head will never be unpillowed—we may be certain of that.

Does Christianity make a garment of what other religions use as a fringe? Greek Christianity does not; Roman Christianity does not; Anglican Christianity does not; the Christianity of Luther, of Calvin, of Wesley, of George Fox, does not. We are all familiar with the term "filthy rags" as applied to these royal robes of goodness which the writer in the Golden Age holds so precious. We have heard the famous hymn, "Rock of Ages," sung as originally written, in a Unitarian church, and cordially approved of by the minister. They who remember that mellifluous and sanguinary piece of verse,—as who do not?—will appreciate the readiness implied to accept the new statement respecting the peculiarity of the Christian faith. At the last meeting of the "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian churches"—the meeting at which Mr. Hepworth strove, and so successfully as he boasted at the time, to commit the assembled delegates to some kind of dogmatic confession—a proposal to specify the love of God and the love of man as the characteristic of the religion was treated with hearty disrespect; was not thought worth entertaining, or talking about. The most attenuated form of Christianity extant was not ready for such a definition as that. Primitive Christianity, if we know anything about it (and we do know a great deal), would have repudiated with strong expressions of amazement so mild and colorless an interpretation of its cardinal thoughts. It is doubtful, to say the least, whether Jesus himself would have accepted it. The question is under discussion and far enough from settled. Even if we rule out the fourth gospel, the case, as both conservative and radical scholars have presented it, is by no means favorable to the new school of humanitarians. The dogmatic stain cannot be quite washed out of the garments of the Nazarene.

In fact the statement made by the writer in the Golden Age might be reversed. Other religions have laid more stress than Christianity does, on the moral and humane qualities. Judging from recent disclosures of it by Max Müller, Beal and others, Buddhism does; Confucianism certainly does. The intelligent religion of China is far less dogmatic than our own, even when most freely apprehended. It is as difficult for the devout Hindu or Chinaman to get into the theological state as for us to get out of it. If Christianity only were what earnest and good men would like to have it! But it is not, and we must judge it as it is, not as in our opinion it ought to be, but as it is. It is no conjectural or speculative or ideal system whose peculiarities are yet to be discovered, but a historical faith nearly two thousand years old, interpreted by institutions, monuments, books innumerable. It is by study, not by surmise, that we learn what it is. We cannot construct it out of our consciousness; it has a consciousness and a very definite one of its own, and records enough to show us what it is. We may not sympathize with it, but we must not falsify it, and we cannot correct it.

O. B. F.

FAIRNESS AMONG RELIGIONS.

I lately said a few words in reference to the importance of a fair and respectful attitude toward the religion of other nations, and especially of those Asiatic peoples whose whole thought and life have heretofore been so strange to us, but who are now by the researches of scholars, and by the wonderful political and social events which have opened communication with them, becoming familiar to our minds and lives.

On taking up a new book entitled "The Land of the Veda," by Rev. William Butler, D. D., I was struck anew with the barrier which sectarian prejudice is constantly raising against this mutual respect and good understanding. The whole passage from the 88th to the 94th page is too long to be quoted; but in it Dr. Butler represents the Vedas as of very little intellectual value, and the religion they teach as one of pure sensuality. He calls it—"This mystery of iniquity and sensuality, where saints and gods, male and female, hold high orgies amid the fumes of intoxicating liquor, with their singing and screaming and the challenging by which they urge one another on to deeper abasement, until at length decency retires and leaves them glorying in their shame."

Now we will go no farther than Mr. Clarke's "Ten Great Religions" for an answer to this passage, both because it is so readily accessible, and since, however liberal and fair-minded Mr. Clarke is as a scholar, he speaks always from a Christian stand-point and cannot be suspected of exaggerating the merits of the Vedas or the Brahminical religion. His whole chapter on Brahminism is so short and so good that it is worth reading by any one who is disturbed by Dr. Butler's remarks. He says:—"Brahminism glows through and through with this spirituality; its literature, no less than its theology, teaches it." And again:—"The highest of all virtues is disinterested goodness, performed from the love of God, and based on the knowledge of the Veda. A religious action performed from hope of reward, in this world or the next, will give one a place in the lowest heaven. But he who performs good actions without hope of reward, 'perceiving the supreme soul in all beings and all beings in the supreme soul, fixing his mind on God, approaches the divine nature.'"

Once more, he says:—"Drinking intoxicating liquor, except in the Soma sacrifice, is strictly prohibited; and it is even declared that a Brahman who tastes intoxicating liquor sinks to the low caste of a Sudra."

Does Dr. Butler, in his condemnation of the revelry of the Vedas, forget that drinking wine is a part of the most holy Sacrament of Christianity, and that the king of Madagascar felt obliged to forbid the introduction of Christianity into his dominions because of its sacramental use of intoxicating liquor? Does he forget that one part of Keshub Chunder Sen's mission to England was to improve the people of England to aid in putting down the intemperance introduced into India by English Christians? Would he consent to have Christianity judged either by passages which might be culled from its literature in favor of such indulgences or from the practice of its professors? Keshub Chunder Sen is far too broad and liberal to do so. No writer has presented the best and purest spirit of Christianity more truly than he; and yet Dr. Butler alludes to him as among "men who have the impertinence to assume a patronizing aspect toward Christianity, and superciliously inform us that, however good or pure our faith is in itself, its doctrine and services are not needed in India, because the 'Holy Vedas' contain all that is requisite for the regeneration of their country."

It seems to me the impertinence is entirely on the other side, and that Keshub Chunder Sen and his associates of the Brahmo Somaj are quite as good judges of what is needed for India as a man who professes to see no salvation for any one but in his own narrow creed. At any rate, they are doing a great work for India in the destruction of the greatest practical evil of the Brahminical system, the existence of caste. Dr. Butler is forcible in his description of this enormity; but how many of the Christian churches or sects in our country have the right to cast a stone even at Indian laws of caste?

Just after reading these passages in Dr. Butler's book, I chanced to open Plutarch's Morals, and found there an interesting illustration of the misconception of the religion of other nations even by so enlightened and liberal an observer as Plutarch. In answer to the question—"What God is worshipped by the Jews?" he maintained that their God is Bacchus, and says:—"The Jews themselves testify no less; for when they keep the Sabbath, they invite one another to drink till they are drunk, or, if they chance to be hindered by some weighty business, it is the fashion at least to taste the wine." As Evangelical Christians accept the God of the Jews as the same as the God of the New Testament, we do not see that their religion makes a more respectable appearance in the world's literature than that of the Brahmins.

An American boy said to one of the Japanese students:—"Yours is a very silly religion." "Perhaps in Japan they think the same of yours," answered the Asiatic. Very possibly they do.

In nobler spirit a Calvinist clergyman once said to me:—"I cannot bear to see the irreverence with which a Hindu idol is shown at a missionary meeting. It has represented God to a living soul."

This is one ground of respect for all sincere and genuine religions, however erroneous in speculation or absurd in form; they have represented the Divine to the human soul.

E. D. C.

THE MISERIES OF ENGLISH LABOR.

LONDON, March 28.

Nothing excites more admiration in the mind of a foreigner newly arrived in England than the beauty of the cultured landscape. I remember, in my own experience, having left America in early April covered with snow, with what delight I looked upon England smiling with her garb of spring, the larks mounting up from every hill and meadow. From Liverpool to London we glided through estates and farms that seemed to have been finished off with the pencil rather than the plough. Every group of trees seemed trimmed to be the bower of a wood nymph. The roads were clean and adorned with trees, the lanes fringed with osage orange hedges or blossoming white-thorn. It was a picture of peace and plenty. Ten years have passed since then and now I glide through the same country-places with far different feelings. For in that time I have been compelled to take note of what all this beauty costs. Now, knowing the condition of the agricultural laborer in England, I shudder at the green trees; their roots are deep in human hearts. The corn no longer smiles; it is watered with human blood. The best roads are the worst; they are paved with the bones and brains of men, women and children. Cedric the Saxon has made way for Hodge the ploughman; the brass collar of the former, with his master's name on it, has become less visible on the latter; but it is none the less there, none the less galling. Hodge is equally a serf,—adscriptus glebe. I know that it has been for a long time the complacent delusion of the London gentleman that such is not the case. I remember that when, long ago, the Southerners in America declared that the condition of their slaves was not so bad as that of the English laborer, we all thought it a clever bit when Punch added, in ironical proof of the allegation, a grave statement that it was the practice in England, whenever a laborer tried to improve his condition by running off to another county or country, to prosecute him under a Fugitive Laborer's Bill and force him to return to his master.

We made good use of that joke in old anti-slavery times. We did not dream that the joke would turn out a grave fact. But two or three years ago a philanthropic clergyman in Devonshire—Canon Girdlestone—moved with pity by the sufferings around him of the agricultural laborers in their effort to support their families on seven shillings a week, discovered that one cause of the excessively low wages was that Devonshire was glutted with laborers, and that several other counties were in want of more farm labor than they could get. Whereupon the philanthropic Canon, in the innocence of his heart, started a movement for the transfer of the suffering laborers of Devon to other counties where they might get better wages. He fondly deemed that the kind-hearted gentry around him would second his efforts. With what result? He was denounced as an agitator, an instigator of feud between rich and poor; he was threatened by the squires, ennobled by the aristocracy, persecuted by the clergy. He was treated pretty much as was the occasional abolitionist who started up in Virginia or Kentucky. His movement failed, and it was then perceived that the landed gentry of England looked upon their laborers as their serfs. They wanted labor at seven shillings a week, not only because it left them their capital, but because it rendered the laborer more hopelessly their property,—him and his vote. Never was a human being bound to a more dreary lot. On a crust of bread, and some hot water, with a spoonful of tea cast into it for the whole family, he supports a weakly existence; he never sees other meat during the week than possibly a bit of fried pork on Sundays; he lives in a floorless hut, thatched with long rotten straw, mouldy with lichens, the whole resembling an overgrown mushroom; at forty his children are sickly, his wife consumptive and from a blooming maiden has become a yellow, bony hag under the evil eye of drudgery; he is crooked up with rheumatism at forty-five, and ten years later passes, probably with his wife (if she be living), to the poor house; leaving the same infernal routine to be repeated by his descendants, not to the third and fourth generation—but for evermore.

The plan of combination between laborers to maintain a kind of pecuniary capital on which to rest when it become necessary to confront any oppression on the part of the employers, has not hitherto been available to the agricultural laborers. They dwell too far apart. They were kept from learning to read and write almost as carefully as the American slaves used to be. They had no leisure, even had they been able to read the papers and observe what was being accomplished by other laborers. They could not communicate with each other, or form any plan of concerted action. So the aristocracy and landed gentry, maintaining their bulwarks around their serfs—bulwarks built out of the poverty and ignorance of those serfs—fancied that they would be secure from the deluge of rising popular aspirations for many a long year. But far earlier than they dreamed the blow has fallen. Very significantly—and very ominously—the first serious agricultural laborers' strike in this country has occurred in a region where that kind of labor is better paid than in half the kingdom. It is not among the wretched hinds of Devonshire or Cornwall, nor among the half-savage workers in the fens of Norfolk and Lincolnshire, that this remarkable agitation has begun; but in Warwickshire, whose laborers might have been supposed enviable. True, they had to support their always large families on an average of no more than three dollars a week,—a pitiful sum with every good loaf selling at fifteen cents, and butcher's meat at twenty cents a pound, yet twice as much as many get. But the fact is that this superiority of wages in Warwickshire, while not enough to relieve the misery, was enough to just raise the laborer a little bit so as to make him conscious of his misery. The few shillings more brought a little more self-respect, a pennyworth of education for his children. He made the sad discovery one day that he and his family were—in hell! In hell—alone with Sisyphus rolling up his ever-recoiling stone, Ixion fast-bound on his never-pausing wheel, Tantalus hungry and athirst grasping after ever-receding food and water—he certainly was, and is, and now he strikes a gallant blow to get out of it.

I am tempted to strike out the classical allusions I have just made, lest you should think I am laying colors needlessly thick on the sad picture which the last week has laid before us. But instead I will add a few facts which will prove that I have understated the case, if anything. I select statements of the receipts and necessary expenditures of two families in the best parts of Warwickshire,—statements for whose accuracy I will vouch.

Here is one case; the family consists of seven persons:—

Wages—Father's 12s.; oldest son's 3s.	20 15 0
The week's bread and flour	20 9 4
1 cwt. coal	0 11
Schooling for children	0 8
Rent of allotment (1 chain)	0 0 1
	20 10 8
Leaving for butcher's meat, tea, sugar, soap, lights, pepper and salt, clothes for seven persons, boots and shoes for the same, beer, medicine, &c., &c.	20 4 4

This is at Wellesbourne; here is an average case at Barford. There are seven in the family; no child (the eldest being nine) old enough to earn wages:—

Wages	20 13 0
College per week	20 1 6
Thirteen loaves at 1½d each	0 9 1½
3 Children at school	0 0 2
Leaving for food, clothing, and all other purposes	20 2 3½

Is this bad? It is, I repeat, exactly half as bad as the case of the hinds of Devonshire and elsewhere in the South of England. And this makes the terrible-ness of the Warwickshire movement. The agricultural laborers there having broken down under circumstances far better than those under which their brethren groan in many other parts of the kingdom, it is felt by the employers that, if this strike should succeed, it will be repeated everywhere, it will spread like wild-fire, and can end in nothing short of a revolution in the condition of labor in the counties of England. The whole land is covered with stubble for a conflagration such as that which has broken out. One can as little tell what will come of it, as the boy at Chicago when the cow kicked over the lamp (as an ancient legend relates) could predict what would be the result. The aristocratic institutions of England are founded on land, and upon the dominion of land over the life and death, and thus over the conscience and political power of the laborer, who, as a force in church and state, exists only in, and acts only through, the will of the employer. The master says generously to the tenant on his farm:—"Think and speak just as you please. Your house it is that I am concerned about; that must support the Church and the party of its owner. If you cannot see that the house does that, it must hold somebody who can. The vote follows the land." All the laws against bribery, intimidation, &c., have not availed to end these ancient privileges of land. So the agricultural laborer never thought; he has never had any use for thoughts. As Ben Franklin said when the property-qualification was under discussion—"If a man votes because he owns a donkey, it is his donkey that votes, not he." So all the political power of the millions of suffering agricultural laborers amounts to so many ciphers swelling the value of the leading numeral at their head.

Ciphers! As I used the word inadvertently, there came again into my memory something I once witnessed in the Lunatic Asylum at Colney Hatch. I was walking through that famous institution (which plays a part in Charles Reade's "Hard Cash"), and stopped in a room which had been vacated the day before by the death of its inmate. "Here is a curious room!" said the official who conducted us; and sure enough it was; the departed lunatic had left his room frescoed with pictures of no mean power. "He had been," said our guide, "an agricultural laborer; he asked for paints and a brush, and we indulged him, but I had no idea he could draw and paint so well. He might have made a good artist." There were pleasant country scenes; bridges passing over pleasant streams; portraits of distinguished men. But there was one face which this lunatic had portrayed over the mantle-piece which I shall never forget. It was a man in the dress of a farm-hand. His brow was low and lowering; his eyes brutal, his jaws heavy and animal; his complexion brown and rough as a tree's bark. In the face there was hardly one spark of humanity, though there were traces of where such sparks had sunk into cold ashes, leaving the brutal part sole ruler. And under this fearful portrait the lunatic had written just before he died these words:—"The British agricultural laborer, as he is fast becoming under the influence of the British aristocracy."

M. D. C.

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE REVIEW (No. 1, May, 1872—D. Appleton & Co.) promises to be a magazine of great value to the daily increasing class of persons who, without being specially versed in science, desire to be made acquainted with its general results and methods. It is to be edited by Prof. E. L. Youmans, a gentleman quite competent to conduct such a periodical with skill and success. The opening number contains articles (original or selected) by Herbert Spencer, R. A. Proctor, T. W. Fowle, E. B. Tylor, William Eassie, A. De Quatrefages, Arthur Leared, L. O. Pike, W. B. Cheadle, T. M. Coan, with the Editor's Table, Literary Notices, Miscellany, and Notes. We anticipate a wide demand for this admirable monthly.—Price 50 cents a number, or $6.00 a year. Subscriptions received by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

It is impossible for us to devote space or time to notices of pamphlets or periodicals in general. But we take this opportunity to say that the Radical, the Aldine, and the Journal of Speculative Philosophy stand each at the head of its own special department in this country. The Radical is the best monthly exponent of free thought, and is now publishing an exceedingly valuable series of papers by Mr. Frothingham on the "Religion of Humanity." It is edited by Mr. S. H. Morse, who has devoted himself to it for seven years with rarest self-abnegation and fidelity. Price $3.00 a year; address 25 Bromfield street, Boston.

The Aldine is devoted to art, and is conducted with such enterprise and signal ability as to merit the encomiums of every lover of the beautiful. It is without a peer in this country, and must be seen to be appreciated. Price $5.00 a year; address James Sutton & Co., 23 Liberty street, New York.—The Journal of Speculative Philosophy, edited by Mr. Wm. T. Harris, is the pioneer in a field of thought little cultivated as yet by Americans. It is familiarizing the more reflective with the works of Kant, Fichte, Schelling, Hegel, Schopenhauer, Trendelenburg, and the other conspicuous philosophers of Germany; and it is paving the way for a development of philosophy, under new conditions, which will assume as yet undreamed proportions. Whoever is sufficiently educated to know the necessity of metaphysics, and to smile at the ignorant cavils of those who affect to be superior to abstract speculation, will find matter of sterling value in every number of this periodical. Price $2.00 a year; address E. P. Gray, St. Louis.

THREE CENTURIES OF ENGLISH LITERATURE (D. Appleton & Co.), by Prof. Yonge, of Queen's College, Belfast, is a smaller work than Taine's, and is marked less by brilliancy than by good judgment and discrimination. The selections are made with excellent taste, and accompanied, not only by generally correct criticisms, but also by very useful biographical notices of the respective authors. Some such manual as this should be laid in the way of every young person, that he may be induced, by enjoyment of the beauties here collected into a bouquet, to undertake the healthful task of hunting others for himself in the original field or wood. Of course no matured mind is contented permanently to follow the guidance of another's taste in the appreciation or selection of an author's finest passages. Some of our favorites we miss in this volume; but we have come across no extract that we would exclude from this goodly company. The manner, however, in which Prof. Yonge refers to the scepticism of Shelley is unworthy of the age we live in. We fear that it will be very long before the narrowness bred in the bones by "Christian" education will be got rid of in our literature. The reference to Gibbon's scepticism is less harsh; but the best that the writer can say of it is that "he is perhaps to be pitied rather than blamed for it." Such "pity" is an offence. Between it and "blame" the free mind will choose the latter; for while unjust blame can be treated with quiet contempt, there is a faint suspicion of benevolence in self-righteous pity which renders it peculiarly exasperating to the nerves of one who would treat even a minimum of benevolence with decent respect.—Price $2.00; for sale by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

The Orange (N. J.) Chronicle, of April 20, has the following genial paragraph:—

Will the editor of THE INDEX allow us to correct a slight error in his list of publishers' notices? We are always willing to be quoted, but human nature like, do not want to be misrepresented. The notice following a genuine notice from the Chronicle, headed "From the same," we are hardly willing to father, inasmuch as it not only contradicts the sentiments of the first, but it is too equivocal and uncomplimentary to accord with our feelings toward that stout little advocate of free thought and free religion, THE INDEX.

The error referred to was in the SUPPLEMENT to our No. 120, at the top of the second column of the second page; and we thank the editor of the Chronicle for calling our attention to it. It is almost a temptation to make a mistake now and then, in order to have it so kindly and gracefully pointed out.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

"THE ONE ALTOGETHER LOVELY."

DEAR SIR:—

I observe by the Christian Register that Mr. Washburn wants the name of one who was as good as Jesus among the "thousands" that Father Taylor spoke of. It is easier to ask questions than for dead men to answer them.

I wonder if Mr. Washburn ever read "Christ the Spirit," by a General in the army now dead also. If not, it is time he did.

BUCK-SHOT.

DOVER, N. H., April 14, 1873.

DEAR FRIEND:—

The various criticisms on THE INDEX contained in your SUPPLEMENT to No. 120 are certainly amusing, and suggest a few words of reply to several misguided and misguiding gentlemen.

To the Avalanche, Petersburg, Michigan:—You call the "Impeachment of Christianity" a "grand editorial splurge." If splurges or showers of that kind are falling on your place, it will not take long to melt the dirty snow and ice which such an "avalanche" brings down upon humanity.

To the Jackson (Michigan) Herald:—Yes, sir! THE INDEX has "a great power for harm" to nonsense, and teaches common sense which is fearfully destructive to such sheets as the Herald.

To the Washington Daily Chronicle:—If THE INDEX, the "exponent of Free Religion," pointed to such pasturage as "the widely circulating Bible, the exponent of Christianity," points out to its adherents, there would be a great rush for that field, and the Chronicle would be the first to graze in it.

To the New Covenant, Chicago:—There is more need of such papers as THE INDEX than of the many mystification sheets which now, like the Covenant, "feed" humanity on stale bread and bilge-water.

To the Christian Observer, Bowmanville, Ontario:—Yes, the radicals will "excuse" you from taking up Free Religion; and they beg to be excused from the burden of old superstitions you would lay on their backs.

To the Raleigh (N. C.) Christian Advocate:—Looking at THE INDEX from your standpoint, I can hardly blame you for getting wrathful. Certainly, your business goes down on the rising of "the supremacy of science in all matters of belief."

To the Christian Union, New York:—You might as well claim that this globe is the universe as assume that Christianity is anything more than one "species" of religion. THE INDEX "must have reasons of its own." Yes, sir, none can reason for the whole congregation—not even the pastor of Plymouth Church!

To the Sunday Republic, Philadelphia:—If such bile as you pour out is to be in fashion in your "Sunday republic," God save the nations from such a republic during the week!

To the Brooklyn Daily Eagle:—If you should try to "fish for scientists," you would not get even a "bite," so long as you use rotten bait.

To the Review and Journal, Franklin, Tennessee:—You act like all slaveholders in keeping books out of the reach of slaves. Reasoning is dangerous for such sheets as are edited by slaveholders of the mind. The pure endeavors to liberate humanity from the bondage of priestcraft are always "foul heresies" in their eyes.

To the Daily Pantagraph, Bloomington, Illinois:—You preach in the same strain as the Hard-Shell Baptist minister, whose text was—"They shall gnaw a file, and fly into the mountains of Hepsidam, where the lion roareth and the whang loodie mourneth for the first-born." You tremble in your shoes at the thought of even mentioning the name of THE INDEX. What a courageous cause you have got!

To the Christian Observer, Catlettsburg, Kentucky:—If "Christianity is a free religion," and yet cannot "tolerate" free thought, no wonder the press and the ministers bungle badly in their explanation of it. With shackled hands, and shackles in their hands to put on others, they cannot be free, and do not even know what freedom is.

To the Catholic Advocate, Louisville, Kentucky:—The God you teach must be denied by every man and woman that has learned to think. A God who creates finite beings with failings, and then, if they fail, damns them forever, is not a reality, but the scarecrow you use to enslave ignorant people with. Faith in a God of love and faith in reason will bury your doctrines so deep that even the accomplice of your God, the devil, could not find them.

To the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tennessee:—You say THE INDEX "denounces prayer." THE INDEX is a prayer to a Father who loves his children and gave them reason. By using that reason, it is forced to denounce the stupid prayers and selfishness of which you are the "advocate."

Gentlemen, with the slanders hope that you will put your brains to better use very soon, for your own and for manhood's sake.

Yours,

CARL H. HORSCH.

"SICK OF CHRISTIANITY."

INDIANAPOLIS, March 24, 1873.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have just received a letter from an old friend who was for many years a Christian Minister. He has grown out of Christianity into Spiritualism.

He sends me his opinion of Christianity from his present standpoint, which I enclose. His reasons for being "Sick of Christianity" are so well stated that I hope you can give the quotation a place in THE INDEX. You will see by the long lists of names to the Counter Petition sent you from Indiana that liberal ideas are making some progress in Hoosierdom.

Our Radical Club meets for free discussion every Sunday afternoon. Unity Church, of the First Unitarian Society, was dedicated to-day.

Mr. Hoamer preached the sermon. Some sensible things were said. The Lord Jesus, the Redeemer, was duly recognized by the usual imposing mummery.

If you will send an agent here, we will give you a good list of subscribers for THE INDEX.

Yours for Freedom,

J. O. MARTIN.

Think! rational men are becoming sick of this popular, half-headed, half-Christianity, with its "false of man," "total depravity," "vicarious atonement," "angry God," "personal devil," and "andros hell torments."—A Christianity that slaughtered 2,000,000 during the ten crusades; that for fifteen hundred years persecuted the Jew and put to death the heretics of Europe; that burned witches, hung Quakers, and banished Ann Lee; a Christianity that incited members of Christian Churches North and South to fight like church-militant demons; a Christianity that supports standing armies, constructs arsenals, and appoints chaplains, servants of the "Prince of Peace," to pray for victories through blood, battle and murder; a Christianity that mixes the blasphemies of Deuteronomy with the beatitudes, and Jesus's teachings with the lust-songs of Solomon; a Christianity that scorns science, inspires bigotry, encourages superstition, sneers at Spiritualism, puns on pompous airs, persecutes for opinion's sake, grinds the face of the poor, professes extra piety, drives shrewd bargains, and then sanctimoniously asks for prosperity—all, all "for Christ's sake!"

Paris was a Christian city, as famous before the Prussian victories for its prostitution as for its missionary enterprises. London is a Christian city, and yet last March reported 185,000 paupers. Human life is infinitely less safe to-day in Christian New York than in Constantinople or heathen Beirut across the Bosphorus.

There are professed Christians in Troy, N. Y., who rent out buildings for rum-selling, and Christians in New York who rent houses to be used for prostitution.

But while repudiating this fashionable Christianity—this impotent Christianity that attacks Spiritualism—I believe in God; in Jesus; in the Divine Spirit; in moral responsibility; in retribution here and hereafter; in the necessity of repentance, purity and holiness of heart; and I believe in spiritual manifestations.

"JUDAISM AND IMMORTALITY."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In an article in number 120 of THE INDEX (April 18), under the above caption, Mr. W. C. Oliver asks: "Was Judaism a religion devoid of all faith in immortality? Was there no reference to a future state beyond and after the grave? Neither embodied or purely spiritual?" He then gives a few Bible quotations that seemingly have "some reference" to those matters, and finally concludes therefrom that—"these writings certainly indicate some sort of an idea of immortality."

To these queries, quotations and conclusions of Mr. Oliver, I wish, with your kind permission, to make a short reply, and to show him that he misunderstands his quotations and errs in his conclusions therefrom; that the Judaism of old was "a religion devoid of all faith in immortality;" that the words "death," "grave," &c., in these passages quoted by him, must be taken in connection with their context to be rightly understood; and that, when read thus, they will be found to be mere rhetorical figures, poetical expressions, allegories, &c., and to have no "reference to a future state beyond or after the grave."

In the first of these passages, Ezekiel (37: 13) speaks but in a "vision," and his meaning of the word "grave" is the exile in which the Jewish nation was to live, and the bringing them out again from this their "grave" into the "Land of Israel." [See the preceding verse 12.] In the second passage, Hosea (13: 14) speaks from the commencement of this chapter allegorically of Ephraim's sins as of his "death," from which he (verse 14) "shall be brought out" again, or "redeemed." And in the third passage, Isaiah (25: 8) speaks in the same sense of "swallowing up death in victory;" that is, "wiping away the tears from all faces and the disgrace from his (God's) people," as is quite clear from the remainder of the same verse, which Mr. Oliver omitted. In the preceding (7th) and the following (9th and 10th) verses, Isaiah prophesies not merely the "swallowing up of death," that is, the mercy to his people in "wiping away their sins, tears and disgrace," but also, as a contrast to it, of the destruction and castigation of the (other) nations. Besides, the words "swallowing up" and "destroy" are, in the Hebrew text, both given by one and the same word, billa, and the first billa ("swallow up"), moreover, stands in the past tense—making the fulfilment of this prophecy surer and nearer.

In all these three passages, the words "death," "grave," &c., are, as I said, mere rhetorical or poetical figures, allegories, and there is no idea of immortality, no "reference to a future state beyond the grave" in them.

Somewhat different, however, it is with the fourth passage quoted by Mr. Oliver, (Daniel, 12: 2, 3). This may "refer to a future state beyond or after the grave." But there is also—and of this Mr. Oliver seems not to be aware—a very great difference between the prophets and the Judaism prior to the Babylonian Exile, and the prophets and the Judaism during and after that event. And as neither the Patriarchs, Moses, nor the earlier prophets had "any sort of an idea of immortality," there is also, neither in the whole of the Pentateuch nor in any book of the Old Testament prior to the Babylonian Captivity, nor in that Judaism which was built on them, to be found the least shadow of any idea of immortality. Furthermore, all rewards promised, as all punishments threatened, in them are, without one single exception, earthly ones. Also the ideas of Daniel as of all the later Jews concerning immortality, a future state, heaven, hell, angels, Satan, &c., were all received and adopted from the Babylonians (then called Chaldees). The Hebrew language itself never had nor has it now, an original word for immortality, heaven or hell. Gan Eden (Garden of Eden), Ge Hinnom or Gehenna (Vale of Hinnom), by which names these two last are respectively called, are merely allegorical names, adopted because the Jews had no corresponding words in their own language when they received these ideas from the Babylonians. For "immortality" there exists to-day not even an allegorical name.

In closing my reply, I will refer Mr. Oliver to Part I, Chap. viii, of the book published by me some time ago, "Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs." When he shall have read it, he will not need to ask any more, "How is this?" but will know that "none of these writings indicate some sort of an idea of immortality."

Yours for this life,

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., April 13, 1873.

LA FAYETTE ON THE JESUITS.

"If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, it will be by Roman priests." That this motto originated in a remark made by La Fayette, there can be no reasonable doubt. It was often mooted in the press of this country immediately after his last visit, and it was circulated in print without contradiction, that the same words were substantially repeated by him on several occasions. To Mr. Van Pelt, of New York, he said, after warning the company present against their machinations:—"The Jesuit priests are the most crafty, dangerous enemies to civil and religious liberty. They have instigated most of the wars in Europe." At a dinner party in Richmond, Virginia, he said in conversation with Mr. Charles Palmer:—"These Jesuit priests are dangerous men, and will destroy the liberties of America if they can." In 1836 Prof. Morse, of New York University, in the preface of a book entitled "Foreign Conspiracy," published by J. L. Taylor, New York, says over his signature:—"It may not be amiss to state that the declaration of La Fayette, in the motto in question, was repeated by him to more than one American. The very last interview I had with La Fayette on the morning of my departure from Paris, full of his usual concern for America, he made the same warning; and in a letter which I received from him but a few days after, at Havre, he alluded to the whole subject, in the hope expressed that I would make known the real state of things in Europe to my countrymen; at the same time charging it upon me as a sacred duty, as an American, to acquaint them with the fears which were entertained by the friends of republican liberty in regard to our country. If I have labored with any success to arouse the attention of my countrymen to the dangers foreseen by La Fayette, I owe it in a great degree to his often repeated injunctions."

THOMAS R. HAZARD.

SOUTH PLYMOUTH, R. I.,
April 13, 1873.

Mr. H. L. Green, our agent in Syracuse, writes in a recent letter:—"We have now about three hundred copies [of THE INDEX] coming to this city weekly, and it causes a great deal of discussion." He also reports that the Radical Club of that city is in a very prosperous condition. Of course. The two facts are closely connected. Wherever radicals are sufficiently alive to read, they will be sufficiently alive to work. But where they "know it all already," what could you expect but torpidity and general inefficiency? Syracuse has the most active Radical Club in the country, and (outside of the largest cities) it is the banner-town on THE INDEX subscription list. These facts are reciprocally cause and effect. Let our friends elsewhere lay the lesson to heart. A few such earnest and brave spirits as H. L. Green, C. D. B. Mill, E. W. Mundy, and other staunch liberals of Syracuse, will do wonders in any locality. Would that their name were "Legion!" They would be harder to exorcise than the "Legion" of old!

"It is itself a condemnation of Christianity," says George Jacob Holyoake, "to be obliged to repudiate the conduct of all Christian churches." That is our reply to those who blame us for holding Christianity accountable for the actual work it has done in the world, and who would fain attribute to it only the good in this work, exonerating it from all responsibility for the evil.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, on REPRESENTATIVE PARAS from THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Fall of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution? Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

No. 10.—The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, OHIO.

SOW THE SEED!

THE "IMPEACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY," published in the first number of the third volume of THE INDEX, has been electrotyped, and an edition of Ten Thousand Copies has been printed in the form of

A Cheap Tract for Gratuitous Distribution!
It is intended to circulate One Hundred Thousand Copies during the current year. In order to accomplish this purpose, we must rely upon the co-operation of our active sympathizers.

☞ Packages of these TRACTS, containing any desired number of copies, will be mailed to any address on receipt of enough money to defray postage, and whatever additional sums, large or small, the generosity of distributors may prompt them to add.

Of course, money will be needed to carry out our intentions; but we urge every one who believes that THIS TRACT WILL DO GOOD, and who is willing to distribute copies of it, to send in as order at once, even if unable to donate more than the simple postage and the time required for distribution. Do not hesitate because you cannot give more. We are convinced more than ever by the character and objects of the late Cincinnati Convention, that such plain speech as this TRACT contains is greatly needed at the present time. In the name of Christianity, of the American People; and the mighty magic of that name is still powerful over multitudes even of otherwise liberal minds. Let the world learn that the protest made against Christianity is not made by hatred of Goodness and of Truth, but rather by a love for those that can no longer be satisfied with shame. He woefully misjudges this Tract who thinks it has no higher aim than to "make a sensation." It was meant to tell needed truth so plainly that it must be heard. And it will be heard. All we ask is—give it a chance.

A most Dangerous Attempt is now Making to Subvert the Religious Liberties

☞ Address your orders to THE INDEX,
Drawer 33, Toledo, Ohio

☞ The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word.") "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. BRADFORD; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, 90 St. Clair street, Toledo, Ohio.

St. Louis, Quincy, Hannibal, Keokuk, Toledo, Wabash & Western R. R.

PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS!

THE Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway Co., having recently extended its line of Railway to the City of Saint Louis, will commence running all its regular passenger trains through to that city on and after the 14th day of May, 1871. The day trains will be equipped with new and elegant passenger coaches, and all night trains with the much celebrated and popular Pullman Palace Sleeping Coaches.

	Special Thru' Express.	Pacific Express.
Leave Toledo.....	11:10 A. M.	11:15 P. M.
Ar. St. Wayne.....	8:00 P. M.	8:30 A. M.
" Lafayette.....	7:40 "	11:50 "
" Danville.....	10:00 "	4:10 P. M.
" Springfield.....	8:35 A. M.	9:35 "
" Quincy.....	8:45 "	10:45 "
" Keokuk.....	9:30 "	7:15 "
" St. Louis.....	7:00 "

Trains arrive from the West at 2:15 A. M., 8:40 P. M., and 5:00 P. M.

GEO. H. BURBANK,
Gen'l Superintendent.

JOHN U. PARSONS,
Gen'l Ticket Agent. [9017]

Lake Shore & Mich. Southern R. R.

1872.

ON and after Sunday, Jan. 14th, 1873, Passenger Trains will leave Toledo daily (Sundays excepted) as follows (Cleveland time):

CLEVELAND & TOLEDO DIVISION.

LEAVE TOLEDO.

8:00 A. M. Atlantic Express East, daily, arrives at Cleveland at 7:25 A. M.
6:30 A. M. Day Express will stop at Elmore, Fremont, Clyde, Bellevue, Monroeville, Norwalk, Townsend, Wakeman, Oberlin, Elyria and Berea, arrives at Cleveland at 10:50 A. M.
10:55 A. M. Cincinnati Express, stopping at all stations, reaches Cleveland at 8:45 P. M.
6:30 P. M. Special N. Y. Express, will stop at Fremont, Clyde, Monroeville, Norwalk and Elyria, arrives at Cleveland 10:15 P. M. Sleeping cars to Buffalo and Rochester.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

10:40 and 10:35 A. M., and 7:40 and 11:00 P. M.

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN DIVISION.

TRAINS DEPART.

MAIN LINE—8:15 A. M. Mail; 11:15 A. M. Special Chicago Express; 5:45 P. M. Coldwater Accommodation; 8:00 P. M. Night Express.
AIR LINE—11:05 A. M., Accommodation; 11:30 P. M. Pacific Express.
DETROIT—6:00, 11:30 A. M., 5:30 and 8:00 P. M.
JACKSON—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.
KALAMAZOO AND GRAND RAPIDS—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

MAIN LINE—8:30 and 10:35 A. M., and 5:40 & 6:00 P. M.
AIR LINE—3:50 A. M., and 6:35 P. M.
DETROIT—10:40 and 12:01 A. M., and 6:05 and 9:00 P. M.
JACKSON—10:25 A. M., and 6:55 P. M.
COLDWATER ACCOMMODATION—10:35 A. M.

CHAS. F. HATCH, Gen'l Supt.,

Cleveland, Ohio.
S. H. WARING, Ticket Agent, Toledo, O. [9017]

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper Devoted to

FREE RELIGION.

Published by THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

TOLEDO OFFICE NO. 90, ST. CLAIR ST.
NEW YORK OFFICE NO. 32, VESSEY ST.

THE INDEX was established in November, 1869. We ask the friends of the cause it represents to make active efforts to increase its circulation and usefulness. There is quite a large number of persons in almost every community, both in the church and out of it, who would subscribe for such a paper, if they were urged a little to do so by a neighbor.

N. B. The subscription price of THE INDEX is TWO DOLLARS a year in each and every case, invariably in advance.

☞ Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $3.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

LOCAL AGENTS:

HENRY H. RICHARDSON & Co., 22 Vessey St., New York.
RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, 96 Federal St., Boston.
PARKER PILLSBURY, Salem, Ohio.

GENERAL AGENTS:

A. E. BUTTS, New York City.
H. L. GREEN, Syracuse, N. Y.

☞ Any person, acting as an agent for THE INDEX, may forward the names of NEW SUBSCRIBERS and retain Twenty per cent. of their SUBSCRIPTIONS.

☞ All Letters and Communications to be addressed to THE INDEX,
DRAWER 33, TOLEDO, O.

THE RADICAL is published monthly at $3.00 a year.
Address S. H. MORSE, 26 Bromfield street, Boston.
Send 50 cents for a Specimen Number. 73:17

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 32 Vessey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 33, Toledo, Ohio.

JUNIOR UNMASKED; or, THOMAS PAINE the author of the "Letters of Junius" and the "Declaration of Independence." A DEMONSTRATION. Royal 16mo. pp. 328. Price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
JOHN GRAY & CO.,
Address 118 2nd*
P. O. Box 699, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-129.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

☞ Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. E. WHIPPLE,
[32-38] 19 PINCKNEY ST., BOSTON.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

Free Religious Association.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1871, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, W. J. POTTER, NEW BEDFORD, MASS. It contains Essays, by John Weiss, on "THE ATTITUDE OF SCIENCE TO RELIGION;" by O. B. Frothingham, on "SUPERSTITION AND DOGMATISM;" and by Wm. J. Potter, on "THE NATURAL GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY;" also a report of addresses by Dr. Bartol, T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Prof. Denison, A. M. Powell, and others, together with other proceedings of the meeting. Price 35 cents; in packages of five or more 35 cents each.

The ANNUAL REPORTS for 1869, 1869, and 1870 (at 25 cents each), Rev. Samuel Johnson's Essay on "THE WOMAN OF JESUS" (50 cents), Rev. W. H. Channing's Essay on "THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA" (30 cents), Col. T. W. Higginson's Essay on "THE STUPIDITY OF RELIGIONS" (30 cents), and an Essay on "REASON AND REVELATION," by Wm. J. Potter (10 cents), all published through the Association, can also be obtained as above.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, MAY 11, 1872.

WHOLE No. 124.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ASSOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WINTWORTH HODGSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATHSON, Business Agent.

Romanism the Natural Development of Christianity.

[Read to the First Independent Society of Toledo, by FRANCIS E. ASSOT, April 26, 1872.]

"It is necessary here to guard against a twofold error. There are some who perceive in every new mode of representing Divine truth, in every change of phraseology, an alteration or corruption of the doctrine of the Church; they erroneously suppose that none but Biblical terms are to be introduced into dogmatic theology, and would make the history of doctrines a mere history of corruptions. There are others who will admit nothing but a progressive development of the true doctrine within the pale of the Church, and seem to forget that this order and disease often make their appearance in a strong and healthy body. True science has to consider both these conditions: religion, too, advances, comes to a stand, and goes back; it has its excellences and its defects, its stages of purity and its stages of corruption. Thus it would be incorrect to reject the doctrine of the Trinity, of original sin, the sacraments, etc., because those terms are not used in Scripture; but it is our duty to examine whether anything extraneous has been mixed up with them, and how far the development of a doctrine may become dangerous to the truth of the gospel."

HAGENBACH, Compendium of the History of Doctrine, Vol. I, p. 3 [Ed. 1860.]

The distinguished author of "A History of the Hebrew Monarchy," and other liberal works of the highest reputation, Professor Francis W. Newman, of England, has been so kind as to write for THE INDEX a letter of considerable length on a question of great importance to the liberal cause, namely, whether Roman Catholicism is a corruption or a development of Christianity. [This letter is contained in full in THE INDEX, No. 123.] I am exceedingly glad that this question has been treated so ably by one who is respected on both sides of the Atlantic for his scholarship and his character alike. So much depends on the answer to be given to that question in determining the befitting attitude of liberals towards Christianity, and so difficult is it to interest the public in a question which is seemingly (but only seemingly) remote from immediate practical issues, that the publication of such a letter from such a source can scarcely fail to awaken a great deal of profitable thought in the public mind. Prof. Newman's article is, in form, a criticism of some statements contained in the "Truths for the Times;" and I think he will not consider me as failing in the respect which is due to his eminent services, and which I most unfeignedly entertain, if I attempt to sustain by argument the position I have there simply stated. In fact, I shall thus best prove the correctness of his own belief, when he says:—"I am sure you desire that every one will speak his mind out." There is nothing that I desire more than that; and, with sincere thanks to Prof. Newman for frankly calling in question an opinion for which I have been quite sufficiently exclaimed against, but of which I have until now seen no thoughtful examination, I will reciprocate by speaking my own mind as frankly as he has spoken his.

Before approaching the main question, I wish to reply briefly to a few minor points in the article under consideration.

"I think there is danger," says Prof. Newman, "that you may dogmatize, as in the past other religionists have dogmatized." Yes, there is danger of it. Every one is in danger of dogmatizing who holds strong convictions. But since dogmatism is simply assertion without reason, he who avowedly bases his convictions on reason alone, and never shuts his ear to any objections that reason may urge, is no dogmatist. The "Truths for the Times" is a condensed summary of results, unaccompanied with arguments or processes; and one who does not perceive or appreciate this fact may naturally think the statement dogmatic. Every one of the "Truths for the Times," however, is the product of close study and patient reflection, and is built on what I regard as solid reasons; as I hope to show in the case of the opinion now controverted.

"Moreover," says Prof. Newman again, "it crosses my mind (but I say it diffidently and under correction), that the element called odium theologicum may unawares sway you. Of course you understand this phrase. Theologians are charged with hating most those who, without entire agreement, come nearest to them, and endure more easily an extreme enemy than an almost friend. So, it is my surmise, you will endure Unitarian Christians, and are better inclined to admire Romanists."

Not to prolong a merely personal statement, which of course can have very little interest to the public, I would say briefly that this "surmise" is incorrect. I was born and bred among Unitarian Christians, and have formed many close and highly valued friendships among them; and I have yet to learn that a single one of these friendships has been broken, or even cooled, by anything I have ever thought, felt, said, or done concerning Unitarianism. True, I have said and published severe things about Unitarianism as a phase of thought; but I have always remembered what too many forget, that the thought and the thinker are never to be confounded. Surely, I "hate" no one; and I refuse to have "enemies," if it takes two to keep up enmity. I believe that every one of my Unitarian friends acquits me of all odium theologicum towards the Unitarians, and does me the justice to believe that what I say concerning Unitarianism has no personal application whatever. There my duty towards my friends ends, and another duty—the duty every man owes to the truth—begins. In the terrible struggle between the North and the South which so many of us have cause to remember with grief to the end of life, I believe that the long protraction of the war, with its awful waste of precious blood, was caused less by the determined and open warfare of the rebel officers than by the half-heartedness and equivocal allegiance of many of our own officers. Not till the conduct of the war was put into the hands of men who believed in smiting the rebellion with the edge rather than the flat of their swords, without a particle of tenderness for the rebel cause, did the victory become ours. So it is in this new warfare between Christianity and Freedom. More hindrance and positive harm results to the liberal cause from the intellectual blindness and languid zeal of its "almost friends" than from the most desperate efforts of its open foes. That is why I "ill endure" Unitarianism. I want to see the issue made plain, that the conflict may be short and sharp. I want to see the liberals on one side and the Christians on the other, that the victory of Freedom may be speedy and complete, politically, socially, intellectually, and spiritually. From the Unitarians, not only from those who are personal friends, but from those also who know me only by name and who hate my views most cordially, I do not remember any treatment that has been other than courteous and kind,—very often generous in the extreme, as once in the case of Rev. Dr. Bellows. There is no body of men and women in this country more delightful to associate with than the Unitarians; and it was with great pain that I found myself obliged at last to withdraw from their associate fellowship, in order that I might not be false to my convictions. Unpalatable as my strictures upon Unitarianism have been since that day, I believe that in their hearts the Unitarians themselves respect me for making them, and think that, with my views of truth and duty, I could do no less. In every way that I can, by argument, appeal, or sarcasm, I mean to do my best to show to the world how utterly untenable is the Unitarian position; I mean to use every legitimate weapon to expose every attempt at compromise between Christianity and Freedom; and I mean to do it without malice, without unfairness, without anything that shall intentionally wound the feelings of a single man, woman, or child. If this is to be imbued with odium theologicum, I must plead guilty to the charge; but I believe that no open and honorable, even if mistaken, warfare on error and superstition ought to be thus characterized. I have said, however, more than I intended on this point, and will now at once pass to the main thesis of Prof. Newman's article.

The particular paragraphs in "Truths for the Times" which he thinks unsound are as follows:

36. The Christian Confession gradually created on the one hand the theology, and on the other hand the hierarchy, of the Roman Catholic Church. The process was not, as is claimed, a corruption, but a natural and logical development.

37. The Church of Rome embodies Christianity in its most highly developed and perfect form, as a religion of authority based on the Christian Confession.

The general ground here assumed is that Roman Catholicism is the natural and logical development of the Christian Confession.

The ground assumed by my honored critic is that Roman Catholicism is a corruption—he does not precisely specify of what, but the context shows that he means—of the cardinal teachings of Jesus.

Now you will notice that Prof. Newman does not deny the proposition I make, but another one which is by no means identical with it. He does not argue to the same point. I affirmed that Catholicism is the natural outgrowth of the Christian Confession—the confession that Jesus is the Christ of God, the divinely appointed King and Savior of men. Prof. Newman denies that Catholicism is a natural outgrowth of the cardinal teachings of Jesus. I refer only to the Messianic claim of Jesus; he refers apparently to his other teachings.

There are only two ways of escaping my conclusion. It must be shown that the Messianic claim, whether made by Jesus or for him, is not the great fundamental idea of Christianity; or else it must be shown that this claim is not logically developed into Catholicism. My ground is that the Christian Confession is the very foundation of Christianity, and that this Confession is naturally and logically developed into Roman Catholicism. If my ground is falsely taken, it must be either because the Christian Confession is not the foundation of Christianity, or else because it is not logically developed into Catholicism. I cannot see that Prof. Newman has appreciated my position,—much less overthrown it.

If I correctly judge my critic's thought, not only in the present article, but also in his other writings (especially in his fine essay on the "True Temptation of Jesus," published in THE INDEX, No. 99), he admits that Jesus himself did sooner or later claim to be the Christ, the Messiah, but that this claim was incidental and at variance with his "cardinal teachings"—a mere "weak point" or "inconsistency"—in fact, the "temptation" to which he yielded, and the yielding to which entirely changed the whole character of his work as a religious teacher. But even if this change took place, and if we are to concede that at first Jesus was purely a moral reformer and was tempted to his own fall by the ambition almost forced upon him by his followers, this would not at all affect my position that the Messianic claim, once made, became the foundation of Christianity. It is of very little consequence how the claim was made, or when, or by whom—of very little consequence whether Jesus made it himself, or whether his disciples misunderstood him to have made it. The fact remains that the claim itself became the great, central, dominant idea of the Christian religion, naturally created the Christian theology and the Christian Church, and necessarily led to the development of the Roman Catholic hierarchy under existing circumstances. That is the really important point. If the Christian religion, as a great fact and power in human history, owed its existence primarily to the Messianic idea, and if this idea naturally and logically led to the formation of the great Roman Catholic organization, with its creed and ceremonial and priesthood and pope, then it is true that Catholicism is itself Christianity in its most perfect form, and that all Protestant sects are merely so many branches, dying but still green, lopped off from the parent tree. Whether Jesus foresaw all the remote consequences of his claim to be the Christ, is not of the slightest importance. I do not blame him for it or its results. He planted the acorn, and the oak grew up in due time. Our concern is with the tree, not with its planter. So far as Christianity itself is concerned, the veritable character and teaching of its founder are of only biographical interest; what his own age believed about him, and what effect this belief had on succeeding ages, and what was the actual development of it among the living forces of history, and what are its character and influence as it exists to day under the venerated name of Christianity,—these are the real questions that concern mankind here and now. The moment it becomes clear that Christianity has always been identical with submission to a personal Lord, and can never without destruction be emancipated from this submission, that moment will the eyes of all free men and women be opened to the necessary and baneful influence of Christianity, in all its forms, on the natural development of mankind; and the beginning of the end will have come.

That the Christian Confession is the great, essential doctrine of Christianity, and that it necessarily creates at last institutions identical with or analogous to the Roman Catholic Church,—these are the fundamental points I maintain; and I am very sorry that Prof. Newman has not addressed himself to these points, rather than to points aside from the main question. Doubtless much can be said in opposition to my opinion, especially by so keen, thoughtful, and highly educated a disputant as he; and I should be much gratified to learn his views on the real question at issue, and to publish them in THE INDEX. Meanwhile, I will comment very briefly on various points in his present article, premising that I do so because of their intrinsic interest rather than because of any direct bearing on my own disputed thesis.

There is no true contrast, he argues, between corruption and development; the same process may be both one and the other at the same time. This is urged as if I had taken a contrary position; but I did not. The natural development of an organism, for instance, is not a corruption; but the natural development of a disease, as of a cancer, is the corruption and ultimate death of the organism itself. Prof. Newman evidently intends to suggest that the Messianic claim was a cancer in the body of Christianity, and was developed ruinously into the Catholic Church, which thus appears as at the same time a natural development and a corruption too. I respectfully reply, however, that this is to beg the question at issue, which turns on the truth or falsity of my statement that the Christian Confession is the foundation of Christianity. Is the Messianic claim the organism or the cancer? That is the question. My critic assumes without discussion that it is the latter; but this is the very thing to be discussed. I have by no means "chosen to select the weak points of good and great men, and logically develop them;" on the contrary, I have selected the Messianic claim because it is the strongest and most pronounced feature of the Christian gospel, and have passed over unnoticed all the minor and derivative features. If this claim is indeed to be regarded as a mere incidental error, a "weak point" of the Christian gospel, an "inconsistency," I must respectfully insist on the evidences of an opinion which would be rejected unanimously and indignantly by every Christian church on the face of the globe.

That real corruptions have occurred in the history of Christianity analogous to the diseases of an organic body, I do not deny; and many of the practices of the Church of Rome are undoubtedly of this description. Transubstantiation, Mariolatry, celibacy, the confessional, and so forth, are in one sense corruptions, since they have been fearfully abused; yet in another sense they are legitimate consequences or remote corollaries of strictly logical deductions from the Messianic claim. Transubstantiation is only a sensualization of the Christian idea that the soul's eternal life is dependent on the death of Jesus as the universal Savior or Christ. The worship of the "Mother of God" as immaculate follows naturally enough from the idea that God was born in the flesh from a woman, who must needs have been miraculously holy to be thus honored. The doctrine of the Incarnation and of the Trinity follows naturally from the idea that all souls are saved by the death of one man, who must needs have been God also to do such a stupendous work. And so on. The Catholic faith is one vast network of affiliated thoughts; and the Catholic hierarchy is a most wonderfully ingenious organization for the propagation of this faith. To perceive the logic of either, however, one must contemplate the intricate system from the heliocentric standpoint of the Christian Confession. From that false fountain head, what but a continuous stream of falsehood could flow? But the law of intellectual gravitation—of logic—must determine the stream's channel. Chaos would come again, were it otherwise.

It is true, as Prof. Newman declares, that the primitive Church and the Catholic Church present many points of difference. But this fact tells in my favor. The one could not otherwise have been developed out of the other. The differences are only those of the same organism at different stages of growth. Paul, it is true, summoned men to "freedom" as he understood it—freedom from the old ritual of Judaism; but it was not freedom in any modern sense. It is not true that "the Roman Church invites us to become spiritual slaves," for its invitation is still, as always, in the name of freedom. But neither Paul nor the Pope really invites to freedom, but only to a change of servitude. The "yoke of Christ" is a yoke too heavy for any freeman's neck; and this yoke from the beginning Christianity summons all its followers to bear.

I am surprised, I confess, to see so inadvertent a statement as the following, made by so learned a man as Prof. Newman:—"These two texts, 'Hear the Church,' and 'Thou art Peter,' are the foundation stones of the Roman Catholic Church." If this were true, Catholicism, like Protestantism, would rest its whole claim on the Bible; whereas, in point of fact, it rests the authority of the Bible itself on Tradition. The Catholic Church is far too shrewd to commit suicide by conceding the Protestant doctrine of the supreme authority of the Bible. When it condescends to urge those or any other texts in defence of its claims, it is only as an argumentum ad hominem—as a turning of the enemy's guns against himself. No—it haughtily demands submission from the world in its own name, with no credentials but its own assertion of a Divine Authority from God. I am the more surprised at the statement in question because Prof. Newman immediately afterwards admits, to quote his own words, that "Rome does not demand belief in God or Christ or indeed in any definite doctrines, but only belief in the Church." This supreme self-assertion of the Church is but the reflection of that of her Lord, who rested his Messianic claim on no texts or arguments, but rather on the Divine Authority of God. Representing him on earth, how could she do otherwise? What more striking proof than this could be asked for my statement that Rome rigorously carries out the logic of the Christian Confession?

I cannot admit that the religion taught in the Christian Scriptures is a purely "personal" one. The great burden of the gospel was the speedy approach of the "kingdom of Heaven." What was it? The simple purification of the individual character? Far from it. It was the universal reign of the Messiah, the establishment of a new empire of Heaven on earth; and although Jesus proclaimed, as the fundamental laws of his kingdom, a moral code in many respects of unsurpassed excellence, the gospels never lose sight of its public character. Here was sown the seed of that "corporate religion" of Rome which claims universal dominion and appears to Prof. Newman so irreconcilable with the "personal religion" of the primitive Church. Why, one of the first acts of the primitive Church was to abolish all private property, and lay the combined wealth of the whole body of believers at the feet of the apostles. For withholding only a part of their property from these more than bishops, Ananias and Sapphira are said to have been struck dead by God. Did Rome ever require such total surrender of individual rights to her "corporate religion"? She might inherit, but she could not in this point better, the instruction of the early Church.

Again, the claim of holding the keys of heaven, made by Rome, seems to Prof. Newman to have no logic in it, because Jesus, in promising the keys to Peter, said nothing of Peter's successors. But he himself quotes the Apocalypse to show that Jesus declared the keys to be in his own possession. If, then, the Church is the true representative of Jesus on the earth, Peter being only the first chief representative of the Church, the claim seems impregnable in logic. The Church did not die when Peter died, nor, on its theory, were the keys his private property; they passed merely into other hands, like the crown—"The King is dead—long live the King!" All turns on the reasonableness of supposing that Jesus is still represented on the earth; and this follows naturally from the Messianic theory. If he is still King of this earth while invisible in the heavens, his authority must be delegated, or else it vanishes into nothingness, practically, in the administration of human affairs. Hence the Church, the priesthood, the pope, are the natural consequence of the Messianic idea in history.

Lastly, reference is made to "one grand and cardinal doctrine, characteristic of the whole early Church, which the Catholic Church has rejected. It was the kernel and heart of Christianity with James, Paul, and John—the belief in the speedy return of Jesus in the clouds of heaven, to set up the kingdom of God on earth and overthrow all the heathen royalties." But has the Catholic Church ever rejected that doctrine? Has it no doctrine of a Last Judgment, with the Christ in the clouds and all the paraphernalia of the "second coming"? Has it no solemn Judgment Hymn—

*"Dies ira, dies illa,
Soleat scutum in fretta,
Taste David cum Sibylla."*

Has it abandoned any part of that old belief, except the intense expectation of its immediate fulfilment? That fearful dream still haunts the imaginations of the faithful, holds its place in the creed and the catechism, and remains still the "kernel and heart of Christianity" with the whole Catholic Church. The fear of the unannounced approach of the Last Judgment has always existed, and still exists, in the Church of Rome; and modern Millerism, which has its weekly organ to-day in the World's Crisis, published in Boston, is only a Protestant degeneration of it. Towards the close of the tenth century, a universal apprehension existed that the end of the world and the second advent of Jesus would occur in the year A. D. 1000; and in that century ecclesiastical endowments frequently began with—"Appropinquante mundi termino [the end of the world being now at hand]." In fact, the intense terror that then prevailed gave a great stimulus to the building of the grand cathedrals of Europe, those at Strassburg, Mayence, Trèves, Speier, Worms, and so forth, being erected at that period. The Catholic Church has never "rejected" that doctrine of the second advent of Jesus in the clouds of heaven; and it teaches to day that this awful event may happen at any moment.

I care not what doctrine of Christianity is selected,—it will be found in its undiluted form in Catholicism, and Catholicism alone. All that Protestantism, as a phase of Christianity, has done is to weaken and disintegrate the great Christian structure until in Unitarianism scarcely a fragment of it remains. So far from "denying that of all Christian sects the Unitarians come the nearest to the Church of Jerusalem in its general doctrine," I said explicitly in paragraph twenty-nine of the Fifty Affirmations that "Liberal Christianity [Unitarianism] . . . is a return to the Christian Confession in its crudest and least developed form"—that is, as held by the primitive Church. But this very Christian Confession they are now evaporating away into a vague and general admission that Jesus is their "leader" in some incomprehensible sense—what, they do not themselves know, or, if they know, cannot tell.

The views which I advocate of this whole subject are based rather on the genetic connection and historical evolution of ideas, rather than on partial analyses or textual criticisms. No one can recognize the relationship of a fallen brick, taken by itself, to the architectural design of a great building; neither can any one recognize the relationship of the separate doctrines or practices of Rome, taken by themselves, to the general system of Christianity. The only way to do justice to any system is to study it as a whole, to trace out the connection of the parts in this whole, and to go over again in thought the actual process of growth realized in history. To any one who will take the trouble to do this, I think my view will seem the only philosophical one that can be taken of Romanism.

Even to the ordinary mind, it must surely be enough to arrest attention and compel a revision of all former opinions, when the questions are plainly put—"How comes it that, if Catholicism is the cancer and not the man, the history of the man for fifteen hundred years was only the history of the cancer? How comes it that the cancer survived after eating up the man? How comes it that Christianity has been nearly nineteen centuries in the world, and yet was never understood until the last of them arrived? How comes it that the whole world was fooled so long? How comes it that the great intellects of Christian history have always accepted substantially the Catholic theology, even while protesting against the Catholic hierarchy? How comes it that the tendency of all Protestant sects is towards the gradual relaxation and abandonment of the ancient doctrines of Christianity, as if to detach oneself from the Catholic ecclesiasticism were tantamount to detaching oneself at last from the Catholic theology? How comes it that to day the Protestant Church is throughout the world a mere 'hollow shell,' which the new Sherman of Free Religion is crumbling in its grasp? How comes it that, the moment the Catholic definition of Christianity, accepted by nearly two hundred millions of believers, is abandoned, that moment the faith of the protesting world is shivered into innumerable conflicting definitions, and no man can accept his neighbor's? In fine, how comes it that Prof. Newman himself, though (as he says) he 'writes with a sort of indignation' at the assertion that Catholicism is the true Christianity, can nevertheless find no other Christianity within whose pale he is willing to stand?"

These questions, friends, and countless others like them, will yet force an intelligible answer from the reluctant world. The answer is anticipated already by the thoughtful few. The decree has gone forth, and the flaming sentence is already written on the palace wall—"MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN." And this is the interpretation of it—"ROMANISM IS CHRISTIANITY, AND CHRISTIANITY IS DOOMED."

The five great points of my argument are these:

1. The Christian Confession was the foundation-stone of the original Christian gospel.
2. The Christian Confession is the heart and core of Christianity to day.
3. The Christian Confession necessarily and naturally developed into the theology and the ecclesiasticism of Rome.
4. Roman Catholicism is therefore the most genuine form of Christianity, all Protestant forms of it being degenerations and corruptions.
5. Roman Catholicism, and all other forms of Christianity in proportion to the degree of orthodoxy of their doctrines, being grounded on the Christian Confession, are based on a great superstition, obstruct more and more the advance of mankind, and must perish accordingly.

I hope to see these positions first appreciated and then tested. Perhaps Prof. Newman will not dissent from me, when he perceives the real drift of my reasoning. But in any case I shall be glad to see the main question discussed on its merits, and settled on its merits. Especially would I say to all Christian opponents that, until they show some symptoms of comprehending the real grounds of my protest against Christianity, they waste their breath in attempting replies. It is as tiresome as it is profitless to discuss side issues. If it can be shown that genuine Christianity is Catholicism, and Catholicism is a stumbling-block in the path of humanity, then all liberals will perceive that the sources of modern civilization must be outside of Christianity; they will perceive that Protestantism is better than Catholicism, not because it is more Christian, but because it is less so, and that it will be best of all when it has ceased to be Christian altogether.

That is my answer to the closing paragraph of Prof. Newman's letter. He thinks my position a "mischievous" one, as "giving aid to the most pernicious by far" of all "Christian sects," i. e. the Catholic Church. It is welcome to such aid as I give it. I concede that it has the true poison, and has it in its most concentrated and dangerous shape. But so long as the Protestant sects, which all dread and denounce the evils of Catholicism, are unconsciously propagating the very poison which has produced these dreaded and denounced evils, I would fain open their eyes to what they are doing, and show them that they cannot strike at the spiritual tyranny of Rome without striking at the Christian Confession which is its warrant. That is the serpent's fangs whence the poison is distilled. Is it more mischievous to dig up the roots of an error, than it is to clip its leaves? Prof. Newman abhors Romish ecclesiasticism, and with good reason. Trace it down to its root in the Messianic idea, which is the burden of the Protestant gospel also; show that this Messianic claim of one man to be Lord over all men has borne fruit in tyranny and persecution from the very beginning; and prove that Protestant intolerance and Catholic intolerance, springing from one and the same root, are to be cured only by uprooting this Christian Confession, this one great and common article of all Christian creeds. Where this autocratic principle prevails, there is small chance for the growth of human freedom. In vain is the protest made against Popery, when every Protestant Christian "crooks the pregnant hinges of the knee" to the Pope's Pope. Teach him that all Christianity is based on Popery, his own included; and that the Pope-principle governs in his own Methodist or Baptist or Congregational meeting house just as truly as in the Cathedral or the Vatican. No teaching could be less "mischievous," unless everything is mischievous that dissuades from abject submission to authority. If spiritual freedom is indeed the path to virtue and true happiness, it is the most beneficent teaching of the times.

THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY.

[By T. W. Higginson in the Woman's Journal of March 2.]

Having lately a day's interval between two lecturing engagements in central New York, I spent that time at the Oneida Community. After a tolerably extensive acquaintance with the various types of religious enthusiasm, I can truly say that I never met with a body of men and women in whom that enthusiasm seemed a more genuine thing, or less alloyed by base motive. The very fact that some of their main principles seem to me false, and others actually repulsive, should give additional weight to this testimony.

As you approach the stately brick edifice of the Community on a winter day, you hear the voices of children, while a little army of sleds outside the main entrance shows that outdoor happiness is at hand for them. Entering, you find yourself in a sort of palace of plain comfort, admirably warmed and ventilated, with spacious corridors, halls, parlors, library and natural history museum. You are received with as much courtesy as in any private house. The men you meet are well dressed, well mannered, well educated. The women, though disfigured by the plainest of all possible bloomer dresses, look healthful and cheerful. At table and in the dining-hall, where the sexes meet, you see cordial and inoffensive manners. Your food is well cooked and served, with home-made wine, if you wish, and the delicious bread and butter and snowy table-cloth of the Shakers. After dinner, perhaps, they give you an improvised concert. The family assembles in the great hall. The side door of the wide stage opens, and half a dozen little children, from two to three years old, are let in as the advance-guard of the juvenile department. They toddle about the stage at their will—its edge being protected by a light partition for their benefit,—and shout and crow to their parents, who sit below. The little ones are all rosy and healthy, all about the same size, and all neatly dressed in little frocks and fresh white aprons. It is a pretty prelude for an afternoon's performance. Then twenty of the elder children follow, and sing some songs. They also look happy and well-cared for, and are neatly, though ungracefully, dressed. Then you listen to a really excellent orchestra of six or seven instruments, led by a thoroughly trained leader—a young man brought up in the community and musically educated at their expense,—while a boy of fourteen plays the second violin. They play good German music, while the little ones find their way down upon the floor, and are petted by their special parents, and watched with apparent admiration and affection by men and women generally. This, at least, was what I saw that day. Later I saw the machine shops and the silk factory; but these can be seen anywhere. But a family of two hundred, living in apparent harmony and among the comforts which associated life secures,—this is not to be seen every day, and this is what one at least convinces himself that he sees at Oneida.

Meanwhile the essential theories upon which all this rests appear to the observer—to me at least—all wrong. At Oneida they practise community of property. I disbelieve in it, and only believe in association and cooperation. At Oneida they subordinate all the relation of the sexes to the old Greek theory—held by them as Christian—that the Community has a right to control parentage, and to select and combine the parents of the next generation of the human race, as in rearing domestic animals. Such a theory I abhor; I believe it must cause much suffering in its application, and that it will defeat its own end, by omitting from these unions all deep personal emotion. Therefore, I utterly dissent from the essential theories of the Oneida Community. All the more reason for trying to do them justice. In the wonderful variety and complexity of human nature, it often happens that the theories which would be injurious and even degrading in your hands or mine, are somehow purged of the expected ill effects in the hands which hold them. There is a divine compensation that limits the demoralizing effects of bad principles, when these are honestly adopted. I found a good deal of such compensation at Oneida.

It must be remembered that the whole organization is absolutely based upon a special theology, that none who do not adopt this would in any case be admitted to membership. As a matter of fact, they have for several years admitted no new members whatever, having no room. This cuts off all floating and transient membership, and excludes all the driftwood of reform. Members must be either very sincere proselytes to a religious theory, or else very consummate hypocrites. The Community rejects the whole theory of "attractive industry" of Fourier, and accepts a theory of self-sacrifice. In the same way it rejects the whole theory of "affinities" in love and marriage. It accepts, instead, a theory of self-control, and even what seems unlawful and repulsive indulgence must be viewed against this stern background of predominant self-sacrifice.

The two things they most sternly resist in practice are, first—lawlessness, or doing what is right in one's own eyes; and secondly—exclusive ownership, whether of property, or wife or child. All must be subordinated to the supposed good of the whole. They admit that this theory would be utterly disastrous to the world in its present state, if adopted without preparation. Nothing but religious enthusiasm would make it practicable, even in a community of two hundred, without its resulting either in agony or in degradation.

But now, as a matter of fact, how is it? I am bound to say, as an honest reporter, that I looked in vain for the visible signs of either the suffering or the sin. The Community makes an impression utterly unlike that left by the pallid joylessness of the Shakers, or the stupid sensualism which impressed me in the few Mormon households I have seen. I saw some uninteresting faces and some with that look of burnt-out fire of which every radical assembly shows specimens, but I did not see a face that I should call coarse, and there were very few that I should call joyless. The fact that the children of the Community hardly ever wish to leave it; that the young men whom they send to Yale College, and the young women whom they send for musical instruction to New York, always return eagerly and devote their lives to the Community; this proves a great deal. There is no coercion to keep them, as in Mormonism, and there are no monastic vows, as in the Roman Catholic church. This invariable return, therefore, shows that there is happiness to be found in the Community, and that it is of a kind which wins the respect of the young and generous. A body must have great confidence in itself when it thus voluntarily sends its sheep into the midst of the world's wolves, and fearlessly expects their return.

I came away from the Community with increased respect for the religious sentiment which, in however distorted a form, can keep men and women from the degradation which one would expect to result from a life which seems to me so wrong. I brought away, also, increased respect for the principle of association, which will yet secure to the human race, in the good time coming, better things than competition has to give. I saw men and women there whom I felt ready to respect and love. I admire the fidelity with which they maintain the equality of the sexes. Nevertheless, I should count it a calamity for a boy or a girl to be brought up at Oneida.

The following facts, stated by Prof. Roscoe in his "Spectrum Analysis," may be new to some of our readers, and doubtless as interesting as new:—

"It was indeed at one time supposed that the various shades of color in the solar spectrum were produced by an overlapping, as it were, of three distinct colored spectra, one red, the second yellow, and the third a blue spectrum, the maxima of which are situated at different points, that of the red and blue at the extremes, and that of the yellow in the middle of the visible spectrum.

"This theory of Brewster's has, however, been proved to be fallacious, for Helmholtz has shown that the green ray, for example, is not made up of blue and yellow light superposed, and we cannot separate anything else but green out of it. Hence we conclude that each particular ray has its own peculiar color, and that light of each degree of refrangibility is monochromatic. But, on the other hand, although physically, and in the actual spectrum, there is no such thing as a superposition or overlapping of different spectra, yet it is very likely, nay, more than likely, that the retina is mainly sensitive to three impressions, viz. red, yellow, blue; in fact, that there are some nerves especially sensitive to red, others to yellow, and others again to blue light, whilst the impressions of the other tints are obtained by the joint impressions produced on these three classes of nerves. This theory, indeed, was one which was proposed so long ago as the beginning of the century by our celebrated countryman, Thomas Young, and quite recently it has been proved by Max Schultze that in the eyes, not indeed as yet of man, but of certain animals, there exist differences which are observable in the nerve-ends situated at the back of the retina. Some of these end in little red drops, some of them in yellow drops, and some of them in colorless drops. The nerves whose ends contain the little red drops are more sensitive to red color than the others; and so those containing yellow drops are more sensitive to the yellow color, and in this way we believe that the peculiar effects which we observe in the mixtures of color may be explained."

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"I have had something to say to you for ever so long, but am so hunted down by packs of petty anxieties that no thought has time to work itself into fair proportions. Therefore instead of a developed 'article' I have only a hint to offer. Some months past THE INDEX contained a good deal of interesting talk about the way by which we are to arrive at knowledge concerning the existence of God, whether through Intuition or through Science—each side being argued, it seemed to me, in a very one-sided way. I think we must take a stereoscopic view of truth to see it fairly and fully, must use both sides of our dual nature, Reason and Perception. Since I slept in a little crib—and that very long ago—another world has been plain to some inner sense, as this world to the outer, and I call that sense, Intuition. Men who have never had it, or have lost it through disease, might be pardoned for denying its existence, did not the marvels of genius claim a recognition of it from the most uncompromising rationalists. The young Mozart, for instance, arrived at his earliest knowledge of musical laws, not through science, but through Intuition. True, the after-study of those laws, reduced to a science, was necessary to make of him a great composer; but, without the intuitive perception, he could never have been a musician at all. And that brings me just to the point which I wish to reach. Perhaps you can supply names which escape my memory, and, at any rate, I dare say you will recall the anecdote of some man of science, who, having mastered the written laws of music, challenged a musician to produce a composition as good as his. This learned, rational, scientific gentleman covered his sheets of music paper with harmonies unimpeachably correct. They were performed upon the instruments for which they were written, and the sound of them was as the rattling of dry bones. Was it music? Not a bit of it. It was dead science, a hideous Frankenstein's man, a mockery of living truth. And just such a mockery, just such a dead God, ugly and arid, sits enthroned on the rocky heights of science. Surely there is a genius for the recognition of spiritual existence, as for music and poetry. To find God we must spread wings where our climbing feet fail, and not fear to trust the streams of air. They are as real as the dusty road is. How complex and yet how infinite is the poetic faculty! If I should send you a string of verses, you would not put them in your paper; not because I do not come fresh primed from the last pages of the grammar, but because I am not the Princess who spake pearls. Although the intuitive faculty comes first generally in time, and sometimes in importance, it can never be prolific of use and beauty, never can perform its proper office, until wedded to rational science. I am sorry to give my thought so crudely, but can do no better at present."

"I hereby authorize you to place my name on your subscription list, as a subscriber for one share of the capital stock. I heartily concur with you in your estimate of the power of the weekly newspaper as an educator of the people, and in your determination not to begin with less money than is necessary to make it a paper worthy of the cause."

"I owe THE INDEX a great deal intellectually and wish it much success."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the OROON, in the NEW EXPRESS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WHEELER OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

Cash Receipts for the Week ending May 4th.—M. T. Bomar, $3; Mrs. C. E. Serrell, 80 cts.; C. T. Hawley, $13; M. E. Taylor, $1; Jno. Aug. Visconti, 50 cts.; Miss Elvira Jones 50 cts.; W. B. Benton, $2.75; Harry Grady, $2; James Philip, 10 cts.; Burr Harris, 50 cts.; P. B. Farnham, 30 cts.; D. Wright, $3; Jas. B. Tyler, 15 cts.; F. M. Tate, 50 cts.; L. G. Felch, 35 cts.; C. C. Slocum, 50 cts.; D. A. W. Robinson, 30 cts.; E. I. Wagon, 35 cts.; S. Farrington, $1; Wallace R. Moses, $2; Chas. E. Whipple, $20; T. M. Lamb, $1; Andrew High, $1; E. W. Warner, $2; C. A. Jewett, $2; G. I. Keen, $2; J. A. Simon, $10; J. T. Blakeney, 50 cts.; Jas. C. Townbridge, $3.10; J. E. Hitchcock, $3.20; T. G. Hovey, $1; Geo. Blinckhorn, $3; Frank S. Billings, $2; Wm. H. Hunt, $2; G. Billings, 30 cts.; Thomas Martin, $2; Samuel C. Davis, 75 cts.; John Pearson, $5; G. W. Peckham, $10; Jno. I. Dunlap, $3; Judge S. Cheever, $1; E. W. Weaver, $7.50; S. B. S. Wilson, 50 cts.; J. M. Hall, 50 cts.; A. S. Sanfette, 25 cts.; James W. White, $3.25; Francis H. Lee, 25 cts.; Silas R. Shippy, 50 cts.; R. L. Baker, $2; Roberts Bros., $8; J. C. Ochiltree, 50 cts.; Ernest Blankenberg, $1.25; Levi Baldwin, $3; A. A. Katchie, $1.50; Alex. Cochran, $10; E. C. Miles, $1; Dr. G. W. Topping, 50 cts.; D. H. Bond, $3; Wm. I. Kille, $2; Jno. E. Haynes, $2.5; Jos. B. Hill, 75 cts.; Samuel Reese, $2; W. E. Lukens, 75 cts.; Miss M. P. Rhoades, $2.25; Jacob Belker, $1.2; J. Burroughs, $2; Joseph B. Weaver, $2; Laura Barnaby, 15 cts.; Geo. Nichols, $1.25; C. B. Holloway, $1.10; Dr. C. M. Putnam, $3.60; H. L. Green, $5.10; Roger Sherman, $5; Mrs. C. B. Richmond, $3; Jno. D. White, 35 cts.; P. H. Bateson, $0.15.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

Poetry.

THE ANCIENT FAITH.

'Tis irrecoverable, that ancient faith,
Homely and wholesome, suited to the time,
With rod or candy for child-mind men;
No theologic tube, with lens on lens
Of syllogism transparent, brings it near—
At best resolving some new nebula,
Or blurring some fixed-star of hope to mislead.
Science was Faith once; Faith were Science now,
Would she but lay her bow and arrows by
And arm her with the weapons of the time.
Nothing that keeps thought out is safe from thought,
For there's no virgin-fori but self-respect,
And Truth defensive hath lost hold on God.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The Index.

MAY 11, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

No notices will be taken of anonymous communications.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000. SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 30, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere. Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MUMFORD, New Harmony, Ind.	One	Share, 100
D. ATHER, Jr., Brooklyn, N. Y.	"	100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT, Evansville, Ind.	"	100
—, Defiance, Ohio	"	100
J. T. BRADY, Bryan, Ohio	"	100
—, Sabetha, Kan.	"	100
MAX PRAGHT, Northampton, Mass.	"	100
O—, Cincinnati, Ohio	"	100
H. HETTERMANN, Boston, Mass.	"	100
O. FOLGOM, Toledo, Ohio	"	100
S. C. EASTMAN, Zanesfeld, Ohio	"	100
J. O. MARTIN, Palmyra, Mo.	"	100
L. T. IVES, Indianapolis, Ind.	"	100
E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.	"	100
A. FOLGOM, Boston, Mass.	Two	200
W. F. HEIKER, Dayton, Ohio	"	200
HIRAM COLT, Susq'n Bridge, N. Y.	One	100
CHARLES NASH, Worcester, Mass.	Two	200
S. F. WOODARD, Livonia, N. Y.	One	100
H. A. MILLER, Osborn, Ohio	Two	200
J. W. BARTLETT, Mt. Carroll, Ill.	One	100
OSCAR ROOS, Dover, N. H.	"	100
MRS E. S. MILLER, Taylor's Falls, Minn.	"	100
JAS. R. STONE, Geneva, N. Y.	"	100
D. E. INNES, Cincinnati, Ohio	"	100
A. TAPP, " " " " " "	Five	500
S. L. WILDER, " " " " " "	One	100
PETER H. CLARK, " " " " " "	"	100
G. K. WITTINGTON, " " " " " "	"	100
J. T. SUTTON, " " " " " "	"	100
WALT. F. AUGSTER, Pittsburgh, Pa.	"	100
MISS C. E. NOURSE, Cincinnati, Ohio	Two	200
JAS. FISCHER, Shreveport, La.	One	100
G. H. HOLTEMAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.	"	100
L. VON BLESSING, N. Y. City	Five	500
W. H. BOUGHTON, " " " " " "	One	100
W. P. CHAMBERS, " " " " " "	"	100
TITUS L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.	"	100
A. McD. YOUNG, Milwaukee, Wis.	"	100
G. W. FRICKHAM, " " " " " "	"	100
C. T. HAWLEY, " " " " " "	"	100
W. E. BECKER, " " " " " "	"	100
MRS. G. D. NOURSE, " " " " " "	Five	500
ROBT. C. SPENCER, " " " " " "	One	100
C. M. LAWLER, " " " " " "	"	100
E. R. LELAND, " " " " " "	"	100
W. R. BLACKMORE, Painesville, Ohio	"	100
H. H. RANNEY, Boston, Mass.	"	100
O. B. PROTHINGHAM, New York, N. Y.	Five	500

$37,400

The Unitarian is the name of a new monthly paper edited apparently by the First Unitarian Society of Topeka, Kansas, of which Rev. G. W. Patten is pastor. The first (April) number has been just received. It seems to be "conservatively radical," and is chiefly filled with extracts from Unitarian books, sermons, and journals. As to terms, &c, it contains no information. The following is from a department not inappropriately headed "Spice," and may pass for ginger:—

A writer in the Congregationalist gives an account of a great revival at Lawrence, Kansas. "Sceptics, infidels, and Unitarians have been led to believe in and receive Jesus Christ as a divine and almighty Savior." If we should say that the time is coming when bigots, persecutors, and Trinitarians will adopt rational views of religion, probably we should be considered rather discourteous.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

Nearly a year ago we addressed a letter to Mr. Holyoake, of London, editor of the Reasoner, the organ of English Secularism, requesting the favor of a communication from him for THE INDEX. Since that time we have had the pleasure of correspondence with him, but received the impression that the state of his health did not warrant him in complying with our request. A note just received leads to the conclusion that the subjoined letter was intended for publication. Our apology for not printing it at the time is the impression above mentioned, and the scrupulous deference we would always show to the wishes of our correspondents with regard to the publication of their favors. If we have ever erred in this respect, it has been from a misunderstanding, and not from any intentional violation of confidence. The following letter is now very gladly given to our readers:—

20 COCKSPUR STREET, PALL MALL,
LONDON, S. W., February 6, 1872.

MY DEAR SIR:—Your request that I would write to you upon the principles of THE INDEX gave me great pleasure. Day by day it is a new regret to me that I cannot comply, as I would. I have overworked myself, and I prefer to arrest my own hand to having it arrested by that imperious personage who never interferes but once, and listens to no terms. Death strikes me as being on the whole a courteous person. He never takes action so long as persons respect the ordinary conditions upon which life depends. He only steps in when he observes persons wanting in reasonable regard to themselves.

It gives me gratification to see that THE INDEX represents a belief in Theism and Progress—in Religion without Superstition—in Freedom without outrage. I will say more upon it in the Reasoner, which consider as addressed to yourself. I am concluding the thirtieth and final volume of that periodical, that I may through rest acquire new strength.

I send you Numbers of it in which are articles intended for your eye. One day I hope to come to America and see you. It is in my mind, when I can command leisure, to write upon the questions of English and American Free Thought. Permit me to ask your acceptance of the "Principles of Secularism," which I send you as illustrative of views which I have given the best years of my life to enforce. In it I explain somewhat that Organization of Ideas which I would substitute for that Organization of Arms in which nations have hitherto sought strength.

Yours very sincerely,

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

To Francis E. Abbot, Esq.,
Editor of THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

Accompanying this letter was a package of pamphlets, among which was "The Last Trial for Atheism in England: A Fragment of Autobiography. By George Jacob Holyoake." A more intensely interesting narrative we never read. It made us tingle with sympathy and admiration for the author of its noble and manly pages. Mr. Holyoake's trial took place at Gloucester, August 15, 1842; and the result of it was imprisonment for six months in Gloucester Gaol, for no offence but the honest expression of an honest opinion. At some future time we hope to give our readers a fuller account of this pamphlet, and the principles which found such calm, dignified, and courageous defence. But the following extract from the "Preface to the Fourth Edition of 1871" is so characteristic of Mr. Holyoake that we cannot refrain from reproducing it here:—

"In the completer sense of the term Atheism, as I understand it now, that for which I was tried was controversial rather than intrinsic. The indictment of my friend Mr. Southwell had forced my attention to the grounds of Theism, then current, and I was surprised how inconclusive they seemed. The bitterness and alacrity with which prosecutions for hesitancy upon the subject were entered upon by Christians gave me the impression that they had no confidence themselves in their reasons for Theism. I always dissented from my colleague, Mr. Chilton, who argued the impossibility of Theism being true. Atheism declaring—"there is no God"—seemed to me to imply the same logical omniscience as that assumed by Theism, when it says—"there is." The search for God is one to which, sooner or later, every thinker bends his highest powers; and there is more reverence in the reticence which faithfulness to the understanding compels than in dogmatism on what lies beyond. In the days when the Trial, recorded in those pages, took place, any hesitancy as to accepting Theism was treated as flagrant Atheism. I had too little knowledge of the subject then to define clear conditions of dissent; and if I had, I should not have used it. When the right of Free Thought was in question, critical niceness of defence would have seemed like higgling with the enemy. I therefore accepted the imputation of Atheism in any sense, that none might say I shrank from any consequence of honest and relevant Free Thought. My own actual Atheism was not the denial that there was a God, but the denial that we knew there was one."

Such throughout is the high, pure spirit of this man; and while we personally hold the belief in God as the dearest of our intellectual possessions, guaranteed by the deepest and most faithful thought of which we are capable, we nevertheless cast in our lot, for better or for worse, with such men as George Jacob Holyoake. The door that will not swing wide open on its hinges with spontaneous welcome at their coming, as flattered and honored by the tread of such footsteps across its threshold, we will shun with deeper abhorrence than the portals of the tomb or the gates of hell.

THE RESULT OF THE EXPERIMENT.

The plan for increasing our circulation proposed by Mr. A. K. Butts in THE INDEX, No. 117, has resulted in adding to our subscription list, within the space of five weeks, the names of Fifteen Hundred and Seventy-Nine new subscribers. All these are trial-subscribers for three or six months at half-price, with the exception of about a hundred names concerning which a special arrangement was made; and besides these a goodly number of subscribers at regular rates has also been gained. A large majority of these trial-names will probably remain permanently on our books; and we congratulate our friends on the flattering success of their efforts, with hearty thanks for the earnest good-will thus practically manifested. No better proof could be desired of the increasing willingness of the public to read the most radical utterances of the time; and we draw the most favorable auguries for the cause of free thought and free religion from the new spirit that is so significantly stirring the hearts of the American people. It promises a complete emancipation before long from the dominion of lingering superstitions unworthy of the age we live in; and the desperate efforts of the Christianizers to check its progress will but hasten it. To each and all of those who have so kindly and vigorously seconded our endeavor to put the plain truths of Free Religion before the public in plain and uncompromising form, and to help educate the world into higher ideas and aims by sowing everywhere the ennobling thoughts of our associates and contributors, we can but poorly express the gratitude we feel. The letters lately (and indeed constantly) sent us express a sympathy and enthusiasm for the cause we are trying to advance which ought to put life even into a corpse; and though we have no time to spend in making replies, we want to say they are keenly appreciated, and sweeten the necessary but exhausting drudgery of routine.

According to announcement, we append the list of those who have forwarded the names of trial-subscribers, with the number sent by each. A few sent less names than five; but we concluded to make no difference in these cases. Probably the list is not absolutely accurate, especially where the names were sent at different times, but it is as correct as we can make it:—

Mr. ASA K. BUTTS, New York, N. Y., one hundred and seventy-eight; Miss C. E. NOURSE, Cincinnati, O., four; Mr. H. E. HOWE, Toledo, O., four; Mr. S. F. WOODARD, Osborn, O., fourteen; Mr. L. NEWELL, Geneva, N. Y., five; Mr. MILAN BENTLEY, Alliance, O., thirty-one; A Friend, St. Louis, Mo., four; Mr. J. C. ALLEN, Van Wert, O., eight; Mr. J. SEDGEBER, Painesville, O., three; Mr. CHAS. BONSALE, Salem, O., eight; Mr. GEO. NICHOLS, Tontogany, O., thirteen; Mr. J. W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y., four; Mr. THOS. TASKER, Angola, Ind., seven; Mr. MAX PRAGHT, Cincinnati, O., six; Mr. GEO. WILLIAMS, Whitesboro, N. Y., five; Dr. C. G. CLARK, Maumee City, O., thirteen; Mr. JOEL SHARP, Salem, O., nine; Mr. J. S. BONSALE, Salem, O., five; Mr. A. W. HAWLEY, Milan, O., nine; Mr. ADOLPH WERNER, New York City, eight; Mr. D. C. MOORE, Salem, O., three; Mr. J. McMillan, Salem, O., four; Dr. J. N. LYMAN, Columbus, O., eight; Mr. R. BUTLER, Busti, N. Y., eight; Mr. S. F. BENSON, Eldora, Iowa, eight; Mr. J. T. BLAKENEY, Dunkirk, N. Y., fourteen; Mr. E. B. Lusk, Arcadia, N. Y., twenty-three; Dr. TITUS L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y., five; Rev. G. F. WHITFIELD, Eureka, Wis., five; Mr. E. F. DICKINSON, Elgin, Ill., eleven; Mr. F. S. BILLINGS, Pekin, Ill., nine; Mr. JOSEPH SINGER, Chicago, Ill., four; Mr. B. N. ADAMS, Quincy, Mass., ten; —, Yonkers, N. Y., five;

Mr. C. C. Slocum, Anderson, Ind., nineteen; Mr. Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa., twenty-one; Mr. E. Han- num, Southampton, Mass., six; Dr. J. S. Byers, Zionsville, Ind., six; Mr. Geo. Molnar, Franklin, Pa., six; Dr. A. A. Bell, Madison, Ga., sixteen; Mr. P. Underwood, Jefferson, Kan., eight; Miss E. Y. Howard, Cincinnati, O., six; Mr. C. W. Newton, Castleton, Ill., four; ———, De Witte, Mich., five; Mr. E. R. Wicks, Meriden, Ill., ten; Mr. Samuel Keese, Great Neck, L. I., sixteen; Mr. E. S. Pier, Corning, N. Y., five; Rev. W. C. Gannett, East Lexington, Mass., thirty-four; Mr. Frank B. Raze, West Somerset, N. Y., seven; Mr. T. K. Peck, Westminster, Ct., five; Dr. T. H. Callahan, Buffalo, N. Y., six; Mr. D. Sandman, La Crosse, Wis., five; Mr. F. French, Hillsdale, Mich., six; Mr. H. L. Green, Syracuse, N. Y., two hundred and seventy-eight; Mr. R. M. Branch, Florence, Mass., five; Mr. W. E. Lukens, Rock Falls, Ill., sixteen; Mr. B. F. Horton, Dexter, Maine, seven; ———, Chicopee, Mass., six; Mr. S. Hoag, New York Mills, N. Y., sixteen; Mr. L. T. Womack, Ashewa, Iowa, five; Mr. R. L. Houghton, N. Bennington, Vt., ten; Mr. L. A. Harbaugh, Toledo, Iowa, five; Mr. F. E. Baker, Des Moines, Iowa, fourteen; Mr. C. L. Roberts, Yates City, Ill., eleven; Mr. O. C. Clogston, Montpelier, Vt., eight; Mr. N. S. Truesdell, Avon, O., four; Mr. C. B. Holloway, Holland, O., five; Dr. R. K. Price, Dexter, Iowa, five; Mr. S. W. Ayers, Delta, Iowa, five; Mr. Wm. Orcutt, Cambridge, Ill., ten; Mr. J. W. Bigelow, New York City, five; Mr. C. T. Fowler, Northbridge, Mass., two; Mr. Benj. Cobb, Dighton, Mass., three; Mrs. Theodosia B. Shepherd, Oskaloosa, Iowa, ten; Mr. W. G. Wilkinson, Donaldsonville, La., five; Mr. Geo. B. Gill, Keokuk, Iowa, two; Mr. M. H. Conaway, Archer, O., six; Mr. Geo. Chamberlin, De Pere, Wis., six; Mr. Chas. A. Miller, Union, Maine, five; Mr. R. Ashley, Brushy Prairie, Ind., five; Dr. Frank Goodyear, Cortland, N. Y., five; Mr. R. H. Ranney, Boston, Mass., five; Mr. J. T. Woodward, Spring, Penn., twelve; Mr. James Allen, Wilmot, O., eight; Mr. M. Hayden, New Milford, Penn., six; Mr. R. Friable, Van Wert, O., two; Mr. L. B. Hogue, Lloydville, O., two; Mr. G. H. Briggs, Amesbury, Mass., five; Mr. J. Shackleton, Albany, Kansas, seven; Mr. S. D. Bardwell, Shelburne Falls, Mass., seven; Mrs. O. Gillett, Parma, Mich., seven; Rev. Zerah Masters, Sheffield, Ill., ten; Mr. H. Townsend, Florence, Mass., ten; Mr. W. F. Johnson, Iola, Kansas, one; Mr. T. R. Davis, Normal, Ill., four; Mr. Geo. B. Boutelle, Fitchburg, Mass., five; Mr. J. W. Pike, Windham Station, O., six; Mr. Jno. Whitakerhousen, N. Y., five; Dr. J. H. York, Dover, N. H., six; Mr. H. G. Spencer, Evansville, Wis., thirteen; Mr. A. A. Knights, Boston, sixteen; Mr. J. D. Zimmermann, Union City, Mich., sixteen; Mr. L. G. Felch, Monroe Centre, O., nine; Mr. Dyer D. Lum, Portland, Maine, thirteen; Mr. John Jackson, Charlotte, Mich., five; Mr. D. C. Roundy, Davenport, Iowa, six; Mr. W. Freeman, Nashville, Tenn., twenty; Dr. G. N. Jennings, Tonica, Ill., five; Mr. D. B. Morton, Groton, N. Y., six; Rev. W. H. Spencer, Haverhill, Mass., eight; Mr. E. C. Stiles, Battle Creek, Mich., nine; Mr. J. M. Smith, North Brookfield, Mass., eighteen; Mrs. M. Sherman, Circleville, O., two; Mr. Wm. T. Miles, Worcester, Mass., fourteen; Mr. Geo. Plumleigh, Carpentersville, Ill., five; Mr. D. Wright, Des Moines, Iowa, one; Mr. Wallace R. Moses, Boston, Mass., five; Mr. W. H. Benton, Ada, Mo., four; Mr. J. C. Ochiltree, New Salem, Ind., two; Mr. J. M. Hall, La Grange, Ind., one; Mr. E. W. Weir, La Grange, Ind., twenty; Mr. J. E. Hitchcock, Oberlin, O., one; Mr. J. E. Haynes, Staten Island, N. Y., five; Dr. P. P. Field, Tawas City, Mich., five; Mr. J. F. Ford, Spencer, Iowa, twelve; Dr. ———, Boston, Mass., five; Mr. T. M. Lamb, Worcester, Mass., twenty; Mr. W. C. Rust, Jr., Manchester, Mass., six; Mr. C. P. Burghardt, Lisle, N. Y., ten; Mr. C. B. Darrow, Orland, Ind., nine; Mr. Geo. W. Blue, Defiance, Ohio, six; Mr. Harrison Wood, Holland, Ohio, six; Mr. M. E. Taylor, Leslie, Mich., eighteen; Rev. F. M. Holland, Baraboo, Wis., seven; Dr. J. M. Blakeley, Anita, Iowa, five; Dr. Jas. Fischer, Shreveport, La., ten; Mr. T. G. Hovey, East Lexington, Mass., twenty-seven; Mr. J. W. Graffan, New Bedford, Mass., two; Mr. F. M. Tate, Farmington, Iowa, fifteen; Mr. Geo. Kridler, Winterset, Iowa, six.

We are obliged this week to postpone an editorial in relation to the proposed addition to the Constitution of the Free Religious Association. It will appear in our next issue.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following additional lists of names have been received to the counter-petition since our last issue: Mr. A. L. Munroe, Rockford, Illinois, sends one hundred and thirty-three names; Mr. D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wisconsin, fifty-five (obtained by Mr. John Tanel, Greenfield, Wisconsin); Mr. G. B. Storking, Fabius, New York, forty; Mr. James L. Hogeboom, Castleton, New York, seventeen; Mr. Lucius A. Harbaugh and Mr. Samuel C. Davis, Toledo, Iowa, ninety-two; Mr. S. D. Bear, Dayton, Ohio, fifty-six; Mr. M. A. Root, Bay City, Michigan, thirty-three; Mr. Herbert B. Fletcher, West Boylston, Massachusetts, twelve; Mr. Charles T. Robbins, Yonkers, New York, twenty-six.

We would remind our friends that all remonstrances now circulating should be forwarded by the first of June. This is the "home-stretch," and a large number of additional names will yet be sent in, if all the EXTRAS freely distributed from this office have been put to use. Roll up the lists!

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston on the 30th and 31st of May. The meeting will open with a Session for Business and Addresses in the Parker Fraternity Hall on Thursday evening, May 30th, at 7½ o'clock. At this session two amendments to the Constitution are to be acted upon:

1. To change the number of Vice-Presidents from "three" to "twelve."
2. To add to the first sentence of the Second Article, after the words "other Associations," and connecting by a semi colon, the following words: "and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

On Friday, May 31st, there will be a Convention in Tremont Temple with three sessions, beginning at 10 A. M. and 3½ P. M. and 7½ P. M. The subjects to be considered are—"Liberty and the Church in America;" "Does Religion represent a permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind, or is it a perishable Superstition?" and "The Religion of Humanity." These subjects will be introduced by essays by J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and O. B. Frothingham, the President, to be followed by addresses and discussion. Other distinguished speakers will be present.

WM. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

THE ANNUAL CONVENTION.

From the foregoing notice of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association it will be seen that there have been proposed two amendments to the Constitution which are to be acted upon at the Business Session. It may be well to give some explanation of these amendments. The first, increasing the number of Vice-Presidents of the Association from three to twelve, was proposed by vote of the last annual meeting on motion of Mrs. E. D. Cheney. The change was suggested in the preliminary remarks by Mr. Frothingham, the President, at the opening of the meeting. The reason given by him for the change was that there might be more opportunity than now to show by the list of officers the national extent as well as broad inclusiveness of the idea of the Association. The increased list could be readily made up with well-known names from different parts of the country; and, though the new members might not be an active part of the Executive Board, they would be representative of the object of the Association and serviceable as corresponding counsellors. Mrs. Cheney embodied the President's suggestion in a motion, but the proposition for final action had to lie over till this year, since the Constitution requires that notice of any proposed amendment must have been given with the call for the meeting.

The other amendment that is to be acted upon is proposed by Messrs. Abbot and Potter. It inserts certain words in the Second Article of the Constitution, more specifically asserting the central idea of free thought and putting it beyond any possible question that the Association does not limit membership by any test of speculative belief. This proposed change is only an amendment in respect to expression, since it is to be presumed that the members of the Association generally will agree with these gentlemen that the spirit and substance of these additional clauses have always been in the Constitution. Still, outside of the Association, there has seemed to be some misunderstanding on this point, and hence a more explicit statement that cannot be misunderstood appears to be required.

W. J. P.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"

This is what some readers of THE INDEX exclaim, after reading Mr. Abbot's "Truths for the Times" and "Impeachment of Christianity," and so forth. "Why can't Mr. Abbot call himself a Christian in some sense, as the Unitarians do, not in a doctrinal but in a moral sense; at least why trouble himself to publish his repudiation of the name?"

There is a great deal in a name. If the use of language is to convey thought rather than conceal it, then language must be so definite that it shall not confuse thought. Now, the loose use of the word "Christian," I suppose Mr. Abbot believed, was concealing and confusing thought; and as he believed that right living depended directly or indirectly upon right thinking, Mr. Abbot felt it his duty, for the love of man and the truth, to bring them into harmony. Others have seen the things which he sees, have quietly dropped the word "Christian" as applying to themselves, but have not felt it their duty publicly to define and discard the word. Perhaps, like Mrs. Glegg, they thought the interpretation, if not spelling, of words was a matter of "private judgment," that it was none of their business how their neighbor defined a "Christian;" and that, if Mrs. Malaprop wished to discourse about the "allegory on the bank of the Nile," she had a perfect right to do so. No doubt we have no right to smash in Mrs. Glegg's or Mrs. Malaprop's front door to correct their orthography or rhetorical blunders; but is it not well to hint to them that school books are cheap, especially Grammars and Rhetorics? Mr. Abbot is hinting to the "Christian" public that Mill's Logic is for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Mr. Emerson says:—"The mind of the age has fallen away from theology to morals. I conceive it an advance." This is true and growing truer every day, despite the jeremiads and solemn warnings of Dr. Bellows over the "Decline of Theological Interest." Perhaps one result of this transition from theology to morals will be the transition of the word "Christian." Perhaps it will gradually slough off its theological meaning and come out in an entire moral dress. Perhaps it is one of the amphibious words, or rather one of those baldriches that shake off their tad-pole significance and the next generation croak another tune in another element. Who knows but the tail of theology that hangs to the word "Christian" may not transform itself into hind-legs of morality! The race is economical. It makes over its cradles and trundle-beds into pontoons,—makes revered words do double duty.

But whether it may be that the word "Christian" lose its doctrinal meaning in a thousand years, one thing is certain,—it has not yet lost it; and another thing is certain,—if it does lose it, it will be at the sacrifice of clear thought, if not of clear conscience. When words are corrupting, they confuse, if they do not corrupt, the mind. You must often pay dear toll for the transition. I think it is not "ethical prudence" for one to refuse to call himself a "Christian" who believes that Jesus was not the Christ prophesied, and who does not accept his authority as superior to all other; and who is a Christian only in the "moral sense." That is not the sense in which the word is now generally used and understood, however it may be a thousand years from now. We are morally bound to use words in the commonly accepted meaning or not to use them at all, or explain the sense in which we use them each time.

What should we think if a man should salute us in the street as a "silly libertine?" Would it appear to be told that in one sense it is true—that "silly" is from the German selig, which means blessed, and "libertine" originally meant a speculative free-thinker, and that when he addressed us as a "silly libertine," he simply meant—"You blessed free thinker!" It is true he did not use the words in the commonly accepted sense; but then he might, after the manner of many a "Liberal Christian," reply that he did use them "in some sense," and that too in the original Scriptural, or written, sense. Probably we should politely inform him that hereafter, if he wished to be intelligible and agreeable, he had better not use those words of us even in his one exceptional sense; that it would mislead the public and defame our character.

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

Suppose, however, the words were such as equally to misguide the public by attaching to us honors undeserved or beliefs, popular and fashionable and profitable, which we do not entertain; should we be quite as strenuous in objecting to them? Yet ought we not to be?

The only proper use of words is the popular use; and the popular use of the word "Christian" has in fact a doctrinal as well as a moral signification. Only the small sect of "Liberal Christians" has tried to strip the word "Christian" of its doctrinal meaning; and they have not entirely succeeded. They are but a feeble folk in comparison with the one hundred and ninety-five millions of Roman Catholics, the seventy millions of Greek Christians, and the ninety millions of Evangelical Christians, who use the word "Christian" as including something more than a moral element; as implying some peculiar doctrinal belief about Jesus. It is this vast majority that long determined the popular meaning of the term; and no handful of Unitarians, however wise and zealous, can "depolarize" the word, as Holmes would say. We shall have to give up the word to the party of the first part, as we have such words as "orthodox" "evangelical," &c. Possession is nine points in the law, and ten in language. Let them have the word "Christian," but let us make them take it all; they cannot have the handsome dowry without the ugly daughter.

We can show men that morality is something common to all religions; that the religions of the world are distinguished, not by what they have in common, but by their differences; and that a man belongs to one or the other according as he embraces, not the general, but the special doctrine. If a man is moral, he is then simply a moral man, and not therefore a Christian or Jew, Buddhist or Mohammedan. If he is any one of them by virtue of his being moral, then he is all at once, which is absurd. The morality that could make him a Christian could make him a Jew or Buddhist or Mohammedan as well, and you might have a Jewish-Buddhist-Mohammedan Christian, which is as conceivable as a yellow-black-white-brown-bay horse. There must be some special doctrine, peculiar to Christianity, to entitle it to a separate name and place as a religion.

What is that doctrine? Not the Fatherhood of God; not the Brotherhood of Man; not benevolence, charity, love or immortality,—for these doctrines are not peculiar to Christianity; they are generic ideas. They are found in other religions, and found in the heart of Humanity. Is not the only doctrine which is peculiar to Christianity this: Jesus of Nazareth is the Hebrew Messiah, the Christ of God? It is this special doctrine alone that is peculiar to the Christian Religion—his that gives it its name "Christian." If this is not the doctrine that distinguishes Christianity from other religions, pray, what is it?

Is it said,—"granting all this, what of it? It makes no difference what words people use to express their ideas, if only they have the ideas." But it does make a difference. New ideas are bound by old words. New words chip the shell of the new struggling thought. Opinions not only coin words, but these words in turn influence the mould and the currency of opinion. Language has a mighty influence in the development of thought. "Talking is thinking aloud." We think right by talking right. If we mean horse-chestnut, let us not say "chestnut-horse." If we try to use the two names, indifferently, we may find sometime that one will kick and the other poison us, to our sorrow. Let us say what we mean, and mean what we say.

"Let us speak plain: there is more force in names
Than most men dream of; and a life may keep
Its throne a whole age longer, if it speak
Behind the shield of some fair-seeming name."

W. H. S.

SCIENCE PRIMERS (D. Appleton and Company), edited by Professors Huxley, Roscoe, and Balfour Stewart. The first or "Introductory" Primer we have not received; but the second and third, on Chemistry and Physics respectively, are before us. They are designed for young children, and are constructed on a somewhat better and more methodical plan than Faraday's "Physical Forces" and "Chemical History of a Candle," so much admired a dozen years ago. The usefulness of such treatises as these, small, cheap, and prepared by men who stand in the front rank of modern sciences rather than by mere compilers, cannot be overestimated. The experiments described are all simple, and most of them could be repeated by any parent or teacher at a trifling expense; and even without such repetition, the numerous diagrams will make the text intelligible to any bright boy or girl. The following notice of these Primers by W. F. Barrett, of London, in Nature for April 11, has caught our eye, and shows what a practical teacher thinks of them:—"Heads of schools cannot exercise too much caution in the introduction of text-books on science, for they know how a poor class-book, once in a school, is a most difficult thing to eject. It is therefore impossible to over-estimate the value of books for boys written by men like Professor Huxley, Roscoe, and Balfour Stewart. An extraordinary impulse to scientific teaching has been given by the Manuals of these and other eminent authors; and of the gladness with which such books are received I, like others, can testify. And now, as a teacher, permit me, Sir, to tender to the same authors not only my own gratitude, but the genuine and hearty thanks of younger boys for their simply delightful Science Primers."—Price 50 cents each; sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

INSTINCT: ITS OFFICE IN THE ANIMAL KINGDOM, AND ITS RELATION TO THE HIGHER POWERS IN MAN (Geo. P. Putnam and Sons), by P. A. Chadbourne, LL. D., is a very thoughtful little work, originally delivered in Boston during the winter of 1871 as a course of twelve lectures at the Lowell Institute. The difficult question of the nature of instinct, its distinction from intelligence, and the allied problems, are discussed in a manner marked by clearness and general discretion. Unlike anti-didant philosophers who deny all reason to animals, and far in advance of the Cartesianists who held that they are merely automatic mechanisms, Mr. Chadbourne admits that instinct and intelligence co-exist, both in animals and in men. But in the former instinct controls intelligence, while in the latter intelligence controls instinct [pp. 207, 208]. This is not, however, the only distinction between them. In man he finds peculiar powers [p. 272]:—

"We are now prepared to state the difference between a man and an animal, as we have found them in our analysis up to this point. It consists in three things. In man we find—

"First,—A comprehending power that surveys the universe, and all the capacities of its possessor, in relation to that universe.

"Second,—A sense of obligation to do certain acts and to refrain from others; this sense arising spontaneously, in view of certain relations or results, and being distinct from those impulses of the affections or desires which may belong to an animal.

"Third,—The power of choice, that gives by its generic action individuality of aim for a life time; and in specific acts determines whether the higher or lower nature of man shall rule. . . . These three powers are all that we have yet found distinctive in the higher nature of man."

But this is not all. The author adds, in his last chapter, the phenomena of man's "religious nature" as the highest distinction of all between man and other animals. Under this head he classes the "instinctive belief in the existence of a God," and the "belief in immortality," which he says are "like instinctive impulses;" and also the instinct of "prayer" and of "worship" (which he distinguishes from prayer without giving grounds for the distinction). In this last chapter, especially, we differ from him, as also in many of his previous statements; but we have no space to enlarge on these points. The standpoint of the writer is that of Christian Intuitionism; and this is too vast a subject to be here discussed.—Price $1.75; sold by H. S. Stebbins.

RECOLLECTIONS OF PAST LIFE (D. Appleton and Company), by Sir Henry Holland, "president of the Royal Institution of Great Britain and physician-in-ordinary to the Queen," is a book whose contents it is impossible to summarize. It must be perused to be known. Sir Henry writes in his eighty-fourth year, chatting agreeably but of course very desultorily, of the many distinguished men with whom he has been brought into contact, professionally or otherwise, in his long career. Hardly a name of note in this century is to be missed from these seductive pages. Observations of value, as [pp. 260—262] on the unfavorable influence of an overgrown periodical literature on the development of profound and exact scholarship, and the vast increase in power and improvement in quality of modern journalism, are interspersed with reminiscences of famous men and women at whom the reader is glad, even for a moment, to gaze with the eyes of a contemporary. The aged physician, representing the culture of a past generation, is yet alive to the peculiarities of a new epoch, among which he singles out for a special allusion the "boldness of modern hypotheses in regard to the highest problems of the universe and of man," and "the more general and rigid demand for evidence on every subject of inquiry" [p. 263]. "I can affirm," he says, "a change in the strictness of this demand for proof even within my own time." And he is liberal enough to rejoice in this marked indication of progress. In comparing, however, a few pages later, successive phases of religious thought and action, he notices the fact that the controversies on these subjects are on more fundamental points than formerly, and ascribes the change to "the growth of that more subtle sceptical spirit which, whether derived or not from the teachings and methods of physical science, has applied itself to every department of human inquiry;" but, from some reason not stated, he declines to speculate on these movements, and does "not desire to pursue the subject further." There is great truth in his observations. Old issues are out of date. Voluminous treatises on the "Evidences of Christianity," and endless disputes on the true interpretation of Biblical texts, excite far less interest than formerly. The battle is fought to day on more vital questions, started by the clashing of the newer views of the universe with the traditional opinions based on effete conceptions. Not to discern the irresistible growth of the scientific spirit,—not to foresee the inevitable and universal extension of it over all realms of human thought,—is to fall in insight, in vision; and they who trust to "intuition" for answers to the deeper questionings of the age because they do not as yet feel the full power of this more exacting spirit, lack the very quality on the possession of which they most complacently plume themselves. The moon of theology is setting; the sun of knowledge is rising above the horizon.—Price $1.50. For sale by H. S. Stebbins.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

I have been making some examination of the Sunday Question, and have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. That neither Jesus, nor the apostles, established the institution known as the Christian Sabbath. Authorities: Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Paley, Whately and others.
2. That Constantine, in 321, first gave the Christian Sabbath the force of law by a scratch of the imperial pen. As he brutally murdered five members of his family, his pety could not have consecrated the day.
3. That neither emperors, popes, nor other human authorities could impart a particle of sanctity to the day, any more than to Easter, Christmas or any other so-called holiday.
4. That any attempt to force an institution of religion upon a people, is anti-Christian and destruction of true religion.
5. That "the right of private judgment" in matters of religion is inherent in man, and no human government can confer it upon man, or alienate him from it. This was the "great gun" of the Reformers in their struggle with popery, and it also did notable service in the control of the dissenters from the Church of England.
6. That the Christian party have no more right to restrain the worldling party from work on Sunday than has the latter to restrain the former from worship on Sunday. The right of the citizen to labor is a personal right, equally with the right to worship, and the law must protect the worker equally with the worshipper. "Work is worship."
7. A law that prefers a Sabbatarian to an anti-Sabbatarian is partial and therefore repugnant to the Constitution which holds that all men are equal before the law.
8. The command, "Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work, and the seventh keep holy unto the Lord," if construed to dedicate the seventh to worship, equally dedicates the other six days to labor. If the seventh day is set apart for religious uses, the other six days are by the same law set apart to secular uses. The civil law should therefore prohibit public worship on the secular days, if it prohibits secular work on the religious day.
9. The establishment of the "Lord's day" is an establishment of religion within the meaning of the Constitution, which says that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." Our state laws contravene the spirit of this provision, for if Sunday laws do not establish a Sabbatarian religion, what do they establish?
10. If our Sunday laws are but rescripts of those of Jesus, we must be faithful to the text. His penalties must be ours. If he affixed no penalties, we can affix none, for it would be blasphemous for us to attempt to improve upon the laws of the Divine Law-giver.
11. If Jesus did not make new laws for the Christian Sabbath, but simply transferred the institution from the seventh to the first day of the week, then we must take the Jewish penalties, which imposed death for the slightest violation; for it cannot be pretended that the Christian day is less important than the Jewish.
12. It is irrelevant, whether God did or did not sanctify Saturday: the question at issue is, did he sanctify Sunday? If so, where, when, and how? If he did not, then the day remains unsanctified.

13. If it be maintained that God only sanctified and set apart a seventh day, without indicating what particular seventh it should be, I answer that the sanctified seventh was Saturday. It is specific, express, unquestionable. God worked on the first day of the week, and we have both command and precedent for working on that day.

14. The compromise cannot be accepted that Sunday must be dedicated to rest, because physiological law indicates that the body requires rest for that portion of the time. If the laws of physiology indicate anything, it is that different persons require different periods of time for rest. Some may healthfully work five days in the week, others six, and others seven. Physiology also indicates quite different proportions, for the different stages of life, youth, manhood and old age. The physiologist who should arbitrarily fix one seventh of the time for rest, and that always on Sunday, would be pronounced a fool.

15. Physiological laws and "Sunday Laws" are again at logger heads as to what constitutes the most healthful rest. One of the essential ingredients of healthful rest is cheerful amusement. Boating, ball-playing, hunting, fishing, excursions, &c., are means of rest which physiology smiles upon, and the Sunday Laws frown upon. The laws of health pronounce them wholesome, and the Laws of Sunday denounce them as hurtful. The doctors of theology and the doctors of physiology disagree.

16. Sunday Laws are not needed for the protection of religious assemblies. Jews, Seventh day Baptists, and other sabbatarian religionists are not disturbed in their worship, and do not complain that others desecrate their day, by engaging in their usual vocations. The consciences of Sunday men are not more tender; the difference seems not so much a matter of conscience as of disposition. The one is aggressive, the other tolerant—the one has the spirit of Constantine, the other of Christ.

17. If the Sunday Laws are right, they ought to be enforced, and those who demand them should see them executed. Sabbatarians are strangely amiss in the performance of this duty. Sabbath breaking is made a crime, but the guilty go unpunished. Do the advocates of these laws want them to become obsolete and remain inert upon the Statute-Book? To connive at crime is but one degree less criminal than to commit the crime connived at. Or do they fear that enforcement would be regarded a piece of petty ecclesiastical tyranny which would result in the overthrow of these laws altogether?

H. I. J.

GARDEN CITY, MINN.

WHY THEY SUBSCRIBE FOR INDEX STOCK.

BOSTON, April 21, 1873.

MR. EDITOR:

Dear Sir,—You may, if you please, put me down for a share in THE INDEX Association. Enclosed you will find check for ten dollars, the amount of first annual assessment. I had hoped to have the pleasure of sending other names as subscribers to stock, but some are "not quite ready" yet.

Financially I feel hardly able to give even this slight aid; but the importance of the work THE INDEX has before it demands of me all I can do to aid the work, consistently with my duties to my family.

I feel deeply the importance of forming a working union of all the friends of liberty of thought and conscience, to protect with uniting vigilance the liberties which the aggressions of Authoritative Religion would destroy. THE INDEX, as an advocate of the right of private judgment, free inquiry, and resistance to dogmatic authority, must be maintained, supported, read, and circulated by all friends of truth, of whatever opinions personally on all open questions, or I fear the ever active enemy, "religious authority," will take advantage of our apathy and disorganized condition to subject us to conditions from which it may take a great while to rally.

As one voice of the thousand, I trust that no effort will be spared to get THE INDEX before the people as the best defender of the rights of man, and that not an effort for the furtherance of this object shall be subordinated to the object of paying a dividend. It seems to me that by being true to the status the latter will come incidentally; and if not, it is of small consequence in comparison with the glorious cause of truth.

I can but feel that one such telling blow at "the old vice of Christianity" as is given in the editorial leader of the last INDEX, "Argument and Denunciation," would exert an immense power, could it be read through the length and breadth of the land. To what an extent is Christianity guilty of bearing false witness against the advocates of arguments it cannot meet! I have even now before me a copy of McIlvaine's "Evidences of Christianity," which I have just been reading, in which the author, evidently fearing that it may increase the prestige of "Infidelity" if he fails to assail the reputation and character of its champions, in referring to Gibbon, whom Albert Barnes admits—"did not pervert or distort one single fact of history to subserve his own ends," says: "Gibbon's moral character is seen in his History of the Roman Empire, a work full of hypocrisy, perversion and impurity; the production of a mind as unchaaste as it was insidious. When he could not find an occasion to insult Christianity, he made it by false glosses or dishonest colorings." This is but a mild specimen of what he says of every prominent disbeliever of Orthodox Christianity, with a reckless disregard of historical fact that betrays unmistakably the old, old doctrine—"the end justifies the means." That such a man is Bishop of the Episcopal church of Ohio speaks ill of the "Christian civilization" of this country. But I'm writing a letter, and must beg pardon.

Very truly yours,

R. H. RANNEY.

[The writer of the above letter reluctantly consents to its publication at our special request. It speaks volumes in behalf not only of the cause in which THE INDEX is working, but also of the character and spirit of those who so generously step forward to sustain it. Many others of THE INDEX stock subscribers have made a similar strain upon moderate resources, in order to help build up a powerful organ for the spread of free and practical religion. We are very proud of that long list of single share holders. May THE INDEX grow daily more worthy of their sacrifices!—Ed.]

WORSHIP.

SOUTH AMESBURY, MASS., April 10, 1873.

MR. ABBO:

Dear Sir,—The paragraph you printed as a rejoinder to my note in relation to "the Future of Public Prayer," were singularly to the point, and I have to thank you for the service rendered. You write so well upon this subject that, if I could have my way, I am afraid I should insist upon your writing upon this or kindred topics altogether, and let Christianity go without further impeachment, and the constitutional amendment take its chance. True, I do not quite coincide with you in regard to the legitimate basis of Theism. Mr. Longfellow, in a recent number of the Radical, expresses my idea far more satisfactorily. But otherwise no one has so fully outlined and given phrase to my own hitherto inadequately expressed thought upon the theme in question. Certainly I, no more than you, believe "that the religious sentiment will ever perish out of humanity." Certainly I think it a very beautiful conception that "music rather than language" will perchance become the chosen medium of expression for "the deeper worship" of the hereafter. If we could only begin to reconstruct now—introduce the rational and legitimate method in no matter how humble a way! The world is not likely ever to need the service more, although sometime it may be in a condition to appreciate it better. It is sad to think what "broken cisterns that can hold no water" men have "hewn out unto themselves," in this respect. I have the misfortune to be very deaf; but the infirmity brings with it one compensation—I am thereby wholly freed from the annoyance of listening to the puerilities and insanities incident to the common forms of worship, which so drain and impoverish these human souls around me. The race ought to be enriched and made glad by its religious communings. Instrumentalities such as these ought to help us to "mount up as eagles," to borrow the inspiration of an old prophet. Is it not even more sad to think that nothing can be, or at all events nothing is being, done in this respect for the direct relief of existing generations?

I do not quite fall in with your analysis, when you affirm that "any social expression of the religious sentiment is in itself public prayer." In accordance with all modern usage, the term prayer seems to me primarily to imply aspiration, fervent desire; while expressions of the religious sentiments may involve a thousand other things as well. But no matter; we are at one on the main point, if we could only agree to work together in some tangible way for the speedy consummation of the end desired.

Fraternally Thine,

JAMES WHITTIER.

SPIRITUALISM AT THE BAR OF SCIENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1873.

In a late number of THE INDEX, I observe a notice of Froude's "Short Studies on Great Subjects," in which you comment approvingly upon his remarks on Spiritualism in the "Scientific Method applied to History."

In reading that "Study," it seems to me his criticism was as unworthy of its distinguished author as a lately published letter of Prof. Huxley on the same subject was of him.

Neither of the gentlemen even pretend to have examined the subject themselves experimentally, but stand off at a safe distance and denounce what they fail to explain by ordinary natural laws, as mere superstition.

While the writer is not a "Spiritualist" in any sense of the word, he believes with Coleridge that Mesmerism may be the reflection of a truth which is below the horizon; and as Spiritualism is apparently closely allied to it, the latter may be only the result of a more powerful refraction of some hidden truth.

Sir David Brewster well said that "Spirit was the last thing he would give in to."

This was said in the true spirit of scientific inquiry, which rejects all so-called supernatural powers or agencies, when the known forces of nature are competent to produce the phenomena.

What is objected to is that the higher lights of science will not investigate the actual facts, and endeavor to ascertain the causes that produce them.

That strange phenomena do occur, any man may satisfy himself almost any day; and what we ask is that these gentlemen who are skilled in all the means of detecting truth and exposing error should critically examine, and either show the falsehood, explain the cause, or declare that they cannot account for the occurrences by any known satisfactory force.

The writer, though not pretending to the dignity of a "scientist," is yet familiar with the modes of science, and has in a number of instances witnessed developments, where it was simply impossible for him to be deceived, that he could not explain by any understood law of nature; and he is merely seeking for "more light."

It is of no use to declare the manifestations "superstition."

What one has absolutely felt, heard and seen repeatedly, and can feel, hear or see under the same circumstances at any time, is not "superstition."

The time has come when men of science must face the issue. That the phenomena occur is proven. Now what is the cause?

ENGINEER.

[What phenomena occur? The witnesses have not yet learned to separate what they have actually seen, heard, or felt, from what they merely infer. The exact nature of the alleged facts is to be first determined; everything illusive, extraneous, or irrelevant is to be most severely ruled out of court; and such inferences only as are logically irresistible are to be admitted to the rank of explanations. What is usually called "investigation" of this subject is the sheerest farce. When "mediums" will submit to such investigation as must precede intelligent conviction, scientific men will be willing enough to enter upon it; but so long as they insist on precisely such "conditions" as absolutely preclude it, what can they expect but to be treated with neglect by all but those who are already saturated with belief? When Spiritualism will submit to really scientific investigation, it will undoubtedly receive it. Our own repeated attempts to "investigate" have been very unfortunate, although we make no claim to be a "scientist."—Ed.]

HELL IMPROVING.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, March 6, 1873.

Some weeks since I attended a funeral. A discourse was preached by a Methodist brother. He gave us a very fanciful and beautiful picture of heaven, and in glowing language set forth how desirable it was to reach such a place, for there was no pain, no sorrow, no tears, no grief, no parting from friends, so common to this life. With all of this I should have been deeply interested, and highly entertained, if it had come from an eye-witness; but doubts would creep into my mind and say,—"perhaps this is romance."

But when he dropped the pleasing side of the picture and presented the other, he was quite philosophical. That old historic Lake of fire and brimstone, lashed into fury by a roaring Devil, with a long tail, formed no part of the scenery; but instead the drunkard went into a place where there was nothing to satisfy his raging thirst, and thus he suffered to eternity. The miser was put where there was no gold to satisfy his cravings, and hence his torments. The liar went where he could not make his lies available for his selfish purposes, and so he was tormented. And thus through the long catalogue of vices and immoralities.

On the whole, I thought it a decided improvement on the old Lake. As there are improvements going on in almost everything, I do not see why Hell should not be improved too.

E. L. CRANE.

The Missionaries sent by the Roman Catholics of England to convert the negroes of the Southern States have commenced their labors, the results of which will doubtless be watched with considerable interest. They will find some serious obstacles in their path. Except in Louisiana, the negro population of the United States, so far as they have been brought under religious influences, are firmly, we may say enthusiastically, attached to various Protestant forms of belief. A majority of them are Methodists, and of the remainder the Baptists monopolize a large number. The emotional character as well as the simplicity of the public worship of these denominations has something peculiarly attractive to the negro mind, and the attempt to impose upon them new religious dogmas and an elaborate ceremonial will to many persons seem nearly hopeless. The missionaries doubtless count much on the fervid imagination of the negro race, their docility under spiritual guidance, and on the fact that wherever they have been brought under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, as in Louisiana, Florida, the West Indies and South America, they have been its devoted children. It should be remembered, however, that the negro is generally faithful to early impressions and traditions; and we suspect that it would prove quite as difficult to convert the colored Roman Catholics of Louisiana to Protestantism as to induce their brethren of other States to cease to be Methodists or Baptists. So far, however, as the English missionaries may help to educate the people among whom they are laboring, they will have the hearty sympathy of all liberal minds.—N. Y. Sun.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, on REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for one dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, OHIO.

SOW THE SEED!

THE "IMPEACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY," published in the first number of the third volume of THE INDEX, has been electrotyped, and an edition of Ten Thousand Copies has been printed in the form of

A Cheap Tract for Gratuitous Distribution! It is intended to circulate One Hundred Thousand Copies during the current year. In order to accomplish this purpose, we must rely upon the co-operation of our active sympathizers.

Packages of these TRACTS, containing any desired number of copies, will be mailed to any address on receipt of enough money to defray postage, and whatever additional sums, large or small, the generosity of distributors may prompt them to add.

Of course, money will be needed to carry out our intentions; but we urge every one who believes that THIS TRACT WILL DO GOOD, and who is willing to distribute copies of it, to send in an order at once, even if unable to donate more than the simple postage and the time required for distribution. Do not hesitate because you cannot give more. We are convinced more than ever by the character and objects of the late Cincinnati Convention, that such plain speech as this TRACT contains is greatly needed at the present time. In the name of Christianity, of the American People; and the mighty magic of that name is still powerful over multitudes even of otherwise liberal minds. Let the world learn that the protest made against Christianity is not made by hatred of Goodness and of Truth, but rather by a love for those that can no longer be satisfied with shams. He woefully misjudges this Tract who thinks it has no higher aim than to "make a sensation." It was meant to tell needed truth so plainly that it must be heard. And it will be heard. All we ask is—give it a chance.

A most Dangerous Attempt is now Making to Subvert the Religious Liberties

Address your orders to THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word."); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, 90 St. Clair street, Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. E. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA K. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONE, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

Name	Address	Shares	Amount
D. R. LOCKE	Toledo, O.	Twenty	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER	" "	Fifteen	1,500
C. CONE	" "	"	1,500
EDWARD BISSELL	" "	Forty	4,000
F. E. ABBOT	" "	Ten	1,000
H. K. BULLFAY	" "	"	1,000
GUIDO MARX	" "	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON	" "	"	1,000
E. P. BASSETT	" "	"	1,000
H. E. HOWE	" "	Three	300
W. C. FISK	" "	"	300
J. M. RITCHIE	" "	"	300
V. KEEL	" "	"	300
ALANSON WOOD	" "	Five	500
WILLIAM KRAUS	" "	"	100
J. G. HOLZWARTH	" "	One	100
JOS. E. MARX	" "	"	100
C. AUCHARD	" "	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS	New York, N. Y.	Thirty	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON	Newport, R. I.	Two	200
ALEX. COCHRAN	Franklin, Pa.	Five	500
Geo. HOADLY	Cincinnati, O.	Two	200
MISS A. HALL	Danville, Mass.	One	100
G. N. JENNINGS	Tonica, Ill.	"	100
J. SEDGWICK	Painesville, O.	"	100
CARL FOST	Monroe, Mich.	Three	300
MILLER	Sacramento, Cal.	Five	500
L. R. BUNDERLAND	Quincy, Mass.	One	100
J. L. WHITING	Boston, N. H.	"	100
LOUIS BRISTOL	Croydon, N. H.	"	100
J. E. SUTTON	Olathe, Kan.	"	100
S. I. FURKEE	" "	"	100
J. M. HADLEY	" "	"	100
S. HILL	Florence, Mass.	Ten	1,000
W. H. SPENCER	Haverhill, Mass.	Two	200
JON. F. BARRETT	Boston, Mass.	"	200
E. W. WEIR	La Grange, Ind.	"	200
FRANK PRATHER	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
E. F. DICKINSON	Wellsville, Kan.	One	100
J. T. DINGMORE	New York, N. Y.	Two	200
W. J. PORTER	Middlefield, Ct.	Fourteen	1,400
G. C. GLATTE	New Bedford, Mass.	Three	300
W. C. GARNETT	Kendallville, Ind.	"	300
MISS M. C. PERKINS	Boston, Mass.	One	100
MRS. S. EMERSON	Dover, N. H.	"	100
MISS E. EMERSON	" "	"	100
W. H. DOWNES	Birmingham, Ct.	"	100
B. B. SMITH	Lansing, Mich.	"	100
E. B. SMITH	Warren, Pa.	"	100
W. C. RUSSEL	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	100
WM. CLARKE	Toledo, O.	Three	300
C. L. SMITH	" "	One	100
J. N. LYMAN	Cincinnati, O.	Twenty	2,000
L. G. FELCH	Muskegon Centre, Mich.	One	100
A. FOLKOR	Boston, Mass.	Three	300
L. O. BASS	Colbrook, Mass.	One	100
S. E. SEWALL	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
ELIZUR WRIGHT	" "	"	500
E. B. WARD	Detroit, Mich.	Twenty	2,000
A. D. WILCOX	Dayton, O.	One	100
S. S. BONER	Keokuk, Iowa	"	100
WM. JONES	Keokuk, N. Y.	"	100
S. H. DAZE	Oskaloosa, Iowa	"	100
J. H. YORK	Dover, N. H.	"	100
JOS. HAYES	" "	"	100
G. P. FOLSON	" "	"	100
"A FRIEND"	" "	"	100
MRS. H. E. PERKINS	" "	Two	200
WILLIAM GREEN	Boston, Mass.	One	100
"A FRIEND"	Orange, N. J.	"	100
D. B. STEDEMAN	Lowell, Mass.	"	100
MRS. F. W. CHRISTIAN	Brattleboro, Vt.	"	100
C. W. FABIOT	New York, N. Y.	"	100
EDW. M. DAVIS	Kelly's Island, O.	Two	200
MRS. LUCETTA MOTT	Philadelphia, Pa.	One	100
A. S. BROWN	Jersey City, N. J.	"	100
EDWIN BROWN	Worcester, Mass.	"	100
R. P. HALLOWELL	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
BENJ. RODMAN	New Bedford, Mass.	Three	300
H. B. CLARKE	" "	"	300
FRANK J. SCOTT	Toledo, O.	Six	600
M. L. HOLBROOK	Houlton, Me.	Ten	1,000
W. H. BOUGHTON	New York, N. Y.	One	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON	" "	"	100
E. G. BURNETT	" "	Two	200
J. E. FOLLETT	Webster, Mass.	One	100
JOS. WARBASSE	Winona, Minn.	"	100
T. M. LANE	Newton, N. J.	"	100
W. H. DYKE	Franklin, Pa.	"	100
W. H. SPALDING	Brattleboro, Vt.	"	100
LOUIS BELROSE	Patricio de Chlen, Wis.	"	100
LEWIS KURTZ	Duluth, Minn.	"	100
SAM'L WARBASSE	Philadelphia, Pa.	Two	200
W. L. RUTHE	Augusta, Kan.	One	100
W. EMERSON	La Fayette, N. J.	"	100
C. H. HOBBS	Amosbury, Mass.	"	100
MISS I. THOMPSON	Dover, N. H.	Two	200
BENJ. HALLOWELL	Sandy Spring, Md.	One	100
MRS. M. R. VAN RUSSELL	N. Y. City	"	100
R. B. STONE	Watson, Penn.	"	100
WM. RITCHIE	East River, Mass.	Two	200
J. WHITAKER	New Bedford, Mass.	Five	500
S. H. RUTHE	Keokuk, N. Y.	One	100
MRS. R. D. FRANCIS	Boston Highlands, Mass.	Two	200
CHAR. BOSSALL	Salem, O.	One	100
G. H. HUGHES	Amesbury, Mass.	Two	200
J. T. CLARSON	" "	"	200
G. W. NEWSON	Castleton, Ill.	One	100
HENRY KIEFT	Toledo, O.	Two	200
OTTO KLEMM	" "	One	100
H. G. NEUBERT	" "	Two	200
A. HUNERT	" "	One	100
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.	Detroit, Mich.	Thirty	3,000
T. E. PECK	Co. Toledo, O.	Thirty	3,000
	Westminster, Ct.	Two	200

$30,600

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

JUNIOR UNMASKED! or, THOMAS PAINE the author of the "Letters of Junius" and the "Declaration of Independence." A DEMONSTRATION. Royal 16mo. pp. 322. Price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
Address JOHN GRAY & CO.,
113 St. St. P. O. Box 689, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-119.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

It is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[25-28] 19 PINE STREET, BOSTON.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

Free Religious Association.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1871, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, W. J. POTTER, NEW BEDFORD, MASS. It contains Essays, by John Weiss, on "THE ATTITUDE OF SCIENCE TO RELIGION," by O. B. Frothingham, on "SUPERSTITION AND DOGMATISM," and by Wm. J. Potter, on "THE NATURAL GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY;" also a report of addresses by Dr. Bartol, T. W. Higginson, Lucetta Mott, Prof. Denton, A. M. Power, and others, together with other proceedings of the meeting. Price 35 cents; in packages of five or more 25 cents each.

THE ANNUAL REPORT—for 1868, 1869, and 1870 (at 25 cents each), Rev. Samuel Johnson's Essay on "THE WORSHIP OF JESUS" (50 cents), Rev. W. M. Channing's Essay on "THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA" (20 cents), Col. T. W. Higginson's Essay on "THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS" (20 cents), and an Essay on "REASON AND REVELATION," by Wm. J. Potter (10 cents), all published through the Association, can also be obtained as above.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, MAY 18, 1872.

WHOLE No. 125.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARNOT,

Editor.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.

P. H. BATEMAN,

Business Agent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Teachings of Christ.

A SERMON BY THE REV. CHARLES VOTSEY, PREACHED AT ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LONDON, NOVEMBER 19, 1871.

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." MATTHEW, V: 17.

I now purpose to consider some of the aspects of Jesus of Nazareth, as a teacher of morality and religion—a branch of our subject far more difficult than any which we have hitherto considered, inasmuch as it is all but impossible to distinguish in the records between what he did and what he did not say.

We must, however, bear in mind at the very outset of our inquiry into his teachings, that it is a matter of no importance to us what this or that great teacher may have taught. We are not in the least degree bound to accept, without question, the opinion or religious belief of any one of our fellow-men. It is of the very essence of true religious conviction that we should cherish it, only because it commends itself to our minds as true, and not because a great prophet or teacher was the first to proclaim it. If we were once to place ourselves as unquestioning disciples at the feet of Jesus or of any one else among the world's most illustrious men, we should have to embrace all their errors along with any truth they might have to impart; we should have to lay aside our reasoning powers, and our moral judgment, and to that extent do violence to our own instinct as men, and not only forego the highest of our prerogatives, but also evade the highest of our obligations.

I believe that it can be shown that the preponderating elements in the teaching of Jesus are in favor of that pure Monotheism which is so precious to ourselves and are against the essential doctrines of Christianity which we oppose. I believe it can be shown that, in his religious belief, Jesus of Nazareth was a strict Jew and not a Christian, and that while he shared in some of the delusions of his age, and perhaps allowed himself to be associated with the wildest dreams of the apostolic times, he nevertheless believed in only one God, the Father of all men, absolutely spiritual and invisible; that, so far, he was a pure Theist, and, therefore, a disbeliever in the doctrines of the Trinity, the incarnation of the second person thereof, and the atonement for sin by his own death. But all this agreement with us and more, if it could be discovered, would not entitle him to our unquestioning submission, or to the renunciation of our right to criticize his moral and religious teachings at our pleasure.

The inquiry, however, has an interest of its own arising from the claim made by the Christian Churches that Jesus is the founder of their faith. If the doctrines now held in such high regard by Christians owe their origin to Jesus himself, we ought to be able without difficulty, not only to discover them in the records of his sayings, but to find them prominent and unmistakable on every page. His contemporaries knew nothing of a Trinity in their venerable creed; why did not Jesus teach that doctrine in the sermon on the Mount, or to his own immediate followers in private? They knew nothing of a second person incarnate; why did not Jesus tell them openly that there was not only a Father in Heaven, but an Eternal Son of equal Godhead, and that he himself was that only-begotten and Eternal Son? They knew nothing of the atonement for the sins of the whole world by his death on the cross; why then did he not tell them beforehand what he was going to die for, and how his death would be regarded in the sight of God the Father? They knew nothing of intercession through this Man-God mediator; how is it then that he did not embellish the prayer which he recommended for their use with the now common formula "through Jesus Christ our Lord?" Such questions as these may be multiplied at will. But, on the other hand, it may fairly be urged that the fourth gospel does give some ground for supposing that Jesus taught with more or less distinctness these primary doctrines of Christianity. This, however, cannot be said of the first three gospels, and therefore we have to endeavor to account for the discrepancy between these and the fourth. The question of the authorship and therefore of the date of the fourth gospel is drawing towards solution; the weight of the evidence appearing to lie against the theory that it was written by one of Jesus' own followers, or that it appeared in the first century. The probability is that it was written towards the close of the second century, after the leading doctrines of Christianity were consolidated, and that it was expressly designed to support those doctrines by a new life of Jesus representing him as the teacher and founder of them. Certainly the first three Gospels with the solitary exception of the Baptistal formula at the end of Matthew, give not a word as uttered by Jesus which countenances the chief doctrines of Christianity, and these doctrines could never have rested on Scriptural authority at all, unless the fourth Gospel had been fabricated. I do not suppose that the whole of the fourth Gospel is false, nor that every word put into the mouth of Jesus is fictitious; but that the speeches as we have them are made up by the writer of the Gospel in manifest from the identity of style between the speeches of John the Baptist, of Jesus, and of the author himself, and that artifice peeps out in almost every chapter and every scene, I think, will hardly be doubted. Comparing these speeches and prayers ascribed to Jesus with those in the first three Gospels, it is impossible without a blinding prejudice to attribute them to the same individual. The doctrines are at variance, the spirit of the one is very much opposed to that of the others, and the styles are hopelessly irreconcilable. As a proof of lateness of authorship, the fourth Gospel studiously avoids giving any predictions of Jesus as to his second coming into the world for judgment, shewing that it was written after that delusion had been exploded. It has incorporated the Logos theory of which Jesus in the first three Gospels seems to have known nothing, and which was imported from the Alexandrine Schools; and the author has contradicted the other Gospels by making it appear that the raising of Lazarus was the immediate cause of the arrest of Jesus, and that Jesus was crucified on the Thursday, instead of on the day of the Passover, not to mention the great contradictions which run through the whole of it in this matter of the claim to Messiahship. Until the fourth Gospel is proved to be written by John the disciple of Jesus, we shall be driven to prefer the records of the teachings of Jesus as given in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, not by any means as infallibly accurate, but as less glaringly fictitious than the speeches in the fourth Gospel.

Our inquiry into the teachings of Jesus naturally divides itself into the following questions:

1. What did Jesus teach about the Hebrew Scriptures?
2. What did he teach about God?
3. What did he teach about man?
4. What about the future state?
5. What about the Devil?

I have put the question as to his teaching about the Old Testament first, that we may ascertain his opinion on the subject of external authority, and then discover where he learned his own creed.

The words of my text, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil," are manifestly apologetic. He knew that he was on the high road to reverse some of the verdicts of a venerable authority; to expand the moral application of some very literal commands, and that the people would suspect him of depraving their Bible. If he were going to throw a new light upon the old pages, if he were even purposing to supply nobler and better principles of conduct than the words of the law in some instances conveyed, his hearers would be naturally offended, and irritation might hinder them from listening. So he tries to disarm their opposition by this general tribute of respect to the law and the prophets, adding in the three following verses a statement of his aim, that in whatever he might say, he sought only to make men more loyal to God, and more faithful to their duty, than they were before. (Vers. 18—20). Such words, prefacing what followed, showed that he had a reverence for the Hebrew Scriptures himself, and that he did not desire to weaken that reverence in others, by what he was going to say. But what he did say afterwards, showed most clearly, that consciously or unconsciously he valued something more than the letter of the Old Testament, that something within the heart and conscience of man was more worthy of our homage and obedience than the best statutes which had been enacted in the venerable past. The oft-repeated phrase, "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time," applied as it was in every case to some words out of the Old Testament, and in two cases to commandments said to have been written by the finger of God on tables of stone, strikes us at once as very strange. To us who have been brought up to regard every word in the Bible as inspired by God, and to look upon the Decalogue itself as especially and accurately and miraculously given and preserved, it seems astounding that Jesus should refer to these words as things that had "been said by them of old time;" this language sounds contemptuous; even we in criticizing the language of the Old Testament with the utmost freedom, and regarding it now like all other so-called sacred books, as being entirely human in its origin—even we to-day would not speak of the Bible in terms less reverent, hardly so irreverent. Indeed it is difficult to reconcile the repeated utterance of this phrase with the foregoing passage in the 18th verse: "Verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass away, one jot, or one tittle, shall in nowise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." He must have been speaking with some mental reserve, when he spoke there of the law, meaning, perhaps, not the letter of the Levitical code, but the moral law of God written on men's hearts. This idea is sustained by comparing this passage with that well-known commentary of his on the law of love to God and man, "On these two commandments," said he, "hang all the law and the prophets."

However, here we find him speaking in terms bordering on disrespect of no less than five passages from the Old Testament, two of which were parts of the Decalogue. Moreover, he goes on to contrast the hardness or emptiness of those Bible precepts with his own amplification of their supposed spirit and meaning. He puts hatred and abuse on a level with murder; a lustful desire, on a level with the adulterous act. When he comes to the law enforcing the fulfilment of vows, he says vows themselves are unlawful, and forbids them on his own authority, "Swear not at all." The law of retaliation, once needed to restrain the violence of men's ferocity in revenge, he completely abrogates by the doctrine of non-resistance; and lastly, the law which sanctioned the hatred of enemies, and which is expressly put into the mouth of Jehovah, he as expressly contradicts, "But I say unto you, love your enemies, do good to them that hate you," &c.

We cannot devote any time now to the consideration of those new precepts of his, but only refer to them in order to discover what was Jesus' own secret attitude to the sacred books of his own people. And I think, in spite of his own manifest efforts to disguise his disregard of their authority, he has left evidence enough behind him in this Sermon on the Mount, that he attached more value to his own private judgment and moral sense than to the words of Moses and the Prophets—and even than to the laws said to be written by God himself on tables of stone. To this extent Jesus was a Rationalist, being ready, when occasion offered, to abandon an external authority for personal convictions; and yet willing to make the best use that he could of the venerable words which his race had preserved with such reverence and scrupulous care.

But like all others in a similar state of mind, and under similar surrounding conditions, he could play fast and loose with the authority of the Hebrew Scriptures. While he rose above it just as he pleased, and when he pleased, he would often quote from the sacred writings to confute some adversary, or to press home some threatening rebuke. He could call up the legends of Sodom and Gomorrah, to warn the impenitent, and to deepen self-reproach. He could even draw a parallel between his own country and that of Nineveh; and allude without any implied scepticism to the marvellous adventures of Jonah.

And yet with a sort of half-disguised irony, he could cast contempt on miraculous signs, and say, "If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." If his disciples ventured to inquire why he taught them plainly, but taught the multitudes only in parables, he did not hesitate to quote one of the most dreadful passages in Isaiah as a justification of his own partiality.

If the Pharisees question his claim to the Messiahship, he tries to puzzle them with the first verses of the 110th Psalm, which, however, throw not the faintest light on his own claim.

If the Sadducees question the doctrine of resurrection, he answers them by what one can only call a quibble, saying, "Have you not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, 'I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?' God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." He must have known that in the original and natural sense of those words they could only mean, "I am the God whom Abraham believed in, whom Isaac believed in, and whom Jacob believed in," and that they carried no doctrine whatever as to the future state. Does he not also quote commands said to be given by Jehovah, as given only by Moses, "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, gave you this commandment," &c.?

All this shows that Jesus could not have had that deep and profound reverence for the Old Testament which many modern Christians have imputed to him, and which they insist upon as the only proper attitude towards the Bible. It is certain that he used it, and set it aside at pleasure; that he set over above it his own moral judgment, and did not speak even of the Decalogue as of words spoken, or as of laws given, by God himself. But he did not push his independence of the book so far as to disregard the religious customs and ceremonies which it enjoined. With the exception of Sabbath observance, he is represented as complying with the Levitical law, being continually in the Temple, joining in the Ritual services of the day, and taking every occasion to preach and to teach. Luke says that he taught daily in the Temple. No doubt it was due partly to some of his sayings, that the Temple services fell into disuse among his Jewish disciples in the second century; but it is quite an error to suppose that Jesus, or the Apostles, did away with the service of the Sanctuary. Chiefly to St. Paul and his school may be attributed the weakening of the ceremonial tie. On the very night of his crucifixion, Jesus partook of the Passover with his disciples; and he never, as far as we can discover from the first three Gospels, broke away from the outward religious rites and ceremonies of the Levitical worship. He could not stand the austere ceremony at home, and said much to diminish their value; but these rested more on tradition and custom, than on the words of the Scriptures.

I have purposely left out of this discussion the references to the Old Testament, imputed to Jesus in the fourth Gospel, and I have given my reasons for it. From the other three, the inference may be drawn that Jesus was to a great extent independent of the Bible as an authority, and only referred to it as such in speaking against the people who believed it to be Divine.

So far, he was very much in sympathy with ourselves, and our present position. We, too, wish to lose nothing from the inheritance of the past that is worth keeping, to give up not a word that can be helpful in our altered times and circumstances, but we must keep every such testimony well in hand, allow ourselves to be mastered by no authority, however feasible, and be the slaves of no book, however much truth and comfort it may contain. Whenever, in short, our moral perceptions rise above the standard of a written code, we must dethrone every other power to give them the sceptre, and be only loyal to the noblest and purest truth that we have found.

SCIENCE AND ATHEISM.

BY AN EPISCOPALIAN RECTOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Allow me, from my standpoint, to remark with courtesy on your position. I do not expect to convert you to my way, any more than I should expect to convert a cat to a belief in the law of gravitation, though that law might be a fact, no matter what the cat might do. By this I do not mean to suggest the slightest comparison between your wit and a cat's; for I very freely grant to you, and the men with you, culture, learning and intellect: more, in fact, than many of us poor simple folk who believe firmly in the Christian religion ever lay claim to. But I merely remark at the start, how your brains, enchained by your antecedents of pure Protestantism, as an almost iron and unbreakable necessity or fate, are unable to weigh fairly historic Christianity in even scales.

I wish you, then, to understand me as believing, without the shadow of a doubt, in Christianity, as contained in the Bible and explained in the Apostles', Nicene and Athanasian creeds, and the authority of Christ's Church, as expressed in the first four or general Councils. In other words, I profess myself a Catholic Christian. I occupy, then, a position the exact opposite from yours, and from my place address you. I do not laugh at you, and therefore you will not laugh at me. I mean to attack your position, not defend my own; and therefore, if you please, you can first defend yourself from my blows, whether they be light or heavy. As you believe my faith all nonsense, and I believe it immutable truth, against which the very gates of hell cannot prevail, I feel that I can afford to leave Christianity to defend itself by what it proves itself to be among men, as it has done many times, against all "Jews, Turks, heretics and infidels." I am not applying these terms to you, for the Turks believe in God, to say nothing of the Jews; and "infidel" is a harmless name to hurl at your head, since you have the courage to assail the Faith of that Christendom which has aured you from your mother's knee, with some things which even you must count blessings. I mean your intellectual training has been in that civilization which exists in that part of the world known as Christendom. If I knew or could imagine what name you called yourself, I would use it. As I don't, you will excuse me if I try just here to leave you nameless.

I confess I have a strong interest in men like you. It is the interest a man has in some strange phenomenon which teaches him useful lessons. You are very valuable folk to Catholic Christianity—more so than half the German Commentaries and a big title of pure Protestant sermons. You are thorough men—representative men—plain, intelligible men; if you will excuse the phrase, big, bold, Protestant men, who have fought your way out of all religion into the unknown, and God and His Word you don't choose to know. Instead of leaving your neighbors all the fun of protesting against any church except such as any twelve men may found at any time, you excel them all in sending all churches to the tomb of the Capulets, or even a more ill-omened place, if you think there is any. We have had half-way iconoclasts—Voltaire, Jean Jacques, Thomas Paine, Strauss, Parker (who believed after a fashion in some sort of Christianity). But now you come, rid of all that nonsense, and you stand squarely on something, I will merely say for the present, vastly more radical. Did you ever think that, if these old men had not come to prepare the way, you would have never been? Were they not your forerunners, to prepare the way before you? Now I speak to you because you are the foremost men of your strain (not mine)—because you show where all rationalism, free thinking, and breaking away from historic Christianity tends—because you prove to any man that, when he breaks away the barrier of positive creeds, he is out on a moor where he can logically bring up only in the nothingness (as I think) of utter denial. I would, if I could, put you and your oracles under the nose of every Congregationalist, Calvinist, Unitarian, Baptist, Methodist, in the world; and you would do more to convert them back to historic creeds and the ancient faith than all the sermons I could preach in a lifetime. Since I did not make you what you are, and God has allowed you to exist, to bring (as he always does) good out of evil, I may rejoice that you exist to hurry on that reaction in which men, shrinking back from atheism, will submit to the ancient Catholic faith as deliverance of them and their posterity from blank, sheer denial, or, at least, from a scientific God who is no God at all.

I know you don't believe one word of this assertion, and I don't expect you will; and, so if you please, we will leave your assertions and mine to the arbitration of the facts in the future of the human race. But since you have had the temper to assert yourself against all Christendom, you will regard me with a fellow-feeling if I make a few more assertions.

I assert that two and two are four. You grant it. It is, you confess, a fact. You would, therefore, not break your neck over that or any other fact, fighting against it—would you? You will grant me that there are some facts of like immutability, over which you have no control, about the human race, as for instance, that they are two-legged creatures. Something, law or whatever you please, has made them so. How long now do you think it would take you to make them not so? Now no doubt you have great respect for a fact, and so have I. But now I affirm that it is a fact that man is a religious animal, and will have a religion. Since he is a religious animal by the law of his humanity, how long do you think it will take you to make him an irreligious animal? You may make one man, a million perhaps, without religion; just as you might cut off a man's leg and make him a one-legged animal. But his children would have two, notwithstanding, just as the next generations after your atheists would hunger and thirst after a living God. So far, then, as you endeavor to take all religion away from man, you fight against a law of human nature. The man who fights against that is sure to be kicked by that into imbecility.

But you say, "We do not do that. We give man a religion." But what religion? And this brings me to a point to which I beg your careful attention and a plain answer. The point lies in this question. Does not the foremost scientific thought and progress of this age teach downright atheism? I mean no disrespect in the term; but, as you are a philosopher, you will not grow angry if my ignorance asks that very question. I remember the time when you were a theist in a Divinity School of New England. I have watched you, and the men with you, ever since you came on the stage, and I know you to be a thorough man; and therefore I suppose you to be an atheist—as I will explain.

You profess yourself the child and champion of the free, scientific thought of the nineteenth century. You have therefore gone with it to its logical conclusions; for if you have not, what intellectual respect can you have from any logical man—you who have thrown away all traditions at the bidding of scientific investigation, and now quarrel with and disown your only master because it teaches atheism? You have already indicted Christianity. Will you indict the savans also? If you do, I should beg to suggest that you lack just a little modesty. You will not? Now I understand you. You stand with the logical conclusions of modern science. I ask you, are not these conclusions atheism? Answer, like the bold, plain man you are.

That you may not mistake me, let me explain what I mean by atheism. I mean by atheism, any doctrine that takes away from this world and its affairs a conscious, personal God, or Being, able to know, to feel and to rule the same according to the limitations of his own being, if there be any such. Excuse to the brevity of types my imperfect definition, but I mean a personal God. Now I say pantheism is to all practical interests and purposes, and by my definition, atheism; and I prefer, as more logical men, Huxley and Darwin to Spinoza and Emerson. What care I, or any Christian, whether at death I become bereft of personal consciousness as a part of the great All, or whether I sleep eternally my dreamless sleep of atheism? It is all the same.

Now I shall not attempt to disprove atheism, for the same reason that I should not attempt to prove, to a man denying it, that there is such a thing as space or matter. I would rather let him jump off a meeting-house and prove it to himself, if the leap was not too high. But I ask atheism—and you, if you are one, within the limits of my definition—the reason why you exist as an atheist. For the truth's sake? Now I become the denier. I say, if atheism be true, there is no certainty of any truth, since my mind itself may be a lie, and all phenomena delusions. I say there is no such thing as right and justice, since nowhere is there a fountain of the same or a law to fix the same. I say there is no government of right above me, except it be my will, unless it be the right of the bayonet or the slave-whip in the hands of power—a right of force, which is exactly no right at all, for there is no God to teach me obedience; I say there is no morality except my own lust, since there is no God to bid me be pure; I say there is no philanthropy, since my fellow-men and I are only beasts that perish, and there is no God to tell me man is my brother—no anything except my will and that of other men, to fight together for the mastery of mere force, as the brutes do; and we are all brutes, playing with lies by the aid of steam and electricity—brutes mocked, crushed, and hopeless beyond all the rest.

But the atheist says: "Atheism exists for the good of humanity." But I ask (not in the name of heaven, for there is none, nor in the name of God, for he is not, you say, but in the name of common sense and reason if there be any) why is atheism good for the human race? To comfort it? I should like to have you come and comfort with it a death-bed, or a rickety pauper, or a bereaved mother—any one of the millions of those who have suffered wrongs which in this life at least cannot be righted. I am ready any day to test atheism and Christianity by the good that the human race will declare that they receive from either. You say we are all wedded to our superstitions. You certainly cannot think that there are no men of sense who believe in historic Christianity.

Unless I mistake, you and I were both bred in the same college. You have given your life to destroy Christianity, I to work under it and for it. I certainly expect Christianity will win, in spite of you and without me. I choose in your presence to base my expectation simply on the facts of history. I read in history that Christianity is not attacked for the first time, in this nineteenth century. Rome attacked it; but the Christian ritual was read over its imperial grave. Neo-Platonism smote at it with the soft hands of compromise; but the Coptic ritual is read this year in an Alexandria out of which Neo-Platonism has perished nigh fifteen hundred years. Voltaire attacked it; but every Sunday morning the air over his grave is filled with the chiming of bells that call Frenchmen to Christian altars. Strauss, Baur and Paulus are dead; but the swing of German theology is towards a more positive and reverent exegesis. You and the men with you are leading in these provinces a war of extermination against the old religion. You are not old, and may live long; but after you become that dust and ashes which some of you adore, the Church of God that cannot die will merely make your memory a text for a discourse on that charity which would have led you to your Father's house, and ye would not.

I am your servant in the truth,

NATHAN H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Rector of St. James' Church, Milwaukee.

REV. MR. CHAMBERLAIN:

The whole point of your letter lies in the assertion that science leads to atheism, and that, if I flinch not from the logic I profess to follow, I must be an atheist. To this I can reply only by referring to my lecture entitled "The God of Science," a copy of which I have mailed to your address. In that you will find a full and frank answer to your inquiries.

The term atheist has neither terror nor attraction for me. I do not call myself an atheist, but am quite indifferent whether you, setting up your own definition, call me so or not. After reading my lecture, you may classify me at your leisure, as you please. If, however, disbelief in your Apostolic, Nicene and Athanasian God constitutes atheism—if, as you say, "a scientific God is no God at all"—most assuredly I am an atheist; but if the God of your creed is only a stammering hint of the Divine Reality of Nature, of which science brings daily fresh and fuller knowledge, then am I no atheist, but a most intense believer. You are welcome to prefer candle-light to sun-light, and to call me blind because I pay slight heed to your consecrated taper; but I find life illumined all the same, and fear no darkness at the end.

Having in few words answered your whole letter, I would ask one question in return. You say that science leads logically to atheism. Do you reject science? You admit the absolute antagonism between science and Christian theism; you believe in the latter; do you disbelieve in the former? I think you will not flinch from an answer to this question.

I am no man's servant, in the truth or out of it; but I am your brother-man and fellow-servant of the truth,
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

SCIENCE AND THE CLERGY.

With regard to the question of time, the views of men have changed remarkably in our day and generation; and I must say as regards courage also, and a manifold willingness to engage in open contest, with fair weapons, a great change has also occurred. The clergy of England—at all events, the clergy of London—have nerve enough to listen to the strongest views which any one among us would care to utter; and they invite, if they do not challenge, men of the most decided opinions to sit and stand by those opinions in open court. No theory upset them. Let the most destructive hypothesis be stated only in the language current among gentlemen, and they look it in the face. They forego alike the thunders of heaven and the terrors of the other place, smiting the theory, if they do not like it, with honest secular strength. In fact, the greatest cowards of the present day are not to be found among the clergy; but within the pale of science itself. Two or three years ago, in an ancient London college—a clerical institution—I heard a very remarkable lecture by a very remarkable man. Three or four hundred clergymen were present at the lecture. The orator began with the civilization of Egypt in the time of Joseph, pointing out that the very perfect organization of the kingdom, and the possession of chariots, in one of which Joseph rode, indicated a long antecedent period of civilization. He then passed on to the mud of the Nile, its rate of augmentation, its present thickness, and the remains of human handwork found therein; thence to the rocks which bound the Nile valley, which seem with organic remains. Thus in his own clear and admirable way he caused the idea of the world's age to expand itself indefinitely before the mind of his audience; and he contrasted this with the age usually assigned to the world. During his discourse he seemed to be swimming against a stream; he manifestly thought that he was opposing general conviction. He expected resistance; so did I. But it was all a mistake. There was no adverse current, no opposing conviction, no resistance; merely here and there a half-humorous but unsuccessful attempt to entangle him in his talk. The meeting agreed with all that had been said regarding the antiquity of the earth and of its life. They had, indeed, known it all long ago; and they good-humoredly rallied the lecturer for coming among them with so stale a story. It was quite plain that this large body of clergymen—who were, I should say, the finest samples of their class—had entirely given up the ancient landmarks, and transported the conceptions of life's origin to an indefinitely distant past. In fact, clergymen—if I might be allowed a parenthesis to say so—have as strong a leaning toward scientific truth as other men; only the resistance to this bent—a resistance due to education—is generally stronger in their case than in others. They do not lack the positive element—namely, the love of truth; but the negative element, the fear of error, preponderates. Slowness of acceptance, or even hostility, may be thus accounted for.—Prof. Tyndall.

WAS WASHINGTON A CHRISTIAN?

(From the Boston Investigator.)

MR. EDITOR:—A friend, in whose town I lectured lately, writes me thus:—

"The Christians had the most fault with you because you said that Washington was an infidel. They say that is a lie. If you have time, I wish you would publish the proof in the Investigator."

The following extract will show that, if the statement is a "lie," it was believed when Washington was alive, and is confirmed by the testimony of Christian clergymen:—

"Dr. Rush told me that he had it from Asa Greene, that when the clergy addressed Gen. Washington in his departure from the Government, it was observed in their consultation that he had never, on any occasion, said a word to the public which showed a belief in the Christian religion, and they thought they should so pose their address as to force him at length to declare publicly whether he was a Christian or not. They did so. However, he observed, the old fox was too cunning for them. He answered every article of their address, particularly, except that, which he passed over without notice. Rush observed he never did say a word on the subject in any of his public papers, except in his vindictory letter to the Governors of the S. A. C. when he re-joined his commission to the army, where he spoke of the 'oxygen influence of the Christian religion.'"

"I know that Governor Morris, who pretended to be in his secrets, and believed himself to be so, has often told me that Gen. Washington believed no more in that system than he himself did."—Extract from Jefferson's Journal of February, 1800. Jefferson's Works, volume 4, p. 518.

In the Albany Daily Advertiser of Oct. 29, 1831, was published a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Wilson of that city, in which occurred the following paragraph:—

"Washington was a man of valor. He was esteemed by the whole world as a great and good man, but he was not a professor of religion, at least not till after he was President. When the Congress sat in Philadelphia, President Washington attended the Episcopal Church. The rector, Dr. Abercrombie, has told me that on the days when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was to be administered, Washington's custom was to rise, just before the ceremony commenced, and to walk out of the church. This became a subject of remark in the congregation, as setting a bad example. At length the Doctor undertook to speak of it, with a direct allusion to the President. Washington was heard afterwards to remark, that this was the first time a clergyman had thus preached to him, and that he would henceforth neither trouble the Doctor nor his congregation on such occasions. And ever after that upon communion days he absented himself from the church."

(A report of this sermon, as it appeared in the paper above referred to, is published at the Investigator office.)

The following reference to the sermon is from the pen of Robert Dale Owen, and is copied from the appendix to the Discussion between Bachelor and Owen (p. 387):—

"As this important paragraph, being only from a newspaper report, could hardly be considered authentic, I myself called, accompanied by a gentleman of this city, on Dr. Wilson this afternoon. After giving my name, and stating the object of my visit, I read to the Doctor at his request the above paragraph. When he had completed its reading, I endorsed every word of that. He further added, 'As I conceive that truth is truth, whether it make for or against us, I will not conceal from you any information on this subject, even such as I have not yet given to the public. At the close of our conversation on the subject, Dr. Abercrombie's emphatic expression was, for I well remember the words, "Sir, Washington was a Unitarian." Now, continued Dr. Wilson, "I have diligently perused every line that Washington ever gave to the public, and I do not find one expression in which he pledges himself as a professor of Christianity. I think any man who will candidly do as I have done, will come to the conclusion that he was a Deist, and nothing more. I do not take upon myself to say positively that he was, but that is my opinion."

"Dr. Abercrombie, the associate of Bishop White (continues Mr. Owen) in the pastoral charge of Christ's Church in Philadelphia, is now alive to corroborate the statement of his brother clergyman."

Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

THORNDIKE, MASS., March 21, 1872.

GROTE IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

[By M. D. Conway, in the Chelmsford Commercial of April 11.]

On yesterday the bust of Grote, the historian, was unveiled in Westminster Abbey, above the spot in the floor where his dust lies. It is just between the poet's corner and the south transept. It is by Bacon, a beautiful piece of white marble, and an excellent likeness of one of the noblest heads it has been my lot to see. The great, strong brow always seemed to me to call for marble to represent both its massiveness and its calm light. But I never expected to see that head and front of philosophical heresy set up among the "images" (as the Scotch call them) of the old Abbey. It is a sign of what Christianity in England has come to, that the bones of Grote should be laid in his oldest temple, and his bust be there enshrined along with the Saints. For Tom Paine was orthodox compared with Grote. The only deity Grote believed in was the great spirit of humanity. Nor was he a reticent, compliant, easy-going heretic. As President of University College, he fought by the side of Mill against allowing so rationalistic a Christian as Martineau (whom, personally, both admired) to occupy a professorship in it, and succeeded in placing the clever young disciple of the Protoplasmic School, Professor Robertson, in the chair for which Martineau was a candidate. Grote and Mill together were for years the rebellious Titans against the throne of Dogma in this country, and the views of Grote have made the street on which the University College is situated (Gower street) proverbial. One hears of "Gower street principles." Grote's dying testimony was a blow at the clergy; he left in his will an endowment of a professorship in the institution of which he had been President, on condition that no clergyman or minister of any denomination should ever be eligible to it. While universal paroxysm was still raving over that, the literary fraternity of England demanded that the Scholar should be buried in Westminster Abbey, and Dean Stanley (long suspected of being no more orthodox at heart than his friend Grote) turned traitor to the pious, and so the historian and heretic stands in the old shrine of the great, saying silently to English youth: "Think freely; speak bravely; the teeth of Dogma are drawn."

A Scottish piper was once passing through a deep forest. In the evening he sat down to take his supper. He had hardly begun, when a number of hungry wolves, prowling about for food, collected round him. In self-defence, the poor man began to throw pieces of his victuals to them, which they greedily devoured. When he had disposed of all, in a fit of despair he took his pipes and began to play. The unusual sound terrified the wolves, which, one and all, took to their heels and scampered off in every direction. On observing which, Sandy quietly remarked: "An I'd kenned ye liket the pipes as we'd, I'd a' gien ye a sping afore supper."

Speaking of the sloth, Sidney Smith says:—"He moves suspended, rests suspended, sleeps suspended, and, in fact, passes his life in suspense, like a young clergyman distantly related to a Bishop."

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"It has just penetrated the torpid brain of a woman in receipt of a small salary (I know it will occur to you that, if the brain were less torpid, the salary would be larger) that she may subscribe for a share in THE INDEX Association. I do not know if I am to get any thing or in any way to be benefited pecuniarily; but I do know I am a friend to Free Religion, and earnestly desire its growth, not only for the man that is, but for the man that is to be. I say 'man,' for I think men require rather more toning-up than women in the practice of the precepts taught by Free Religionists; and since I have learned through THE INDEX that only ten per cent. will be required annually, I gladly embrace the opportunity to become one of your subscribers, providing I understand the matter correctly, for one share."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST HISTORIC SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the new EXPRESS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WAREHOUSE OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

RECEIVED.

PRE-HISTORIC TIMES, AS ILLUSTRATED BY ANCIENT REMAINS AND THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF MODERN SAVAGES. By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M. P., Vice-President of the Royal Society, Vice-President of the British Association, President of the Anthropological Institute, and Fellow of the Linnean, Geological and other learned Societies. New York: D. APPLETON & Co., 549 & 551 Broadway. 1872. 8vo. pp. 640.

CHAPTERS FROM THE BIBLE OF THE AGES. Compiled and Edited by G. B. STERNBERG. Detroit, Michigan: Published by the Editor. 1872. pp. 400.

THE TRIAL OF TITMUS. By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. HOLYOAKE & Co., Booksellers and Publishers, 147 Fleet Street, London, pp. 176.

SCIENCE PRIMERS.—CHEMISTRY. By H. E. ROSCOE, Professor of Chemistry in Owens College, Manchester; Author of "The Spectroscopic Analysis," "Lessons in Elementary Chemistry," &c. With illustrations. New York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1872. pp. 108.

SCIENCE PRIMERS.—PHYSICS. By BALFOUR STEWART, Professor of Natural Philosophy, The Owens College, Manchester. Author of "Elementary Lessons in Physics," With illustrations. New York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1871. pp. 133.

ON THE RELATIONS OF THIRISH TO PANTHEISM, AND THE GALLA RELIGION. By Professor F. W. NEWMAN. Published by THOMAS SCOTT, Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate. 1872.

A DIALOGUE BY WAY OF CATECHISM. Religious, Moral, and Philosophical, for Grown Men and Women, Plainly Disputed, but of None of the Religious Denominations Extant in the World. By A. PHYSICIAN. Part II. Published by THOMAS SCOTT, Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate. 1872.

ON FAITH. By A. D. GRAHAM and "F. H." Published by Thomas Scott, Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate. 1872.

RELIGION AND ITS "LIBERATORS." By EDWARD MATLAND. (Reprinted from The Manchester Friend, 19th January, 1871.)

SINCERITY: An Address before the Essex Conference, Feb. 28, 1872. By C. A. BARTON. Boston: Reprinted from The Radical for May, 1872.

THE EARLY SOCIAL LIFE OF MAN: An Extract from an Unpublished work on "Man in Geology, &c." By DYER D. LUM. Boston: WILLIAM WHITE & Co., 135 Washington St. 1872.

WOMAN'S DEFENCE: A Reply to Horatio Greeley's Lecture, recently delivered in Providence, R. I. By MARY LITTON FERRIS. Plymouth: CHAS. D. HOWES, 1-10.

CHRISTIANITY VERSUS MODERN DOGMA. FRANKLIN'S Defence as a Christian in Conflict with Universalism and Spiritualism. Chelsea, Mass.: H. J. STONE. 1872.

THE RADICAL FOR MAY. Boston: OFFICE OF PUBLICATION, 23 BROADWAY. $3.00.

THE MONTHLY RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW. For May. Boston: LEONARD C. BOWLER, 36 Bromfield St. $3.00.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH, AND JOURNAL OF PHYSICAL CULTURE. May, 1872. New York: WOOD & HOLBROOK, 13 & 15 LAUREL ST. $1.35.

THE INDUSTRIAL FOR MAY, 1872. Richmond, Ind.: ISAAC KIRKLEY, Editor and Publisher. $1.50.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL FOR MAY, 1872. JOHN E. MILLER, 24 West Randolph St., Chicago. $1.50.

THE LAWS OF LIFE AND JOURNAL OF HEALTH. May and June, 1872. HARRIET N. AUSTIN, M. D., Editor. AUSTIN, JACKSON & Co., Danville, N. Y. $1.50.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the Week ending May 11th.—Dr. Wm. McPherson, $2; Th. Jacobs, $2; James F. Brown, $2; Anton Reymann, $2; Geo. Part, $2; James L. Fagan, 50 cts.; E. B. Seelye, $2; C. A. Thompson, $2; Mrs. Sophia Nagle, 50 cts.; Moses Stearns, $2; C. W. Spaulding, 50 cts.; Herman Lieber, $12; Clemens Vannegut, $12; Ferd. Christmann, $12; J. Eldridge, $2; Henry Schnall, $12; J. Eldridge, $2; J. O. Martin, $2; Jas. Blinn, $1; Guido Marx, $25; G. M. Heracourt, $2; J. C. B. Wallace, $1; Oliver G. Cooper, $2.50; H. L. Green, $2.50; A. Gehring, $2; Cyrus Wick, $1; Guido Marx, 75 cts.; Wm. A. Jenkins, $2; Carl H. Horsch, $15; Laura Barnaby, 15 cts.; C. R. Woodard, 25 cts.; D. F. Bruner, $2; B. F. Horton, $2; Wm. Humphrey, $2; J. H. Colegrove, 25 cts.; A. McFarland, 25 cts.; Geo. Allen, $1.10; Mary E. Hughes, 10 cts.; Wm. H. Franklin, 50 cts.; J. D. Zimmerman, $1.25; M. N. Ferris, 50 cts.; Mrs. M. M. Sherman, $1; Walter P. Austin, $5; Thos. Tucker, $2; Joseph B. Weaver, $2; F. V. Smith, $2; Perry, 10 cts.; F. S. Howland, $1; Henry Powell, $1.50; G. W. Speyer, $2; L. G. Felch, $2.50; Michael New, 50 cts.; Dr. P. P. Field, $2; Rev. J. W. Chadwick, $2; Johannes Kleinbas, $2.70; Isaac Jacobs, $2; H. B. Leonard, 50 cts.; Mrs. A. B. Patton, $2; Fr. Toelle, 25 cts.; Chas. Willis, $1.50; F. Brewer, $2; T. C. Randolph, $1.50; J. F. Kimball, 50 cts.; Wm. J. Foster, $12; Joseph B. Weaver, $2; F. V. Smith, $2; E. H. Russell, $2; Juliet Porter, $2; H. L. Green, $2.50; James Phelps, 60 cts.; Josephine S. Tilton, $3.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

Poetry.

LISTENING.

I have seen
A curious child, who dwelt upon a tract
Of inland ground, applying to his ear
The convolutions of a smooth-tipped shell,
To which, in silence hushed, his very soul
Listened intensely: and his countenance soon
Brightened with joy, for murmurings from within
Were heard, sonorous cadences, whereby
To his belief the monitor expressed
Mysterious union with its native sea.
Even such a shell the universe itself
Is to the ear of faith.

WORDSWORTH, Excursion, Bk. IV.

The Index.

MAY 18, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

No notice will be taken of anonymous communications.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000. SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 30, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MURPHY, New Harmony, Ind.,	One Share,	100
D. AYRES, Jr., Brooklyn, N. Y.,	"	100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT, Evansville, Ind.,	"	100
"	Defiance, Ohio,	100
J. T. BRADY, Sabetha, Kan.,	"	100
"	Bryan, Ohio,	100
"	Northampton, Mass.,	100
MAX FRAUHT, Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	100
O	Boston, Mass.,	100
H. HEYERMANN, Toledo, Ohio,	"	100
C. FOLSON, Zanesfield, Ohio,	"	100
S. C. EASTMAN, Palmyra, Mo.,	"	100
J. O. MARTIN, Indianapolis, Ind.,	"	100
L. T. IVES, Detroit, Mich.,	"	100
E. W. MERRIDALE, Detroit, Mich.,	Two	200
A. FOLSON, Boston, Mass.,	"	100
W. F. HIKES, Dayton, Ohio,	"	100
HIRSH COLT, Scapp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One	100
SAMUEL COLT, Scapp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	"	100
CHARLES NASH, Worcester, Mass.,	Two	200
"	Livonia, N. Y.,	One	100
B. F. WOODARD, Osborn, Ohio,	Two	200
H. A. MILLS, Mt. Carroll, Ill.,	One	100
J. W. BASTLETT, Dover, N. H.,	"	100
OSCAR ROOS, Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	"	100
MRS E. S. MILLER, Geneva, N. Y.,	"	100
JAS. R. STONE, Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	100
D. K. INNES, " " " " " " " "	Five	500
A. TAPP, " " " " " " " "	One	100
S. L. WILDER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
PETER H. CLARK, " " " " " " " "	"	100
G. K. WITTINGTON, " " " " " " " "	"	100
J. T. SUTTON, " " " " " " " "	"	100
WALT. F. AUSTIN, Pittsburgh, Pa.,	"	100
MRS C. E. NOURSE, Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two	200
JAS. FISHER, Shreveport, La.,	One	100
G. H. HOLTMAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.,	"	100
L. VON BLESING, N. Y. City,	Five	500
W. F. BOCOROS, " " " " " " " "	One	100
W. F. CHAMBERS, " " " " " " " "	"	100
TITUS L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.,	"	100
A. MCD. YOUNG, Milwaukee, Wis.,	"	100
G. W. PECKHAM, " " " " " " " "	"	100
C. T. HAWLEY, " " " " " " " "	"	100
W. M. BECKER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
MRS. G. D. NORMAN, " " " " " " " "	Five	500
ROBT. C. SPENCER, " " " " " " " "	One	100
C. M. LAWLER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
E. R. LELAND, " " " " " " " "	"	100
WM. BLACKMORE, Palmsville, Ohio,	"	100
R. H. RANNEY, Boston, Mass.,	"	100
O. B. BROTHINGHAM, New York, N. Y.,	Five	500
Mrs. J. G. KINLAY, Richmond, Ind.,	One	100
J. R. WEST, " " " " " " " "	"	100
JAMES SWELSER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
JOHN H. POTT, " " " " " " " "	"	100
THOMAS DAVIS, Indianapolis, " " " " " " " "	"	100
ALEX. METZGER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
HERMAN LINDBER, " " " " " " " "	"	100
CLARENCE VARNROCK, " " " " " " " "	"	100
FERD. CHRISTMAN, " " " " " " " "	"	100
HENRY SCHNUL, " " " " " " " "	"	100
"	New Bedford, Mass.,	100

$58,500

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the INDEX ASSOCIATION will be held in Toledo, Saturday, June 1, at 7½ P. M., in THE INDEX Office, No. 90 St. Clair Street.

"It will not do for the 'Orthodox' to tell the truth about Unitarianism, because, when they do, they will find that all thinking people among themselves are Unitarians."

So says the Topeka Unitarian, and proves too much. Is Unitarianism nothing but "thinking Orthodoxy?" Thinking or thoughtless, Orthodoxy makes but thin soup, at the best.

TWO CRISES.

The following explicit avowal of adherence to the principle of absolute spiritual freedom is cut from a recent number of the Boston (Unitarian) Christian Register—

"The Christian Disciple, for January, 1822, says: 'We hold to the principles of religious liberty in their utmost extent and most unqualified character.' 'No examination of the religious opinions of another for admission to our communion or fellowship, with whatever softening preferences it may be proposed, should be acquiesced in.'"

The Christian Disciple was the predecessor of the Christian Examiner, that most scholarly of Unitarian publications (now deceased, or rather merged in Old and New), and was the universally recognized exponent of early Unitarianism. The words above quoted strikingly illustrate the bold and progressive spirit which animated its first utterances. At the very same time, however, the early Unitarian leaders as explicitly avowed their fealty to the "Lord Jesus Christ." They did not perceive the deep antagonism latent in this double profession of allegiance to "Christ and Liberty."

Until the year 1865, there was no organization of the Unitarian churches. The two conflicting principles contained in Unitarianism were slowly working out their natural results, and it was becoming manifest that the principle of freedom was undermining the denomination's fidelity to the "Lord Jesus Christ." In alarm at this dangerous tendency, representative Unitarians of the more conservative school succeeded in gathering a large convention of delegates from the churches at New York, in April, 1865. In spite of remonstrance and by means of the "previous question," they cut off all free debate and secured the adoption of the following preamble to a permanent Constitution:—

"PREAMBLE.—Whereas, The great opportunities and demands for Christian labor and consecration at this time increase our sense of the obligations of all disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ to prove their faith by self-denial, and by the devotion of their lives and possessions to the service of God and the building-up of the kingdom of his Son,— ARTICLE 1.—Therefore, the Christian churches of the Unitarian faith here assembled unite themselves in a common body, to be known as the National Conference of Unitarian Churches, &c., &c."

The radicals of the denomination felt deeply dissatisfied at the adoption of this preamble, and especially at the insertion of the words in it which we have italicized. But they hoped that, inasmuch as all fair debate had been suppressed by shrewd and arbitrary management, a broader platform might yet be secured, provided the Unitarian body could have the issue fairly presented to them. Consequently, at the next meeting of the "National Conference" at Syracuse, in October, 1866, a substitute was proposed for the above preamble as follows:—

"WHEREAS, The object of Christianity is the universal diffusion of Love, Righteousness, and Truth; and the attainment of this object depends, under God, upon individual and collective Christian activity; and collective Christian activity, to be efficient, must be thoroughly organized; and

"WHEREAS, Perfect freedom of thought, which is at once the right and duty of every human being, always leads to diversity of opinion, and is therefore hindered by common creeds, or statements of faith; and

"WHEREAS, The only reconciliation of the duties of collective Christian activity and individual freedom of thought lies in an efficient organization for practical Christian work, based rather on unity of spirit than on uniformity of belief:

ARTICLE 1.—Therefore the churches here assembled, disregarding all sectarian or theological differences, and offering a cordial fellowship to all who will join with them in Christian work, unite themselves in a common body, to be known as the National Conference of Unitarian and Independent Churches."

On the proposal to substitute this preamble for the other, there was a free and earnest debate of five or six hours; and the proposed substitute was rejected by about a two-thirds vote. Since that time, no direct effort to repeal the preamble as first adopted has ever been made; it was in fact finally endorsed at the meeting of the Conference in 1868 by the radicals themselves. The victory of the conservatives was complete.

Notwithstanding the numerical feebleness of the Unitarian sect, the conflict of ideas here briefly sketched was of world-wide importance. It marked a great crisis in the history of Christianity. The self-assertion of the modern spirit of liberty within the pale of the Christian church, which constitutes the entire significance of the Protestant Reformation, had encouraged the hope that the Christian religion could adapt itself to modern civilization, and govern the future as it had governed the past. Thousands cherish this hope to-day. But it is a vain one. Never can the experiment of attempting the reconciliation of Christianity with Freedom be made under more favorable auspices. The most advanced, liberal, and progressive sect in Christendom were asked in effect to put on the Christian name a purely moral, practical, and non-doctrinal meaning, and thus to make Christian brotherhood identical with human brotherhood. The appeal was heard, debated, and denied. In the light of later experience we justify the action of the Syracuse Conference, which could not have done otherwise as a Christian body. The ultimate limit of "Christian liberty" had been reached—it could not be overpassed. To discard the Christian Confession of faith in Jesus as the Christ would have been to reject Christianity as a distinguishable and distinct religion. The vital necessity of the Christian Confession to the very existence of a Christian church here asserted itself, and it was found historically impossible to emancipate Christianity from that minimum Christian creed. The crisis came. Between fidelity to the Christ and fidelity to Freedom the Church was called to decide; and Freedom was trampled into the dust. Without faith in the Christ there can be no Christianity; and "by that sign" has Christianity lost the empire of the modern world. Ideally viewed, this is the vast significance of the Unitarian Conference at Syracuse, now forgotten by all but the Unitarian denomination and a few outside thinkers who can appreciate the unspeakable importance of the question there decided.

Out of that denial of Freedom and Fellowship by the Christian Confession, the Free Religious Association was born. Unitarianism avowedly planted itself on Freedom and Christianity, not perceiving that it had sacrificed the one to the other. The Free Religious Association planted itself on Freedom and Religion. "Has it also," it is asked, "sacrificed the one to the other?" That is the question now; and it brings a new crisis every whit as momentous as the one just described.

The issue which thus commands the attention of all members of this Association, and which has taken form in the proposition to make an explanatory addition to its Constitution, published in another column, did not originate within the Association, but outside of it. No question of liberty has ever been raised on its platform, which by universal consent has been opened to speakers of all opinions. In the invitations issued by the Executive Committee, the endeavor has always been to secure such a diversity of opinion in the addresses at our annual conventions as should practically illustrate the unlimited hospitality we offer to all earnest searchers after truth. But certain unfriendly critics have urged that the words "religion" and "religious," occurring in the Constitution and name of the Association, pledge all its members at least to a belief in Theism, and therefore practically limit its fellowship by a creed. This, in the opinion of Mr. Potter and ourself, is untrue; but, not being willing to wait till some member should be obliged to offer a protest against the words in question, we have preferred to anticipate all possible misunderstanding, and have agreed to propose an additional clause to the Constitution disposing forever of all such captious criticisms. This addition is expressly intended to remove all possible doubt of the sincerity and cordiality of the invitation offered by the Association, not only to theists, but equally to atheists, materialists, positivists, and all other non-believers in Theism who may be attracted to our fellowship by sympathy for its objects and principles. Such persons as these, who are elsewhere neglected or excluded, we would for that very reason invite with peculiar cordiality to co-operate with us, and share that free fellowship which we would gladly, if permitted, extend to all mankind. While it is best not to ask the Association to adopt any particular definition of the words "religion" and "religious," it has become necessary that the Association should now unmistakably declare that these words are not so used in its Constitution and name as to limit membership by any creed whatever, expressed or implied, or to infringe in the least degree upon the right of untrammelled thought and speech. This is the purport of the proposed addition to the Constitution of the Free Religious Association.

As Mr. Potter stated last week, "the spirit and substance of these additional clauses have always been in the Constitution." No change is proposed, but only a more explicit avowal of the cardinal principles of the free religious movement. The Constitution, adopted by the Association in 1867, was originally drafted by Messrs. Potter, Towne, and Abbot; and the only reason why a more explicit and emphatic declaration of the right of free thought was not made at the time was because this principle was so universally and completely recognized among the friends of the movement that it seemed superfluous to affirm it in any formal manner. It was desired to avoid multiplying words unnecessarily, and to make the organization as loose as possible. But advantage has been taken of this informality, and it is now plainly apparent that a definite affirmation of free thought and free fellowship should be made. We believe that no objection whatever will be offered to the adoption of the proposed amendment (if it can be called such) at the approaching annual meeting; for there is but one spirit, so far as we know, among the members of the Association, and that most decidedly in favor of the principles now distinctly enunciated. So far as the Association is concerned, therefore, we regard the present crisis as only one in form.

But none the less does the proposed amendment mark a great and momentous crisis in the history of Religion. "Christian liberty" has been proved to have its limit. Has "religious liberty" also its limit? Christianity cannot exist without a creed. Can Religion exist without a creed? This is the new issue which the Free Religious Association, although a small body numerically, is now called to meet as a representative of the most advanced thought of the age. No attempt is made to establish a verbal definition of the word "religion;" yet none the less will the Association define it now by action. The Association is avowedly a "religious" one; and the first of its avowed objects is "to promote the interests of pure religion." Leaving each individual at perfect liberty to define the word verbally as he pleases, the Association must now define the idea practically, as one of its avowed objects. It must either reject the proposed amendment, and thus define religion as necessarily involving a belief in God; or it must adopt the amendment, and thus define religion as consistent both with belief and disbelief in God. That is, it must now decide whether religion is or is not compatible with absolute freedom of thought. It must decide whether there can be any such thing as religious atheism, or atheistic religion. It must decide whether the "pure religion" whose interests it seeks to promote is as undogmatic as aspiration and love of truth and effort to realize all ideal perfection, or whether these are irreligious until coupled with a conscious belief in God. In a word, it must decide whether there can be really any such thing as "free religion," or whether humanity must indeed go outside of religion in order to find freedom.

This is a great issue, a great crisis in the history of religion. We do not mean that the Free Religious Association will answer these questions for all mankind; but it will answer them for itself and the answer will exercise great influence. We confidently anticipate a right and true answer, and feel no apprehension whatever of the result, although we are most deeply interested in it. Regretting the probability of our absence at the forthcoming meeting of the Association, we have stated in this public manner our reasons for joining with Mr. Potter in proposing the contemplated amendment, because we want the Association fully to understand them, and to act on the proposition with complete knowledge of the grounds on which it is based—that is, so far as we are personally concerned. In this statement of reasons we would be understood as speaking for ourselves only, and not for Mr. Potter, who will present his own reasons in his own way.

These two questions—"Is Christianity incompatible with Freedom?" and "Is Religion incompatible with Freedom?"—involve issues which lend to the Unitarian denomination and the Free Religious Association an importance by no means commensurate with their numbers. They make two great crises in the development of thought and the progress of the race. It is extremely unlikely that another effort will ever be made to emancipate Christianity from the creed of the Christian Confession; nor would Christianity remain such, if emancipated. It is also extremely unlikely that the amendment now proposed to the Free Religious Association will ever be proposed again, if now deliberately rejected. But if we have understood the spirit of the Association in the past, its confidently expected action will simply prove that Religion safely passed the ordeal, and met the test of Freedom, at the very birth of the Association in 1867; and that the religious brotherhood of man will not be built upon the ruins of individual liberty, but will rather find its basis, its foundation, its corner-stone, in the freest possible aspiration and endeavor towards the ideal Perfect.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston on the 30th and 31st of May. The meeting will open with a Session for Business and Addresses in the Parker Fraternity Hall on Thursday evening, May 30th, at 7½ o'clock. At this session two amendments to the Constitution are to be acted upon:

1. To change the number of Vice-Presidents from "three" to "twelve."
2. To add to the first sentence of the Second Article, after the words "other Associations," and connecting by a semi-colon, the following words: "and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

On Friday, May 31st, there will be a Convention in Tremont Temple with three sessions, beginning at 10 A. M. and 3½ P. M. and 7½ P. M. The subjects to be considered are—"Liberty and the Church in America," "Does Religion represent a permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind, or is it a perishable Superstition?" and "The Religion of Humanity." These subjects will be introduced by essays by J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and O. B. Frothingham, the President, to be followed by addresses and discussion. Other distinguished speakers will be present.

WM. J. POTTER,

Secretary.

LUCRETIVS.

A metrical translation of Lucretius' celebrated poem "On the Nature of Things," made by Charles F. Johnson, and published by De Witt C. Lent & Co., New York, deserves special mention in THE INDEX. Not because the version itself is so good, for in some respects it is quite imperfect; the author is not an artist in the use of words; his ear is not musical, his vocabulary is rather deficient in copiousness, and his skill in the construction of rhythmical sentences is not eminent. The interest of the volume lies in the work itself, which is sufficiently well produced to be made intelligible and attractive.

The poem was first published in Rome fifty-four years before Christ, in its present unfinished state, the author of it having died suddenly, in the prime of life, and left his labor of love incomplete. He was an enthusiastic disciple of Epicurus, and wrote this poem to explain and commend the philosophy of his teacher. The subject was not a promising one, for, apart from its philosophical character, the system of Epicurus is to the modern reader singularly dry and prosaic. That a man really devoted to it, accepting all its features, grappling with all its difficulties, and resolute in his determination to give a faithful exposition of it, should have produced anything worthy of being called a poem, proves the notion groundless that atheism and poetry are incompatible. For this is a poem, and a grand poem, with a wealth of imagery fanciful and imaginative in it, with noble descriptions, glowing sentiments, high intellectual and moral purpose: It is ingenious, entertaining, graceful, witty, always interesting and frequently beautiful. As one of the famous works of antiquity, it is curious, and should find many readers; but to modern thinkers it is peculiarly deserving of regard as showing the kindred between old and new thoughts, and proving that the finest and purest feelings may be associated with opinions held to be utterly barren.

Lucretius is a materialist who rejoices in his materialism. It is his pride and boast. It is his materialism that moves him to praise. It is his delight at being delivered from the spectres of so-called religion, guardian spirits, demons, the chimeras of an existence after death, that breaks out into song. He writes not in the cause of speculation, or of philosophy technically considered, or of literary art; but as an earnest well-wisher towards his kind, intent on exorcising the fiends of fear that peopled the future, making death terrible, and the spaces above, making hideous the thought of deity. And he wrote a poem because poetry seemed to him the only fit vehicle for conveying his emancipating and buoyant ideas. To render men self-reliant, self-respecting, thoughtful, rational, cheerful, was, in his judgment, the highest office of the inspired man. The moral tone of the work is pure, generous, lofty, and the reader is led to feel that it is so not in spite of the philosophy, but because the philosophy compels. The author's cordial faith in his gospel of "irreligion" breaks out in frequent bursts of enthusiasm; and, when quiet, is so warm that its naturalness and genuineness cannot be doubted. This characteristic of the poem is of prime interest, as proving incontestably that one may be happy, enthusiastic, earnest, and high-toned, and yet deliberately repudiate, eagerly and impetuously repudiate, the cherished beliefs of his time. It is not true that "the atheist will lie, cheat and steal" quicker than a superstitious man will.

We are not approving or applauding atheism, but simply vindicating it against an ignorant and base aspersion. For the rest, this poem of Lucretius shows how hard it is for a noble mind to escape the fundamental conceptions on which the belief in God reposes. With no scientific knowledge as we apprehend it, with a theory of the origin of the universe grotesque in the extreme, he yet speaks of the ubiquitous presence and ruling energy of law with the confidence of a modern scientist; counsels implicit reliance on law as the ground of safety, the source of mental elevation, and the condition of peace. Obedience to law constitutes freedom. Reason and knowledge are the emancipators. Nature, in his view, is no abstraction, no chaos of blind forces, no frigid system of elements, but a living power, working all the time. As we read his glowing tributes to its unity, order, beauty, charm, we are reminded of modern poets to whom such thoughts are an inspiration. In passages he seems to anticipate the beliefs of our most recent schools. He teaches the gradual advance of mankind from the rudest conditions, their improvement by means of experience and knowledge; he rejects the doctrine of final causes; traces knowledge to impressions on the senses; is a sensationalist in psychology, a utilitarian in morals. In the course of his speculations he seems to stumble on the hypothesis of the development of species by the effort to maintain life. It is truly touching to note the power of an essentially correct method to make its way through the thickets of ignorance and embarrassment, and arrive at proximately just conclusions. The defects of imperfect knowledge, the crudeness of immature conceptions, and the aberrations caused by the superstitions prevalent in the early age when he flourished, may all be corrected now. The skill that made so much from such scanty materials, the faith that saw so much amid such dense darkness, the piety that so revered and worshipped when surrounded by idols it had itself shattered, deserves only sympathy and admiration.

O. B. F.

AUTHORITY IN RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

The old ecclesiastical view of authority in religion, and the only view that would now be accepted as sound in most ecclesiastical quarters, is that a religious teacher is accredited as such in some supernatural way. The Bible is regarded as authority because it is believed to have been supernaturally inspired. Jesus is held to be the authoritative Head of the Christian Church and supreme religious teacher of the human race because he is believed to have been supernaturally commissioned for that office. Believers in Romanism regard their church as having authority because they believe that it is supernaturally invested with the office of interpreting the revelation originally given to the writers of the Bible and to Jesus. According to this view of religious authority, the human reason and conscience are bound to accept as true whatever is taught in its name, whether by their own natural perception, they perceive it to be true or not. In fact, the human intelligence is declared to be of itself incompetent as a guide in matters of truth and duty, and for this reason the authoritative message is sent by supernatural process from the Deity.

But theologians of the liberal school of thought manifest a strong tendency away from this ecclesiastical view of religious authority. They begin their departure with the doctrine that it is truth that inspires a teacher and invests him with authority; that the Bible is an inspired book because of the high spiritual truth it contains, and not because it was penned by any miraculous process; that Jesus spoke with authority because he spoke out of such a full and satisfying perception of truth, and not because he had power to work miracles. Of course from this position it is but a short step to the further doctrine that all parts of the Bible are not alike inspired and authoritative, since all parts do not alike contain the same full and satisfying truth, and that all books and all religious teachings are inspired and authoritative in just the proportion that they have truth to proclaim. And this doctrine, it is evident, involves the assumption that the final test even in matters of religious truth must be the human intelligence. On this theory it is really the human intelligence which, examining whatever is presented for truth, finally declares that to be authoritative which it stamps with the seal of its own authority.

It would seem as if, when this point is reached, all specific and exceptional authority for the Bible, for Jesus, for Christianity, were abandoned, and that the old ecclesiastical view of authority were left so far in the rear that there would be no thought of trying to retain even the shadow of it. Yet an earnest attempt is made by many of these advanced and liberal religious believers to retain for the Bible, and in particular for Jesus, some special place of authority still, even though it be admitted that neither is infallible and that the teachings of both must be judged by human reason and conscience. This attempt is made on the ground of the analogy between authority in religion and authority in science,—or, more generally, between the competent religious teacher and the competent teacher in any branch of knowledge, as in literature, the arts, sciences, trades, history, politics. He is an authority who is able to instruct. Any person in any department of human thought and activity who shows that he knows more about the subject than other persons comes to be acknowledged on that subject as an authority. His word will be accepted by the mass of persons with little question or investigation,—though there is always a tacit understanding that it is open to question and investigation by any one who has competent knowledge. So, it is said, Jesus has shown himself to be an authority in religious things. He was endowed with such keen religious insight, with such clear moral perception, with such spiritually humane sympathies, that his life and teachings have had a natural mastery in religious history and he is still legitimately accepted as an authority in matters pertaining to the soul.

"An authority." If the argument stopped there, where the analogy stops, it might be admitted. But those who use this argument are not generally satisfied to stop there. They pass, by what logical process it is difficult to see, from "an authority" to "the authority." They would make Jesus the supreme authority, not only standing above all other human teachers of religion (that perhaps might be admitted), but so far above and away from them as really to exclude them as authorities; so far above and away as to become the central personality of all religious history, worthy and destined to absorb all the reverence, homage, and devotion of the human race. Now it makes all the difference in the world whether in this matter you say "an" or "the." Science, in registering her authorities, knows no such passage from the indefinite to the definite article. In loose phrase you may say that this person is "the authority" in a certain branch of knowledge, another in that. But true science knows of no homage to one authority, to the theoretical or practical exclusion of all others. Its dominating homage is always to truth.

Another point is to be considered on this question, and one that seems to be strangely overlooked by those who try to build up an exceptional position of authority for Jesus on the ground of analogy between authority in religion and authority in science. It is not expected that all persons will be scientific. It is not possible that all persons shall be learned in philosophy, in history, in literature. It is not assumed nor desired that all persons shall be artists, poets, dramatists, great merchants, great inventors. The callings in life are very different, the branches of knowledge are many and various; and those who have attended to learning one thing, who have followed one pursuit, while they know at first hand and are an authority to others in that thing which they have done, may safely enough depend upon external authority in things they have not done and not learned. But religion is something which all people are to learn, which all are to know. At least this is the ordinary assumption. If they do not possess it, they must cultivate it. And it is a matter on which secondary knowledge cannot pass. Every one must know it for himself, and not merely on the authority of some saint or prophet before him. In science we may have to accept or act upon many things without our own personal verification, because we have not the requisite time or capacity for the study. But religion cannot be deferred for want of time nor does it depend on mental capacity; and it is an experience so purely personal that in it each soul must be an authority to itself. There may be various helps of culture, various and excellent stimulus from external teaching and example; but if religion is for all men, then its highest authoritative teaching must be through the natural processes of the mind itself from that Teacher that teaches all.

W. J. P.

DEALING A FOUL BLOW.

The New York Independent charged the officers of the "National Association for Securing a Religious [Christian] Amendment to the United States Constitution" with forging the signature of Mr. James R. Osgood of Boston, to the call for their late convention in that city. The Philadelphia Christian Statesman makes this explanation:—

"The call for the Boston meeting was a frank and complete argument for the Amendment. Mr. Osgood was asked to read it, and, if he favored the measure, to add his signature. He read the call and signed it, knowing that it was for publication. It was not the 'managers,' but Mr. Osgood himself, who put his name before the public. It will be seen from the Globe, quoted above, that Mr. Osgood does not intimate that he did not sign the call, but merely explains his action in doing so. Does the Independent take us for absolute fools?"

The statement of the Boston Globe alluded to was this:—"Mr. Osgood now states that he is opposed to the movement, not in favor of it, and that he signed the call with the understanding that the meeting was to be for free discussion; yet the managers of the same put him before the public as one of their followers." As the call for this meeting was published in THE INDEX for April 20, our readers can judge for themselves whether it was or was not a "frank and complete argument for the Amendment;" we at least judge it such. If the facts stated above by the Statesman are true (and we see no reason whatever for doubting them), then the Globe and the Independent have been guilty of gross injustice. When a man signs a paper, it is fair to presume that he knows what he is about; and if he does not, he has only himself to blame for the unpleasant consequences of his blunder. The attempt to put down the Christian Amendment movement by such libellous clamor as that of these two papers, instead of honest criticism of the movement itself, stirs up in our mind a sentiment very nearly akin to disgust. The Christianizers have no more determined opponent in the country than THE INDEX; but rather than defeat their attempt by stooping to such foul misrepresentation as this, we would endure the evils of their success as best we might. Never shall it be said that we "fought the devil with fire."

The Independent thinks that THE INDEX has made a great fuss over a small matter, in openly and earnestly opposing this Christianizing scheme. But since it opposes the same scheme itself by trying to brand its advocates as forgers, and can find no more honorable mode of warfare than that of throwing vitriol in their eyes, we take its displeasure with the utmost indifference. When it was under the editorial charge of Theodore Tilton and Oliver Johnson, it was not only able and progressive, but also generous and fair. We regret to see that it has deteriorated in all these respects.

A friend writes that the pamphlet referred to in THE INDEX, No. 123, as sent by Dr. Hedge, was really sent by himself. We cheerfully correct the very natural mistake into which we were led.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following additional lists of names to the remonstrance against the proposed Christian Amendment to the United States Constitution have been received since our last issue:—

Mr. O. B. Frothingham, New York, N. Y., sends two hundred and twenty-four names; Mr. P. C. Turner, Albany, New York, sends seventy-nine (obtained mostly by Dr. D. L. Ditson); Mr. Ignatius Troffer, sends twenty-nine from Milford Township, Ohio; Rev. Zerah Masters, Sheffield, Illinois, sends one hundred and fourteen; Mrs. M. M. Sherman, Circleville, Ohio, sends four; Mrs. Laura Barnaby, Salem, Ohio, sends forty-three; Mr. W. R. Birdsell, Jackson, Michigan, sends twenty-three; Mr. E. M. Stevenson, New Bedford, Pennsylvania, sends two hundred and seventeen.

The total aggregate of names thus far acknowledged in THE INDEX is over THIRTY-ONE THOUSAND.

SLEEPING ON GUARD.

We have just seen a list of the officers of the National Religious Amendment Convention at Cincinnati. The president, vice-presidents and secretary are all men of whom we never heard before. They may be noted in their villages or counties, but they carry no more weight in the country at large than so many John Dods and Richard Roes.—Christian Register.

The Galilean carpenter whom the Register is very anxious that the whole world should recognize as "Lord and Master," and his little knot of untaught apostles, "carried no more weight" in their time than these new men of the Christian Amendment movement. But the obscure Galileans have made the whole modern world "carry" a very heavy "weight" which some of us are trying to get rid of. These "men of whom we never heard before" may yet make the Register "carry more weight" than it is likely ever to carry in any other way. Could anything be more superficial than this manner of estimating the force of a new movement? It is not so much the men it enlists, as the ideas it represents, that give this movement importance. We saw and heard enough at Cincinnati to convince us that the National Reform Association will sooner or later carry "weight" enough to crush the Register out of existence, unless the people see better than this sleepy watchman on the towers of Zion; and the men now actively propagating these ideas have character and brain enough to make themselves "heard of" when the incoherencies of Unitarianism shall be utterly drowned in the war of politico-religious strife. The surest recipe for defeat to the liberal cause is—despise the enemy!

One Rev. Zephaniah Meek, editor of the Catlettsburg (Kentucky) Christian Observer, the "organ of the Western Virginia Conference, M. E. Church South," shows his meekness by the following courageous statements:—

"A clasp of huge pretensions but very limited capacities, at Toledo, Ohio, who edits THE INDEX, a free religion sheet at that place, and who is known by the name of Francis Ellingwood Abbot, is just now the self-constituted champion of the opposition to the proposed religious amendment to the United States Constitution. He represents Christianity as marshalling its entire force to the contest, and he calls upon all its enemies to unite under his banner in a mighty contest for the liberty of conscience. We have very serious doubts as to whether so unscrupulous a man as Abbot has any conscience to enjoy liberty. Will Mr. Abbot tell us what religious editor of any or all the Christian denominations in the United States favors the amendment? Shame on such hypocrisy! We commend manliness wherever found; but if Abbot is a fit champion of free religion, it must be a heavy system."

The "hugeness" of our "pretensions" is that we are guilty of no falsehoods, even in the case of our bitterest opponents. And the "hugeness" of it is not apparent until brought into the neighborhood of such morals as dictated the above paragraph.

Sir Charles Lyell computes that all North America will be washed away into the ocean by processes now actually in operation, within the space of four and a half millions of years. We expect a great decline in the value of real estate in consequence of this prediction. What is the use of "voting yourself a farm" five miles under water? The land-grabbers and the anti-land-monopoly reformers will equally come to grief; for old Neptune is going to grab all the land for himself, and if that is not a monopoly, what is?

The independent man is alone serene. The slave of others' opinions is endlessly perturbed.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

PRE-EXISTENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX.

Dear Sir,—Do you believe in the theory of pre-existence? I do not. I cannot, because it knocks the props from my hopes of a future conscious existence. It may do for dreamy, speculative enthusiasts to argue that man lived in another state of existence prior to this, but it remains yet to be proved that such theory is fact, nor can it be demonstrated by any fair method of reasoning to a mathematical certainty. The day for theories, hobbies, think-son and guess-son is past. People want facts, proofs, in this "iron age of reason."

If man existed in a prior state and has no recollection of it, what assurance have we that in the life to come we shall know all about the life that now is? If I am to be somebody else in the other life, I ask for annihilation, because the other life will be no life at all to me. Reason tells me this life is but a preparatory green-room where characters are cast for the great play of futurity, and that we step out upon the wide stage of eternity in the precise order of this cast. This looks quite natural. Reasoning from the workings of Nature, I say there is another life. But what that other life is like, I cannot even guess. Nor have I any method of knowing the duration of a future life. The crawling worm passes from its apparently dead state, and becomes a gaudy-winged butterfly. But what becomes of the butterfly? Who can tell? Does it pass into other forms of animate life, or die and mingle with the dust on the breast of its mother?

Is the germ of man produced by coition, or is it an eternal vital principle of Nature, essential to the growth of all human life? Are these germs the result of sexual intercourse, or do they lie dormant in the body? And if dormant, do not they contain within themselves other germs, and those other germs contain still other germs, until we go back to infinitude?

If the latter proposition is correct, and all these germs contain a living soul in embryo, do they pass on with the soul of man into the other life to be born there, or do they suffer, die, and perish with the body? To say these germs existed before as germs, is simply ridiculous, yet on this theory hangs the doctrine of pre-existence as I understand it. It is very easy for me to believe matter is eternal, and that I existed before this life as matter; an infinitesimal atom in the great elementary world. I never can reconcile the idea of a previous state of animate existence with a future conscious existence, because it implies practical annihilation; certain transmigration. What is the use of a future life if we are to lose our personality and be somebody else, or something else?

The body dies, and the soul, the spirit, the something within man which moves the intricate, complicated machinery of the body leaves it for another life. Now is it reasonable to suppose that invisible mind, spirit, soul, or whatever you may please to call it, ever lived before and acted in the same capacity for another body in a previous life, which we know nothing about? Yet this is the doctrine of pre-existence, which, if true, shuts out the light of a future conscious life, and ends man in eternal unconsciousness as regards his future identity. Accepting this theory, there is no telling the number of changes that await us in the eternity of the future. The spirit of man may be "born again" thousands of times, and inhabit countless new bodies in the realms of space.

I have briefly given a few ideas which conflict with my views of a future conscious life, hoping to hear from you upon a question so full of meaning, so fraught with joy or woe to the whole human race.

Truly yours,

EDWIN ABNER DAVIS.

[Such queries as these are familiar to every reflective mind, but we find no answer to them. Is there any higher wisdom than to use the present wisely, nobly, unselfishly, and to build up characters which it would not be grim irony in God to perpetuate? Pre-existence and post-existence are beyond our ken; let us make the most of existence.—Ed.]

SPIRITUALISM.

There is much loose writing on both sides of this subject. Irrelevant statements are indulged in to a fearful extent; unsatisfactory evidence is paraded. Personal reflections upon the weaknesses of the medium are made, and intended to pass for argument. And one notable instance is on record where a very learned sceptic actually warned the world in advance against believing any statements his departed spirit might come back and make, except the one that his opinions had not changed on the death-bed. "If our ghost," he says, "adds one word more, we pronounce him a fraud." No objection, perhaps, ought to be made against a person who, understanding his own tendencies well, warns a trusting and honest people against the fraud which his spirit would commit when opportunity offered; but the implication that the spirits of other honest persons would be guilty of similar fraud is certainly not very commendable. And without such implication the statement could have no force. What is it to the world whether one garrulous old ghost be a fraud or not, except on the assumption that other ghosts are frauds also?

Stripped of all side-issues and speculations foreign to the subject, it seems to me that Spiritualism involves simply a question of fact. One side affirms that there is sufficient evidence to establish spirit identity and communication, the other denies this. The evidence to be put in covers about this ground:—

1. The phenomena of Spiritualism. Everybody knows what they are. Raps, table-tipping, moving of ponderable bodies without contact of human hands, or with insufficient physical force, clairvoyance, talking, writing, showing faces, etc. These phenomena must be either fact or fiction. If they are not proved to be facts or if they are actually proved to be fictions, with no better foundation than credulity or superstition, then the cause for the advocates of Spiritualism is lost at this point, and the investigation need go no further. Spiritualism is not true, or at least is not proved true, and every person is justified in rejecting it. If any part of the alleged phenomena is proved illusive, the investigation ceases as to that part. On the other hand, if any part is proven to be a fact, the investigation must go on so far as that part is concerned.

2. After the fact is established, comes the question of its source. It is either of human origin or superhuman.

The question of human origin divides itself into two branches—one involving the honesty and the other the intelligence of the medium. In one case, the ground is taken that the phenomena appear to take place, but are really the jugglery, trickery and deception practised by the medium who produces them. If this is shown to be the case, or indeed unless it is shown not to be the case, the Spiritualists fall here, and we need go no further. After this step is passed, then comes the question whether the phenomena are not honestly but ignorantly produced by the medium with powers not understood either by the operator or observers. The only power exercised may be the physical power, and the only intellect the natural intellect of the medium, unconsciously exercised, it may be, yet that of the medium. If such were demonstrated to be the case, while we might hope for the development of latent and as yet unknown human power, it would in no degree draw the veil from the other world.

3. Superhuman agency.

After the question of human agency has been settled beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt, then are we prepared to enter upon that of superhuman agency. And here it requires that all other intelligent agencies be excluded except that of departed spirits of human beings. If the phenomena can be satisfactorily explained in any other way, or rather unless it can be satisfactorily explained in no other way, the case for the Spiritualists still fails. If all these barriers can be surmounted by facts, relevant, pertinent, and conclusive, then should we all be willing to accept the demonstration. Not only should we be willing, but we should rejoice to do so. The terrors of the grave would have fled; the dark valley of the shadow of death would be lighted with heavenly light, and we should walk therein, not by faith, but by knowledge; the blank dark future would be looked into; the question of questions, "If a man die, shall he live again?" would be solved beyond a doubt.

The magnitude of this question cannot be over-estimated. It deserves, on the one hand, more than scoffing, sarcasm, and witicism, and, on the other, more than garrulous generalities, severe denunciations and crude statements. THE INDEX has many readers who believe in Spiritualism, many more who do not believe in it. Can we not make up a case fairly, honestly, sincerely, and settle the question one way or the other, not by authority, but by reason and evidence?

P. II.

THE RELIGIOUS CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The following article from the people's column of the Boston Herald contains an allusion to the opinion of General Washington on the propriety of recognizing the religious element in the Constitution of the United States. His view on this matter is at the present time especially interesting, now that religionists are assailing the rights of humanity:—

Editor of the Herald: Among the present political agitations is one engineered by certain sectarian Christians for the purpose of securing the insertion of religious tests into the Constitution of the United States. The proposed amendment is a verbal declaration therein—1st, That God is the source of all power; 2d, that Jesus Christ rules among the nations; 3d, that the Bible is of supreme authority. Free meetings have been held in many cities to manufacture public sentiment. About three dozen clergymen, deacons and church officers have advertised a public meeting to promote this movement, to be held next Sunday evening, at Tremont Temple. History shows that priests and their myrmidons have instigated all the bloody persecutions in all ages and countries where the common people have suffered. The fires of religious hatred have been kindled, and the blood of innocence has been poured out under every Government of the world, except that of the United States of America and San Marino, in Italy, and these are the only Governments whose constitutions contain no allusion to or recognition of God, and allow the utmost freedom of religion.

But this freedom from religious persecution, which is the crowning glory of the history of the National Government, cannot be shared by all the constituent States. The fair fame of Massachusetts is blotted by the foul deeds perpetrated by priests and church members in the State days. Priest and church members then possessed the State power, and they exercised it according to their wont, in banging, whipping and crushing to death men and women of a religion different from their own. They persecuted the Quakers, the Baptists and the Spiritual mediums, then known by the name of Witches.

In managing matters of State, priests and churchmen always and necessarily sacrifice human rights to theological ideas. They call evil good, and good evil. They put darkness for light and light for darkness. They put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter. Emerson has well said of such persons, that "not knowing what to do, they ape their ancestors; the churches stagger backward to the memories of the dark ages;" "God builds his temples in the heart, on the ruins of churches and religions." The framers of the Constitution of the United States, when engaged in their arduous work, were pestered by priests and church-goers, who then sought to accomplish what the present religious amateurs now endeavor to effect. But George Washington thus rebuked them: "Gentlemen, the path of true piety is too plain to require any political direction. We stand in no need of regulations respecting God or religion from the Magna Charta of our country."

Let the priests get through amending their Bible, which they are now doing in England and this country, before they amend the Constitution of the United States.

A. E. G.

When the above was penned, the sentiment therein attributed to Washington was quoted from memory, but the writer has since, through a clue given by John Syphers of La Salle, Ill., been enabled to verify its substantial accuracy. It may be found in "The Massachusetts Centinel" of December 5th, 1789. A correspondent of that paper, signing his name as CLERICUS, writes as follows:—

MR. RUSSELL:—

The Presbytery of the Eastward convened at Newburyport, in their address to the President of the United States in his late tour, say: "Among the objections to the Federal Constitution, we never considered the want of a religious test—that grand engine of persecution or every tyrant's hand. But we should not have been alone in rejecting to have some explicit acknowledgment of the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, inserted somewhere in the MAGNA CHARTA of our country."

The letter of General Washington alluding to that point is as follows:—

To the Ministers and Ruling Elders delegated to represent the Churches in Massachusetts and New Hampshire which compose the First Presbytery of the Eastward:

GENTLEMEN:—

You will permit me to observe that the path of true piety is so plain as to require but little political direction. To this consideration we ought to ascribe the absence of any regulation respecting religion from the Magna Charta of our country. To the guidance of Ministers of the Gospel this important object is perhaps more properly committed. It will be your care to instruct the ignorant and to reclaim the devious. In the progress of morality and science, to which our Government will give every furtherance, we may confidently expect the advancement of true religion, and the completion of our happiness.

G. WASHINGTON.

In the foregoing, certain points are noteworthy:

1st. That priests, as is their wont in initiating new movements, disclaim any purpose of persecution. "Will you walk into my parlor?" said the spider to the fly.

2d. That General Washington thought that true piety required no political direction.

3d. That he thought that true piety would advance, as morality and science progressed.

4th. The concurrence of Washington and Emerson in their statements of the nature of religion is interesting.

I once repeated to a Baptist Minister the words of Emerson quoted in A. E. G.'s communication above, and in his next sermon he alluded to them, and (as he thought) answered them, by pompously reciting the statistics of increase of Baptist churches and church members during the previous ten years. He thus unconsciously gave evidence that he believed his narrow sectarianism to be piety and that he could not distinguish between them.

ALFRED E. GILES.

BOSTON, Mass.

PRESIDENT GRANT.

TIPECANOE CITY, Ohio, May 1, 1873.

MR. ABBOT:

Suffer me to express the reasons of my political preferences through your paper. Grant stands at the head of our citizens—the great body of the people who suppressed the rebellion; and whoever may be nominated at Cincinnati will be voted for by those who fought against their country and for the Rebellion. Both political parties at times take measures which I condemn. They resort to electioneering tricks which I think foolish, and injure themselves by it. Grant has always, in military and political matters, shown a disposition to right himself by experience. He is safe so far as honesty and success up to the present time ensure safety. There are a few minor things, as an individual, I do not like in Grant's administration; but in the name of common sense what better could we expect from an Administration whose constituent body must be made up mainly of those who sought for four dark and bloody years to destroy the free institutions of this country, and the hopes of freedom throughout the world?

E. L. CRANE.

At an enthusiastic religious meeting among the negroes in Blount county last week, when the mourner's bench was crowded with penitents groaning in agony, one of them, a sable damsel of elephantine proportions, sprang to her feet, crying: "Glory hal-lelujah! Lord bress de Lamb, I've got religion! Lord, if dis nigger had de wings of a June bug, she'd fly right to heaven." Her enthusiasm was checked at this juncture by a matter-of-fact sister, who raised her head and brought the new convert's thoughts back from the ideal to the real, thusly:

"You fool nigger, what you mean? If you had June-bug wings, don't you know a woodpecker'd gobble you 'fore you got half a mile?"—Knoxville Whig.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents a conception of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testament. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no slier, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX OFFICE. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address,

THE INDEX.

90 St. Clair Street, Toledo, Ohio.

SOW THE SEED!

THE "IMPEACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY," published in the first number of the third volume of THE INDEX, has been electrotyped, and an edition of Ten Thousand Copies has been printed in the form of

A Cheap Tract for Gratuitous Distribution!

It is intended to circulate One Hundred Thousand Copies during the current year. In order to accomplish this purpose, we must rely upon the co-operation of our active sympathizers.

☞ Packages of these TRACTS, containing any desired number of copies, will be mailed to any address on receipt of enough money to defray postage, and whatever additional sums, large or small, the generosity of distributors may prompt them to add.

Of course, money will be needed to carry out our intentions; but we urge every one who believes that THIS TRACT WILL DO GOOD, and who is willing to distribute copies of it, to send in an order at once, even if unable to donate more than the simple postage and the time required for distribution. Do not hesitate because you cannot give more. We are convinced more than ever by the character and objects of the late Cincinnati Convention, that such plain speech as this TRACT contains is greatly needed at the present time. In the name of Christianity, of the American People; and the mighty magic of that name is still powerful over multitudes even of otherwise liberal minds. Let the world learn that the protest made against Christianity is not made by hatred of Goodness and of Truth, but rather by a love for these that can no longer be satisfied with shams. He who fully misjudges this Tract who thinks it has no higher aim than to "make a sensation." It was meant to tell needed truth so plainly that it must be heard. And it will be heard. All we ask is—give it a chance.

A most Dangerous Attempt is now Making to Subvert the Religious Liberties

☞ Address your orders to

THE INDEX,

Drawer 28, Toledo, Ohio

☞ The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word"); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, 90 St. Clair Street, Toledo, Ohio.

St. Louis, Quincy, Hannibal, Keokuk, Toledo, Wabash & Western R. R.

PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS!

THE Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway Co., having recently extended its line of Railway to the City of St. Louis, will commence running all its regular passenger trains through to that city on and after the 14th day of May, 1871. The day trains will be equipped with new and elegant passenger coaches, and all night trains with the much celebrated and popular Pullman Palace Sleeping Coaches.

	Special Tho' Express.	Pacific Express.
Leave Toledo.....	11:10 A. M.	11:15 P. M.
Ar. St. Louis.....	8:00 P. M.	8:30 A. M.
" Lafayette.....	7:40 "	8:20 "
" Danville.....	8:25 A. M.	11:50 "
" Springfield.....	8:45 "	4:10 P. M.
" Quincy.....	9:20 "	9:25 "
" Keokuk.....	9:50 "	10:45 "
" St. Louis.....	7:00 "	7:15 "

Trains arrive from the West at 2:15 A. M., 8:40 P. M., and 5:00 P. M.

GEO. H. BURROWS,

Gen'l Superintendent.

JOHN U. PARSONS,

Gen'l Ticket Agent.

[901]

Lake Shore & Mich. Southern R. R.

1872.

ON and after Sunday, Jan. 14th, 1872, Passenger Trains will leave Toledo daily (Sundays excepted) as follows (Cleveland time):

CLEVELAND & TOLEDO DIVISION.

LEAVE TOLEDO.

3:00 A. M. Atlantic Express East, daily, arrives at Cleveland at 7:35 A. M.

6:50 A. M. Day Express will stop at Elmore, Fremont, Clyde, Bellevue, Monroeville, Norwalk, Townsend, Wakarusa, Oberlin, Elyria and Berea, arrives at Cleveland at 10:30 A. M.

10:35 A. M. Cincinnati Express, stopping at all stations, reaches Cleveland at 3:45 P. M.

6:20 P. M. Special N. Y. Express, will stop at Fremont, Clyde, Monroeville, Norwalk and Elyria, arrives at Cleveland at 10:15 P. M. Sleeping cars to Buffalo and Rochester.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

10:40 and 10:55 A. M., and 7:40 and 11:00 P. M.

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN DIVISION.

TRAINS DEPART.

MAIN LINE—6:15 A. M., Mail; 11:15 A. M. Special Chicago Express; 5:45 P. M., Coldwater Accommodation; 8:00 P. M., Night Express.

AIR LINE—11:05 A. M., Accommodation; 11:30 P. M. Pacific Express.

DETROIT—8:00, 11:30 A. M., 5:30 and 8:00 P. M.

JACKSON—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

KALAMAZOO AND GRAND RAPIDS—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

MAIN LINE—6:30 and 10:35 A. M., and 5:40 & 6:30 P. M.

AIR LINE—2:50 A. M., and 6:35 P. M.

DETROIT—10:40 and 12:01 A. M., and 6:35 and 9:00 P. M.

JACKSON—10:35 A. M., and 5:51 P. M.

COLDWATER ACCOMMODATION—10:35 A. M.

CHAS. F. HATCH, Gen'l Supt.,

Cleveland, Ohio.

S. H. WARING, Ticket Agent, Toledo, O.

[901]

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents. Vols. I, and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $3.00.

Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

☞ All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,

110-161ew.

Box 2395, St. Louis, Mo.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

Free Religious Association.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1871, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, W. J. POTTER, NEW BEDFORD, MASS. It contains Essays, by John Weiss, on "THE ATTITUDE OF SCIENCE TO RELIGION," by O. B. Frothingham, on "SUPERSTITION AND DOGMATISM," and by Wm. J. Potter, on "THE NATURAL GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY," also a report of addresses by Dr. Bartol, T. W. Higginson, Lucetta Mott, Prof. Denton, A. M. Powell, and others; together with other proceedings of the meeting. Price 55 cents; in packages of five or more 25 cents each.

THE ANNUAL REPORTS for 1866, 1869, and 1870 (at 25 cents each), Rev. Samuel Johnson's Essay on "THE WORKSHIP OF JESUS" (50 cents), Rev. W. B. Channing's Essay on "THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA" (30 cents), Col. T. W. Higginson's Essay on "THE STRATEGY OF RELIGION" (30 cents), and an Essay on "REASON AND REVELATION," by Wm. J. Potter (10 cents), all published through the Association, can also be obtained as above.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 23 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.

THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.

Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.

Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $2.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX,

Drawer 28, Toledo, Ohio.

JUNIUS UNMASKED! or, THOMAS PAINE the author of the "Letters of Junius" and the "Declaration of Independence." A DEMONSTRATION. Royal 16mo. pp. 32. Price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

Address

JOHN GRAY & CO.,

113 2nd

P. O. Box 639, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. ☞ For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-119.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

☞ Address

THE INDEX,

Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address ☞

CHAS. E. WHIPPLE,

[28-35]

19 PICKNEY ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS

FROM

THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindoo Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Talmude, Bible, Philo Judaeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novels, Homeric Taleisins, Milton, Penn. Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman-Tyndall, Max Muller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Loretta Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tattle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."

The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

400 pages: Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address.

G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

Digitized by Google

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, MAY 25, 1872.

WHOLE No. 126.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Organization.

BY FRANCIS E. ARBOT, IN THE "RADICAL" OF DECEMBER, 1866.

The difference between organic and inorganic being is the difference between life and lifelessness. It is a law of the strictest universality that all finite life must become organic.

The lowest phase of being in which life becomes apparent is the cell; and the cell is an organism. In such plants as the Alga, the Protococcus nivalis (Red-snow Plant), etc., vegetation is reduced to its lowest terms, for here the entire plant is nothing but a cell. From this rudest beginning, up to its culmination in man, life rises in power and intensity by becoming more and more complex in cellular structure, by multiplying organs, by assuming more and more sharply defined form.

Man is the first of animals because he is the most highly organized. The place of each species in the scale of existence is assigned solely according to the greater or less complexity of its organization. Hence it is a second law of equal universality, that finite life is higher in degree, the more highly organic it becomes.

Organization, then, is the self-expression of living force, the result and proof of vitality. This is true in a far higher sense than the merely botanical or physiological. The plant is a composite being; so is humanity. The most profoundly philosophical view of human society is that which makes the race an organism. Pure individualism is the crudest type of human existence. Thoreau, in his hut by Walden Pond, is a specimen on a higher level of the one-celled plant, or would be so if he had not got into his head, before he went there, what never grew in the woods. Caspar Hauser in his dungeon is a better specimen of what pure individualism produces. As the world goes, however, pure individualism is impossible, and all who affect it only exhibit greater or less amounts of necessary inconsistency. It is idle to cry out against organization; every man, by being born into a family, a neighborhood, a town, a county, a state, a nation, is born into organizations like a nest of boxes. In fact, every man is an organization himself, and can only escape the necessity of being one by dying and decomposing with the utmost speed. Sociology, as a science, rests wholly on this conception of the human race as a vast organism, of which individuals are component parts: its laws and principles are valid only on the presupposition of a vital, organic connection among these parts. Paul seized an important scientific truth when he declared that we are all "members of one body." It does not depend in the slightest degree upon our private choices, therefore, whether we shall belong to organizations or not. Willing or unwilling, we are organized in many ways at our birth, and cannot get disorganized before our death; we must make the best of it as it is.

Now the great problem of sociology is the right adjustment of the relations between the unit and the aggregate, the part and the whole, the individual and society. Neither war, according to Hobbes, nor savage isolation, according to Rousseau, is the "state of Nature;" but these being excluded, only one alternative remains, and that is co-operation. The state of Nature is mutual co-operation, which is the Christian ideal of society. But co-operation implies a common end for which all co-operate; and what is that? This is a most important question, and the answer to it will affect essentially the character of every voluntary organization into which men enter.

The ideal end of society is accomplished in the highest possible development of all its individual members, according to the law of their natural individualities. The individual cannot develop in isolation, independently of social helps; and that is the sufficient answer to the advocates of pure individualism. From birth to death, men are dependent on each other in countless ways; there is no such thing as human independence, except in a very Pickwickian sense. The completest possible education of all its individuals, their most perfect development in all directions, is the grand end and function of society. This end attained, the highest welfare of all is secured in the highest welfare of each. It is the duty of society to propose this end; it is the duty of the individual to co-operate in achieving it. Society defeats its own end if it violates the individuality of any one of its members; the individual defeats at once his own end, and the end of society, if he refuses to co-operate with his fellows. The prosperity of a state depends on commerce, in a higher sense of that word than the common one. The free commerce of intellectual, moral, and religious influences, the unstinted interchange of ennobling ideas, sentiments, and social helps of every kind, is the very condition of true social progress; and all this is co-operation, mutual giving and taking, practical outcome and income of all that is best in humanity. In no other way than by this perpetual co-operation of each with all, can society attain its ideal end.

How clear, then, is the duty of society to respect to the uttermost the liberty of the individual! The good of society is at once sacrificed by any restriction on the individual's free activity, whether of body or mind. How clear, on the other hand, is the duty of the individual to work heartily for the welfare of society! His own highest good, in which that of society is also involved, is sacrificed by a selfish refusal to bear his part of the common burden. Private culture and public usefulness are thus reciprocally ends and means: the highest individual culture is impossible unless dedicated to public uses, and the highest usefulness to society is impossible except through the most perfect culture of the individual. This mutual existence of the individual for society, and of society for the individual, constitutes the human race a single organism, which the immortal Kant defines as "that in which the whole and the parts are mutually means and ends." The more highly society becomes thus organized, the richer, freer and grander is each individual life. Let society and the individual be faithful in the performance of these reciprocal duties, and the greatest of human triumphs is achieved,—liberty in union, the unimpeded evolution of every soul, according to the Divine ideal implanted in it, and the harmonious working of all souls for the highest good of each. Is not this the true idea of the kingdom of God?

It seems quite unwise, then, to object to organization per se, or to hold that it naturally and inevitably tends to evil; for social progress manifestly consists in perpetual movement towards a profounder organic integration of the whole, and a higher spiritual differentiation of the parts. There is nothing antagonistic in these two ends; on the contrary the attainment of one depends directly on the attainment of the other. The most highly organized plants and animals are precisely those in which the individual organs are most dissimilar. To hold back, therefore, in jealousy of organization as such from the great social duty of co-operation for human welfare, is to distrust the nature of things and the wisdom of God's cosmical laws,—which is the worst kind of scepticism. Organizations crystallize around all great ideas, and every great idea creates its own appropriate form of organization. If a vitally powerful idea gets hold of men's minds, it will organize them almost in spite of themselves; it will bring them together as inevitably as the force of gravitation brings together the tiny streams, trickling down the mountain's side, into the larger stream of the valley. There is no use in fighting against Nature. If men keep apart, it is because they have no common purpose or principle to unite them; continued separation is a verdict pronounced against their principles—"guilty of worthlessness in the first degree."

Least of all should the liberal preacher of to-day look askance on organization. For what is he preaching? Clearly for reform—political, social, religious. But he who works for reform must first believe in form, and form is organization. The modern prophet of humanity aims, not to disorganize society (though often falsely accused of that), but only to re-organize it, on the basis of love, righteousness and truth. He can only aim to correct the wrong basis of present organization; he protests against every organization which represses individuality, but only in favor of organization which shall develop it. Disorganization is simple anarchy, social death. Scrutinize, therefore, the fundamental principles of social organizations as severely as you will; but do not defeat your own end by destroying what you seek to reform. Let every new organization be helped and encouraged which shall tend to accomplish the genuine object of all organization, namely, the higher development of the individual. That is the touchstone, the test, of all beneficial organization. Individual development need not be the direct object proposed; but if it is not the ultimate object attained, if it is in any way, shape, or manner, interfered with, then the organization, no matter how dazzling its professions or philanthropic its intentions, obstructs the genuine progress of society, and should either be reformed or abolished. If reform is impossible, there is no remedy but abolition.

What I have said has a plain bearing on the times. If there is any real vitality in the "radical movement," it will express itself in associate action, work out collective self-affirmation, and become an organized power. If no such result takes place, it will be because, after all, the movement is not as yet unified and vivified by any living principle, but is only the vague discontent, engendered by existing abuses, which is the forerunner of every positive reform. It will be because as yet we have attained to no distinct consciousness of common ideas and purposes. Is this the case? The times seem propitious, at least for an experiment. The National Unitarian Conference, representing (it remains to be seen how faithfully) the Unitarian denomination, have adopted, as a creed, the "Lordship and Kingship of Jesus Christ," and thereby disappointed the hopes of all who look deeper than any possible creed for the true basis of religious organization. Hitherto the Unitarian denomination, by the very fact of their resolute creedlessness, have represented the principle of perfect spiritual freedom, and have thus led the van of religious progress. But now, if they endorse the action of their Conference, they fall back into the rear, and drop the banner of advancement. They have never, it is true, collectively asserted this principle; yet by resisting every previous attempt to discredit it, they stood forth as its understood champions. At Syracuse, however, induced by reactionary counsels, they have, by their representatives at least, distinctly repudiated their inherited principle of free thought, and adopted a dogma as a finality. We must wait to see whether this action will be accepted as truly representative of the "denominational mind." For myself, I can not but hope most earnestly that the denomination and the Conference itself will perceive their fatal mistake, and permit those to rejoin them on the broad basis of spiritual freedom who, while recognizing the catholic spirit of the Conference, are shut out by the terms of its organization. I do not believe in voluntary secession or schism; but no man can prevent involuntary exclusion. The Conference adopted the most effectual means of exclusion, when it appointed the private consciences of each of its members as the sergeant-at-arms to enforce its votes.

The radicals, therefore, find themselves at last definitely excluded from the only organization from which they could expect the affirmation of their own great principles. Shall these great principles remain still unaffirmed, except as here and there a solitary individual shall give them voice? The duty we owe to the principles themselves and the fellow-men whom these principles will help, demands to that question an emphatic "No." It is time for a new organization, on a new basis. It is useless to organize on intellectual finalities, for thinking men always outgrow, sooner or later, their own thought, and the truth of to-day may become, by its very halfness, the falsity of to-morrow. That is the mischief of creeds. The creed may express the highest thought of the hour, and, so long as it does, may inspire to higher life; but it is necessarily stationary, not progressive, and, as the individual mind expands, becomes a cramping curse. The only bond of union elastic enough to leave free play for individual growth must be a platform of principles that are lasts of life, of purposes and ends that are life itself. A basis such as this will be a new experiment in the history of religious organizations. It will be more than the simple affirmation of freedom, for that is a mere negation, an absence of restrictions, a necessary condition of growth, but not growth itself. It will be the affirmation of progress as the law of humanity—development, evolution, ascent from the lower to the higher. The law of boundless progress as our governing principle, and the fact of ceaseless progress as our practical end, will constitute a basis of union broad as humanity itself. If we can discover such a statement of it as will commend itself to the minds of our isolated Liberals, it will help the world not a little to put forth a collective affirmation of it in some free manner. I cannot but think that this has become the solemn duty of the hour. With this belief, I would submit the following sketch of a Constitution to the thoughtful consideration of the reader. Take it for what it is worth; but, if this is bad, put a better in its place:—

PREAMBLE. Whereas, The grand end of human society is the freest, fullest, and highest development of the individual, and the special end of every minor organization should be in harmony with, and in furtherance of, this general end of society itself; and

Whereas, The grand end of the individual soul is the realization, in itself and in the world, of the highest Ideal of Humanity, and is thus identical with the great cause of universal human progress:—

ARTICLE I. Therefore, we hereby associate ourselves into a Free Brotherhood, for the purpose of helping each other and our fellow-men, in the endeavor after the perfect Spirit, Life and Truth.

ARTICLE II. The only condition of fellowship shall be sympathy with our purpose, and willingness to co-operate in it.

Whatever minor details should prove necessary, could be easily arranged; I care nothing now but for the fundamental spirit and principles of the proposed movement. By no means need there be any antagonism or collision with any other organization; least of all with the National Unitarian Conference. Let that go on and accomplish its appointed mission; God speed it in every noble work! But for ourselves, we need a closer fellowship and better mutual understanding; we need to discharge our duty to our fellow-men by boldly proclaiming the possibility of organization on higher and broader grounds than a creed, for a greater and diviner end than mere denominational prosperity. The common bond must be a common spirit and aim, a common faith in humanity and its divine destination, a common aspiration towards higher good and vaster virtues. Whoever feels the upward influence of this spirit, faith and aspiration, I hail as my brother by a closer tie than that of blood. Let him believe what he may, let him even be groping in the moral midnight of utter atheism, I will trust him as one who is treading the same path, and approaching, however blindly, the same goal. SUCH A ONE AS THIS MUST NOT BE SHUT OUT OF OUR FELLOWSHIP, ANY MORE THAN THE CATHOLIC, MOHAMMEDAN OR MORMON WHO MAY BE DRAWN TO US BY SECRET AFFINITIES. Therefore there should be nothing but an avowal of this mutual purpose and aspiration to hold us together, or to keep us apart—nothing but unquestioning trust in those subtle natural forces which will build us up, as the "vital principle" appropriates from the soil whatever can assimilate with the growing tree. Faith in the divine spirit of man and the divine spirit of God are one and the same.

Is it indeed a Utopian scheme, a dreamer's fantasy, to look for such a brotherhood as this? I cannot believe it. Yet even to fail in such an attempt would be grander than any common success. If the kingdom of God is anything but a mocking mirage, it must come in some such guise as this. Must we wait forever, or can we begin it here and now?

CHRISTIANITY IMPEACHED.

BY REV. E. H. HOWARD.

[From the New York Christian Advocate of January 25.]

Christianity has been impeached. Mr. Abbot has done it—formally, solemnly—"in the name of all that is best, noblest, and divinest in human nature," and "before the bar of civilized mankind." It isn't the first time, I suppose. I understand Celsus impeached it quite a number of hundred years ago, and yet it has come to something for all of that. Julian impeached it, and yet this last of pagan emperors died prematurely, in the wreck of his broken powers, with the despairing words, "Vicisti, Galilee!"—"Thou hast conquered, O Galilee!" Indeed, from the very outset, to the Jews the Cross has been a "stumbling-block," and to the Greeks (Rationalists) "foolishness." Do these Free Religionists imagine that Christianity has never been "impeached"—has never "with all seriousness" been called in question before? The fact is that, wide-spread, bold, clamorous, aggressive, and boastful as is modern scepticism, the foes of the Church have hardly ever been fewer, less confident, or less earnest and determined than to-day.

Let me here pause to recognize the manliness of Mr. Abbot's attitude. Disdaining any disguise, any covert attack, he comes forth openly, and not only with boldness, but with a sort of audacity, dashes upon the time-honored "bulwarks" of the Church. Next to those dangers coming from within, the foe chiefly to be dreaded by the Church are those "wolves in sheep's clothing," those false teachers, displaying the colors, mumbling the shibboleths, adhering to the forms and emblems of Christianity, who yet at heart do intensely hate it. For these parties who, holding thus almost no one tenet distinctively Christian, yet by means of all sorts of evasions, mental reservations, tricks of double entendre, etc., manage to maintain some kind of a standing inside the Church, for the sake apparently of more effectually disabling it, we cherish only the most profound contempt. Mr. Abbot seems to scorn even the appearance of such insincerity, hypocrisy, and cowardice. The community will honor him for his independence, though it may have but little respect for his opinions.

Well, as I said, Mr. Abbot impeaches Christianity, that is, brings charges against it. It is gratifying to have thus grouped in one brief document all that the most modern and most advanced infidelity can allege against Christianity. Let us examine these charges.

In the first place I take exception to Mr. Abbot's definition of Christianity. When, pray, has Christianity ever defined itself as being "the great system of faith and practice which is organized in the Christian Church," and admitted that the history of the Church was the history of Christianity itself? I have never heard of any such definition. Webster gives us no such. He says (see "Unabridged") that Christianity is "that system of doctrines and duties taught by Christ." The American Cyclopaedia says: "Christianity is that religion of which Christ is the founder." More comprehensively still, Mr. Clintock and Strong define Christianity to be "the religion of Christians, including doctrines, morals, and institutions—the sole foundation and source of which are the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments." Either Mr. Abbot is sadly unacquainted with Christian "authorities," or he has been betrayed into constructing a definition suited to his own ends, under the impression that he was accepting the definition Christianity had made for itself. We would disabuse him. He is laboring under a great mistake. We accept no such definition of the religion we profess as he brings forward. Meantime, with his defective definition must go a large portion of this his portentous and pretentious indictment against Christianity, based upon it; for many of his charges lie not indeed against Christianity itself, but against such perversions of it as Calvinism, Roman Catholicism, Sacerdotalism, and other heterodox modifications of the original Gospel. I deny that Christianity is responsible for such perversions and abuses any more than Republicanism is responsible for the late war or the outrages of the Ku-Klux.

Mr. Abbot gratefully acknowledges that Christianity has done great good in the past, and is still doing some good. Yet it is at present "dying a lingering death." "To many it is dead already, and for these I speak." He gives us no evidence that Christianity is dead. We are to take his word for it, I suppose. His followers may be satisfied with his simple dictum. Not we. And here I may say that a large share of this elaborate indictment consists in utterly baseless assumptions, unfounded assertions, or (unintended, of course, nevertheless) downright misrepresentations. Of these let the following be regarded as specimens: "It [Christianity] is the great organized superstition of the Western World, perpetuating in modern times the false beliefs, the degrading fears, and the numbing influences of the Dark Ages; in proportion to its power over men, paralyzing their intellectual faculties, keeping them in the bondage of childish fancies, and governing them by means of an utterly irrational religious terrorism." This we squarely deny, and challenge proof. In fact we affirm that precisely the opposite of this has been, and still is, the fruit of Christianity, and in proof of it, if necessary, can summon a long array of free-thinking "witnesses, and even Free Religionists themselves." "It is the great enemy of science, retarding the spread of natural [?] knowledge, opposing new truths and discoveries as irreligious, ["Prove all things," etc.—Paul], perpetuating popular ignorance on all but permitted subjects, that its own empire may remain unshaken, and making blind faith in impossible doctrines the highest virtue of the soul, and the only protection against terrible yet purely imaginary dangers." "It is the greatest stumbling-block in the pathway of civilization, inasmuch as it withdraws attention from the natural affairs of this life, concentrates all its earnest thought on a future life that is to be eternal bliss or eternal misery, makes a merit of neglect of this world's riches in order to 'lay up treasures in heaven,' frowns on active enterprise as a dangerous devotion ['not slothful in business,'—Paul], to 'carnal things,' and thus unfits men for attention to all those objects of honorable ambition on which the progress of civilization depends." These are the charges under the first "count." "In the name of Human Intelligence" comment is needless. Contradicted as they are alike by every page of history and the record of every civilized community in the world, it would seem that no one who in the least valued his reputation for common sense would make any such palpably absurd assertions as the foregoing. We deny them, and demand proof.

The next count is "in the name of Human Virtue." "It appeals to hope and fear as the supreme motives of human conduct; holds out promises of an eternal heaven as the reward of obedience to its commands, utters threats of an eternal hell as the punishment of disobedience to them; makes its appeal to human selfishness as the proper spring of human action, and, consequently, undermines and destroys the disinterestedness of all high morality, which commands the right because it is right, and forbids the wrong because it is wrong, regardless alike of punishment or reward."

Proceeding to the doctrines of Christianity, Mr. A. affirms that its distinguishing tenets—such, for example, as the doctrine of salvation through faith in Christ, the doctrine of forgiveness of sin, or, as he phrases it, "that the consequences of moral evil are neither necessary nor universal;" that the doctrines of sin and depravity, or, as he has it, "that Christ will save those alone who abhor themselves and have lost all faith in themselves and in their own power to escape the just wrath of God"—"strike a deadly blow at the dignity of human nature, extinguish that noble sentiment of self-respect without which all high virtue is impossible, smite men with the leprosy of self-contempt, making them to crawl like reptiles before Christ, weaken the natural auxiliaries of imperfect virtue by fostering the delusion that men can do evil without suffering for it, enfeeble the consciousness of human rights, blight the very idea of justice," etc. All of which I unqualifiedly deny, and insist on the proof.

While penning the foregoing preposterous charges Mr. Abbot was doubtless thinking of such striking examples of the demoralizing tendency of Christian doctrine as Paul and Luther and Knox and Cromwell and Wesley and the Puritans and the Calvinistic clergy generally. What a shame-faced, mean-spirited, cowardly class of men! It is all a mistake about their having been cast-iron men, men of the uttermost ruggedness, robustness, and strength of character. In another connection Mr. Abbot affirms that "the largest mind, the purest conscience, the tenderest heart, and the most earnest spirit of the century are a unit in declaring independence of this power, which has become a tyranny." This sweeping assertion must, of course, include all such men as Dr. Osgood, Bellows, Peabody, Huntington, Hopkins, M'Cosh, Woolsey, Beecher, Storrs, Thompson, Whedon, etc. It is inconceivable how a man of Mr. Abbot's reputed modesty and good sense can make such hair-brained allegations. Are these the men, pray, "in bondage to childish fancies?"

Of the same piece are the following charges, under subsequent "counts." "It recognizes no sanctity in natural human affections; extends over myriads of sensitive minds the blackness and gloom of a horrible theology; tortures them with a morbid self-reproach for unreal sins, and fills them with execrable doubts of their final escape from hell; [Mr. Abbot had better attend a few Methodist love-fests;] commands supreme love to an utterly unlovely God, degrading the very idea of the fatherhood of a God whose acts are so unfatherly; proclaims a 'brotherhood of man' which denies the natural quality essential to all genuine brotherhood, perverting the natural [?] sentiment of good-will toward all men into an artificial and exclusive bond among Christians themselves; sets up a despotic authority which, whether as Church, Bible, or Christ, makes man a slave in his very soul, an authority which shuts up the human intellect, hands over the conscience to clerical keepers, etc.; has always joined itself with despotism in civil government, and with the oppressor in keeping the oppressed under foot: has always been an unmitigated spiritual tyranny, and is now plotting in this free Republic to re-establish itself as a temporal tyranny also; is the true heir of the ancient Roman imperialism; stands stubbornly in the path of all human progress, blocking the way of every movement which aims at the enlargement of human life; teaches the impossibility of humanity's advance through its own actual exertions, and insists that it should rely on supernatural assistance alone, extinguishing aspirations and drying up the fountain-head of all progress; teaches despair of human nature as ruined, lost, depraved, incapable of all salvation but that which comes from without [the only truth contained in the whole bill of charges], proclaims ideas of God which would drive every reflective mind acquainted with modern knowledge [of course such men as M'Cosh and the Duke of Argyll are ignoramuses] into absolute atheism, were it not that modern knowledge itself furnishes the elements of a far higher idea of God in universal Nature [what a saving clause!]; finally, it is the most insidious enemy of the religious sentiment [Think of that, reader! Who ever thought of Free Religion becoming the champion of the "religious sentiment?"] the destroyer of that pure and ennobling sentiment which recognizes the Divine throughout time and space, and creates in the soul of man a consciousness of profound spiritual oneness with the vast whole." I need hardly add how utterly puerile, paltzy, and baseless these charges appear in the light of the truth of history. Nay, the testimonies of capable and disinterested observers by the score directly contradict all the foregoing charges. No one has stated more clearly than Goethe—whose testimony surely will be unsuspected—that "epochs of faith are epochs of fruitfulness, and that epochs of unbelief, however glittering, are barren of all permanent good." "Let the human mind be expanded, as much as it pleases," said this same writer in one of his last conversations with Eckermann, "it will never transcend the light and morality as it shines in the Gospel. The greatest honor is due to Christianity for continually proving its pure and noble origin by coming forth again after the great aberrations into which human perversity had led it, more speedily than was expected, with a primitive special charm as a mission, for the relief of human necessity."

It is difficult to conceive how Christianity can have achieved as much good as Mr. Abbot himself admits it to have done, if it be any such hideous monster as indicated in this his "bill of impeachment." Meantime, if Mr. Abbot flatters himself that he is doing a great and good work in thus setting up this man of straw for the sake of valiantly knocking it over again, we wish him much joy.

Concerning Free Religion itself I have two or three things to say:

1. It is the rallying-point of the infidelity of the day—that which gather and organize all the leaders of God, the Bible, and Jesus Christ.

2. Professing the utmost freedom from authority, it is bigoted, narrow, and intolerant. Boasting a universal religion and science, it utterly ignores some of the most universal facts of human experience and certain undeniably constitutional needs and functions of our being.

3. It is but another name for irreligion. It is radical error; is not only mischievous, but deadly in its influence, fraught with present and future spiritual, eternal, and irreparable disaster.

Over against the Salabre device I put Jesus, still, as ever, the Day-spring from on high, "giving light to them that sit in darkness and the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

BROOKFIELD, MASS.

A SURVEY OF THE TIMES.

THE "INTRODUCTION" TO "CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY AND MODERN SCEPTICISM," BY THE DUKE OF BOMERSET, K. G.

It is humiliating to be obliged to confess that, after eighteen hundred years of Christian teaching, man has made no advance in certainty of religious knowledge.

So far from any approach to certainty, the opinions of educated society upon the most important questions which can occupy the human mind, appear at the present time to be more unsettled than at any previous period of European history.

In every other branch of knowledge assiduous study and persevering industry have been rewarded with at least partial success. Some progress has been made, and some results obtained, which, while they have contributed to the convenience or to the happiness of mankind, have encouraged fresh exertions and opened a prospect of future acquisitions.

In the study of revealed religion this process seems to have been reversed. The labor of successive generations, the services of men especially set apart for this teaching, the accumulated learning of former ages, the voluminous and still increasing literature of the present day, all alike fail in establishing any generally-acknowledged definite convictions. On the contrary, in all free communities, the greatest diversity of religious opinion prevails; doubts and controversies range over a wider area in proportion to the advancement of learning, until the differences of Christian sects lose their significance in comparison with far deeper questions, which are attracting the notice of educated society.

A reference to former years will show the change in religious thought, which has gradually forced its way through the cultivated classes of the community.

At the beginning of the last century the boundary-line between religious and sceptical literature was distinct and definite. The sceptical writers were then the open enemies of the clergy and the avowed opponents of Christianity. The clergy retorted on their adversaries with great bitterness and ability, branded them with the name of Atheists, and made no allowance for the mildest suggestion of doubt.

Philosophy, science and literature were then the firm friends and defenders of revealed religion. Locke paraphrased the Pauline epistles. Sir Isaac Newton expounded prophecy. Addison cited with complacent confidence the letter of King Agbarus to Christ as a record of great authority, and an evidence of Christian truth.

In the present day philosophy and science stand aloof in unfriendly attitudes, while literature gives currency to a thousand speculative opinions unfavorable to the old established beliefs.

This change is the result of various influences. The progress of physical science, the critical examination of ancient history in connection with kindred researches, and, above all, the continued study of the Scriptures, have concurred to modify the religious beliefs of the Protestant world.

The whole system of modern education tends toward the same result. Men who have been carefully trained to distrust authority, and to rely for the acquisition of knowledge upon experiment, analysis, and patient research, cannot subsequently divest themselves of a habit of mind which has become a part of their nature. They must either suppress and relinquish all religious thought, or they must apply to the records of revealed religion the same spirit of investigation which has already re-opened the sources of history, and extended the domain of science.

With the diffusion of education, these influences will be more widely felt. It is now manifest that theological and secular instruction run in two opposite currents of thought. The divergence may occasionally be glossed over by dazzling eloquence, or concealed under a haze of metaphysical learning, but the enchantment is soon dispelled, and the two antagonists arise again, striving for mastery over the human mind.

More than two centuries have elapsed since Selden declared that the words "scripturam scripturas" had undone the world. The interval has tended, in one sense at least, to confirm his prediction. The search of the Scriptures has impaired the authority of Scripture, and the learned endeavors to remove obscurity have increased doubt.

Hence scepticism has been naturalized in modern society, and will not be repressed by denunciations against infidelity, or by the lamentations of sentimental piety.

The efforts of thoughtful and earnest minds to arrive at religious truth have in all ages produced some form of scepticism. A disconnection with the prevalent beliefs of their countrymen is visible in the sublime thoughts of the Hebrew prophets who rejected with scorn the precepts of the ceremonial law. An analogous feeling gave birth to the moral scepticism of the book of Job, and to the intellectual doubts of the book of Ecclesiastes.

A somewhat similar mental disturbance is observable in every period of mental activity. It is not therefore surprising that in the present day there should be many varieties of scepticism, each of which has its own special and appropriate literature.

The philosophical sceptic examines into the original source of religious belief in the human mind, plunges his reader into a maze of metaphysics, and represents every religion to be merely a phase of thought.

The scientific sceptic reasons from the known to the unknown, rejects the miraculous, and regards revelation as an untenable theory.

The antiquarian sceptic explores records of undated antiquity, pursues the shadowy forms of Mithra or Zoroaster, and gropes among Oriental relics until he half believes that he can descry the cradle of Christianity hidden amid the myths and cosmogonies of the remote East.

Different minds are fascinated by these different pursuits, and each may perhaps have its use in stimulating the instruction of mankind.

Meanwhile, under these various impulses, the progress of religious education is impeded, and the wisdom of Parliament is perplexed.

While our statesmen and public speakers are proclaiming the indispensable necessity of a Christian education, while our clergy are insisting on dogmatic theology, scepticism pervades the whole atmosphere of thought, leads the most learned societies, colors the religious literature of the day, and even mounds into the pulpits of the Church.

It would, however, be a grave mistake to assume that scepticism is in its nature irreligious or immoral. Some minds in their eager search for truth, while receding from dogmatic theology, have indeed wandered beyond the confines of Christianity. But the mass of society is anxiously seeking a belief which shall not be at issue with the moral sense of educated men.

For this purpose theologians, biblical critics, and other learned men, have toiled incessantly, and it is now obvious that the theology of former ages cannot be permanently maintained.

To enter fully into these elaborate inquiries would occupy too large a space, but the following pages contain a condensed outline of the reasoning upon Christian history and Christian doctrine which is thought to justify the opinion here expressed.

The several points at issue are compressed into short chapters, so as not tediously to repeat objections which are already familiar to many readers, who will thus be enabled, from a comprehensive survey of the subject, to perceive the process of religious change which is gradually permeating the Protestant world.

GOOD FRIDAY ABROAD.—Under the head of "Church Topics," The Graphic of April 6 says:—"The Nonconformist has an excellent article on the incongruous manner in which Good Friday (the most sacred fast-day of the English church) is kept by the English people. The writer paid a visit to the Crystal Palace, and saw crowds of people thoroughly enjoying the various amusements of the place—the menageries, the gardens, the aquariums, etc. In the refreshment rooms he saw pork pies and stout disappear with alarming rapidity; and in the gallery gymnasium marvellous feats were performed, while the 'sacred' concert was going on in the transept below. The writer saw nothing absolutely wrong, and he does not object in the abstract to people making the most of a holiday when they get the chance. But he thinks that such rejoicings are rather out of place as a method of celebrating the death of Our Savior, and suggests that Good Friday should be erased from our holiday list, and another day substituted. He would also abolish that 'empty homage' to what is thought to be religion which everywhere prevails. The Crystal Palace Company touch the hat to the Church by advertising a 'sacred' concert. The House of Commons has prayers before business, and members worship in order to secure their seats. People go to church every Sunday, but openly boast that they value a sermon by its brevity, and like the Litany the better the quicker it is galloped through. Soon, he expects, it will be the fashion for people not to go to church, but to leave their cards; and those who do not leave their cards will be set down as great infidels, just like those who 'go nowhere' now."

Foots was a true humorist. Some one told him that the Rockingham ministry were at their wits' end, and tired out. "It could not have been the length of the journey," replied Foots. On another occasion, he asked of a certain gentleman who had joked him on what Dr. Johnson called his "depeditation"—"Why do you laugh at my weakest point? Did I ever say anything about your head?"

"George," asked the teacher of a Sunday School class, "whom above all others shall you first wish to see when you get to heaven?" With a bright face brightening up with anticipation, the little fellow shouted "Goliath!"

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"Your paper, THE INDEX, is now coming to my address, as I ordered. Its sentiments are as new to me as light to healed blindness, but no less acceptable and salutary. I am ashamed to confess that I have lived in the world one quarter of a century, and, until quite recently, never knew but one aspect of life; and that was viewed exclusively from the Orthodox spectrum. The extension I offer is that of the personal restraint I have suffered from living all my life in a densely Orthodox community. But the shell is broken, and I have emerged from darkness into a new and beautiful life. The struggle was hard (I was raised a Presbyterian), but my conversion from error is the more complete. My mind, now emancipated from the slavery of constrained belief, is in a state of joyous inquiry. To me, Nature never smiled so sweetly before; the sun never shone so gloriously; the moon never walked so grandly among the obedient stars; the cloud and the sea, the tree and the flower, never seemed so immanent with God! My greatest consolation, and clearest evidence of Deity and immortality, is that in my own 'private soul' which cannot utter itself."

"For several months past I have been reading THE INDEX with great interest. I borrowed the Nos. of a neighbor who takes it. This will satisfy me no longer; I must own every No. hereafter. I am not an old man, but many years ago I was compelled to cut loose from 'Orthodoxy,' because of its many inconsistencies, and the barbarous nature its God must logically have. For years after, I tried 'Liberal Christianity,' but it also failed me. I could tell how and why, but I forbear. The Free Religion of which THE INDEX is an organ is satisfying, and clothes one with serene repose. I am free, free, and the faith of my later years I have lived to see embodied in organization, and defended and advocated by good and great men."

"A terrible event in our family, the sudden and violent death of a dear little boy, takes me back immediately to —, where I must request THE INDEX be addressed. Oh friend, when such a sharp loss 'hollows all the heart,' very poor and very false indeed seems that cold and shallow rationalism that shuts out all the light of another world, all hope in the blessed future, all trust in the Infinite Love. I thank God we do not sit in that darkness, and I wish its chill shadow had never fallen nor could fall on any human heart. I wish THE INDEX pointed its finger upward with a finer trust and love."

"Please send THE INDEX to me here. Have not been getting it lately because they have neglected to forward it from home. I regret that I am not in circumstances to do more for the paper, because the principle upon which it is conducted is almost my ideal of liberalism."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the new EXPRESS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WAREHOUSE OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

RECEIVED.

SABBATH LAWS AND SABBATH DUTIES. Considered in Relation to their Natural and Scriptural Grounds, and to the Principles of Religious Liberty. By ROBERT COX, Edinburgh: MACLACHLAN AND STEWART; and SIMPSON, MARSHALL & CO., London. 1853. 8vo. pp. 503.

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE St. Louis Public Schools, for the Year ending August 1 1871. St. Louis, Mo.: PLATT, OLSENHAUS & CO., Printers and Binders. 1873. With Appendix. pp. 191, cviii.

LETTER AND SPIRIT. A Sermon by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, preached in Lyric Hall, April 7th, 1873. New York: D. G. FRANCIA, 17 Astor Place. 1873.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF WILHELM VON HAUENBERG. By Dr. GUSTAVUS HINRICHS. With Portrait. Davenport, Iowa: Published by GEORGE WATSON & DAT. 1873.

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR March and April, 1873. Washington: GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE. 1873.

THE ALDINE FOR JUNE, 1873. JAMES SUTTON & Co., 28 Liberty St., New York. $5.00 a Year, with Old Chromo Premium.

THE SCHOOL LABORATORY OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE. Edited by Prof. G. HENRICHS. Iowa City, Iowa. $1.00 a Year.

THE MUSICAL MONTHLY FOR May. JOHN CHURCH & Co., 61 W. Fourth St., Cincinnati. $1.00 a Year.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending May 18th.—John Alexander, $1; Amos L. Prichard, 35 cts.; E. W. Meddagh, $30.00; John R. Folk, 50 cts.; C. D. Martin, 33; Anna E. Thompson, 33; Marshall Bros., 33; W. E. Darwin, $10.00; Alfred Taylor, $1; T. H. Hazeltine, 50 cts.; R. Butler, 50 cts.; J. T. Blakney, 33; W. C. Child, 10 cts.; J. C. Price, 33; C. Brown, Jr., $1; Wm. Green, $10; Geo. B. Smith, 33; Julius Way, 33; A. Darrow, 33; David Matson, 33; A. D. Scari, 33; Samuel S. Green, 10 cts.; Alan Greenwell, 25 cts.; Frank J. Scott, $100.00; Reo Miller, 10 cts.; Almira L. Tracy, 10 cts.; Mary J. Studley, 33; M. M. Gardner, $1; L. R. Townsend, $1; G. B. Stebbins, 35 cts.; Jas. T. Dickinson, $1.35; Chas. T. How, 33.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

Poetry,

PHILOSOPHY.

How charming is divine Philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectared sweets
Where no crude surfeit reigns.

MILTON

The Index.

MAY 25, 1872.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000.

SHARED EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have caused an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 26, 1873. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond the amount the stock actually subscribed. No objection will be received to the present assessment. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED	elsewhere.	Five Hundred	Share,	$50,000
THOMAS McFARLAND,	New Harmony, Ind.,	One	Share,	100
D. AYRES, JR.,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	"	"	100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT,	Evansville, Ind.,	"	"	100
—	Defiance, Ohio,	"	"	100
J. T. BRADY,	Bryan, Ohio,	"	"	100
—	Sabetha, Kan.,	"	"	100
—	Northampton, Mass.,	"	"	100
O. MAX PRAGHT,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	"	100
—	Boston, Mass.,	"	"	100
H. HYTERMAN,	Toledo, Ohio,	"	"	100
C. FOLSOM,	Zanesfield, Ohio,	"	"	100
S. C. EASTMAN,	Palmyra, Mo.,	"	"	100
J. O. MARTIN,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	"	"	100
L. T. IVES,	Detroit, Mich.,	"	"	100
W. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit, Mich.,	Three	"	300
A. FOLGER,	Boston, Mass.,	Two	"	200
—	Dayton, Ohio,	"	"	200
HIRSH COLT,	Susp'd Bridge, N. Y.,	One	"	100
SAMUEL COLT,	Susp'd Bridge, N. Y.,	"	"	100
CHARLES NASH,	Worcester, Mass.,	Two	"	200
—	Livonia, N. Y.,	One	"	100
S. F. WOODARD,	Osborn, Ohio,	Two	"	200
H. A. MILLS,	Mt. Carroll, Ill.,	One	"	100
W. W. WENTLEY,	Covington, N. H.,	"	"	100
OSCAR BOOD,	Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	"	"	100
MRS E. S. MILLER,	Geneva, N. Y.,	"	"	100
JAS. R. STONE,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	"	100
D. K. INNES,	"	Five	"	500
A. TAPT,	"	One	"	100
S. L. WILDER,	"	"	"	100
PETER H. CLARK,	"	"	"	100
G. K. WASHINGTON,	"	"	"	100
J. T. BUTTON,	"	"	"	100
WALT. F. ADGATE,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	"	"	100
MISS G. E. NOURSE,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two	"	200
JAS. FISCHER,	Shreveport, La.,	One	"	100
G. H. HOLZTMAN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	"	"	100
L. VON BLESSING,	N. Y. City,	Five	"	500
W. H. BOUGHTON,	"	One	"	100
W. P. CHAMBERLAIN,	"	"	"	100
TITUS L. BROWN,	Binghampton, N. Y.,	"	"	100
A. McD. YOUNG,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	"	"	100
G. W. FRECKHAM,	"	"	"	100
C. T. HAWLEY,	"	"	"	100
Wm. BECKER,	"	"	"	100
MRS. G. D. NORRIS,	"	Five	"	500
ROBT. C. SPENCER,	"	One	"	100
C. M. LAWLER,	"	"	"	100
E. R. LELAND,	"	"	"	100
WM. BLACKMORE,	Painesville, Ohio,	"	"	100
R. H. RENNET,	Boston, Mass.,	"	"	100
MRS. J. BROTHINGHAM,	New York, N. Y.,	Five	"	500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY,	Richmond, Ind.,	One	"	100
J. R. WAITE,	"	"	"	100
JAMES SWALESE,	"	"	"	100
JOHN H. POPP,	"	"	"	100
THOMAS DAVIS,	Indianapolis, " "	"	"	100
ALBZ METZGER,	"	"	"	100
HERMAN LIENKE,	"	"	"	100
CLARENCE VANZOUT,	"	"	"	100
FRED CHRISTMANN,	"	"	"	100
HENRY SCHNOLL,	"	"	"	100
—	New Bedford, Mass.,	"	"	100

$58,600

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the INDEX ASSOCIATION will be held in Toledo, Saturday, June 1, at 7½ P. M., in THE INDEX Office, No. 90 St. Clair Street.

Mr. H. L. Green, of Syracuse, N. Y., who has proved himself a most efficient agent of THE INDEX, is now at his own risk on a canvassing trip in behalf of the paper; and we bespeak for him the confidence of our friends wherever he may go. Mr. Green voluntarily devotes himself to this work, because his heart is in it. He is a life-long reformer, full of the enthusiasm of Ideas and respected most by those who know him best; and any contribution from the friends of free thought towards defraying his travelling-expenses will not only help him along, but also aid directly in increasing the circulation of THE INDEX. It would be a great misfortune to our enterprise if Mr. Green should be obliged to withdraw from the field for lack of encouragement; and his rare capacity as a canvasser, proved by actual success, makes us wish that THE INDEX could afford to keep him actively at work the whole year round.

"FOR AND AGAINST."

NEW YORK, May 6, 1872.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I cannot but think that in your article "For and Against" (INDEX of May 4th) you have shown something less than your usual discrimination in making distinction between the "extra-Christians" and the "anti-Christians." You say:—

"Strictly speaking, the 'extra-Christian' is an 'anti-Christian' to some extent, since his very 'extra-Christian' position is a practical protest against Christianity in an individual instance. The only difference is that the avowed 'anti-Christian' enlarges this protest so as to include all mankind."

In this the only difference, or the precise difference? Is the "extra-Christian" necessarily to some extent an "anti-Christian?" Is the question raised merely a question of degrees? I am not prepared to concede that, and therefore I am not quite ready to grant that the "anti-Christian" position is the truer and nobler. In my view it is essentially another position, characterized by a new element. Because one places himself outside of Christianity, he does not, as a matter of course, array himself against it. Because he finds the faith unsuited to his wants, uncongenial with his disposition, unreal and obsolete to his culture, it does not follow that he holds it unsuited to all wants, uncongenial with all dispositions, or at war with all states of mind. He may have been brought up in the liberal school, and never been conscious of mental bondage; he may simply have dropped the religion as distasteful, or abandoned it as unphilosophical, or left it behind as an immature expression of human thought and sentiment; in a word, he may for some reason have lost interest in it.

At the same time he may be persuaded that the faith which is nothing to him may be a great deal to others; that it fills a place, performs a service, and meets an exigency, by virtue perhaps of the very peculiarities that render it distasteful to him. He is inclined to think that the Roman Catholic system is helpful and beneficial to the lower orders of the Irish; that the Protestant system is useful in stimulating and bracing the moral and spiritual nature of undeveloped, unthoughtful, unreflecting, unimaginative people, driving into them through the imagination principles they have not yet reached by the exercise of reason; that the synthesis of theology, artificial as it is, may be better than no synthesis at all and may serve provisionally till the synthesis of science comes. He may not therefore feel moved to fight the system he has himself outgrown, but may feel inclined rather to make the best of it, and expect the best from it for those who have not outgrown it, but who will outgrow it in time. He will help people to outgrow it; will rejoice in the spread of intelligence, knowledge, culture, rational thought; will anticipate the time when, like other imperfect systems, it will pass away; will do what he can to hasten that time; but to denounce the system as an imposture, a slavery, a foe to all progress, an intellectual and moral curse, is far from his desire, and incompatible with his sense of wisdom.

That this is the attitude of any "extra-Christian" in particular, I am not prepared to say; but it may be the attitude of all who call themselves such. Should they become convinced by observation or reflection that Christianity is an enemy to mankind, a bondage from which all should be immediately and unconditionally freed, they would no doubt say so and assail the monster. That they do not now assail it is owing, not to their timidity or self-indulgence or indifference to the welfare of mankind, but to their lack of conviction.

Faithfully yours,
O. B. FROTHINGHAM

DEAR MR. FROTHINGHAM:—

Your frank letter lays me under a great obligation. It presents a view of the subject which ought not to be overlooked, and which I am exceedingly glad to see put in so clear and strong a light. Feeling sure that we equally desire the truth in this matter, and the truth alone, I will venture to add something by way of further explanation of my thought,—not at all in a controversial spirit, but in the hope that those who are earnestly considering their duty towards Christianity and Christian institutions may comprehend better the reasons why some radicals are led to assume an "anti-Christian" position. This is the position to which I have been brought by no wilful, defiant, or belligerent temper, but, as I sincerely believe, by patient reflection. If I am nevertheless mistaken, I trust that my mistake may be corrected by those who see it and can make it plain.

First of all, let me hasten to disavow what I fear I may have been, by my own fault, misunderstood to say. I never meant to attribute the simply "extra-Christian" position, certainly in all cases, to "timidity or self-indulgence or indifference to the welfare of mankind." It would not be quite honest to say that I think it is never owing to these causes; but it would be absolutely unpardonable arrogance to say that I think it is always owing to them. The contrary I know to be true. A difference of standpoint necessarily involves a difference of conviction, as I have learned by my own experience; and I cannot accuse myself of any less honesty in the convictions I formerly held than in those I hold to day. Let me, then, eliminate from this whole question all consideration of motives, and acknowledge that men of absolutely equal unselfishness and high-toned honor may occupy the Christian, the extra-Christian, and the anti-Christian points of view. If anything I have ever said has seemed to imply a contrary opinion, I withdraw it most unhesitatingly with an apology for my gross carelessness in the use of language.

But, motives aside, a question of grave importance remains; namely, what ought in consistency to be the position of those who no longer believe in Christianity as the Church has always taught it? Ought they to ignore it with the extra-Christian, or to oppose it with the anti-Christian? Ought they to leave it alone, or ought they avowedly to seek to loosen its hold upon the public mind in order to make possible a truer and better faith? (I use the word "ought" to express the obligation of carrying out practically the plain consequences of admitted truths. If these consequences are not perceived, the obligation will of course not be felt.)

First, then, I believe that those who have long had the habit of thinking independently for themselves frequently forget the fact that Christianity claims the right to govern. It demands submission alike from the individual soul and from society. It announces a law, and enthrones a sovereign; and whoever disputes the one or disowns the other, it condemns as faithless and rebellious. It tolerates the outsider no more than the antagonist, but holds them both as equally guilty before God—equally subject to the punishment which awaits all unbelief.

If Christianity, then, is the very law of God, and rightfully claims obedience from every one, the extra-Christian and the anti-Christian, standing in the same position of insubordination, are equally violators of it. The extra-Christian is an anti-Christian by the simple fact of his inability to believe and his consequent refusal to obey. Unbelief is the crime of each, and of itself incurs the condemnation of the Judge, who rules that not to believe is to disobey. This is the uniform teaching of the New Testament. The one supreme virtue that Jesus required was faith; and, as the whole tenor of the context shows, he meant faith in himself as Lord, Master, Christ. The one vice that included all others in his eyes was want of faith. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved"—is the great burden of the Christian gospel, as contained in the New Testament; and not to believe in him is of itself the spirit of Antichrist. "Who is the liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is the Antichrist, &c." [I John, ii, 23.] And Dr. Robinson, in his Lexicon of the New Testament, thus defines the Greek word whence "Antichrist" is derived:—"One who denies that Jesus is the Messiah, and that the Messiah is come in the flesh." Whoever, therefore, denies or cannot admit that Jesus is the Christ is, by the New Testament definition, Antichrist; and this is the case with every extra-Christian.

Furthermore, the first three gospels, which give us the least unreliable information concerning the teaching of Jesus, all agree in representing him as explicitly denying any real distinction between extra-Christians and anti-Christians: Matthew, xii, 30—"He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad;" Mark, ix, 40—"He that is not against us is in our part;" and Luke, ix, 50—"He that is not against us is for us." Either for or against—he recognized no middle-ground; and so has it been with the Church ever since. The Church sees no tenable position between believing and disbelieving, between submitting and rebelling. Neither do I. The only difference I can discern between extra-Christians and anti-Christians, so far as their relation to the unqualified claims and pretensions of Christianity is concerned, is one solely of degree. I am puzzled to see how one who "places himself outside of Christianity" can avoid "arraying himself against it," at least to the extent of resolutely refusing to submit to the yoke it would fasten on his neck. For it claims to be a Divine Law to all mankind, and recognizes only two classes—loyalists and rebels. The extra-Christian is necessarily a rebel to Christianity; and, with all deference, I must say that I do not perceive how he can be a consistent loyalist to Freedom without taking decided anti-Christian ground.

You point out, however, and with entire justice, a distinction between those who protest against Christianity as an absolute, unmitigated evil, and those who recognize in it a relative good. I thank you for thus supplying a deficiency in my former statement. Of course only a fanatic could deny that Christianity has done, and is still doing, good in many ways. I took especial pains to admit this in my "Impeachment of Christianity," in fact going out of my way to do it; for, although the worst criminal has his virtues, one does not indict him for his virtues, but for his crimes. Cheerfully I admit that Christianity does all the good you describe, by reason of its adaptation to certain stages of immature development. But I do not find that this admission at all weakens the force of the considerations that have made me (reluctantly, I confess) an avowed anti-Christian.

Christianity has been in the world a vast and complicated system, slow to grow, slow to decay. Many of our liberal thinkers (I say it with all respect) fail to appreciate the great importance of this fact; and indeed some of them take pains to deny it. Yet the fact remains. Like all other artificial systems which have become out of date, Christianity is now a daily increasing impediment to the free expansion of humanity. It cramps, retards, paralyzes. It has grown to be an inspiration of cowardice in view of the enormous reaches of new truth to which science invites the human mind. Demanding belief as the only passport to Heaven, it perforce denounces doubt as the death-warrant of the soul. Yet doubt is the egg out of which all knowledge is hatched. While I have never "denounced" Christianity as an "imposture" (for it argues great narrow-mindedness and even greater ignorance to suppose that humbug can be omnipotent for nearly twenty centuries), I yet am constrained to think and say that it is a slavery of the most subtle and injurious kind—fettering the human faculties with superstitious fears, and now standing in the path of the race as its chief obstacle to a higher evolution. For though it is perfectly true that the Christian religion is suited to the present condition of great numbers of people, it is also true that the Christian religion is itself the chief influence that keeps them in that low condition. Humanity can never learn to swim until it plunges into the water—never learn to be free until it gets rid of the shackles it wears. Every great change involves more or less suffering—perhaps more or less permanent loss. But not to change is impossible; and the undue postponement of it ensures only a greater loss. Hence I believe it to be now the truest philanthropy to cut the ligaments which bind the struggling present to the dying religion of the past.

The repressive influence now exerted by Christianity against the advance of mankind has by no means escaped your attention, as appears from some passages in your recent and beautiful sermon on "Letter and Spirit." "For ten years," you say, "the true friends of the Sunday in Boston have labored to have the Public Library open on that as on other days, and they have not succeeded yet. Puritanism has been more than a match for the intellectual tastes, the respect for culture, the passion for knowledge of that most intellectually ambitious metropolis." And again:—"That good sense, kind feeling, philanthropic sentiment will sustain the project of thus expending the Sunday may be anticipated. The power that will not sustain it is the very power of all others that should welcome its action with enthusiasm—the power of the Christian sects." This is all true and forcible. I do but generalize from many such facts as you point out, when I say that Christianity itself is to-day "a foe to all progress, an intellectual and moral curse."

I remember reading with great admiration, several years ago, a sermon of yours in which you showed how the system of human slavery had been in its origin a beneficent reform, substituting servitude for instant massacre in the treatment of prisoners of war; and how, even as administered in our Southern States, some incidental good had accompanied its terrible evils. And yet you had been for years not an "extra-slavery," but an "anti-slavery," man; and you had borne with fortitude the necessary sacrifices attendant on that now historic warfare. I fancy myself to be only treading in your footsteps, when, fully acknowledging the relative good in Christianity, I nevertheless openly assail it as the inviolable slavery of the soul, and obey the new summons of the time to pass from "extra-Christian" to "anti-Christian" ground. Do I not find my justification in your own most honorable career?

Surely, there is nothing in this new warfare—true heir of the "anti-slavery" battle—to defile or belittle the noblest spirit. Are not our weapons to be found in principles and ideas? In higher thoughts and deeper truths? In purer aspirations and loftier ideals and a grander enthusiasm of humanity? These are our only spear and shield. I would not put the torch to any Christian church, nor persecute any Christian believer; but I would resist to the last extremity the claim of Christianity to govern the minds and souls of all mankind. That persistent, ancient claim is tyranny; and it ought to be exposed, resisted, and destroyed.

In fact, I do not think we differ much; for you concede that the extra-Christian, as well as the anti-Christian, will seek to "hasten the time" when the "imperfect system" of Christianity shall "pass away." So far, then, the extra-Christian is certainly an anti-Christian; and the distinction between them shrinks to extreme tenuity. If the extra-Christian confesses the solemn obligation to help educate his less favored Christian brothers into larger liberty, while the anti-Christian seeks the same end, universal liberty, by the same means, universal education, and avowedly has no other weapon of war, I do not see that there is any real difference between them, except that of name; in which I think the latter has the advantage. But even here the advantage seems to vanish; for the churches pretty impartially call all those "anti-Christians" who seek to educate them out of their arrogant claim to be the "peculiar people of God," and the tyrannous encroachments on human rights to which it tempts them.

With sincere thanks for your "bit of criticism," and with hope that the practical importance of arriving at clear ideas on the subject will be a sufficient warrant in your eyes for the foregoing response, I am ever your friend,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following lists of names to the counter-petition have been received since our last issue:—

Mr. James H. Hurlburt, Portland, New York, sends one hundred and forty-one names; Miss M. O. Giles, Lynn, Massachusetts, twenty-five; Mr. S. T. Underwood, Athol, Massachusetts, fifty-four; Rev. M. G. Kimball, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, thirty-five; Mr. E. H. Eidam, Minnetonka Mills, Minnesota, thirteen; Mr. Oramel C. Clagston, Montpelier, Vermont, twenty-nine; Mr. Henry Apthorp, Ashtabula, Ohio, thirteen (obtained by Mr. G. B. Humphrey, Cincinnati, Ohio); Mr. Henry Grein, Buffalo, New York, fifty-seven; Mr. L. B. Hogue, Lloydsville, Ohio, seventy-three; Mr. A. S. Dickinson, Springfield, Massachusetts, ninety-five.

Mr. Howard Hinton, who last summer advertised in our columns the opening of a new school, called The Herbert Spencer Seminary, not finding the conditions favorable for the prosecution of his enterprise at the place selected, has been obliged to relinquish it. He is therefore free to accept any educational position suited to his experience and acquirements, or to undertake any educational enterprise involving but little outlay and presenting a fair promise of success, in which his liberal views will not prove an obstacle to his acceptability or usefulness.

We would advise those whom Mr. Hinton's offered services may interest to send for his prospectus. In the introductory article of this circular he explains his theory of education. Mr. Hinton's address is "The Home Journal Office," No. 8 Park Place, New York.

The Waterloo (N. Y.) Yearly Meeting of the Friends of Human Progress will be held on the 7th, 8th, and 9th of June. Among the expected speakers are Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler, Charles D. B. Mills, Giles B. Stebbins, and Aaron M. Powell. All persons interested are invited to attend.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston on the 30th and 31st of May. The meeting will open with a Session for Business and Addresses in the Parker Fraternity Hall on Thursday evening, May 30th, at 7½ o'clock. At this session two amendments to the Constitution are to be acted upon:

1. To change the number of Vice-Presidents from "three" to "twelve."

2. To add to the first sentence of the Second Article, after the words "other Associations," and connecting by a semi-colon, the following words: "and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

On Friday, May 31st, there will be a Convention in Tremont Temple with three sessions, beginning at 10 A. M. and 3½ P. M. and 7½ P. M. The subjects to be considered are—"Liberty and the Church in America;" "Does Religion represent a permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind, or is it a perishable Superstition?" and "The Religion of Humanity." These subjects will be introduced by essays by J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and O. B. Frothingham, the President, to be followed by addresses and discussion. Other distinguished speakers will be present.

WM. J. POTTER,

Secretary.

PARTISAN FALSITY.

Among the disturbing forces that deflect the human mind from its natural allegiance to truth, there are apparently none more active at the present time than those which spring from bias of partisan opinion and zeal. The acts and character of public men are especially subject to unjust and false representation from this cause. The amount of partisan untruthfulness—to use a stronger word, of partisan lying—that is constantly practised all around us, is indeed fearful to contemplate. It may not be that people are more addicted to this vice in modern days than they were in ancient. It must probably be confessed that average humanity has never been very careful to do full justice to the character and motives of an antagonist in matters of opinion and belief. But the greater facilities furnished by the newspaper and the telegraph for circulating reports concerning public men and their doings have certainly given to this vice a much larger field of operations than it ever had before. The telegraph and the newspaper are used to a great extent for partisan ends—the newspaper almost wholly so. And the itching of the public for news of a personal nature and the haste with which news has to be prepared, combined with the temptation to use the press for personal detraction in advancing the objects of a party, have made newspaper-men very careless of the good name of persons in the opposite party whose opinions they criticize. It is but a tame remark to say that journalists and their correspondents and reporters do not generally appear to be conscious of the weight of moral responsibility that rests upon them in this regard. Gentlemen who could not possibly be supposed guilty of falsehood in the private circle allow the journals which they own or edit daily to defame the character of political opponents and take little pains to verify the truth of their charges. An influential newspaper has it in its power to destroy the reputation and public usefulness of a man against whom for any reason it chooses to direct its open attacks or its covert insinuations. Or it would have this power, were it not for some partisan journal on the other side that comes to his defence,—while it selects some public favorite of its antagonist as the victim of its detraction. Still, there are vast numbers of people who only read one side, and with them the injustice is not righted.

But with that portion of the community who read all sides and mean to keep clear of partisan bias there is this evil result,—that they are left in a painful state of suspicion and uncertainty with regard to the most conspicuous men in the public service. They take up one newspaper, and they find some public man described in it without much circumlocution as an intriguer, knave, and swindler. They take up another paper, printed in the same place, on the same day, and with apparently the same means of information, and they find the same man spoken of as one of the truest and most incorruptible of public benefactors. The editors of these papers are known to be men of ability, of culture, of good moral and social repute. What, then, are readers to think of these antagonistic judgments with regard to certain public characters? That there is falsehood on both sides? Or that there is corruption on both sides? There is this dilemma, either horn of which is sufficiently unpleasant. If we are to take the character of public men from the journals that are antagonistic to them in opinion, it would seem as if the country had very few true men in office or as candidates for office. But if it be supposed that there is at least average honesty in our public servants, then there must be a fearful amount of slander and lying among the newspapers. And aside from the positive injustice that is done to personal character by this partisan warfare, the worst result of all is that one of the most effective means for expressing the public reprobation of corruption and knavery is lost when there comes a real occasion for it. The press keeps up such a continual cry of "Wolf!" that there is no power in the cry when the wolf actually comes.

How this bias of partisanship interferes with truthfulness may be seen also in some of the legislative investigations that have latterly been made into charges of official corruption. A Committee is appointed to inquire into the facts and report. The facts are not matters of opinion, but matters of conduct, since matters of opinion are not subjects for legislative investigation. Yet again and again has it happened that the report has been a divided one, and divided by a strictly party line,—those members of the Committee who are of the same political party with the accused official finding nothing wrong in his conduct, those of the opposing party finding a great deal of wrong. Of course judgment in such a case is not determined by facts, but by partisan opinion. A governor is impeached for malfeasance in office; he is cleared by a party vote. A New York newspaper accuses a prominent official of the United States government in Washington of plundering the public funds. It iterates and reiterates the charge, until the House of Representatives appoints a Committee of investigation. The majority report that they find nothing reprehensible. The minority report some financial irregularity, but perhaps only a technical one. The accused man remains in office; but the accusing newspaper continues to make its charge of robbery against him as before, with the additional item that, though evidence could not be obtained for substantiating the whole original charge, a certain portion of it had been proved by the investigation. And party papers all over the country echo the cry. On the other side they are just as strenuous in asserting that the charge has been utterly disproved. How much of respect is left for truth amidst such partisanship?

We may often see the same demoralizing effect of partisan bias in ecclesiastical and religious matters. If a man changes his ecclesiastical relations, there is apt to be a somewhat different estimate of his character and ability on the part of those whose companionship he has left from the estimate made of him before,—and a different estimate, though in the opposite direction, by those who receive him. Which estimate is to be regarded as the true one? Probably both are away from the line of strict fidelity to truth by the bias of sectarian pride and zeal,—by the selfish desire to make out one's own church a little better in character than one's neighbor's. To be exactly just to the character of both friend and foe—this is one of the crowning achievements of truthfulness.

W. J. P.

A compositor in THE INDEX office lately made a typographical error, corrected in proof, which struck us as almost an improvement on the text. The "United" States were represented as the "Untied" States. How long would they be "untied," if our Christianizing friends should have their way? The Christian Amendment would prove a hangman's knot for Liberty.

LOOSE FOUNDATIONS.

Mr. E. H. Sears has written a book, no doubt a strong, comprehensive and candid one, of course an eloquent and sweet-tempered one, in defence of the genuineness and authenticity of the Fourth Gospel, or, as it used always to be called, the Gospel of John. We have not read it, nor do we propose reading it, having in former years given as much attention to the subject as it deserves. Mr. Sears can hardly say anything new on a theme so exhaustively handled, or add anything important to the score or so of learned and ingenious arguments which German scholars have been making in the same interest for the last thirty years, and which in our judgment wholly fail in their object. The unhistorical character and post-apostolic authorship of the Fourth Gospel are in our opinion established as well as any literary question of the kind can be.

But granting it to be otherwise, supposing the question to be still fairly open, even conceding the power of Mr. Sears' argument to restore the probability of the book's genuineness and authenticity, it must not be forgotten that this is a very different thing from recovering for it the place it once held as the corner-stone of the Christian revelation. The book has been gravely suspected, and forcibly, many think successfully, assailed. Ever since the publication of Bretschneider's "Probabilities," in 1820, more than a half-century ago, the gospel has been in controversy; and during all that time, with all who knew of the controversy, it has been deprived of its historical and theological prestige. It has become curious as a literary production, but no longer authoritative as a book of faith. There was a grave doubt; and in such a case a grave doubt is fatal to the claim advanced. Infallibility admits of no uncertainties; and nothing short of infallibility, at least of precise and unquestionable truth, suffices in a matter of such magnitude. Before the so-called gospel of John was called in question, when its historical character and its inspired authorship were both taken for granted, the theological superstructure that was built upon it stood unshakable. The marvellous history was not challenged, and the doctrine resting on the history was received with unquestioning faith. But this state of mental acquiescence exists among those only who are in ignorance of the controversy. If Mr. Sears could keep people in that state of ignorance, he would accomplish the end he aims at, but thwart by a volume which presumes a condition of very serious and stubborn doubt. If he could effectually banish those doubts, blow the arguments of the critics into thin air, prove beyond cavil that the book was written by the bosom-friend of Jesus, the beloved disciple who alone spiritually apprehended the doctrine and shared the best thought of the divine teacher, and so quietly replace the mind in the attitude towards the gospel that it held a hundred years ago, he would render a vast service to the Christian religion.

But this neither Mr. Sears nor any living scholar can do. The doubt exists; the arguments are on record; the opposing volumes are on our shelves; the names of a great many very learned, very able, and very conscientious men stand printed on their title pages. The utmost that can be done is to weaken some points of their attack, to establish the possibility that they may be mistaken, to make the scale of doubt incline more or less to the favorable side, to turn against the enemy a few of their allies. But in so critical an emergency, this is nothing. The "gospel of John," alone of the four, contains the doctrine of the Logos, of the eternal, co-eternal Christ as the creator of the world, of the incarnation, of the distinct personality of the Holy Spirit, of the separate church distinct from the world. But for that gospel, these doctrines would have no countenance from any personal friend of Jesus, or any one who might be considered as authorized to speak for him. Can such beliefs as these rest securely on a perhaps, on the reading of a text in the Apocalypse, or the construction of a passage in Justin Martyr, or the meaning of a disputed phrase in Apollinaris? Is a church-dogma confirmed when we give its authority the benefit of a doubt?

The fourth gospel is in debate. That is enough to destroy its theological prestige. We cannot worship in a temple whose foundations have been unsettled by an earthquake. As a piece of literature, it is of prime interest and value, precious for information, instruction, suggestion, edification; it is all this, no matter who wrote it or when it was written. As the keystone of the structure of faith, it has no more significance.

O. B. P.

THE SCOPE OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT.

On our first page we reprint this week an article originally published in the Radical for December, 1866, several months previous to the formation of the Free Religious Association. It has a direct bearing on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of that Association, and will show that one who had as much to do with its organization as any other of those concerned proposed explicitly, at the very outset, to establish a fellowship broad enough to include on equal terms every atheist who might wish to join it. From another article in the same periodical for February, 1867, by Mr. S. C. Beach, we extract a passage which, quoting our own words, thus refers to this very point:—

"In relation to the speculations of these bolder philosophies [Positivism, Materialism, Atheism] it was an instance of most unexampled liberality to utter such words as the following: 'The common bond must be a common spirit and aim, a common faith in humanity and its divine (ideal human?) destination, a common aspiration towards higher good and vaster verities. Whoever feels the upward influence of this spirit, faith and aspiration, I hail as my brother by a closer tie than that of blood. Let him believe what he may, let him even be groping in the moral (intellectual?) midnight of utter atheism, etc.' We will not suppose that the writer of this passage suspected himself of doing a generous thing in uttering these words of hearty welcome; for this would be to despoil them of all their genuineness. Undoubtedly, the writer did not aim to be generous, but to be just. It is, however, we believe, an occasion for profound regret that no better term than 'moral midnight' was at the writer's disposal, by which to characterize that integrity in the inward parts which leads a man honestly to face the most unwelcome conclusions of his intellect, however cherished idols may totter or fall, and truthfully to speak what he thinks, without reservation or subterfuge, whatever it may cost him in honorable surroundings or profitable places. Nevertheless, the intention of the passage to be just is not doubtful."

We have not reproduced these criticisms because of the commendation they bestow, since that was wholly undeserved. As Mr. Beach conjectured, we meant to be just, not generous—to recognize the UNLIMITED RIGHT OF FREE THOUGHT in the fellowship we hoped to see established, no matter whither that thought might tend. On the contrary, we have reproduced them in order to make, even at this late day, an apology for the use of the phrase, "moral midnight of atheism." The rebuke is deserved, so far as the phrase itself is concerned, though we certainly meant at the time nothing derogatory to the moral character of atheists, as the context shows. Our meaning was that the great thought of God throws light into the conscience by dignifying it as the interior fiat of universal moral being, and thus relieving it of the pettiness of our own contracted individualities. This belief we still cherish; but it is one of those private intellectual opinions which will be respected as such in any fellowship which accords equal rights to theism and to atheism. The main design of our article was to help call into existence an association which should accord equal rights to all forms of thought, and yet recognize the universal brotherhood of man in the pursuit of all that is high and ennobling. This ideal we have always supposed to be actually realized in the Free Religious Association; and that we have not been mistaken in this will undoubtedly be made clear in the acceptance of the proposed amendment to its Constitution.

We only add that the opening sentences of the article are not quite up to the present state of biological science. The "lowest phase of being in which life becomes apparent" is not the "cell," but rather a nearly structureless, jelly-like substance (sarcode, protoplasm) which can scarcely be said to be organized at all. This error, however, does not affect the general argument of the essay.

The Allegheny (Pa.) Times has the following jeu d'esprit in its issue of January 20:—

"Those who are friendly to the proposed Christian Amendment to the Constitution of the United States will find THE INDEX, of Toledo, Ohio, an able and staunch advocate of the measure. It carries 'Liberty and Light' for its motto."

We would add that THE INDEX is an equally able and staunch advocate of Christianity in general, and devotes several columns of No. 106 to the "Impeachment of Free Religion." On the strength of these claims it urges all clergymen, deacons, and church-members to subscribe for it promptly, and to distribute copies of it at their weekly prayer-meetings. The Allegheny Times is either very stupid or very bright—we are doubtful which.

THE BATTLE OVER THE ATHANASIAN CREED IN ENGLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Convocation is just now making itself more than usually interesting and ridiculous. The Upper House, when called upon to consider the report of the Royal Commission on Ritual, stumbled first over the Athanasian Creed, and wisely got out of their difficulty by letting the Lower House do all the hard preliminary fighting over this bare bone of contention.

It is hardly too much to say that all England is against the continued use of this Creed, which, as you know, has been discarded by the Episcopal Church in America. Every one has something to say against it. Those who think they believe its incomprehensible jargon are too charitable to like its curses, and those who don't object to the curses confess their inability to understand the doctrine. Things must have gone very far when even the demure and stately Times throws the weight of its authority into the case against the Creed.

But in spite of this almost universal sentiment, there is a clique of very High Churchmen who, it seems, have an overwhelming majority in Convocation, and who are holding on like grim Death to this disreputable old mummy of a Creed. These men are in earnest, and there can be no question about their personal anxiety to retain the Creed; and I think I can tell you why. It is one of the chief, if not the chiefest, of our formulas which are held in common with the Church of Rome. To Romanize the Church is indeed the dearest wish of this small but influential body. Rome treats these gentlemen with a cruel scorn, and will have none of their flirtations, as it is; but they know well that, if the Athanasian Creed be removed or thrown into the shade, Rome will be further from their embraces than ever, and will hold them self-condemned.

Some of these agitators, however, cling to the cursing Creed only because it is the essence of Christianity itself. It expresses with such splendid clearness the various contradictory dogmas which form the basis of the Christian Creed, and it contains the doctrine, so consoling to the "believer," that every one who does not believe with him will "without doubt perish everlastingly." "This is the Catholic faith, which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved." This is Christianity in every line and word; and we cannot blame the Christian priests for struggling to maintain and to use that Creed in its integrity.

Amongst other remarkable utterances delivered during the debate, I must mention one which was so tempting as a challenge that I made it yesterday the subject of my morning discourse:—

"Dogma and Religion must go together—and the Church cannot unlearn her own dogmas."

It was of course not difficult to show that religion and dogma were not necessarily dependent on each other; that dogma was a hindrance to religion, and that the cry of non possumus was the death-knell of any Church. The sermon is being published at the urgent request of many who heard it, one gentleman ordering one thousand copies for his own distribution.

It is really delightful to see how these honest, but in our opinion infatuated, priests are playing into our hands. I will venture to say that this debate in Convocation will add to the roll of our supporters by hundreds. Still there was a grain or two of gold in all that sand. The Dean of Westminster grows absolutely heroic in this great fight. One would have thought that he had exhausted long ago his resources, and worn out every weapon. But every time he rises to protest against the Creed, he brings out some new historical fact which hardly any one else knows but himself, or uses some fresh and racy argument which only his deep earnestness could have discovered. He winds up by making fun of the clerical petitions which have been presented in favor of the Creed, and which are absolutely out of proportion to the vast number of those who detect the Creed without agitation for its removal. When Archdeacon Denison says that nothing shall ever prevent him from using it, as it stands, in his own Church, the Dean says that it is the best token which he could have that the removal of the Creed is at hand. But all the arguments and denunciations of the falseness of the Creed made use of by the Dean of Westminster could only raise 11 minority to twelve, sixty voting against him.

You can guess how, here in England, we dread an Ecclesiasticism uncontrolled by the State. It would be the direst aggravation of our fetters that could be conceived.

Now this question of the Athanasian Creed will come by and by before Parliament, and if I can foretell anything about it, the result will be a measure to render the use of the Creed optional; which will be a great step for so old and gouty a lady as Mother Church to take. We are tending even now to freedom, in spite of those bolsterous parsons. We may not be able to extricate the present generation from the "Catholic faith" of Christendom, but we shall at all events make that escape possible by the successful endeavor to show that the Church can unlearn her own dogmas. The smallest voluntary movement, you know, is a sign of life. Let us hope that this Athanasian business is a sign also of returning health and activity.

I will keep this letter back for two or three days that I may add a postscript showing the final result of the debate.

I am, sir,

Very faithfully yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, DULWICH, APRIL 30.

P. S. May 2.—The debate closed yesterday by a resolution to have the Creed retranslated, and issued without note or comment. As a sign of the times, you will be amused to hear that the term "damnatory," as applied to the cursing clauses, is being supplanted by the terms "admonitory" and "warning." (Don't be mischievous and print "warning" instead, or I may feel inclined to "warn" you by some mild ecclesiastical "admonition" about "everlasting fire.") It will require many ice-blocks of gentle adjective to cool those furious anathemas.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

TO THE RADICALS OF THE UNITED STATES

MEN AND BRETHREN:—

Angered at the bondage in which the Church keeps her victims, and disgusted with the proselytizing spirit by which she ever recruits her forces, you have yielded to the temptation, and have become indifferent. Your numbers, intelligence and wealth would, if you were organized and had a purpose, be more than a match for the Church. But you are so jealous of all encroachment on your own individuality that you are unorganized, isolated, and hence powerless for good. Many of you have never felt the galling bondage of the Church, and you have only contempt for those who submit to it. But more of you have been enslaved, and have become emancipated. Have you no bowels of compassion for thousands of men who, if they only had a chance to hear or read discussion, would have the cataract in their eyes couched, and soon see as clearly as you do? Is it humane in you to rejoice in your own freedom of thought and conscience, and pass by on the other side of your brethren who are groping around in the prison-house of superstition with their eyes out?

Radicals! You are, many of you, cold, indifferent, selfish. You have no benevolence of feeling and no benevolence of action. There are many communities where your fellow-men might be redeemed from darkness, if you had only the kindness to hang up lights by which they could see their way to escape. But you print no tracts. You send out no lecturers. You let your fellow-men wallow on in their superstitions, and have no mercy on them! Had the abolitionists imitated your cold-hearted example, the slaves would to-day be still clanking their chains. Are not men's minds as valuable as their bodies? Is not freedom of the intellect and conscience as great a boon as civil and political liberty? What was the enterprise of striking the iron chains from the limbs of four millions of slaves compared to the cause you are implored to help, of liberating the intellects and consciences of forty millions of the American People?

Radicals! The ecclesiastical organizations of Europe and America are honey-combed with doubt. They are as defenceless against the attacks of Science and Reason as Fort Sumter was at the close of our civil war. Their only hold for life is on the past. Declare intellectual, bloodless war against the whole system. Organize yourselves into associations. Establish publication societies. Scatter tracts as the autumnal winds do the leaves of the forest. Send out lecturers. Wipe away the damnable and damning reproach that you are selfish, and care nothing but for material interests. And be compensated for the energy and self-denial I invite you to, by the blessing of thousands who might be emancipated from slavery by your efforts.

R. D. S.

INFIDELS AND FREE RELIGIONISTS, AND THEIR FOLLY.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Whatever may be the difference between these two classes of free thinkers, if there really is any, there are certainly great numbers of both of them whose reasoning is so unbiased, whose thinking so free, that the one as well as the other of the above appellations may be bestowed upon their belief. I consider myself one of this class; and although I may call myself an "Infidel" (and without fear to have to quarrel with you for it), I might perhaps, with equally good reason, call myself a "Free Religionist" (especially when the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the Free Religious Association is adopted), if it were not that I object to be called a "Religionist" of any kind—for the same good reasons that Mr. Spencer, in No. 124 of THE INDEX, refuses to call by that name those "Christians" who are no Christians. Perhaps you will nevertheless accuse me of inconsistency for clinging to the name "Infidel." I believe, however, with Mr. Seaver, that the word, whatever its etymological signification and absolute use, now means a "disbeliever in the Bible and revealed religion." Thus understood, Infidelity and Free Religion mean one and the same thing, and the advocates of and adherents to either have but one and the same aim, namely, the promotion of Free Thought, of Truth, and the amelioration and happiness of humanity. Both, too, have to contend against one and the same obstacle—Ignorance and Superstition. Why, then, cannot or will not both unite their strength, their efforts, to realize their common aim, and to overcome their common obstacles?

But, sir, here is where their folly comes in. It was some time last winter that the Investigator had an extract from a Christian paper (the Christian Union, if I mistake not), in which the latter—apprehensive, probably, of a union of Infidels and Free Religionists as proposed by the editor of THE INDEX—sought to ridicule such a union. The editor of the Investigator made some very appropriate remarks on said extract, and I took occasion to write an article for publication in the Investigator, urging Infidels to unite their efforts with those of Free Religionists in the furtherance of their common cause and in defeating the nefarious schemes of their common adversaries. Yet wise, I think, and timely as such a union of these two representatives of free thought certainly would be, my appeal did nevertheless not meet with the sympathy on the part of Infidels it deserved, and one or two correspondents remonstrated, even in the Investigator, against my "proposed union of Infidels and Free Religionists"—what I clearly did not propose—emphasizing the differences between the two, and insisting that each must fight its own battles. Are these really Infidels? On the other hand, there are also plenty of just such bigoted Free Religionists, no more "free" than such Infidels, who oppose a union of efforts with Infidels because these are Infidels, and "do not believe as they do." Is such a course anything but suicidal for both? Can they, thus divided, hope to realize their common, their identical ends? Or if truth and freedom shall, in spite of these false friends, finally prevail and conquer, must this much-desired event not be greatly delayed by such insane separation of those who claim to hope and work for it? Let me, then, my Infidel and Free Religious friends, discard all such suicidal follies; let us "agree to disagree," and work earnestly, unanimously and harmoniously, for the great ends of Infidelity and Free Religion!

Yours for union of efforts of all Free Thinkers,

MORRIS EINHORN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., May 12, 1872.

[Nothing is more needed to-day than concentration of efforts for the dissemination of liberal principles, as is strikingly evident whenever any real, practical issue comes up between the Liberals and the Orthodox. The majority cast an Orthodox vote, however they may talk. But, much as we sympathize with Mr. Einstein's wish for co-operation among all free-minded persons, we regret that he speaks of "Free Religionists" (we never accept that name) as if they had some universally held doctrines of their own. Freedom, Fellowship, Faith in Man, —these are the only common principles of the Free Religious Association, and they are not doctrines. Some of the members are atheists, some are theists, some are "infidels," some are materialists, some are Spiritualists, some are Jews, some are Christians, some are extra-Christians, some are anti-Christians, and so on. The "infidels" have not a single idea by which to distinguish themselves from the Association—only a name; and this they can wear to their heart's content in the Association itself. Nobody there wants to rob them of it; and nobody there wants to force the name "Free Religionist" upon them. For one, we accept neither name. We accept no name narrower than Liberal or Radical, and care nothing for these. In fact, we care a great deal more to get rid of the old names than to invent new ones. The wish for a fusion of "infidels" and "Free Religionists" is a wish for the extinction of a foolish prejudice; and in this we heartily join.—Ed.]

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. R. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages annulling the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Falsely, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. R. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Women Sated and Answered from a Bible Standpoint, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. ROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, OHIO.

SOW THE SEED!

THE "IMPRACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY," published in the first number of the third volume of THE INDEX, has been electrotyped, and an edition of Ten Thousand Copies has been printed in the form of

A Cheap Tract for Gratuitous Distribution! It is intended to circulate One Hundred Thousand Copies during the current year. In order to accomplish this purpose, we must rely upon the co-operation of our active sympathizers.

☞ Packages of these TRACTS, containing any desired number of copies, will be mailed to any address on receipt of enough money to defray postage, and whatever additional sums, large or small, the generosity of distributors may prompt them to add.

Of course, money will be needed to carry out our intentions; but we urge every one who believes that THIS TRACT WILL DO GOOD, and who is willing to distribute copies of it, to send in an order at once, even if unable to donate more than the simple postage and the time required for distribution. Do not hesitate because you cannot give more. We are convinced more than ever by the character and objects of the late Cincinnati Convention, that such plain speech as this TRACT contains is greatly needed at the present time. In the name of Christianity, of the American People; and the mighty magic of that name is still powerful over multitudes even of otherwise liberal minds. Let the world learn that the protest made against Christianity is not made by hatred of Goodness and of Truth, but rather by a love for these that can no longer be satisfied with shame. He woefully misjudges this Tract who thinks it has no higher aim than to "make a sensation." It was meant to tell needed truth so plainly that it must be heard. And it will be heard. All we ask is—give it a chance.

A most Dangerous Attempt is now Making to Subvert the Religious Liberties

☞ Address your orders to THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio

☞ The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 11) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word."); "Lecture on the Bible" by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism" by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. R. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, 90 St. Clair street, Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. E. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA E. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONE, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

Name	Address	Shares	Amount
D. R. LOCKE	Toledo, O.	Twenty Shares	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER	" "	Fifteen	1,500
C. CONE	" "	"	1,000
EDWARD BISSELL	" "	Forty	4,000
F. E. ABBOT	" "	Ten	1,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY	" "	"	1,000
GUIDO MARX	" "	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON	" "	"	1,000
E. P. BARRETT	" "	Three	300
H. E. HOWE	" "	"	200
W. C. FISK	" "	"	200
M. H. RITCHIE	" "	"	200
J. KEES	" "	"	200
ALANSON WOOD	" "	"	200
WILLIAM KRAUS	" "	Five	500
J. G. HOLZWARTH	" "	One	100
JOS. E. MARX	" "	"	100
C. AUCHARD	" "	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS	New York, N. Y.	Thirty	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON	New Bedford, Mass.	Five	500
ALEX. COCHRAN	Franklin, Pa.	Two	200
GEO. HOADLY	Cincinnati, O.	One	100
MISS A. HALL	Dedance, Mass.	"	100
G. N. JENNINGS	Northampton, Mass.	"	100
J. SHEDDEN	Tonka, Ill.	"	100
CARL POST	Palmer, O.	Three	300
HERBERT MILLER	Monroe, Mich.	Five	500
L. R. SUNDEN	Sacramento, Cal.	Five	500
J. L. WHITING	Quincy, Mass.	One	100
LOUIS BRISTOL	Boston, " "	"	100
J. E. SUTTON	Croydon, N. H.	"	100
S. I. DUNKEE	Olathe, Kan.	"	100
J. M. HADLEY	" "	"	100
S. L. HILL	Florence, Mass.	Ten	1,000
W. H. SPENCER	Haverhill, Mass.	Two	200
JOS. F. BARNETT	Boston, " "	"	200
S. W. WEIR	La Grange, Ind.	"	200
FRANK PRATZER	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
E. F. DINSMORE	Wellsville, Kan.	One	100
J. T. DICKINSON	New York, N. Y.	Two	200
W. J. FORTER	Middlefield, Ct.	Fourteen	1,400
A. C. CLAYTON	New Bedford, Mass.	Three	300
W. C. GARNETT	Scandalville, Ind.	"	200
MISS M. C. PERKINS	Boston, Mass.	One	100
MISS S. EMERSON	Dover, N. H.	"	100
MISS E. EMERSON	" "	"	100
W. H. DOWNER	Birmingham, Ct.	"	100
B. B. SMITH	Lansing, Mich.	"	100
R. B. SMITH	Warren, Pa.	"	100
W. C. ROSS	Hibbs, N. Y.	"	100
WM. CLARKE	Toledo, O.	Three	300
C. L. SMITH	" "	One	100
J. N. LYMAN	" "	Twenty	2,000
L. G. FRIEL	Cincinnati, O.	One	100
A. POLSON	Monroe Centre, Mass.	Three	300
L. O. BARR	Boston, Conn.	One	100
E. S. SEWELL	Colebrook, Conn.	One	100
ELIZUR WRIGHT	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
R. B. WARD	Detroit, Mich.	Twenty	2,000
A. D. WILT	Dayton, O.	One	100
S. S. BOWEN	Keokuk, Iowa	"	100
WM. JONES	Peekskill, N. Y.	"	100
S. H. DANE	Oskaloosa, Iowa	"	100
J. H. YORK	Dover, N. H.	"	100
JOS. HAYES	" "	"	100
G. P. FOLSON	" "	"	100
"A FRIEND"	" "	"	100
MRS. H. E. PERKINS	" "	Two	200
O—	Boston, Mass.	One	100
WILLIAM GREEN	Orange, N. J.	"	100
"A FRIEND"	Lowell, Mass.	"	100
D. B. STEWART	Burlington, Vt.	"	100
MRS. F. W. CHRISTIAN	New York, N. Y.	"	100
C. W. FASCHOT	Kelley's Island, O.	Two	200
EDW. M. DAVIS	Philadelphia, Pa.	One	100
MRS. LUCRETIA MOTT	" "	"	100
MISS M. A. WRIGHT	Jersey City, N. J.	"	100
A. S. HOWEN	Worcester, Mass.	"	100
EDWIN BROWN	" "	"	100
R. F. HOLLOWAY	Boston, " "	Five	500
BENJ. RODMAN	New Bedford, " "	Three	300
H. B. CLARKE	" "	"	200
FRANK J. SCOTT	Toledo, O.	Six	600
M. L. HOLBROOK	Houlton, Me.	One	100
W. H. BOUGHTON	New York, N. Y.	"	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON	" "	"	100
E. G. BURNETT	Webster, Mass.	Two	200
J. E. FOLLETT	Winona, Minn.	One	100
JOS. WARRASSER	Newton, N. J.	"	100
T. M. LAMB	Franklin, Pa.	"	100
W. H. DYER	Worcester, Mass.	"	100
W. H. SPALDING	Paris in Chien, Wis.	"	100
LOUIS BELMORE	Duluth, Minn.	"	100
LEWIS KURTZ	Philadelphia, Pa.	Two	200
SAM'L WARRASSER	Angusta, Kan.	"	100
W. L. RATHKE	La Fayette, N. J.	"	100
C. H. EMERSON	Amebury, Mass.	"	100
C. H. HURCH	Boston, " "	"	100
MRS. L. THOMSON	Dover, N. H.	Two	200
BENJ. HOLLOWAY	Sandy Spring, Md.	One	100
MRS. M. R. VAN RENSSLAER	N. Y. City	"	100
R. B. STONE	Warren, Penn.	"	100
WM. ROTCH	Fall River, Mass.	Two	200
MRS. —	New Bedford, " "	Five	500
J. WHITTAKER	Kerhonkson, N. Y.	One	100
S. H. ROPER	Boston Highlands, Mass.	Two	200
MRS. E. D. FRANK	New York, N. Y.	One	100
CHAS. BONBALL	Salina, O.	"	100
G. H. BRIDGES	Amebury, Mass.	Two	200
J. T. CLARKSON	" "	"	200
C. W. NEWTON	Castleton, Ill.	One	100
HENRY KLEIN	Toledo, O.	Two	200
OTTO KLEIN	" "	One	100
H. G. NAUGHT	" "	Two	200
A. HUNSET	" "	One	100
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.	Toledo, Mich.	Thirty	3,000
T. K. PECK	Westminster, O.	Thirty	3,000

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 23 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. R. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity; and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $2.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

JUNIOR UNMASKED; or, THOMAS PAINE the author of the "Letters of Junius" and the "Declaration of Independence." A DEMONSTRATION. Royal 16mo. pp. 222. Price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
Address JOHN GRAY & CO.,
118 3d St. P. O. Box 999, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS" by Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established by Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. ☞ For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-122.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
(25-28) 19 PRICKNET ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS FROM THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindoo Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pyramider, Talmud, Bible, Philo Judaea, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epicurus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eldas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novalla, Seneca, Talleis, Milton, Penn, Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman, Tyndall, Max Muller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspirations from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."
The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

400 pages. Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed postage paid to any address by G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY TO ANY BOOK AGENT. A $5.00 GREENBACK AND A SPECIMEN OF THE GREAT INDUSTRIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS. PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John R. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 128 in eight days, another 208 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JUNE 1, 1872.

WHOLE No. 127.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VORSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Brotherly Love.

A DISCOURSE BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

I have spoken on the law of self-love. The drift of that speaking was that this philosophy, literally carried out, on a large interpretation led to an interest in other people and to efforts at mending their condition,—led to them in this way, that as our personal comfort was involved in their estate, we must improve their estate, if only to secure our personal comfort.

I wish now to approach the same topic from the other side. I shall begin by unfolding the principle of Brotherly Love, and shall try to show how that principle, carried consistently out, leads to the full attainment of individual happiness. Having shown that in looking out well for yourself you must look out well for your neighbors, I shall show that in looking out well for your neighbors you will look out well for yourself.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The bidding, you will observe, is to love the neighbor. The love of self is taken for granted. Every man is supposed to love himself already, strongly if not purely, deeply if not wisely, supremely if not nobly. Self-love is assumed as a fact, not enjoined as a duty. The duty enjoined is to love one's neighbor as one's self, to put the neighbor in one's own place. To give social affection the power of personal affection was the aim of Jesus. Having referred people back to themselves, he straightway proceeds to draw them away from themselves, to make them forget themselves, to make them lose sight of themselves, in the welfare of their fellow-men. That this was his purpose is too evident to be argued. It is declared by almost every word that fell from his lips; it is the burden of every precept and parable. The letters in which his disciples explained the new faith to the churches they founded, abound in earnest declarations of it. It is made the distinguishing feature of the religion. "Bear ye one another's burdens." "Ye that are strong, bear the infirmities of the weak." "Let the same mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus, who made himself of no reputation and took on him the form of a servant." "Let each think of other's interest, not of his own." "Little children, love one another." "Love one another, not in word or tongue, but in deed and truth." The texts jump to my lips more rapidly than I can write them down. In a word, this is the peculiarity of the Christian system; and it is so universally understood as being its peculiarity, that preachers always rest here, and confine themselves to the task of impressing it on the hearts of their hearers. But a social system should rest on its own merits, and not on authority. If it is unreasonable, no authority will enforce it. If reasonable, the demonstration of its reasonableness will greatly assist its authority. Let us consider the grounds on which this social philosophy rests, and the principles to which it makes appeal.

1. In the first place it plants itself on this idea; that the human race is a family, taking the family as one of the primordial institutions of the race, universal and indestructible. Now the family gives a perfect example of mutual dependence and support. It begins in conjugal affection, which is the highest form of the sympathetic instinct—so clearly so that it has appropriated to itself in a special sense the name of love. In this relation the utmost sympathy and devotion are secured. The birth of a child awakens a new affection equally peculiar and intense: the parent's affection for the child, the child's affection for the parent. This affection is the pledge of continuity of life. The parents have an interest in the future, and feel themselves related to generations yet unborn: the child has an interest in the past, and feels related to the ancestors who have gone before. Each is bound up in the other, and in the present hour is completely absorbed. And other children are born, and with them comes a new affection: that of brothers and sisters for one another. Mutual love on equal terms is created—a feeling of union with our contemporaries and mates. In this little providential group we have a complete epitome of the social world. A variety of differing temperaments, capacities, gifts, impulses and interests are held together by a vital bond. Each leans upon the other, all live in each other; opposites are combined under every form. Man and woman hang on each other, man supporting woman, yet from woman deriving his own best support; maturity protecting infancy, infancy keeping maturity young; authority stooping to gentleness, gentleness finding its comfort in authority; experience discovering that its chief worth lies in helping inexperience, inexperience feeling safe in the hands of wisdom. The brother and the sister walk hand in hand, and are complements to one another; each supplying some element which the other lacks—each serving to educate, unfold, balance and mature the other: both extending the domestic life in new directions. The diversity of gifts exhibits the power of the one spirit, whose "oneness" would have no significance without the diversity of the gifts. The larger and more unlike the family, the closer the bond. The wider the range of interests, the deeper the sympathy. The more opposite the tastes, the more intimate the fellow-feeling. Let there be sickness in the household, the sympathy deepens more; all serve the invalid. Let there be misfortune and suffering, the tie becomes fonder. The most unhappy have the most love. Let slander and reproach touch one of the members, the rest gather about the wounded one and make his cause their own. Let sorrow intrude, and the tear of compassion wells up in every heart. This is the arrangement of Nature. Some reformers have called it selfish and narrowing; have constructed plans of society which left it out; have tried to weaken its force by various educational devices; but the heart of man pays no heed to their suggestions. Where domestic life has been most sacred, social life has been most enduring and virtuous. The family is the keystone of civilization.

The philosophy of Brotherly Love appeals to this as the type of society, as it should be, and as it tends under Providence to become; hence its favorite phrase—Brotherhood—the brotherhood of man, expressing the relation which men do ideally and should practically sustain toward one another.

2. But this is not its only argument. To what we call the benevolent affections it makes appeal; to the sentiments of compassion, pity, mercy, which human nature everywhere confesses to; to the moral liabilities which few can quite get rid of; to the feelings of regret, shame, rebuke, penitence, when social duties have been neglected; to the impulses of duty, which, though long and steadily resisted, do not lose their strength. It says these emotions, these sensibilities, these instincts, are a part of us—a sweet and beautiful part of us—a part of us that is destined to be larger rather than smaller, and more prevailing rather than less so, as we advance in our growth. These moral sensibilities are not remnants of an old nature to be outgrown and put away, but the elements of a new nature to be grown into and put on. They are to be encouraged, not to be repressed; to be fostered, not to be neglected; to be educated, not to be suffered to die; and how can they be fostered, encouraged or educated, except by flinging them out and teaching them to twine about their proper objects? Withdrawn from the tender offices of humanity, they perish; and perishing, they leave us deprived of the chief wealth and glory of our sensitive being. For the nobility of a man is his heart; and the nobility of his heart is its justice and its pity; and the nurture of his justice and pity is the discipline of his experience among the suffering and sorrowing, the weak, the foolish and the unfortunate of his fellow-men. If it were only a training of the heart, therefore, Brotherly Love should continue.

3. But these are sentimental considerations. There are other considerations that are not sentimental, but practical. Let us glance at these. Man, it is often said, is the creature of circumstances. That I do not believe, for inside of circumstances is man himself. But of this there can be no doubt whatever: that circumstances exert a vast, a fearful influence, in modifying the development, shaping the destiny, and moulding the character of men and women. Practically multitudes are precisely what their circumstances have made them; practically multitudes are growing up in the midst of circumstances that shall be to them nothing less terrible than a doom. Who can tell what any of us might or might not have been, had our circumstances been different—had we been richer or poorer, better cared for or worse cared for, better fed or worse fed, better taught or worse taught? Who can tell what people about us might or might not become were their circumstances altered as they are unable to alter them—were their houses made more wholesome, their air purer, their areas wider, their opportunities for work and recreation and instruction richer? In thousands and thousands of cases, opportunity is the measure of growth; opportunity decides what men and women shall become, and opportunity is but favorable circumstance. Circumstance is an Ætina on the breast of a giant, who writhes, groans, howls under it, but cannot throw it off. Remove the mountain from Enceladus, and you put him at once in possession of his two feet and his hundred arms. You do not make a man of him—he was a man before; but you give him a chance to prove himself a man. It is hardly fair to say that the outward condition of society corresponds with the inward condition of the people who compose it; that human circumstances adequately represent human power; that the face of society gives full expression to its soul; that the fiery wine of the spirit would remain still, were the stopper taken from the flask; that if you could change the physical conditions under which people live, the people would remain exactly as they were before—no more vigorous, enterprising or noble; that just as a clown continues a clown when a sudden inheritance falls to him, so men and women would continue rude, vulgar, inactive and doltish, were their dwellings improved, their hours of work diminished, their taxes lessened, their food cheapened, their physical health placed beyond the reach of daily peril. Circumstance is a fetter and clog. It represents the bondage of nature which man is incessantly trying to throw off. I expect circumstances will not make perfect men, but better circumstances will make better men; and in cases where men are unable to improve their circumstances, is it not lawful that others should come in and help them? It seems to me that the vital efficiency of the race depends on our doing so. By clearing out a channel, we do not call a fountain into existence; we do not increase the volume of water it delivers; we do not make the water clearer or sweeter, but we do so distribute it that it will be of use to men; we reclaim land that lay under a swamp; we irrigate fields that were dry; we gather the mountain stream into wells, and make habitable the uninhabited places. So by lending a man a little money, we make it easy for him to earn a great deal. By taking a lad from the street where he can only steal or beg, and putting him in the country where he can work for wages, you make unproductive vigor productive. By removing the imbecile, the helpless, the idiotic, to asylums, you give them more comfort at less cost, and you relieve of their incumbrance those on whose labor the support falls most heavily. To release men from the struggle of existence would be a deplorable mistake, for the struggle for existence is the discipline of character; but is it a mistake to ease the struggle so that it shall be less exhausting, and shall end more certainly in victory for man? In the tropics, in the north, in the temperate zones, the battle with circumstance is a terrible battle. Were we to confine our beneficence to this work of releasing people from conditions that actually repress them; of making it possible to let them alone; of untying hands, unfettering feet, unbinding muscles and nerves that are on the strain or are becoming paralyzed from confinement, we should have enough to do before we eased only a little the energies of developing man. But we cannot be content with so much as this if we keep in view also the vital elements involved in human progress.

4. For, according to the philosophy I am repre-

sending, man himself is a vital creature, having in him a root of energy and a spirit of force; not a piece of mechanism worked by laws which he has nothing to do with making or modifying; not a puppet set a-going by pulleys and springs of animal pleasure and pain; but a law-enforcer and sanctioner himself, a moral being, capable of personal expansion, full of dormant powers, open to inducements of many kinds and degrees, responsive to influences from other beings like himself, drying up and perishing when alone, but flourishing and flowering in congenial atmospheres. The motives that impel him have an almost endless range. To change his circumstances is a great deal; but that is not enough. We must quicken him. Both processes must go on at the same time if he is to grow into better estates. Make his circumstances perfect in their convenience, and it will still be necessary to ply him with ideas, to kindle him with thoughts, to feed him with stimulating knowledge, to give him wings of hope and aspiration in order that he may use his circumstances well. Ply him with ideas, kindle him with thoughts, stimulate him with knowledge, give him the wings of aspiration and hope: it will still be necessary to make his outward condition flexible, in order that he may have space for his activity.

Now the only thing that can fire up one human being is another human being. The power of self-quickening is exceedingly rare. Encouragement must be administered in large doses; sympathy must be displayed in broad masses; or the moral vitality declines and perishes.

On these grounds, then, the philosophy of Brotherly Love reposes:—that human society should be made to resemble as nearly as possible the family, which is the type of all relationship; that the natural sentiments of the heart are to be encouraged; that the crushing power of circumstance must be broken by the united force of all men; and that the moral energies of human nature need indefinite and incessant quickening. This doctrine has always been the social peculiarity of the faith called Christian. Nay, strictly speaking, it constitutes its sole peculiarity. The Christian religion has taken this doctrine in special keeping, has avowed it and practised on it according to its knowledge; it has planted charitable societies in every community; it has set on foot movements of beneficence that have commanded the attention of the civilized world. Both in olden times and now, to labor for others is deemed Christian—the one thing that is Christian.

But the considerations I have urged hold good independently of Christianity and of all religion. They do not rest on any authority or example, however much weight they may derive from those of Jesus. They address themselves to the common reason of men.

It is a remarkable fact that some of the most powerful thinkers of the day, who may be said to stand outside of Christianity, and who are interested wholly in social science, give in their allegiance to this law of brotherly kindness. Herbert Spencer speaks of the bond of sympathy as "the bond which distinguishes the social man from the savage; which renders society a possible thing; on whose increased strength the future amelioration of man's estate mainly depends, and by whose ultimate supremacy human freedom and happiness must be secured."

John S. Mill, one of the commanders of the modern mind, whose great thoughts are just now beginning to impress themselves upon the popular intelligence; a man who ranks as radical among the radicals in religion as well as in political and social ethics; a man who declares it quite possible to have a religion without a God—gives it as his belief that the direct cultivation of the love of the neighbor, and the subordination of self-love to it, far beyond the point of absolute moral duty, should be one of the chief aims of education.

Finally, Auguste Comte, the founder of what is known as the Positive Philosophy, a man who looks on Christianity as the religion of a past age; the man who is popularly regarded as an atheist, who is an atheist under any accepted definition of God; the man who would institute a religion without a God, lifts this principle of mutual service into a prominence more conspicuous, if that were possible, than Jesus himself gives to it. The golden rule of morality in his system is to live for others. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is not enough for him. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor absolutely," is his reading. He will not have any self about it. In his opinion, all education and all discipline should have but one object: to make the love of others predominate over the love of self. The heart is to rule. Full and free expansion of the benevolent emotions is made the first condition of individual and social well-being. Whatever one does—whether he eat, or drink, or whatever he does—must be done under the inspiration of the social affections. Thus the doctrine of the Sainted Teacher of Galilee, the doctrine of the innocent, childlike heart, comes up again in this hard age—comes up among the hardest thinkers thereof, and is made the very first principle of a system that is interesting great multitudes of earnest people, and that is designed to supplant Christianity itself.

Thus from all sides we have testimony in favor of the principle: from Christians and anti-Christians; from Sentimentalists and Socialists; from Materialists and Spiritualists; from those who believe that the individual must get rid of himself entirely, and those who believe that the individual must entirely consider himself; from those who teach that charity, self-forgetfulness, self-abnegation, are the only means of securing happiness in another life; and from those who teach that there is no other life, and that by charity alone the best use can be made of this life. Christianity more and more comes down from the clouds and proceeds to work as a social system, blending men together; and science, more and more coming up from the ground, devotes itself to the task of reorganizing social life on the basis of mutual good will. The doctrine of self-love never probably stood in so small a minority as it does now. The rule of selfishness is apparently more prevalent than ever—practices of selfishness are rampant on every hand; but the principle of selfishness is, I believe, more and more deliberately disavowed by those who have at heart the interests of mankind.

I know this is no proof that the principle is not true, and on some points it is able to make a strong case against the doctrine of brotherly love. For see, it says, what your doctrine of brotherly love has achieved. It has helped men till they are unable to help themselves. It has made them dependent and idle. It has in some countries created, it has in all lands vastly increased the terrible evil of pauperism, which no legislation does anything to remove. It has wasted in almsgiving money which, properly invested, would have advanced industrial enterprise and given employment to as many as it has made unfit for work. It has, on one side, created the feeling that money, and time, and thought, should be diverted from the wholesome uses of civilization to the unnatural uses of repairing other people's blunders; and on the other side it has created the feeling on the part of the imbeciles of every community, that they have a right to hang about their stronger neighbor's necks. It has set men on all hands at work minding other people's business instead of their own, and has thus in a direct, systematic way undermined the self-reliance which is the strength of society and the only pledge of its progress.

There is great force in this objection; but the force, as it seems to me, bears against the way the principle has been acted on, rather than against the principle. That people have helped each other in the wrong way, and have brought on themselves terrible mischiefs by so doing, is clear enough. I think it likely that one full half of the so-called Christian benevolence of the age might be dispensed with, to the great gain of all concerned. I have no doubt that two-thirds of the actual interest which people take in their neighbors might be abated without weakening the virtue of those who have any virtue to weaken. What commonly passes for brotherly love is such an inconsiderate, impulsive, sentimental thing, such an excuse for indifference half the time, and for impertinence the other half, that it is as good as no love at all.

But does it follow that people should not try to help each other at all? I cannot see that it does. Because giving in a way that makes people dependent may be mischievous, can't it there be giving in a way that will make people independent? Because the mother makes her child sick with sweetmeats, shall she not give her milk? Because the father spoils his son by allowing him too much pocket-money, shall he not enforce on him advice and education? Because almsgiving has reduced many a strong man and woman to pauperism, shall no effort be made to improve the condition under which the poor live, that they may have a better chance of saving themselves from pauperism? Because the black man was reduced to the last state of degradation by the officiousness which took away all his self respect and responsibility, shall we not lend him a helping hand to come out of his degradation by sending him teachers, instructors, friends, to give him that which will bring him fully to himself? Because his former masters have given him darkness and imbecility, shall not his new countrymen give him light and life and immortality?

Woman has had too much done for her after what, in the light of our ideas, seems a wrong fashion. She has not been allowed her full share of the work of society, or of the wages of work. To save her from the responsibility of thinking, man has consented to do the whole painful business of education himself; to spare her the troublesome exercise of civil duties, man has assumed the onerous charge of her personal and pecuniary rights. That she might be kept pure and unworn by the struggles of the political world, man has taken on himself the discharge of the burdensome and disagreeable work of making laws and choosing rulers for both himself and her. So aggressive has been the affection of the stronger sex for the weaker, that the weaker has been all but smothered by it: has lapsed into such a state of unconsciousness in regard to its capacities, of indifference to the claims which society has on it, of carelessness respecting its personal and civil rights, of insensibility to the nobleness of the part it might play in modern civilization, that no appeal addressed to its conscience, no call made on its heart, no argument brought to bear on its reason or interest, is of any effect. Had woman been more considerably let alone in time past, she would be better off now. But the only way to let her alone now is to help her. To let her alone is to give her all the opportunity she may desire to employ her hands, to expand her intellect, improve her estate, protect her interests, and add what she may to the stock of moral force in the community.

All doing is, after all, but a process of undoing. All helping is a kind of withholding help. All giving is but a sort of taking back gifts that were evil. Brotherly love is but a relief from the burden of unbrotherly hate which has prevented people from coming to themselves. Out of a professed love for their neighbors, professors of religion have taken infinite pains to fasten upon them doctrines which should just stop the growth of their minds. Missionary societies, tract societies, societies for the propagation of the gospel, have spent vast money and prodigious efforts to stop the natural progress of the human mind in certain directions; and the result of all this love of souls is a mental inertness which is saddening and discouraging to think of. The reason of whole communities of people seems to have been reduced to pauperism. It may not be too much to say that the intellectual condition of mankind would be far healthier now, if, instead of this exclusive love of souls, there had been a proportionate willingness that souls should take care of themselves. But it was the ground the love took that was mischievous, not the love. To leave people alone in the ignorance that has settled upon them; to leave them in their narrowness, their superstition, their misconception, is to leave them helpless under powers which they cannot throw off. A wise law, a true charity, a real spirit of kindness, would set on foot means for diffusing other ideas and making their intellects free.

The human intelligence needs such an immense amount of quickening! All that we can do is not enough to stir it up into any very energetic life. The stupidity of men in all that regards the principles of their existence, is amazing and fearful. The apathy, the sloth under which the multitudes lie supine, is terrible; and unless brotherly love displays itself as earnestly in fostering and educating reason, as it has in fostering and educating unreason, the condition of mankind will be more and more deplorable.

Thus the very fact that charity has been so misused and misapplied, makes charity imperative.

The great saying of Jesus was, "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life shall find it." He meant no more nor less than this: that selfishness leads to self-destruction—that generosity leads to self-increase. To love others is the most effectual way of loving one's self. For to love others is to train one's own heart and to win theirs. Thus, from whichever point we start, we come to the same conclusion. Do you love yourself nobly? You must satisfy the promptings of your heart; and this cannot be done while the poverty, the suffering, the sorrow of men goes uncheered and unpitied. Do you love your fellow-men? You attract their regard, their sympathy, their good will. You make yourself richer by as much as they can give.

Living thou dost not live,

If Mercy's stream runs dry;

What God has given thee dost thou freely give!

Dying thou dost not die.

FASHIONABLE SCEPTICISM.

[From the London Times of February 8.]

The Duke of Somerset has come before the world to state the ground upon which he rejects Christianity, in every recognized acceptance of that term. Very few persons in his social and political position who had arrived at the same conclusion would have given themselves the trouble to publish it to the world. We respect the openness and straightforwardness of his confession; and, though some persons have less difficulty than others in sustaining the pain which accompanies opposition to established conviction, we may readily suppose that it is not without an effort that his Grace has adopted this step.

The first thing to be observed, however, in this manifesto is that, upon the main and cardinal question brought forward in it, the writer does not give himself the trouble to argue. He simply says:—

"It is now obvious that the theology of former ages cannot be maintained." "The process of a religious change is gradually permeating the Protestant world." "A change in religious thought has gradually forced its way through the cultivated classes of the community." "The educated Protestant no longer believes what the Evangelists believed and affirmed." "The hymns and types of the Gospel may still please imaginative minds, but they do not satisfy the religious wants of the present day." "These narratives belong to Jewish traditions, and are rejected as traditional." "Serious men say the Nativity of Jesus is surrounded by legends." "The Virgin Mary caput inter nubila condit."

All this is only the assertion that, as a matter of fact, opinion is going a certain way; that educated and intellectual men are deciding against Christian belief; that there is a progress of thought which is supplanting it. The Duke does not reason, he calls attention to a fact. It would seem as if argument on the religious question were becoming obsolete. Mr. Lecky began this new mode of conducting controversy, and the Duke of Somerset continues it. The controversialist now simply says:—"I prepare you for what is coming, I do not reason with you. This that I tell you is the verdict of society; at least, of the only portion of society capable of judging; the rest will follow." There is one unavoidable result of this method of argument—viz., that it is impossible to answer it by any argument. If the world is changing its belief, it is changing it; that must be conceded; but is the world changing its belief? If intellectual men are all giving up the Christian facts, they are giving them up; but are all intellectual men doing so? This kind of controversy shuts out reasoning, and leaves nothing to be done but for the two disputants to look at each other. The sceptical party are satisfied with the progress of society; they think it is going entirely their own way, and they point to the fact. What can the other party do? Begin to reason and utter profound truths? That is not wanted for the discussion, and has no place in it. The discussion is limited to the question what is, as a matter of fact, being thought. If we begin to open our armory, and to prepare a refutation of these ideas, we are stopped at once and told that is quite unnecessary, and that it is not intended now to argue the question of the truth or error of these ideas, but only to note the fact that they are more and more entertained. This kind of controversy is a prophecy, and, like all prophecy, it declines to reason; it only says it will be so; things are going quite certainly in that direction; that will quite certainly be the issue. Should a man who happens not to be a believer in the prophet of Unbelief start up with an argument, the sage has his immediate reply—his reasoning may be indisputable, his objection irrefutable, but the fact is against him. For our own part we can bear being prophesied against; it does us no harm that we are aware of, and it saves a great deal of trouble in the matter of reply. We have only to prophesy in return. It must be remarked that this is a curious return to the argument of authority after a long denunciation of that old and venerable mode of conducting controversy. We do not reason with you, say the new school of disputants; we dislike interminable arguments; we only direct your attention to what is the actual case, that a large intellectual class has made up its mind on the question. The master has spoken, the intellectual class has judged; it is now decided that Christianity must be given up.

It will, indeed, be allowed that this kind of argument is the most telling with many. A great many people never want to hear reasons, they only want to be told how opinion is going; and the Duke of Somerset's argument is the best one for them. Nor will they, perhaps, test very accurately the Duke's facts with respect to this growth of opinion. Yet it is worth while just stopping a moment, if his Grace will permit us, to do this. If we understand the account which is given by sceptical writers of the state of the case on this head, and of the difference between the present age and previous ones in regard to the amount of sceptical opinion, it is this,—that, whereas there has always been a large mass of men in the world infected with sceptical opinions, still, up to the present day, this school of unbelief has had certain understood limits, and has been a known defined class, like a professional or any kind of marked class; whereas now the boundaries of a section have been altogether left behind, the interval which separates the class from society at large is quite effaced; and these ideas, though there are different shades and degrees of them, in one degree or another permeate the whole of society. This we believe is the assertion.

In the first place, then, we do not believe this assertion. Infidelity now makes the greatest noise; and the noise which even its antagonists make in fighting it counts for the noise of infidelity itself. But the great mass of society—not only reckoning the poorer classes, but the great body of the educated class—is wholly uninfected by disbelief. Still, though the great mass of society is untouched, it may be admitted that Scepticism has advanced now beyond the limits of a defined class, and extends over an indefinite and vague margin of ground, and that you cannot be sure where you may or may not meet with it. We much doubt whether there was not a good deal of the same flexibility in it in former days as well; but it is always difficult to take a census of opinion. It is, then, this latter sphere of sceptical opinion which is the peculiar boast of the school of unbelief now.

Now we admit that there is a solid, well-defined mass of thinkers now that knows its own mind, is satisfied with its own conclusion, and content to take all the consequences, moral and social, of the position of infidelity. But, as we have said, it is not this class, but it is the advance of Scepticism over the border and within the area of general society which is the triumph of the modern sceptic. If, however, a certain auxiliary spread is admitted, we must take it with its deductions. We recognize the serious and powerful infidelity of the philosophical infidel class; but it must be frankly suggested that when we go across the border into what is called general society, we see a considerable alteration. We mean no disrespect to a considerable number of spiritual sharp men, but in general society infidelity is very apt to become a form of nonsense. You meet, e. g., a traveller of accomplished mind, just returned from his periodical tour on the Continent. He shows in his conversation a strong liking for the Roman type of things. He is fascinated by ceremonial; he admires asceticism; he likes friars; he thinks it would be better if there were orders of friars in the English Church. He does not care much about a married clergy. By and by another vein of his mental interior opens. You find as conversation travels that this admirer of friars does not believe a single doctrine or fact of Christianity. Not that he has yet selected his theory for the solution of the difficulty, whether the naturalistic theory of Paulus, or the mythic theory of Strauss, or the subjective theory of Feuerbach; he has only a general notion that such and such things never happened, and that the foundation of the Christian religion is a weak one. This is one example of that type of scepticism which you come across in general society. But what can we say to such a type as this? We can only say that the unbelief is about as serious as the religious admiration. There are other samples of a similar kind of playing at infidelity. A man's own faith has gone, or appears to him to have gone; but he does not wish other people's faith to go. He wants it to stay. In his disbelief under these circumstances a grave one? It is rather the pleasing relaxation of a startling contrast, of holding oppositions, and tasting the spice of contradictions; the amusement of being an infidel believer and a free-thinking devotee.

One word to our author before concluding. The Duke of Somerset, though rejecting Christianity, still retains his belief in a God. He says:—

"If this fall,
The pillared firmament is rottenness,
And earth's base built on stubble."

And he continues:—

"There is one unassailable fortress to which we may retire—faith in God. This faith does not depend on the collation of manuscripts, or on the reconciliation of conflicting texts. The believer need not seek a foundation for his faith in a Vatican or Alexandrian Codex. He need not contend for the grammatical accuracy of a disputed passage, or strain his faculties in vain attempts to solve a metaphysical problem. He may leave to theological disputants the questions on which for so many centuries they have exercised their ingenuity. Here at last the natural and supernatural will be merged in one harmonious universe, under one Supreme Intelligence."

This is just the way in which persons argue when they are in the midst of one set of difficulties, and do not see another further off. Here all is chaos and disorder; in the distance all is clear and open. Upon questions close to them it is all speculation; but further on is a pure region of common sense, in which there is no difficulty, no perplexity, but everything is plain and easy, a paradise of the intellect. The hint which we would give the Duke of Somerset, then, is that he must not be too sanguine as to the geography of this remote district, or suppose that he can count upon an easy journey to it. This region of common sense, in which there are no metaphysics, no problems, is a favorite prospect; but the doubter pursues it, and, somehow or other, never reaches it. The truth is, we feel the difficulty where the stress lies. When the stress lies on miracles and inspiration, and the conclusion we are concerned with is connected with them, then we feel the difficulty at the point of miracles and inspiration. And the argument for a God, simply because the stress does not lie upon that argument at present, appears to be clear of difficulty. So the Duke of Somerset obviously imagines. But it is a delusion. Let the sceptic pass beyond the doctrinal region, and arrive at the question of Theism, and the stress will then lie upon the argument for Theism; and with the stress will come difficulty. How can the Duke of Somerset, with Comism before his eyes, which has given up Theism as a metaphysical problem, count upon Theism as a certainty of common sense?

A BRAVE CLERGYMAN.

[From The Aldine for June.]

At Huddersfield there were also terrible riots, and scores and scores of men from first to last were shot by the military. When Mr. Horsfall was murdered in open daylight for the crime of introducing machinery into his mill, Mr. Brontë was present at Heckmondwike on the same evening at Parson Robinson's, with other gentlemen, to take means to hunt down the murderer. It was on returning from this meeting that Mr. Brontë was set upon by four men in black masks, with the intent, as they acknowledged, to kill him, but they began the wrong way. Being Yorkshiremen, and, as he said, very self-opinionated, they were urged by their unconquerable conceit to let Mr. Brontë see what clever fellows they were, and how well they understood and could argue the great question then at issue between human hands and steel fingers—between capital and labor. So, having ordered him to stop in the middle of the road, they began by accusing him of being their enemy, and told him they were going to kill him out of the way, that he might do no more harm, and that they meant to send Parson Robinson after him.

Now a braver man never lived than this gaunt Irish rector. He laughed at and defied them. "Four masked and armed assassins to one poor unarmed parson!" he said. "That's your fair play, is it? I have always found Yorkshiremen, hitherto, brave and honorable, even when they were mistaken. But you are miserable cowards; you sneak after a lonely man in the dark, four of you, and stop him on the high road to murder him, because he don't agree with you about the value of machinery applied to manufactures! A pretty reason for killing a man, isn't it? Suppose eight manufacturers were to stop you, after you had knocked my brains out, and give you five minutes to say your prayers in and make ready for death, telling you that they meant to murder every one of you because you were opposed to machinery! How would you like it? Go home, men, for shame! Go home, and get down on your knees, and ask God in his mercy to forgive you for contemplating so horrible a crime. I am no enemy of yours, God knows! I try to do my duty to you and to all, and you will never intimidate me from doing it by threatening to kill me." Then advancing a step to the tallest man, who was evidently leader of the gang, he held out his hand, and said, "Come, you see I am not frightened. Let us shake hands and be friends. If ever you should need help, come to the Parsonage House, and you shall receive all I have to give. You would not be afraid that I should betray you, I know." And having shaken hands with them all, he said solemnly, in a voice trembling with emotion: "My brothers, we are all sinners—let us pray." So they knelt down on the dusty road, these intended murderers and their proposed victim, and the latter prayed earnestly to God to enlighten their darkness, and give them hope and patience, loving-kindness and faith, and trust in him to the end.

Chen gone for ever are all the brilliant members of that paragon family, who, in days not long after my first visit to this "Black Bull," made it a worth-bonus all over the world, in all civilized languages—and poor Brantwell's place, that once knew him so well, shall know him no more for ever. To me it looks like a dream, even to this day. I cannot realize the fact that they are all gone—all—not one left, and that the brave old patriarch, and father of them all, should have folded his hands and bowed his head over grave after grave, in such rapid succession, that one is no sooner covered up with earth before another is opened, and another dear one descended; and so on until the last of all his children is laid there—the last and dearest of them all—poor Charlotte! Fancy the old man, nearly eighty years of age, standing over this last grave of the last of his race, and thinking how quietly they all await his coming, who in the course of nature ought to have gone before them all, instead of being left to die alone, with strangers to close his eyes. "The grass has no time to grow upon the grave of one of my dear children," said the poor old man, with his poor, sad, and almost broken heart, "before another opens, and I must go and weep again, and cannot be comforted." There is time enough for the grass to grow on those graves now.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the NEW EXCHANGE BUILDINGS on St. Clair Street, opposite the WHEELER ORSARA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICES.

Coal Recipes for the week ending May 24th.—Carl Post, £10; H. V. Benninghoff & Bro., £2; Harry Voecker, £1; F. Kromer, Jr., £1; Co., £2; Nathan Frank, £2; James Smith, £1; John Denner, £2; H. Wallin, £2; Kirsch & Schless, £2; J. C. Calm, £1; F. Brundage, £2; H. C. G. Morris, £1; Geo. D. Coleman, £2; P. J. Jacobson, £2; C. H. Nelson, £2; Dr. J. M. Youngblood, £2; Valentine Gerber, £2; Rev. S. Hocking, £2; E. T. Peters, £1; J. W. Thibet, £2; Col. J. C. Smith, £2; Max Bucher, £2; Jno. W. Sellings, £2; W. Blackman, £2; E. Stone, £2; W. H. Bingham, £1; L. T. Wells, £1; Danvers Davis, £2; W. G. Childs & Co., £2; J. W. Stone, £2; J. W. Graham, £2; Geo. E. McNeil, £2; L. P. Ives, £2; Missa Bentley, £2; Oscar Ross, £1; L. F. Boudget, £2; A. Foleam, £2; Richard Mott, £2; N. Davis, £1; J. C. Reed, £2; J. A. Francis H. Drake, £2; Leonard Church, £2; W. H. Merrill, £2; John N. Lyman, £2; J. McKenna, £1; J. W. Bartlett, £2; Dr. C. W. Wilmore, £2; Mary E. Burgess, £2; J. P. Dyer, £2; G. H. Briggs, £2; J. H. H. Shipley, £2; Mrs. M. Perry Jones, £2; H. J. Green, £2; E. Pratt, £2; Wm. H. Dyke, £2; Peter H. Clark, £2; H. L. Green, £2; A. J. Sussabagh, £2; O. D. Frenchington, £2; G. P. Jewett, £2; J. W. Truesdell, £2; C. H. H. Klagman, £2; Simon Sharp, £2; Chas. Granger, £2; John Redington, £1; Mrs. A. R. Lee, £2; — 25 cts.

RECEIVED.

PRINCIPLES OF GEOLOGY; or, The Modern Changes of the Earth and its Inhabitants Considered in Illustration of Geology. By Sir CHARLES LYELL, Bart., M. A., F. R. S. Eleventh and Entirely Revised Edition. In Two Volumes. Vol. I. Illustrated with Maps, Plates and Woodcuts. New York: D. APPLETON & COMPANY, 649 & 651 Broadway. 1873. 8vo. pp. 671.

A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE IN EUROPE, including England, France, Germany and Italy. By Mrs. E. D. WALLACE, Author of "Sirlie, A Romance of Germany and Italy," "England's Last Queen, A Poem for Parlor and Office," etc. New York: D. APPLETON & COMPANY, 649 & 651 Broadway. 1873. pp. 314.

PAUL OF TARSUS: An Inquiry into the Times and the Gospel of the Apostle to the Gentiles. BY A GRADUATE. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1873. pp. 401.

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS; or, Forty Years' Recollections of P. T. BARNUM. Written by Himself. [Biography Complete to April, 1873.] Buffalo, N. Y.: WARREN JOHNSON & Co. 1873. pp. 370.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS IN POPULAR SCIENCE. No. 3. SPECTRUM ANALYSIS EXPLAINED. Illustrating its Uses to Science and including the Theory of Sound, Heat, Light and Color. By FRED. SCHLELLER, Roscoe, and HUGGINS. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD.

THE INFLUENCE OF DOGMA UPON RELIGION. A Reply to some Remarks made in Convocation During the Debate on the Athanasian Creed, April 24, 1873. By Rev. CHARLES VORSEY, B. A., late Vicar of Hestonagh. London: Published by the Author, Camden House, Dulwich, and by TRUBNER & Co., Paternoster Row.

RELIGIOUS REPUBLICANISM: JOSEPH MAKING AS A RELIGIOUS TEACHER. By E. A. VENTURA. Bath (England): WILKINSON BROTHERS, Market Place. 1871.

LIFE AND LAST DAYS OF ROBERT OWEN, OF NEW LAGAR, By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. Centenary Edition. London: TRUBNER & Co. 1871.

THE COLOMBUS CONTROVERSY. By A. LONDON ZULE. London: Frederick Parham, 23, Strand, W. C.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE AND MODERN ATHEISM. A Biographical and Critical Essay. By SOPHIA DORSON COLLET. London: TRUBNER & Co. 1855.

THE LOGIC OF DEATH; or, Why Should the Atheist Fear to Die? By G. J. HOLYOAKE. London: AUSTIN & Co. 1870.

THE LIMITS OF ATHEISM; or, Why should Sceptics be Outlawed? By G. J. HOLYOAKE. London: HOLYOAKE & Co. 1861.

THE LIBERAL SITUATION: Necessity for a Qualified Franchise. A Letter to Joseph Cowen, Jun. By G. J. HOLYOAKE. London Book-Store, 23, Strand, W. C.

PUBLIC PERFORMANCES OF THE DEAD: A Review of American Spiritualism. By G. J. HOLYOAKE. London Book-Store, 23, Strand, W. C.

JOHN BAKER AND HIS EXPULSION FROM THE SECULAR BODY. Dr. FERET and the Unbounded Virtue Party. By QUINODOD.

THE WORKMAN AND THE SUFFRAGE. Letters to the Right Honorable Lord John Russell, M.P., and the "Daily News." By GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. London: HOLYOAKE & Co. THE REASONER: A Secular and Co-operative Review, edited by GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. [From January, 1871, to March, 1873.]

BLASPHEMY: WHO ARE THE BLASPHEMERS?—MEDIUMS AND MEDIUMSHIP.—ELEVEN DAYS IN MORAVIA. By THOMAS H. HAZARD. Boston: WILLIAM WHITE & Co. 1873.

OLD AND NEW FOR JUNE, 1873. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS, 143 Washington St. $4.00.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH; AND JOURNAL OF PHYSICAL CULTURE. June, 1873. New York: WOOD & HOLBROOK, 18 & 15 Light St. $3.00.

Poetry.

UNWEDDED.

Her friends are good women and faithful men,
Who seek for the true and uphold the right;
And who shall proclaim her the weaker, when
Her very presence puts sin to flight?

She reads the hereafter by the here;
A beautiful Now and a better To Be;
In life is all sweetness, in death no fear—
You waste your pity on such as she.

LUIGI LARCOM.

The Index.

JUNE 1, 1872.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000. SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 26, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MURPHY	New Harmony, Ind.	One	Share, 100
D. AYERS, JR.	Brooklyn, N. Y.	"	" 100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT	Evansville, Ind.	"	" 100
"	Defiance, Ohio	"	" 100
"	Bryan, Ohio	"	" 100
J. T. BRADY	Sabatha, Kan.	"	" 100
"	Northampton, Mass.	"	" 100
MAX FRAUCH	Cincinnati, Ohio	"	" 100
"	Boston, Mass.	"	" 100
H. HINTERMANN	Toledo, Ohio	"	" 100
C. POLSON	Zanesfield, Ohio	"	" 100
S. C. EASTMAN	Palmyra, Mo.	"	" 100
J. O. MARTIN	Indianapolis, Ind.	"	" 100
L. T. IVES	Detroit, Mich.	"	" 100
E. W. MEDDAUGH	Detroit, Mich.	Three	" 300
A. POLSON	Dayton, Ohio	Two	" 200
W. F. HEILKE	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.	One	" 100
HENRY COLT	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.	"	" 100
SAMUEL COLT	Worcester, Mass.	Two	" 200
CHARLES NASH	Livonia, N. Y.	One	" 100
"	Osborn, Ohio	One	" 100
S. F. WOODARD	St. Y. Carroll, Ill.	One	" 100
H. A. MILLS	Dover, N. H.	"	" 100
J. W. BARTLETT	Taylor's Falls, Minn.	"	" 100
OSCAR BOOM	Geneva, N. Y.	"	" 100
MRS E. S. MILLER	Cincinnati, Ohio	"	" 100
JAS. R. STONE	"	Five	" 500
D. K. INNES	"	One	" 100
A. TAFT	"	"	" 100
S. L. WILDER	"	"	" 100
PETER H. CLARK	"	"	" 100
G. K. WITHINGTON	"	"	" 100
J. T. SUTTON	"	"	" 100
WALT. F. AUGUST	Pittsburgh, Pa.	"	" 100
MRS C. E. NOURSE	Cincinnati, Ohio	Two	" 200
JAS. FISCHER	Shreveport, La.	One	" 100
G. H. HOLZMAN	Pittsburgh, Pa.	"	" 100
L. VON BLASCHKE	N. Y. City	Five	" 500
W. H. BOUGHTON	Brooklyn, N. Y.	One	" 100
W. F. CHAMBERS	"	"	" 100
TITUS L. BROWN	Binghamton, N. Y.	"	" 100
A. McD. YOUNG	Milwaukee, Wis.	"	" 100
G. W. PECKHAM	"	"	" 100
T. H. HAWLEY	"	"	" 100
Wm. BECKER	"	"	" 100
MRS. G. D. NOBIS	"	Five	" 500
ROBT. C. SPENCER	"	One	" 100
C. M. LAWLER	"	"	" 100
M. R. LELAND	"	"	" 100
WM. BLACKMORE	Painesville, Ohio	"	" 100
R. H. RANNEY	Boston, Mass.	"	" 100
O. B. FROTHINGHAM	New York, N. Y.	Five	" 500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY	Richmond, Ind.	One	" 100
J. R. WRIGHT	"	"	" 100
JAMES SMELAKER	"	"	" 100
JOHN H. POPP	"	"	" 100
THOMAS DAVIS	Indianapolis, Ind.	"	" 100
ALX. METZGER	"	"	" 100
HERMANN LIEBER	"	"	" 100
CLARENCE VANNOOT	"	"	" 100
FRED. CHRISTMAN	"	"	" 100
HENRY SCHMULL	"	"	" 100
"	New Bedford, Mass.	"	" 100
M. H. DOOLITTLE	Washington, D. C.	"	" 100
			$28,700

Rev. Edward C. Towne, as appears by his article in another column, changes his residence from Winnetka, Illinois, to New Haven, Connecticut. Yale College is one of the chief intellectual centres of the Orthodox army, and Mr. Towne will doubtless hear and be heard from in that neighborhood. Whether he or anybody can expel the "heathenism" from Yale College is a little doubtful; but there is no better missionary field in the country.

John Milton, in his "Prose Works," lays down a good rule:—"While I was on my way back to Rome, some merchants informed me that the English Jesuits had formed a plot against me, if I returned to Rome, because I had spoken too freely of religion; for it was a rule which I had laid down to myself in those places, never to be the first to begin any conversation on religion, but, if any questions were put to me concerning my faith, to declare it without any reserve or fear."

FREEDOM BEFORE FRATERNITY.

A new spirit is pervading the world. A new hunger and thirst are felt uneasily by myriads who know not what they want or what will satisfy them. Walled from each other by artificial barriers of race, nationality, and religion, men are blindly groping to discover the secret of unity and universal peace. Every noble spirit chafes impatiently under the divisions and antagonisms enforced by the existing order of things, and longs for the coming of that better day when the bond of human brotherhood, freely recognized and powerfully felt, shall be stronger than links of iron in holding society together. As surely as man is outgrowing barbarism, that day will come at last.

But universal fraternity is impossible to-day. It is as yet a dream of the idealist only. To remove all political injustices and disabilities, to make all men and all women equal before the law, is not enough to realize it; to picture in glowing language the beauty and the blessedness of a human communion wide as the earth itself, to appeal to sentiment and kindle imagination by describing the Paradise to be inhabited by the whole race as a single family, is not enough. There are formidable difficulties in the way not to be overcome by any political reform, stubborn barriers not to be reduced to ashes by the mere electrical illuminations of fancy and feeling. The great, ugly fact is that mankind do not believe in universal brotherhood on the basis of EQUAL FREEDOM; and on no other basis can it be anything but the holiest and falsest of shams. Until the world is saturated with reverence for humanity as such, filled with the spirit which profoundly respects the rights of human nature in all directions, thoroughly educated to recognize the inviolability of each individuality in the free exercise of reason and conscience, no universal brotherhood is possible. The conditions of it do not exist. The soil is not ready for it. The season has not arrived. As well expect a crop of wheat from a snow-bank or a glacier, as look for fraternity from aught but freedom.

So much of real brotherhood as exists to-day in the world is due to freedom of communication. Commerce and travel destroy narrow prejudices—commerce of ideas most of all. Frank interchange of thought tends to create kind feeling and mutual respect. The barriers of nation and sect all over the world are melting away under its influence. All the currents of civilization are setting in the direction of a cosmopolitan fellowship. The conditions of it are silently preparing, as knowledge increases and the great network of material interests is woven so closely that war becomes the most expensive, as it is the most horrible, of all public evils. The realization of the grand dream of human brotherhood in the future is not doubtful.

But against this tendency towards a universal reverence for free humanity, and the fraternal union it must eventually create, there are great retarding and opposing influences. Chief of them all are the exclusive claims set up by the great religions of the world. These religions all limit fellowship on equal terms to those who believe alike and accept some teacher or book as above all question. Christianity is no exception. It aspires to unite all men in the bonds of Christian love, but not to unite all Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Brahmans, Buddhists, and so forth, in the bonds of human love. It recognizes the equal rights of all Christians, but not of all men. To say that Christianity teaches universal human brotherhood is utterly false. There is no idea it fights more determinedly than that. And the reason is plain. Humanity is depraved, unregenerate, lost, until redeemed by Jesus: such is the teaching of the Christian religion. The only saving power is that of the Christ: no Christian church will confess any other. While Christian brotherhood admits all Christians on equal terms, therefore, it admits no non-Christian on any terms; it aims rather at the conquest of the non-Christian world—at the victory of its own belief over all other beliefs, as the condition precedent of the universal brotherhood it seeks to establish. Thus Christian brotherhood is impossible without the blunt denial of freedom; and its fundamental idea is at sword's-point with the fundamental idea of human brotherhood.

Freedom must precede fraternity. The offered brotherhood is an insult which does not take equal liberty for granted. The "right hand of fellowship" is worse than a blow, if it is conditioned on acceptance of another's creed. Except on the terms of absolute freedom and absolute equality, the tendered communion is a profanation of humanity. Self-respect has rights which sentiment must heed. Let this be well understood. Whoever hopes for a brotherhood of man to which all men shall be welcome, will do well to remember the necessities of the case, and clearly recognize the utter idleness of all attempts to found it on anything but freedom unabridged. The brotherhood of Christianity can never be expanded into that of man; but that of man will swallow up that of Christianity.

Nothing but disappointment, failure and confusion will wait on our efforts to build up a universal fellowship, if we fail to comprehend that FREEDOM MUST PRECEDE FRATERNITY.

THE IMMORALITIES OF CHRISTENDOM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In meditating upon the deplorable immoralities of Christendom, which in many respects exceed those of Mohammedanism and Buddhism, it has pressed upon me that, whenever a large mass of men shall attain a higher faith than that of Christendom (and I believe that an intelligent hearty Theism is far higher), it will display its superiority in the contest against such immoralities. This leads into an analysis of the sources of Christian weakness. None of us perhaps will lay claim to nobler and higher desires than actuate the best men among Christians, now and at most times: yet the collective action of a religion does not depend on the aspirations of the best men, but on the essential requirements of its own logic.

Christianity from the beginning despaired of this world; pronounced it to be not only hopelessly corrupt, but transitory, and very quickly to be destroyed—probably in a single generation (Matthew xxiv, 34). To save individuals out of this world, and make them blessed in another, was its permanent and nearly its sole effort. To improve national institutions and international relations did not occur to the first teachers as possible, or as a worthy endeavor: therefore they could not employ themselves in uprooting the causes of any social evil. To relieve poverty or sickness they were often very active, but never to prevent. Prevention requires a study of the causes, and those were physical, political or social: Christ and Christianity were satisfied with unlimited alms-giving. On so transcendental a plane did this religion move, that it disdained to concern itself with matters in which the older religions had dealt largely; such as cleanliness, choice of healthful diet, kindness to the lower animals. But of still greater importance was its signal neglect of the topic of JUSTICE, which perhaps must be judged its most cardinal defect. I make no doubt that this arose out of political despair on the one side, and the expectation on the other of the speedy return of Christ from heaven. I cannot read the epistle of James without the fullest conviction that he was eminently a just man; yet his sole hope of a remedy for injustice lay in the coming of the Lord to judgment. Hence the attitude of Christians collectively, in proportion as they have imbibed the spirit of their religion, has been essentially passive in the face of great and cardinal public injustices.

That which will at once occur to your readers is Slavery,—the sum of all villainies, as it was excellently called by John Wesley. Christian apostles could not hope to root it up in the short time which was to elapse before he who was about to come would come—for which coming every Christian looked continually. Not the less they might have forbidden Christians, as the modern Quakers forbade the members of their society, to hold slaves. Paul might have told Philemon that Onesimus, in running away from him, had exercised his just right; and that, if he had stolen anything, it probably was but a small part of what was due to him on the score of wages unpaid for years. He might have urged on Philemon the duty of liberating all his slaves, and paying them, with liberal interest, the arrears of wages unjustly withheld. In place of this, he apologizes for Onesimus as having wronged Philemon by his flight, and sends him back into slavery with affectionate petitions, but without one hint that a slave-master is essentially in an unjust position. Writing to the Corinthians, Paul says: "Art thou called a slave [i. e. called by the Lord into Christianity while a slave]? care not for it. Mayest thou be made free? use it rather." The key to this state of mind, so opposed to our moral judgment, is close at hand. Because of this intense belief that Christ was shortly to descend.

for judgment (the most cardinal point of the primitive Christian creed), they held it to be an essential folly to try to improve the world. Out of this was developed a duty of acquiescing in every established injustice, of which none was more manifest or more outrageous than Slavery.

To preach against Slavery would have been to preach the rights of men, and would have been pregnant with other great results. But to talk at all of Human Rights, except as created or defined by the law of the land, was wholly alien to the spirit of primitive Christianity. The Romans habitually used the word jus, jura, which, though in sound so like to just, justice, had practically no necessary connection. Whatever "rights" were given to a man or to an order of men by old custom or law, were jura, in the opinion of every known lawyer and senator; however tyrannical or inhuman they may appear to us. Into none of these did Christianity make moral inquisition. They were all accepted as "ordinances of men," to which "for the Lord's sake" submission was due. In this way all the "rights of conquest," so called, received from Christianity a virtual consecration. What had been the right or wrong of a war or what its rightful issues, was not asked. He who had been victorious in war seized the land of his enemies for his own, and their persons at his pleasure for slaves. Naturally, the religion which did not ask by what right a man had been turned into a chattel did not ask by what right another man had got possession of a hundred thousand acres, with quarries, mines, lakes and rivers.

Unless I mistake, the Theism which goes back to first principles in the matter of Slavery,—which refuses to accept as a sufficient excuse the plea, "I bought this man," but asks, "Who had a right to sell him?"—will be forced also to enter more deeply into the right and wrong of every war, and also of vast landed possessions. Concerning war, it is enough to say in one sentence that, except where it is needed to rescue the whole fortunes of a people, its cruelties and miseries utterly forbid us to enter it voluntarily; and every free people can hinder their Government from entering it. As for land, evidently an unjust distribution of that which is the common surface on which human life is transacted must entail a thousand vehement injustices. Facts exhibit it as producing a virtual serfdom and miserable pauperism where the law forbids slavery. In any recent events, we are generally clear-sighted as to the meaning and result of a conqueror's vengeance. If after the late Franco-German war the Germans had merely transferred the rents received by rich Frenchmen into the hands of German nobles, it would have been counted an outrageous iniquity: yet such a proceeding would leave the actual cultivators of the soil just where they were. It is as nothing in comparison to turning freeholders into tenants-at-will, who have to pay yearly rent at the pleasure of a great lord for a wholly precarious tenure. But when this state of things has been brought about, either gradually by a series of stealthy encroachments or by a barbarous invasion that took place a thousand years ago, we (in Europe) are apt to be blind to the essential immorality, and all the noxious consequences. Because the powers over land have long been bought and sold, and the present holders are morally innocent, we are apt to overlook the certainty that an evil seed will continue to bear evil fruit. You in America, under the laws of the United States, have immense advantages over old Europe on the whole matter of Land Tenure; though to us you may seem to be fast throwing away your advantage and often to be unjust towards the native tribes. We, in England, Scotland and Ireland, are nearly at the bottom of all Europe. What I now say is, that a clear-sighted religion will deliberately and faithfully criticise every immorality which has crept into national institutions, and perpetuates injustice. A rational and noble Theism will not only not despair of the world, but will teach that it is the duty of every one to improve the world; that since national institutions are the most potent cause of public misery or blessing, our most earnest effort must be to make them just and pure, wise and merciful. They are not transitory, according to any human measure, but very long-lived. It is not enough to relieve poverty or convert vicious individuals: we must strive to remove the causes of vice, and any such injustices as entail poverty. This, I think, will be the cardinal difference between the action of the religion which is rising on the world, and the religion which can never henceforth receive allegiance from the best science of the day. No pretext that compensation will be given to the miserable in an after-scene can exempt us from the duty of seeking a perpetual improvement in the institutions of this earth. This is the garden which God has given us to cultivate.

FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

ON WHAT BASIS?

The Old and New magazine for June has a somewhat noteworthy article, written by Rev. G. L. Chaney of the Hollis Street Church, Boston, on the Brahmo Somaj of India. The article was evidently suggested by the act of Rev. Mr. Dall, the Unitarian missionary in Calcutta, in joining the Brahmo Somaj; and it is a frank, and in the main a sympathetic, attempt to state the history and significance of the Brahmo movement. It is a sketch, however, of the character and teachings of Rammohun Roy, the founder of the movement, and of Keshub Chunder Sen, its present best-known leader, rather than a full statement of the movement itself.

Examining the views, aims and spirit of these two distinguished men, Mr. Chaney decides that, though not nominally accepting Christianity, Rammohun Roy was and Chunder Sen is really Christian, and in their interpretation of Christianity so near to Unitarianism that Unitarian Christians should cordially extend to them and their work the right hand of fellowship. Of Rammohun Roy he says: "He was essentially a Unitarian Christian, the truths of which body he believed were consistent with the primitive form of Brahminism." And of Chunder Sen, the article has these finely appreciative and generously liberal words: "Clearly, here is a man with the thing Christianity vital in his heart, without the name. It comes with refreshing contrast to a community in which the name and the thing are distributed in the reverse proportion. If Chunder Sen is a fair representative of Brahminism, we do not hesitate to say that we would rather share his religion, with or without the name Christian, than any of the sectarian forms of Christianity, however orthodox their creed or liberal their profession. Yes; if the Brahmo Somaj be animated by the spirit of Chunder Sen, I know no Christian church that could surpass it in acceptableness to man or God." Then follow some good statements, with extracts from addresses by Chunder Sen, to show how irrational dogmas, taught in the name of Christianity, and immoral living on the part of nominal Christians in India, have contributed to render the name Christian "not a very attractive name to the Hindu." And the article culminates with the advice that, if Rammohun Roy and Chunder Sen represent the real spirit and purposes of the Brahmo Somaj, the Unitarians cannot do better than "accept this society as the providential church of Christ in India, and pour all their strength into this organization."

But Mr. Chaney is not sure that the Brahmo Somaj is fairly represented by these men. There are in fact, as he finds, two parties in the society, one inclining to Christianity so far as to acknowledge Jesus as the "Prince of prophets," the other more rationalistic in their views, and relating this inclination to render special homage to Jesus. He would therefore recommend careful investigation on this point, and the utmost discretion, before Unitarians commit themselves to "make common cause with the Brahmos." They must so act that their action shall result, if possible, in bringing the whole Somaj to the position in fact, if not in name, of "loyal attachment to Christ." But even without this proviso, he appears to think the Brahmo Somaj a safer organization for Unitarians to endorse and join than is the Free Religious Association in America; for he draws a comparison between the two societies in favor of the Brahmos—the substance of it being that, while the Indian society makes belief in theism a condition of membership, "the American Somaj admits all comers, even atheists."

It is not pleasant to criticise a paper in which one finds so much of fine spiritual sympathy and hospitality. But when the barriers of dogma are so nearly removed, one feels, perhaps, all the more keenly the shock of repulse that ensues when the sectarian fence is set up again and the cordial hand which we were approaching to grasp is withdrawn. Liberal as is this paper, unique and admirable as is its voice as coming from within the pale of the Christian church, I cannot help saying that I feel on reading it, as I felt on hearing it read in a circle of friends by Mr. Chaney himself, that the fine hospitable spirit that pervades it and the generous impulse to a broad human fellowship that originated it are violated, before the article closes, by the supposed or real exigencies of the Christian creed to which its author holds.

To test this, suppose we were to ask by what process Mr. Chaney would have the investigation conducted which should decide whether the Brahmo Somaj as a whole is worthy of Unitarian fellowship and co-operation. The entire spirit of the article would seem to imply that he would not inquire closely into the formulas of belief, would not stand on names and phrases, but would judge by the general character, purpose, efforts and aims of the members. There are strong words in the paper against the yoke of sect and dogma; and he confesses that he would not care for the Christian name, if he found generally the spirit manifested by Roy and Sen. Now, suppose he should find that that portion of the Brahmo Somaj which does not say so much about Jesus, but inclines more to rationalism, is yet doing as earnest work as the other party for the promotion of truth and morality, for the overthrow of idolatry, for breaking down caste, for the education of woman, for the lifting up of India into higher light and life, must he not, to be consistent, express the same trust, extend the same co-operation that he offers to the followers of Roy and Sen? Because the members of the former party cannot call Jesus the "Prince of prophets," or single him out for special homage, believing, as they do, that this leads back to that very idolatry from which they are seeking to rescue their countrymen, would Mr. Chaney for this reason refuse to fellowship them, even though he saw that they were earnest followers of the spirit of truth and love? Following the spirit of this paper, I do not see how he could refuse; yet according to the wording, in part, of this paper, it seems to be implied that those who make special verbal confession of their attachment and indebtedness to Jesus are for that reason more worthy of Unitarian recognition and aid—that the spirit, after all, is to be determined by some verbal statement of belief.

So it seems to me that, if Mr. Chaney had consistently followed out the vital spirit of his article to the end, he would have finished it without making, as he now has, what I can but think an unjust and ungenerous fling at the Free Religious Association—though I would not question in the least that he spoke in utter sincerity. I believe he would cut off his right hand rather than do intentional injustice. But when he says, comparing the Free Religious Association and the Brahmo Somaj, "You enter the latter by signing this brief creed: 'I do hereby avow my faith in theism, and become a member of the Brahmo Somaj of India; you enter the former by the payment of a dollar,'"—he states facts indeed, but he leaves out something which makes the facts convey falsehood. He leaves it to appear that the Free Religious Association has no earnestness of purpose, no consecration of aim, no common bond of aspiration and effort; that it is little more than a student's debating society, with the bond of an annual contribution to pay expenses. He speaks as if the dollar paid did not mean anything! It is true that the Association offers no creed to sign, not even that of theism; true that "it admits all comers, even atheists," making no inquiry into their opinions. But this is not to say that it has no principles, no aims, no objects, nothing that can call forth personal devotion, zeal, enthusiasm, and so furnish a practical bond for organized work for human welfare. Is it nothing to come together with a desire to promote pure, practical religion? Nothing to seek to know what is the height and depth of truth in all things concerning religious history and belief? Nothing to aim at breaking down the partition-walls between sects and religions and bringing men together in the fellowship of human love and charity? Nothing to hold to freedom of thought and to respect that freedom as the necessary condition of promoting human well-being? Yet all these are declared to be objects of the Free Religious Association in its Constitution. Surely, they are not objects to be dismissed with a sarcasm; not objects which Mr. Chaney can in his heart dismiss with a taunt, when he looks in to them more closely. For the spirit of his paper, if consistently carried out, would lead him to this conclusion,—that religious organizations, like individual character, must be judged rather by their practical aim, purpose, spirit, work, than by professions of belief; and that the time has come when religious societies can be organized more effectively for the promotion of human welfare on the basis of a practical object than on agreement in speculative opinion.

And personally, if Mr. Chaney were put to the test, he would act, I believe, on the broad, hospitable spirit of his essay, and not on the limitations affixed to it by his theological creed. Mr. Chaney believes in a practical broad church. He wants to make the old Hollis Street church cover all interests of spiritual, moral and social well-being, and he is assiduously and manfully striving towards that end. He wants to draw in there the neglected ignorant, and have them taught; the neglected vicious, to be brought under the influence of virtuous culture; those who are wandering without homes, that they may be provided with attractive and elevating entertainment. He would have the church, in its organized capacity, attend to all works of charity, humanity and mercy: feed the hungry, clothe the naked, care for the sick, minister to those in prison, seek out the needy, the sorrowing, the sinful, and endeavor in every good way to lift the burdens of woe and wrong from human hearts. It is a grand ideal of a church. Now I could show Mr. Chaney a man in Boston who wants to help do just these things, whose heart is thoroughly in them, who believes in that sort of religion and church and is interested in no other. He is sometimes called a "Christian," because of his pure character, his tender humanity; he is known, however, as an atheist, and conscientiously cannot call himself either Christian or Theist. If this man, attracted to the broad, humane work which Mr. Chaney is trying to do, were to go to him and say, "I cannot call myself a Christian, nor even avow my faith in theism; but I am a sincere searcher after truth, and I want to do all the good I can to my fellow-men, and I should like to take hold with you in this work of justice and mercy, striving to walk faithfully by the light I have,"—Mr. Chaney's answer, I feel sure, would be a cordial grasp of the hand and a welcome to the work. Just as, in the case of Rammohun Roy and Chunder Sen, he waived the fact that they did not call themselves Christian, recognizing in their spirit and character something more vital than a name or profession of belief, so in this case he would, for the same reason, waive the fact that the man could not call himself a theist. His liberal impulses and humane sympathies would push the spirit of his essay to its logical results, and impel him to say, "Though we do not believe alike, brother, yet we can join hands across the dividing line of our opinions in the search after truth and in the effort to bless mankind." And that grasp of hands across the dividing line of opinion, in a common effort to get truth and to do good, represents the Free Religious Association. W. J. F.

FAIR PLAY ALL ROUND.

In our issue of May 18th, we criticised severely the course of the New York Independent in accusing the Christian Amendment people of forgery. The following paragraph is from the Independent of May 23:—

"We referred recently to the fact that Mr. J. R. Osgood of Boston, whose name was signed to the call for a meeting in behalf of the Religious Amendment, had announced that his name had been used without authority, and that he did not wish to be considered as endorsing its operations. This was only one of several similar mischances which have happened to the advocates of this measure, and we commented upon the suspicious fact with considerable severity. The Rev. D. McAllister, the secretary of the Association, has shown us the original copy of the call for the Boston meeting, which is conclusive evidence of the fact that no subterfuge was used in procuring signatures; and that, so far as the managers were concerned, their course in the matter was in accordance with strict honesty. It is no wonder that a busy man like Mr. Osgood should have misconceived the meaning of the call; but the gentlemen who presented it to him are not to blame for his mistake."

Mr. Osgood did not announce "that his name had been used without authority," as the Independent well knows. The "fact" as published was that "he signed the call [which was a direct argument for the Christian Amendment] with the understanding that the meeting was to be for free discussion"—a very different thing. To charge the Christianizers with forgery because Mr. Osgood made a mistake was without excuse, there being no "suspicious fact" whatever in the case, and the "considerable severity" being neither more nor less than slander without a shadow of justification. Notwithstanding this transparent device to evade confession of its own fault and cover up its own tracks, we are glad to see that the Independent has at least candor enough to make reparation to the parties it had so carelessly maligned.

Now a word to the officers of the Association, whom we have done our best at various times to defend from false charges because we believe in justice for all—even for those who would be unjust to others if they had the power. These gentlemen have drawn a great deal of richly deserved ridicule on their movement, from their manifest eagerness to get the names of distinguished men attached to it. They have had as enormous an appetite for Governors, Judges, Honorables, Bishops, Presidents, Professors, and so forth, as the Biblical whale had for prophets; and, like the whale, they have had to disgorge most unceremoniously some choice gubernatorial and other tidbits undigested—much to the amusement of the profane. In fact, their repeated performances in this line have given to their "reform" a decidedly sick-whale aspect.

While we give them entire credit for honesty, and while we fully comprehend the latent force of their movement, we say plainly that this hankering after titles, this snobbish clinging to the skirts of official position, throws no little doubt on the genuineness of the whole thing. The American people at heart despise everything that smacks of lion-hunting and toad-eating. They sniff the air very suspiciously in the neighborhood of all signs of diplomacy and finances. They do not mean to be led by the nose. The attempt to give prestige to the new movement by pointing to certain great ones of the earth, and exclaiming triumphantly—"All these believe in it!"—is altogether too much like the clerical argument used lately, that "the Duke of Wellington, who was a higher authority than Lord Palmerston, after examining the Prayer-Book, came to the conclusion that the Athanasian Creed was founded on the Word of God." Indeed! That must settle the point, then! But there are not a few hard-headed and irreverent people in America who sardonically smile at such logic. They say in effect to these new apostles of the Kingdom:—"Gentlemen, your proposal to throw all political power into the hands of the saints may be all very Christian. It may be all very respectable. It may be all very savory in the nostrils of Governor This and Judge That and the Right Reverend T'Other, D.D., LL.D. But is it just? Is it in harmony with the Equal Rights of Man? Is it a step forward in the direction of Freedom, Progress and Republican Ideas? Be so kind as to omit your Bible texts; put back your paleontological guidances into their cases; cease to dodge the point, and give a plain answer to the main question!"

The country is waiting curiously for the answer.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following lists of names to the counter-petition have been received since our last issue:—

Mr. J. W. Steward, Wheatland Centre, Michigan, sends two hundred and eight names; Mr. J. W. Graffan, New Bedford, Massachusetts, forty-six; Mrs. Francis H. Drake, Leominster, Massachusetts, seventy-one; Mr. R. H. Ranney, Boston, Massachusetts, thirty; Miss Philena Carlin, Charlottesville, Virginia, five; Miss Cora Wilburn, Camden, Maine, eighteen; Mr. Thomas W. Hayden, Boston, Massachusetts, sixteen; Mr. John Redington, Crooked Creek, Pennsylvania, thirty-three; Mr. F. M. Tate, Farmington, Iowa, one hundred and thirty-four.

This makes the aggregate of names acknowledged in THE INDEX over THIRTY-TWO THOUSAND.

Miss Martineau, as we find her quoted by George Jacob Holyoake, expresses a view of the essence of religion very similar to that for which we have argued so much:—"Religion is, in its widest sense, 'the tendency of human nature to the infinite,' and its principle is manifested in the pursuit of perfection in any direction whatever. It is in this widest sense that some speculative atheists have been religious men—religious in their efforts after self-perfection, though unable to personify their conception of the Infinite. In a somewhat narrower sense, religion is the relation which the highest human sentiments bear towards an infinitely perfect being. There can be no further narrowing than this. Any account of religion which restricts it within the boundaries of any system, which connects it with hope of reward or fear of punishment, is low and injurious, and debases religion into superstition."

The essay by Prof. Newman on "Romanism a Corruption of Christianity," and the essay by F. E. Abbot on "Romanism a Development of Christianity," have been issued together as a new INDEX TRACT, and are now for sale at THE INDEX Office. Price ten cents.

CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY AND MODERN SCEPTICISM (D. Appleton & Co.), by the Duke of Somerset, has made no small stir in England, on account of the high social position of the author rather than of any particular novelty in the views advocated. It is a new thing to see a duke entering the lists in championship of free thought. The Duke of Argyll, whose "Reign of Law" still holds its place as a very able attack on Darwinism, can hardly be called "Orthodox" in the old sense of the word; yet he might be properly described as such in comparison with his heterodox brother-duke of Somerset. The appearance of this little work is especially noteworthy as indicating that Christianity is losing prestige and influence in the world of fashion—an ominous sign to those who see no hope for man but in its unshaken authority. "When dukes doubt, artisans may easily become infidels," pithily remarks the Fall Mall Gazette; and the loss of the power to sneer at free-thinking as vulgar and plebeian will be the dissolution of one of the strongest defences of Christianity in this age. Meanwhile there is a ludicrous side of this dual insurrection against theology, which is so well put in the London Reasoner for March that we cannot forbear to quote:—"What the clergy will say to the Duke, we know not. We are perfectly sure the Duke does not care. He is too brave to be intimidated. It would be indecent in the clergy to be praying for the soul of a peer. St. Peter is sure to open his wicket-gate to so respectable a spirit, and Bishops will think twice before they damn a Duke." Passing by however, the comical aspects of the case, we ought not to omit saying that the book itself is terse, strong and weighty. It is the calm verdict of a man of the world on the pretensions of Biblical Christianity, given modestly, but very plainly and fearlessly. In fact, condensation is carried almost to the point of obscurity. Brief statements rather than arguments are made, and the whole has the air of a gentleman's note-book, summing up the results of reading and reflection for his private use, rather than that of a treatise designed for the public eye. Yet so self-poised, just, unprejudiced, and at the same time so serious and elevated in tone, is the writer's style, that he wins the respect and sympathy of his readers by the sheer force of manliness. The dignity and independency of sincere thought have seldom been better illustrated; and if in the Republic of Letters intelligence and love of truth ever deserve a patent of nobility, no one will adjudge the Duke of Somerset unworthy of a nobler coronet than the one he wears. —Price 1.00; sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

HOW THE WORLD WAS PEOPLED (D. Appleton & Co.) consists of several lectures by Rev. Edward Fontaine, published, according to the Dedication, through the beneficence of "seven worthy gentlemen of New York"—evidently interested in the defence of Scriptural views of ethnological matters. Mr. Fontaine believes that all the human inhabitants of the globe were descended from Adam and Eve, though possibly not all from Noah; and he naturally evinces a settled antipathy to all forms of Darwinism. He has skimmed over the sciences sufficiently to make a fair show of learning; but nothing could be conceived more utterly unscientific than his grotesque fusion of fact and fiction, scientific truths and Biblical myths—

"Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adier's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owl's wing."

As a contribution to real knowledge on the main subject discussed, the book is worse than valueless, for it radiates darkness rather than light. Mr. Fontaine is trying to run a race in a sack—to the amusement rather than the instruction of the spectators. The supplementary chapter, however, on the "physical geography of the Mississippi River," is exceedingly interesting and full of information. On this topic the author speaks from long personal observation, having lived a great many years at the South, in the immediate neighborhood of the great river. This fact explains his queer attempt to vindicate the common descent of all races from Adam, without admitting their equal social and political rights. Now that American slavery is a thing of the past, his nervous endeavors to atone successfully between the Scylla of infidelity to the Pentateuch and the Charybdis of abolitionist ethics are simply amusing, as for instance his indirect defence of the old "cursed be Canaan" philosophy (p. 260). Orthodoxy demands belief in the descent of all men from Adam, as the explanation of "original sin;" and the curse of Canaan was the only loop-hole of escape from the abolitionist's argument that all the members of Adam's family must possess an equal claim to liberty. This survival of pro-slavery ante-diluvianism in the lecturer's mind gives the finishing touch of conservatism to his book, and will ensure the approbation of all the old fogies who intend to vote for General Jackson next November.—Price $2.00; sold by H. S. Stebbins.

CHAPTERS FROM THE BIBLE OF THE AGES, compiled and edited by Mr. Giles B. Stebbins, and published by the editor, Detroit, Michigan. The increasing interest in other religions than that of Christianity has given of late years a great stimulus to the study of other Scriptures than those which are known as the "Holy Bible;" and this book is a product of it. "The Bible of the Ages," says Mr. Stebbins in his catholic and sweet preface, "is the deepest thought, the highest inspiration, the clearest spiritual light and life of the whole human race, constantly being lived and written, and to be read with free and open mind, and the hopeful thought that richer chapters are yet to come, for us and for those who may live after us; since truth and inspiration are the heritage of humanity, correlated, evolved, and developed into higher harmony and perfectness by spiritual laws, which are the Divine Intent, or 'the will of God.'" The aim of the work is a modest one, being simply to throw together in convenient shape for popular use a large number of the wisest and most enlightening sayings of the chief religious teachers of both ancient and modern times. Without being a specially scholarly work, or altogether faultless, it is yet one which will be lovingly welcomed by the multitudes to whom scholarship is altogether secondary in importance to spiritual wisdom and truth. How much is finally to be incorporated in the true "Bible of the Ages," only humanity itself is competent to decide; and no individual who essays to cull the eternally vital words out of the great and daily greating mass of materials which modern research is making available, will be able wholly to escape the limitations of his own temperament, taste, and peculiar cast of thought. Yet we are struck with the general good judgment evinced in the preparation of the present volume. Mr. Stebbins is a Spiritualist—one of the best representatives of its best phase; and the bias of his school appears in the large number of selected passages emphasizing the belief in immortality and the continued communion of departed spirits with the living. But with characteristic modesty he entitles his book "Chapters from the Bible of the Ages," and does not propose it as a substitute for "the more comprehensive work which a fit company of ripe and large-hearted scholars should unite to prepare." For the avowed purpose of "meeting in some degree a pressing popular want," the present attempt must be regarded as in the main a successful one. The catholicity and large hospitality towards all truth which are marked features of the editor's character have led him to make extracts from writers of the most diverse tendencies; and we are pleased to note one from Mr. Horace Seaver, editor of the Boston Investigator—a good representative of a school quite antipodal to that of Spiritualism. To be frank, our individual taste would have been better suited if no selections had been made from living writers, and if those only had been admitted into this company of the "inspired" upon whose utterances the "Ages" had set already the seal of their approval. Some of the authors here quoted will scarcely retain permanently the honor of being regarded as contributors to the "Bible of the Ages." We are the more free to say this because Mr. Stebbins has seen fit to include passages of our own, for which we anticipate no such immortality. The avowed aim, however, has been to recognize the reality of "inspiration" in all ages, the nineteenth century included; and it can hardly be denied by liberal thinkers that some of the most recent utterances here collated have a better claim upon the loving remembrance of mankind than many of those which have been thus remembered in the sacred books of the various world-religions. Mr. Stebbins has done a real service to the times in bringing together within four hundred pages so many noble and pure thoughts. They will refresh many a wearied spirit as with the eternal truth, and quicken to new life many a man and woman who, repelled by the exclusiveness and conservatism of the churches, have been hitherto ignorant of the better fellowship that links into one great brotherhood the wise and true of all periods. All minor defects in the plan and proportions of Mr. Stebbins' work we gladly overlook in consideration of its many and great excellences. Whoever buys it will receive many times the worth of his money, and we sincerely trust that the editor's conscientious labor will be repaid by numerous orders and the hearty appreciation of a large circle of readers.—Price $2.00. Sent postpaid on receipt of price, by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo, or by the editor, Detroit.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

HEATHENISM IN YALE COLLEGE.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

The writer of this is about establishing his residence in New Haven, Conn., alongside of the community of Yale College, to which, as a student, he for some years belonged. A part of his purpose in this is to be a missionary to the heathenism which, under the name of Orthodoxy of doctrine and discipline, has made New Haven and Yale College one of its chief strongholds. This mission of faith and philosophy will be based on the following principles:

1. The moral universe is a cosmos,—not a chaos,—in which all things work together for good, not alone to them that love God, or that like law and order, but to all creatures, evil as well as good, through the supremacy of infinite and perfect order. The Orthodox Christianity of the day does not allow belief in moral law and order, in and over every moral creature, but makes evil in man extend to permanent overthrow of order and breakdown of law, to a degree even which amounts to an enthroned Principle of Evil and a Realm of Everlasting Ruin. It makes an infinite hole in the moral universe, an infinite break in the order of moral law, and insists on that break and that hole, on Total Depravity and Everlasting Hell, with a pertinacity which is simply shocking to a mind habituated to believe that Deity is Infinite Order.

2. That, having believed that the universe will hold together, and will not be broken in two by an abyss of ruin, we ought to take one another's hands helpfully and hopefully, with intent never to let go, but to keep true covenant of moral help and fraternal love, not only here but hereafter. Orthodoxy forbids such hope and help, and authorizes selfish concern for one's own safety, disregard of a brother's deadly peril, and the permanent rupture of any or all of the covenants of moral or natural relation. It sets the saints upon scandalously running away from the common danger of penalty, while the sinners are left in the bog of destruction. If moral law be anything more than a shame, it will drive all such saints back to the war of good against evil, to make something more than a Bull Run fight, for universal overcoming of wrong with right, of evil with good, of wretchedness with blessedness.

3. That Religion, rightly understood, rests on these two principles just stated, and that the assertion, by Orthodox Christianity, of irremediable disorder in the moral universe, and the denial of charity and communion, on any pretext whatever, are survivals of Heathenism, utterly repugnant to the best spirit of all the great faiths of mankind, and worthy of moral and spiritual savages. The refusal of charity and communion for heterodoxy of doctrine, and the refusal of hope and help for the world to come on account of unworthiness of character, are not made respectable, and cannot be, by any body of either divines or diviners; for only in heathen ignorance of God, perversely maintained, and the rudest disregard of fraternity, can nominal Christians place a limit upon fellowship or a restriction upon hope and help. It is only by way of survival from aboriginal culture, only by persistence of impulses and ideas of the Old Adam in the Christian breast, that church and creed continue the inhuman and ungodly custom of cutting off brethren from fellowship and souls from the chance of help and the consolations of hope.

Some twelve years ago "The Church of Christ in Yale College" excommunicated the writer of these lines. No other ground was so much as hinted at except heterodox opinions, such as are expressed above. Without pretending to give the accused a hearing, and without any appearance even of fraternal concern, a rude decree of expulsion was voted, in which nearly every count was a false statement. The writer was, or then supposed himself to be, helpless, and submitted as a child would submit to the scalping-knife of a savage. But since becoming fully acquainted with the principles and history of this matter of faith and fellowship, he has sought to have the case re-opened, and a hearing granted, with a view to his showing that no principle of religion requires such exercise of excommunicating rigor, and that any man who believes sincerely, and who is admitted to be a good man, ought to be let alone. This appeal, made to ex-president Woolsey and President Porter, and laid before the college church, was refused consideration, and from the moment that this refusal was received dates the writer's determination to establish a mission of faith and philosophy, a church of free faith and fraternal fidelity, under the walls of Yale College. Next month (about June 10th) will see the commencement of the enterprise. The writer goes then to New Haven to take up his residence, and to enter upon whatever thoroughly radical work he can make opportunity for. As a heterodox teacher of religion he expects to meet with resistance and perhaps reproach, but the time is past when a serious scholar, a sincere thinker, and an earnest worker can be suppressed in even the most Orthodox of cultivated communities. Fifteen years ago, while studying in New Haven, he had plans for doing just this thing, and now he goes to fulfill those plans. Now as then it is with small resources, and working with his hands; but the time is propitious, the providence of the hour favors, and the Mission to the Heathenism which lingers at Yale College must and shall become a good work.

It need not be said that the community of Yale College is one of the most cultivated and enlightened which can be anywhere found, and that the survival of heathenism there is a dark accident, rather than a leading feature of its life, due only to that inveteracy of sacred tradition which has so often contradicted intelligence and imposed upon virtue, to perpetuate the rule of ideas utterly false and abominable. The best allies of faith and philosophy which a mission such as we propose can desire are the generous instincts of high culture which are the life of a studious and learned community, gathered by an institution such as Yale College.

THE TRUE MESSIANIC IDEA LOST TO THE WORLD.

BY PROFESSOR S. A. TAFT.

BETHEL COLLEGE, May 12, 1872.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—As a reader of the THE INDEX, but by no means a believer in its contents, doctrines, or ideas, I beg to say to you that I have been profoundly interested in Prof. Newman's "Romanism a Corruption of Christianity" and your review. You make the point of difference plain; but to me you proceed upon an assumption which, if you could only see it, I think would change the whole tenor of your style, way and mode of thought in relation to true Christianity. Indeed you are fighting a monstrosity. But, under the impression all the time that you are opposing the real thing, you both deceive yourself and your many readers. You say truthfully: "If my ground is falsely taken, it must be either because the Christian Confession is not the foundation of Christianity, or else because it is not logically developed into Catholicism."

Now, sir, I concede that the true Christian Confession is the foundation of the true Christianity. But I deny that it is developed into Catholicism. The Messianic idea, as developed and understood by Moses in the Law, the Prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus, and his Apostles, is the foundation of the true Christianity. But the Messianic idea as developed and understood by Romanism is the cancer and not the organism. Just here is your fallacy. Now, sir, until you will first settle what is the true Messianic idea as developed and unfolded in the Bible, you are liable at every step to deceive both yourself and your readers. Neither Romanism nor Protestantism knows anything upon this subject. The world has lost the true Messianic idea. Long since it was entirely buried up in the corruption of the ages; and a substitute that bears no resemblance to the original except in name has been put in the place thereof; and this, as you do most truthfully say, has been logically developed into Catholicism. The true Messianic idea is in the Bible; the Bible is the sole authority upon the question; but it is nowhere abroad in the land except in the most isolated and obscure quarters. There are those in the land who hold the true Messianic conception, and they are the very antipodes of Romanism, as really and truly as yourself. Ay, more so; because they stand on the very antagonism, while you are in an oblique position. They oppose Romanism knowing the truth, while you oppose it not knowing the truth. Your assumption that the Roman conception of the Messianic idea is the true one, and that Romanism is the logical outgrowth of that idea, has led you to discard the whole thing and substitute therefor, not the truth, but a myth—a mere phantasma of your own brain, Free Religion. I beg you will go back and listen to the voice of Moses, the prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus, and the Apostles, upon this question. They will give you the true Messianic conception. And you will find that one element of that conception is that, while it is an organism, that organism was not to grow during this present Kosmos. "My Kingdom," said Jesus, "is not of this Kosmos." It belonged not to the age that then was, nor to any subsequent age, nor to the age that now is, but to that age that is consequent upon his second personal advent upon the earth. For, mark you, Jesus will come again on the earth. But he will not come in the Roman sense. The Roman idea of the coming and the Judgment is a total perversion. Jesus is not King of the earth de facto, but only de jure, while he is invisible in the heavens. He has delegated his prerogatives to no man, company or association of men. And all, anywhere and everywhere, who assume to be in possession of those prerogatives are simply hypocrites and liars. His people on earth in no sense represent him in this respect. They were to let the world alone on this question of rulership, and bide their time to rule. They can do nothing by way of ruling the world in the absence of their Head. And all attempts in that direction can result only in oppression and failure.

I, sir, would love to see you grapple the question—"What is the true Bible Messianic idea?" And here you Rationalists, as it seems to me, show yourselves one-sided and partial. Instead of taking up this idea and investigating for yourselves from the stand-points already noted, you assume that the world is in possession of the truth upon this subject; and so monstrous is that truth, that you just discard the whole thing. Hoping, sir, that, while you see and feel so potentially the darkness that is on all sides of you, you may yet see the light, I remain

Yours truly

PALMYRA, MO.

S. A. TAFT.

[The Messianic idea as we have represented it has been taken from the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures, together with the so-called "Apocalyptic writings" of the Jews. If Prof. Taft will clearly state what the idea should be which he declares to be now lost to the world, and give his authorities for his interpretation of it, we shall be very willing to consider his statement in all fairness. Meanwhile he will pardon us for not immediately discarding the results of long study out of deference to his mere ipse dixit. We are prepared to defend the views we hold on this subject from the Bible itself; and we must request him to deal with them by argument rather than unsustained assertion.—Ed.]

CHRISTIAN MASSACRE OF JEWS.

MR. ABBOT:—

Have they a Constitution in Roumania? If so, does it acknowledge—"That a nation is the creature of God; that it is clothed with authority derived from him; that it is under the dominion of Jesus Christ, the appointed Ruler of nations; and subject to the Bible, the special revelation of the moral law?" If it has a Constitution which acknowledges these things, then I shall not be at a loss to account for the fact that lately at Cahul, a town containing about six thousand Christians and one thousand Jews, the former lately massacred a great many of the latter, "splitting open their heads, breaking their arms, plucking their beards out by the roots, and committing rapes upon their defenceless women." It is recorded in the Bible, that the people among whom Moses lived were theocratically governed, and I suppose that these good and pious Christians of Roumania have only followed the pattern of piety and prudent economy afforded them by the Lord's Government, as recorded in the thirty-first chapter of Numbers. The Constitution of the Kingdom of Israel acknowledged the Lord, and yet, in II Kings, chapter 10, verses 14 and 19, murders and atrocities as shocking to my sense of justice and right as those committed by these Roumanian Christians are stated to have been committed,—and to have merited, and met with, the approbation of their God in the Constitution (I Kings, ch. 10, v. 10). What a pity we cannot also have God acknowledged in our Constitution, so that we may have the Christian luxury of persecuting Jews, because long years ago their ancestors acted the part fore-ordained for them by God in killing Christ, so that Christians "might be saved from a burning hell!" Suppose they had not killed him, what would have become of Christians? Was the massacre in Roumania in accordance with the moral law revealed in the Bible?

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents a conception of Him that is worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testament. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted; with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Fall of Missions, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatharian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—"The Present Heaven," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage Stated and Answered from a Bible Standpoint, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
90 St. Clair Street, Toledo, Ohio.

SOW THE SEED!

THE "IMPEACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY," published in the first number of the third volume of THE INDEX, has been electrotyped, and an edition of Ten Thousand Copies has been printed in the form of

A Cheap Tract for Gratuitous Distribution!

It is intended to circulate One Hundred Thousand Copies during the current year. In order to accomplish this purpose, we must rely upon the co-operation of our active sympathizers.

☞ Packages of these TRACTS, containing any desired number of copies, will be mailed to any address on receipt of enough money to defray postage, and whatever additional sums, large or small, the generosity of distributors may prompt them to add.

Of course, money will be needed to carry out our intentions; but we urge every one who believes that THIS TRACT WILL DO GOOD, and who is willing to distribute copies of it, to send in an order at once, even if unable to donate more than the simple postage and the time required for distribution. Do not hesitate because you cannot give more. We are convinced more than ever by the character and objects of the late Cincinnati Convention, that such plain speech as this TRACT contains is greatly needed at the present time. In the name of Christianity, of the American People; and the mighty magic of that name is still powerful over multitudes even of otherwise liberal minds. Let the world learn that the protest made against Christianity is not made by hatred of Goodness and of Truth, but rather by a love for these that can no longer be satisfied with shams. Ho woefully misjudges this Tract who thinks it has no higher aim than to "make a sensation." It was meant to tell needed truth so plainly that it must be heard. And it will be heard. All we ask is—give it a chance.

A most Dangerous Attempt is now Making to Subvert the Religious Liberties

☞ Address your orders to THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio

☞ The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word."); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, 90 St. Clair street, Toledo, Ohio.

St. Louis, Quincy, Hannibal, Keokuk, Toledo, Wabash & Western R. R.

PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS!

THE Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway Co., having recently extended its line of Railway to the City of Saint Louis, will commence running all its regular passenger trains through to that city on and after the 14th day of May, 1871. The day trains will be equipped with new and elegant passenger coaches, and all night trains with the much celebrated and popular Pullman Palace Sleeping Coaches.

	Special Thro' Express.	Pacific Express.
Leave Toledo.....	11:10 A. M.	11:15 P. M.
Ar. St. Wayne.....	8:00 P. M.	8:30 A. M.
" Lafayette.....	7:40 "	8:20 "
" Danville.....	10:05 "	11:20 P. M.
" Springfield.....	8:35 A. M.	9:35 "
" Quincy.....	8:45 "	10:45 "
" Keokuk.....	9:00 "	7:15 "
" St. Louis.....	7:00 "

Trains arrive from the West at 2:15 A. M., 8:40 P. M., and 5:00 P. M.

GEO. H. BURBORN,

Gen'l Superintendent.

JOHN U. PARSONS,

Gen'l Ticket Agent.

[901]

Lake Shore & Mich. Southern R. R.

1872.

On and after Sunday, Jan. 14th, 1872, Passenger Trains will leave Toledo daily (Sundays excepted) as follows (Cleveland time):

CLEVELAND & TOLEDO DIVISION.

LEAVE TOLEDO.

8:00 A. M. Atlantic Express East, daily, arrives at Cleveland at 7:25 A. M.

8:30 A. M. Day Express will stop at Elmore, Fremont, Clyde, Bellevue, Monroeville, Norwalk, Townsend, Wakeman, Oberlin, Elyria and Berea, arrives at Cleveland at 10:50 A. M.

10:55 A. M. Cincinnati Express, stopping at all stations, reaches Cleveland at 2:45 P. M.

8:20 P. M. Special N. Y. Express, will stop at Fremont, Clyde, Monroeville, Norwalk and Elyria, arrives at Cleveland 10:15 P. M. Sleeping cars to Buffalo and Rochester.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

10:40 and 10:55 A. M., and 7:40 and 11:00 P. M.

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN DIVISION.

TRAINS DEPART.

MAIN LINE—8:15 A. M. Mail; 11:15 A. M. Special Chicago Express; 5:45 P. M., Coldwater Accommodation; 8:00 P. M., Night Express.

AIR LINE—11:05 A. M., Accommodation; 11:30 P. M. Pacific Express.

DETROIT—5:00, 11:30 A. M., 5:30 and 8:00 P. M.

JACKSON—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

KALAMAZOO AND GRAND RAPIDS—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

MAIN LINE—6:30 and 10:35 A. M., and 5:40 & 8:00 P. M.

AIR LINE—3:30 A. M., and 5:45 P. M.

DETROIT—10:40 and 12:01 A. M., and 6:05 and 9:00 P. M.

JACKSON—10:35 A. M., and 6:35 P. M.

COLDWATER ACCOMMODATION—10:35 A. M.

CHAS. F. HATCH, Gen'l Supt.,

Cleveland, Ohio

S. H. WARING, Ticket Agent, Toledo, O.

[901]

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents. Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $5.00.

Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

☞ All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,

110-116 Locust.

Box 2898, St. Louis, Mo.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

☞ Address

THE INDEX,

Toledo, Ohio.

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $2.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

THE RADICAL is published monthly at $5.00 a year. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield street, Boston. Send 50 cents for a Specimen Number. 73:1f

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 28 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,

Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

JUNIOR UNMASKED! or, THOMAS PAINE the author of the "Letters of Junius" and the "Declaration of Independence." A DEMONSTRATION. Royal 16mo. pp. 328. Price, $1.50. Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

Address JOHN GRAY & CO.,

112-3m* P. O. Box 289, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS," by Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. ☞ For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-122.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 20

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 40

Each Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,

[23-38] 19 PINE STREET, BOSTON.

CHAPTERS

FROM

THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Uddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pyramider, Talmuda, Bible, Philo Judeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epicurus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novalls, Renan, Tulliein, Milton, Penn. Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teaching and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,

Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."

The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an Introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

400 pages: Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address by

G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1300 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 408 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[125-131.]

Digitized by Google

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JUNE 8, 1872.

WHOLE No. 128.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLERWOOD ARNOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CRENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
F. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Jesus as a Teacher of Morals.

A SERMON BY THE REV. CHARLES VOTSEY, PREACHED AT ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LONDON, DECEMBER 3, 1871.

"Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."
MATTHEW, VII, 12.

We may fairly concede that this was the key-note of the moral teaching of Jesus. It was the summing up of those fragmentary precepts which formed the bulk of his Sermon on the Mount, and it is no disparagement to him or to his wisdom to say that there was nothing new in this principle of conduct. It had been proclaimed before in other lands, and he himself admits that he finds this comprehensive law of duty in the Hebrew Scriptures—that this in fact is the sum and substance of all that had been already given to men as the Divine Commands. "This is the law and the prophets."

We may find reason to object to some of his precepts in detail; we may even produce instances from the narratives of his own conduct, in which he failed to fulfil this golden rule; but we cannot withhold our frank admission that, on the whole, Jesus was eminently a preacher of righteousness, one who studied in his own person the amabilities and courtesies of life, who tried to act the part of a friend and helper to all who needed his friendship and help, and who taught men to think far more about their duties in common life than about any religious profession or any particular creed. As illustrations of this, I would mention the parables of the Good Samaritan, and the Sheep and the Goats, and I could quote a great many verses from the Sermon on the Mount. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." "Let your light so shine before men that they may see—not your faith or orthodoxy—but your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, that ye may be the children of your Father in Heaven, etc." "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in Heaven is perfect." "Judge not, that ye be not judged." "By their fruits shall ye know them." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven;" and there is my text from the same source, "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, even so do ye unto them: for this is the law and the prophets."

I will not read the parable of the Good Samaritan, which every one must remember with approval, but I will call great attention to the parable of the Sheep and the Goats, as being one of our best weapons against the Christian faith as set forth in the Athanasian creed. If Jesus spoke this parable, he must certainly taught the doctrine of everlasting punishment, describing the Judgment Day and the separation into two classes of those who were to be welcomed into eternal life, and those who were to be condemned to eternal woe. Here, instead of Jesus making Creed the test of distinction—instead of his making any discipleship or personal regard for himself the condition of salvation, he passes all these Christian doctrines by, to expatiate on the lofty and eternal value of the merit of kindly offices between man and man. I will not spoil it by paraphrase, but read it to you verbatim. (The reader is here referred to Matt. xxv, 31—46.) This passage I venture to affirm is among the very strongest and most explicit, as well as among the least questioned of all the sayings of Jesus. Here you have him declaring his own plain belief in the devil and his angels, in everlasting fire, in everlasting punishment, and in all the horrors of a day of judgment, with himself as Lord and Judge presiding over the dread scene; and yet, notwithstanding all this tremendous support given to the darkest features of Christianity, Jesus says not a word about faith in himself, or in atonement, or in sacraments, or in any one of the things considered essential in Christendom—nay, he discourages the idea of any loyalty to himself being a title to salvation, but emphatically makes the destiny of each one depend on the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of some kindly service between man and man.

In the Sermon on the Mount there is a parallel passage:—"Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works? And then I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." With such texts before us, we cannot deny that the moral sayings of Jesus are in fatal antagonism with the central dogma of Christianity:—"He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

It would be unfair to the memory of Jesus to overlook what one may call the distinctive feature in his own life and teaching as regards our duty to the undeserving. His was especially a gospel of forgiveness, not only of the forgiveness of God, but of the forgiveness of each other. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father in Heaven forgive you," is the strain of many and many a warning. In his parable of the Two Debtors, he enforces this not only by making us sympathize with the unforgiven debtor, but also by showing the terrible punishment which overtook the servant who would not have compassion upon his fellow, as his master had had compassion on him. Seventy times seven are not too many times a day in which we are to forgive those who trespass against us. Can it be that this was the teaching of Jesus, when we find hardly one of those who call him Lord, Lord, even trying to carry out this principle in their dealings with disagreeable people, wayward and careless servants, and persons who have given them offence? We do find it practised occasionally, but the rule is, for the most part, "Never forgive any wrong you can punish." "It is a mistake," people say, "to be too lenient." "Those servants always take advantage of kindness, and will do worse if you don't scold or punish them." Such language translated into action one hears and sees in nearly every Christian family—such are the disciples of Jesus and believers in the New Testament.

Another feature of this same trait of character in Jesus was his friendliness with outcasts and sinners. Having spoken so recently on that point, I need not here repeat what I then said, but it must not be left out of the list of the teachings of Jesus, because it was emphatically his teaching by example.

Nor can we overlook the habits which called down upon him the reproach of the Pharisees, "Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners," and his conduct on the Sabbath. All this worldliness, if I may so term it, this practical rebuke of austerity and asceticism, has left its mark upon the world. Mendicant friar though he was, he still mixed freely among men, eating and drinking what came in his way, and not shunning the pleasures and entertainments to which he was invited. It may be fairly reckoned among his moral teachings, that we should use this world without abusing it, and prove our brotherhood with all men by sharing not merely their sorrows, but their amusements. I am not by any means in favor of levelling all class distinctions, even if such an insane project could be carried out; but I think that we have carried the principle of caste to its extreme limits, when we are able to go among lowly people in their sorrow, and weep with all that weep, and yet hold rigorously aloof from them in their mirth, refusing to rejoice with them in their rejoicings, and thus proving that our sympathy is not complete.

We cannot sympathize fully with others unless we are able to share in their amusements and mirth as well as in their distress. So striking a feature in the practical teaching of Jesus as this universal sympathy, is well worthy of notice.

He said much about humility, e. g., "He that exalteth himself shall be abased; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." And there is that famous episode in which he teaches humility by the presence of a little child. But I must confess I have hitherto quite failed to discover what Jesus meant by humility, or wherein his own humility consisted. Little children for the most part are neither humble nor proud; they are simple, frank and confiding—now and then not a little conceited, but when they are humble I do not know.

If, by humility, Jesus meant mere docility, teachableness, receptiveness, this is certainly the proper attitude for a child, who is surrounded by persons who are its natural guardians and teachers, and who, however ignorant, must know something more than the child itself. But inasmuch as this frame of mind is proper in the child, it is more or less improper in a man, who ought to put away childish things, and, among other things of this kind, a childish credulity which takes everything upon trust. Much is made of the humility of service—of ministering to others—as if such service could be humiliating. Why, those who have tried it know what an honor it is to minister to the wants of others, and how hard it is to keep themselves from being proud of it. I would reverse those words of Jesus, "He that is chiefest among you, let him be your servant," by saying, "He that is the truest servant among you, let him be reckoned as your chief." Measure dignity by merit, and merit by service. I find no humility here. Shall we find it in the master washing the disciples' feet? I throw not. Jesus is not the only one who has done this: many a mistress has washed the feet of her maid, and nursed her wounds with tender care, either from love or gratitude to a faithful servant, or from a proper sense of her duty to one who needed such service; and I do not suppose any such mistress ever had a thought that she was humbling herself by this proper and beautiful humanity. Think what the doctors and surgeons and hospital nurses have to go through in their service of the sick and wounded—often unpaid for—and then compare this with the ceremony of Jesus washing his disciples' feet. There is no humility here.

Some day I will preach a sermon on humility, but we cannot stop to define it now. I only repeat that I find much talk and no practice of humility in these narratives of Jesus. His expectation of his re-appearing in the clouds of heaven, and sitting on the throne of judgment to judge all the nations of the earth, is such a stain upon the simplicity of his character, that we cannot truthfully credit him with a genuine humility.

Common honesty leads me to touch upon another feature in his character closely allied to the foregoing, and bearing intimately on the subject of his moral teaching.

On several occasions Jesus is represented as engrossing a large amount of personal regard and attachment; nay, more, as claiming it and asking for it, promising rewards if it were granted, hurling threats if it were refused. "If any man confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man confess before the angels of God; but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father in Heaven."

In so many ways is this claim represented to have been made, that we can hardly believe that there was no foundation in fact for the reports. Your attention, however, is directed to it as one of the most striking blemishes on the character of Jesus. It was not enough that men should follow him about and listen to his words: they must sacrifice for him every other calling and duty in life. If they are fishermen, they must leave fish, nets and ships all on shore, and follow him. If they are sitting at the receipt of custom, they must give it all up and follow him. If they would fain come, but must first pay some tribute of affection to their anxious relatives—no, it will not do. He says, "If any man come after me and hate not (this is the word used and given by the inspired Luke) and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."

A man must not stay even to bury his own father, but must come at once, regardless of all filial duty and instinct, or not come at all. This putting a man's love of his own life above his love for his father and mother, and wife and children, explains a good deal of this inflated demand for an undivided attachment. Jesus was not only an unmarried man, but, if there is a grain of truth in the narratives, he was absolutely deficient in natural affection. He seemed to know nothing of the sacred force and tenderness of family ties. He was eaten up by a sort of passion for religious excitement; and his enthusiasm for this new kingdom over which he was to reign, and in the rule of which he was to be assisted by his own immediate followers, carried him into extremes of revolt against natural ties, which debar him, in my opinion, from being trusted implicitly as a teacher of morals.

It is of no avail to question the accuracy of his reported sayings, unless we cast aside likewise many of his reported actions. He is represented more than once as acting in an unkind, thoughtless, and even cruel manner towards his own father and mother and brethren. He could, at the age of twelve years, not only get away unknown to his parents, to their agony, but when told of their sorrow at losing him, he made no sort of apology, never uttered a word of regret, but only began to vindicate himself on the ground of a higher obligation; as though God in heaven ever did or ever would desire a child to keep its parents in mental torture for three days! He is often cold and distant to his yearning mother, and when she and his brethren pass near the door of the room where he is preaching, and desire to speak with him, he not only takes no notice of their request, but openly depreciates his attachment to them, saying, "Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? And he looked round about on them that stood by him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren, for whosoever doeth the will of God, the same is my mother and sister and brother." In other words, "I love quite as well as, and even more than, my own mother and family, those who follow me about to hear what I have to say."

The advocates of Christianity point to these passages as instances of Jesus's own declaration of his own superiority to human ties, i. e., he must have been God to have been so indifferent to his mother and relations. Now, if we must draw this inference, I for one decline to share any kingdom of heaven in which that will be the law. I decline to take Jesus—God or no God—for my guide, my Lord, or my master. I will deliberately take the whole risk, if there be any, of refusing to be saved by him, or to believe in his precepts, or to follow his example, if this indifference to, this trampling upon, family ties be part of the conditions of discipleship. I will say to those advocates, as I said in my lecture on the Bible, "If this Jesus be your God, then, in the name of all that is holiest in human feeling, yours is a God whom I will not follow nor believe in; whose every word on this subject I will disobey, and whose every guidance I will distrust."

We have heard to repletion the claim that women owe everything to Jesus; that it was due to him alone that woman has been elevated and raised. I have searched in vain for grounds of this claim in the New Testament narratives. If Jesus counselled aught about women, it was only to leave them alone, not to marry if we could help it; and St. Paul follows in the same strain, exalting celibacy and depreciating marriage. The useful domesticated Martha, with her thoughtful hospitality, is rebuked for being cumbered with much serving, while the idle Mary, who sits with her hands before her to hear him talk, is praised to the skies. This and such tales do not tend to the elevation of women, or to the exaltation of their household duties.

We owe the elevation of women to the Western and Northern races, as contrasted with the Eastern ones; to the love of home and family; to the sacredness in which domestic harmony is held by Teuton and Scandinavian, and whose mission it was to oppose and supplant polygamy by the higher institution of one husband to one wife, the advantages of which have been felt and adopted by all Eastern races who have dwelt among us, and who are now quite as remarkable for domestic purity as those people who have been monogamists from the beginning. Woman's elevation, not one whit more than the abolition of slavery, owes anything whatever to Christianity. It is the family principle which has done it all, and which has yet a glorious career of reformation before it. The family principle, which Jesus undervalued and knew nothing of by experience, is going now to revolutionize not only many of our customs and habits, but is destined to sweep away all forms of tyranny and wrong; is teaching us all that is highest in our conception of God, all that is purest in our duty to man; and is undermining more and more, day by day, the cumbrous, obstructive and repulsive mass of the Christian Faith; it is the very deadliest foe to priestcraft and superstition, while it is the heart and life of all true religion and morality.

A CHILD'S IDEA OF PRAYER.—Little Nellie, who was only four years old, no sooner saw work laid aside than she ran to her mother's knees and claimed a seat there. Mrs. Lee lifted her to her lap, and went on busily thinking of her duties and cares, while she rocked herself and Nellie to and fro.

For a time Nellie amused herself very quietly by winding a string in and out through her fingers; but presently she began talking to herself in a low tone:—"When I say my prayers, God says, 'Hark, angels, while I hear a little noise.'" Her mother asked her what noise was that.

"A little girl's noise. Then the angels will do just so (shutting her mouth very tight and keeping very still for a moment), till I say amen."—Eliza Burritt.

THE CHRIST OF MIRACLE.

[An Essay by A. J. Grover, read before the "Free Conference," Earlville, Illinois, May 15, 1878.]

Men individually, nations collectively, and man generally, live two lives; one actual, the other ideal. The ideal is a prophecy of the actual. The truer the ideal, the swifter and surer the feet are to overtake it. Thought must precede the act; but if in a direct line the hands follow, the ideal will the sooner become the actual. The ideal of men must ever keep more or less in advance of life. The house or ship or store you would build must be built first in the brain, before it takes shape to other eyes and brains.

The collective or national ideal, also, must always precede collective or national work. Every form of government, of worship, of ecclesiastical organization, is the more or less perfect realization of what has been the collective ideal of men.

Plato's Republic may be taken as the Greek ideal of a perfect human government or society, reproduced in the mind of Augustine, Sir Thomas More, and Fourier, and at length imperfectly realized by Washington. Our Republic is the faint realization of the Utopia of More, or of Augustine's "City of God." The Catholic church of to-day is the organized, amalgamated ideal of Moses and Paul.

The gods of the Greek mythology were nothing more or less than the Greek ideal of enlarged and perfected manhood. Confucius stands for the Chinese conception of manhood; Buddha for the ideal man of the Hindu; Christ for the ideal man of the Christian world. If we brush away the cobwebs of unworthy superstitions which the church has allowed to gather about him, we have all that is valuable left—the ideal manhood of Jesus. For it matters little whether he was actually equal to the character we attribute to him, or not. It is enough that he is the ideal man of our time, into whose likeness men aspire to grow.

The ideal of a people is at once the prophecy and measure of its future. But it is a curious truth that the incarnation of the collective ideal, as well as the individual ideal, should almost invariably be sought, not in the future, but in the past, in some man or society supposed to have been miraculously born or favored of the gods, or of God, as the case may be. Not only in the mythologies and theological systems of the world do the gods and demigods stand for the human ideal, but the best men have stood for the ideal of the multitudes. Thus Plato, Homer, Paul, Shakespeare, Michael Angelo, Napoleon, Washington. These men, and a thousand others who might be named, in the loving admiration of their fellows have been surrounded by a halo of perfection not their own, and, though actual flesh and blood, have been made to stand for the collective ideal of the special excellences of character which they naturally may have represented.

Not one of them was nearly so great or good as his reputation. And this is due, not so much to false history as to the proneness of men to give their ideals a local incarnation and a name. In this loving exaggeration is sure evidence of the law of progress, and the prophecy that the future of man will be better than his past. This earnest cherishing of the ideal life is the formative power of the actual life. It is the sap which hardens into the thin layers of wood under the bark, and which constitutes the annual growth upon the tree of humanity. There are many years left for humanity to grow in, and there will yet be larger growths than Plato or Jesus. Out of the ordinary human nature of man, the best examples of which, in the glow of our veneration, we call divine, have grown all the greatest and best men and women in the world, or who have ever lived. And it is a grand faith that actual examples of living men far transcending our best ideals will yet be born in the future of humanity.

If this is reasonable, why then should we not be content and hopeful? Why this everlasting feverish craving after the miraculous? Why this everlasting running back into the depths of pre-historic ages? Why should mankind forever reverse the order of Nature, and seek gardens of Eden and ideal men in mystery, miracle and fable, when Nature, Law, and the boundless Future are so big with infinite possibilities? Why should not men be able and willing to account for a man on natural principles? All prodigies in Nature we readily refer to law. Any wonderful growth below the human we attribute to the laws of growth and hereditary descent. Indeed we are not wholly unable to account for a great painter, orator, or captain. When such a prodigy appears, we inquire who his mother was, and are satisfied. The explanation is tolerably clear. But when a wonderfully illuminated religious man is born, we are puzzled and confounded. Our philosophy is at fault; our scientific knowledge is inadequate; and we conclude that the ordinary laws of parentage and development must have been suspended. We ignore all law; we go outside of law to account for him. Instead of bracing up our intelligence to grapple with the problem, we abandon both faith and reason, and, like helpless children, fall back into the thick darkness of a pre-historic age—the darker the better for our method. Then we shut our eyes, stop our ears, silence reason, and exclaim:—"A miracle! a miracle! This man had no human paternity. He was conceived by a virgin of the Holy Ghost. He is not like other men. He is divine. He was sent from God. He is his only begotten Son. He had a special mission. He is our master. His teachings are infallible. His example is perfect.

His life was without a flaw. Let all men everywhere, now and henceforth, shape their ideal according to his ideal, and let their lives conform to his model. Let no man question. Let all men believe or be damned." And so on to the end of the chapter.

Suppose this kind of talk should be applied to other prodigies than spiritual prodigies, how all the world would reply in derision! Suppose, when a California pine was discovered two hundred feet high and large enough inside the shell at the base for a circus tent, men had held up their hands and cried:—"A miracle! A miracle! God created this pine outside of law!" Or suppose, when Dexter flew over a mile-course with a little man on his back, in 2:14 $\frac{1}{4}$, men had said:—"See the miraculous horse! The ne plus ultra of equine perfection and speed!" How the church would have been amused at such ignorance and credulity! It would have told you to study the possibilities of climate and soil, and the famous Hambletonian blood. The followers of Dr. McCosh would even offer to contract to furnish you with as many Dexters as you have money to pay for, if you can wait the sure and certain result of the laws of hereditary descent.

Again, suppose when blind Tom plays the "Mount of Olives" on Clickering's grand piano, without having learned the music or the use of the instrument,—or when Colburn or the boy Safford added six columns of figures at once,—we had attributed these prodigies to miracle, or "miraculous birth," or "Divine inspiration," and had insisted that these henceforth and forever shall be the example of man; that nothing better shall man ever do; that men's ideals of music and of mathematics shall forever halt at these examples; that, if you would learn mathematics, Colburn must be your infallible authority; that you can never hope to find a flaw in his numbers, or learn anything worth knowing which he did not teach. Or suppose, if you would learn music, we should say:—"Go sit at the feet of Blind Tom. You may never question his methods. You must count his discords divine harmony. You must never believe in your own ears nor rely on your own genius. You must implicitly believe in Blind Tom. It is only through him that your musical soul can be improved or saved." What reply should we get but laughter? The world of to-day accepts no miracles save only in aid of religious creeds and dogmas and tables. And the reason is that the fog and darkness of superstition have hung heavy and thick over the religious world, long after sunrise in other directions.

In a scientific or business point of view, we accept nothing on trust. In these directions we let reason have unlimited freedom, and we do not hesitate to abide by its decisions. Why otherwise in religion?

But let us consider this question of the need of a miraculous Savior a little further. How did it happen? (The question is addressed to reason, and not to theology.) Was God driven into a corner? Was he frustrated and bewildered? Was he disappointed and perplexed? Was he compelled to resort to a make-shift? Did he create the universe, so vast, so wonderful, and does he hold it in the hollow of his hand and perfectly govern it by fixed law, and was he baffled only with the moral nature of man? Did he, on trying the experiment, that this department alone of all his works could not be managed by fixed law? Did he find it necessary to perform a miracle to correct, and set right, and regulate this one wheel in the human machine? Was God really compelled to finish up his work, as the carpenters say, by the scribe-rule? Or, as the lumbermen say, was it necessary for him to back up for a new hitch?

Answer me who can, why God did not find it necessary to have a miraculous salvation or corrective for some other part of his work? In all the links from the monad to man, from the sponge backward to the floating nebulae or star-dust, and forward through a million forms to man, and through all the faculties of man's physical and mental nature; through his body, and through his head, and through his heart, until we reach his moral and spiritual faculties, God had no difficulty. He was equal to the task of making all things work according to general laws. But our teachers tell us that just here, and here alone, God was unequal to the work and was baffled; that the machine would not work until a miracle was wrought to cure it.

The mischief is that the machine runs no better after the alleged miracle than it did before. God has been, on the theological theory, headed off and beaten in both directions. A second great miracle is now necessary to make the first a success. Or perhaps he will be compelled to re-make man out of whole cloth. But the world is rapidly outgrowing the old notions of miracle. Time was when men supposed that miracle-power was belied most of the manifestations of Nature, from the rolling thunder to the plaintive moaning of the wind in the lattice, from an eclipse to the falling drop of rain; but all these things are now known to be the effect of causes well understood. The great truth is slowly dawning upon the world that God never wrought a miracle; that the great machine of the universe works well, and always worked well, in all its parts, one as well as another, and every part according to law; that God has always been master of the situation; that he deals in no patchwork; that his garments are whole—no threads rotten, no shoddy, no colors fade, no buttons fly off; that God's universe, from man to monad, is a success, infinitely beyond the power of the human intellect to find a flaw in. This being the fact, it never was and never will be necessary to have a "miraculous Christ;" and therefore a miraculous Christ never existed and never will exist.

No process of reasoning which does not triumph.

antly reach this conclusion can be constructed without dishonoring God, shocking enlightened veneration, and slandering human nature. For if a miraculous Christ was, or is necessary, then we must conclude that God found his work unsatisfactory, which is most derogatory to him. If man needed this "crutch" of Christ, and could not stand alone without it, then is he deformed and malformed, and the most unfortunate of all the works of God. Hence I say such a theory dishonors God, shocks veneration and slanders human nature. The consolation however remains, that God made human nature, as well as every other part of his work, all right. Theological attempts to teach God how to mend his work, or to sow distrust of his infinite power and perfection, are blasphemous and wicked. Human nature no more needs a miraculous man for a teacher or a savior than any other animal in Nature needs a miraculous specimen of its kind to enable it to work out its true destiny. Man needs no miraculous Christ to teach him religion, any more than birds need a miraculous bird to teach them to sing, or stars need a miraculous star to teach them to shine, or flowers a miraculous flower to teach them to bloom. Man no more needs a miraculous religious man, than he needs a miraculous musical man, or a miraculous mechanical, mathematical, or scientific man. Men can find their own way in religion as well as in science; and it might be said that they can find their way in religion only as they find it in science. Both paths lead the same way, and terminate at the same goal. God has given man the necessary religious faculties, perceptions, emotions, intuitions and reason, to enable him to find out for himself, without the aid of miracle, all that it is good for him to know in a religious direction.

Suppose we should insist that Columbus or Cortez had been miraculously sent of God to pilot the way to the Western world. No churchman would now pretend that such was the fact. And yet, when these pioneer navigators first appeared to the natives of America, they were regarded as super-human by the untutored savages. These men, with their ships and fire-arms, were as gods to the aborigines of this country. They believed this as profoundly as Christians believe the story of the miraculous Christ, and the special mission with which he is supposed to have been commissioned by the Creator.

In a word, this is what the rational man thinks of Jesus.

As a miraculous character, as the Messiah of the Church with the mission which the Church has attributed to him, he is a myth and a delusion. As an ideal or real example of human unselfishness, kindness, gentleness, love, charity and spiritual illumination, no words can exaggerate his value to our race.

CATHOLICISM AT WORK IN AMERICA.

[From the San Francisco News Letter, May 11.]

A raw and rabid Catholic priest has been creating a sensation by predicting that the Catholic Church would be the controlling power in the United States within fifty years. He bases his prophecy upon the growth and power of the Church in this country during the past fifty years. As this mitrailleuse of bigotry has been firing his theological shot and shell into the enemy's camp from his stronghold in New York city, we have been at pains to discover what the Catholic influence there has done to merit this prophetic puff. Our search presents the startling fact that the sectarian power of Catholicism has had such a tremendous influence upon the Legislature of the State of New York that during the years 1867, '68, '69, '70 and '71 that body granted to Roman Catholic schools over a quarter of a million of dollars. For the five years mentioned the Legislature appropriated $2,031,000 for the use of sectarian schools, charities or churches. In securing appropriations for charities and churches, the Romish Church has had the lion's share. All this money coming out of the common fund in the Treasury—a tax levied upon the people at large—was principally applied to building up Catholicism in the city of New York. Our reading goes to prove that in Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago, San Francisco, and all the other great cities of the Republic, facts and figures are of no less extraordinary character in regard to the influence and power of the Catholic Church in American politics. The ecclesiastical representatives of the Historical Harlot proudly claim that there are now 10,000,000 Catholics in the United States, or over one-fourth of the population. We will admit the estimate to be a correct one. This immense army of fanatics, inflamed by infallibility, is capable of destroying, and means to destroy, free thought in this country, if we cannot build up barriers powerful enough to save ourselves. Free thought is the essence, life and soul of Republicanism, therefore Catholicism means, as it has always meant, to overthrow, strangle and destroy Republicanism or Democracy. These isms are deadly enemies; they have never been reconciled and never can be. Catholicism means eternal darkness to the human mind; Republicanism, search after eternal light to the human mind, liberty to the human soul. In this conflict, which is the real "irrepressible conflict," the priestly dictators know well what a tremendous power they have in their hands to carry out the Jesuitical plans. They will be cautious but unscrupulous in using the means to the end. The organization of the Catholic Church is, in fact, more powerful and despotic than any military organization that ever existed. The enlistments in the Church are for life, and even the soul is condemned or assigned to heaven, hell or purgatory, according to the fancy or dictation of the priestly dictator. Like Procrustes, the savage robber who placed his captives on a couch, and, if too short, stretched them out, if too long, cut them off to fit it, these priests cut and mangle the "immortal soul" so as to fit it to heaven, purgatory or hell. From the womb to the grave the priest never quits his grasp on his victim. Body and soul are mortgaged to the Church. The terrible evils which arise from this monstrous religious slavery have been written over and over again. Among the most iniquitous and inhuman were the tortures and butcheries of the Inquisition. To read the brutalities of the Inquisitorial Fathers is to make the blood freeze in the veins, appall us with the enormity of their crimes, or arouse us to cry out—vengeance upon the human fiends! The old adage that "history repeats itself" is fatally true in regard to the ecclesiastical tyranny of Catholicism. Should this tyranny ever gain a controlling power on the American Continent, we will have stakes and racks and tortures. The tiger does not change his nature, nor does the Historical Harlot her animus. Is there any Protestant religious power able to cope with this gigantic power of Catholicism? Not one. Protestantism means disintegration, dissolution. It is already divided up into innumerable sects, each warring for mastery against the other, while Catholicism wars against all of them. Besides, the Protestantism of to-day does not satisfy the American heart. There are several millions of free thinkers in the United States who have fallen out of the Protestant ranks, some of them open and bold advocates of free thought in its fullness; others are patiently waiting for something which will satisfy their cravings. This disintegration of Protestantism will continue until the free-thinking element in the United States is strong enough to proclaim itself a power. Then will spring forth, as in all ages, a man for the occasion—a mighty man to organize and direct this mighty agency. Ideas which we dream not of now will be proclaimed, and the hearts of the people, mellow and ripe for the seed of the new ideas, will germinate and fructify them into life. The coming man, in the eyes of the New Letter, will be the center and soul of all the religious and political systems which have ever existed. His soul will be the reservoir containing the universal thought of the past ages; whatever is pure, noble and elevating in the past he will embody in the present. As thought controls the world, and as he will be the embodiment of all thought, it follows that the ideas he represents must conquer. His voice will be as a tempest and a whirlwind to sweep over the heat of the nation. He will be the personation of a Confucius, a Buddha, a Christ, a Mohammed, and all the other heroic souls who have filled the world with their heroic acts. In a word, he will be the "beautiful hero" of the Hindu sages, who is to be the all of humanity. Between the power he represents, which is the soul of freedom, and Catholicism, which is the spirit of slavery, lies the true irrepressible conflict. We are being prepared for the war; yes, in the midst of our selfishness, and our struggle for gain, pleasure and pride, the hand of destiny is shaping and moulding us ready for action. We need have no fear for the future. The triumph of universal ideas, like the irrevocable law governing the universe, is certain, immutable.

CATHOLICISM AT WORK IN EUROPE.—Just now it has the appearance as if Bismarck had withdrawn again to the solitude of rural life in order to gather strength for a new contest that looms up on the horizon. Rome and the Jesuits are the objects that keep prime-ministers and chancellors of European governments busy. The hand of peace stretched out by the German minister, in the appointment of Cardinal Hohenlohe, has been rejected, against the advice of Cardinal Antonelli. The Jesuits have complete control of the Pope's ear, and they are bent upon bringing on a contest for life or death. Meanwhile, the imperial Government, nothing daunted, proceeds energetically to disarm the ultramontane agitators, and to strengthen the hand of its liberal friends. Measures are proposed to expel the Jesuits from the German empire, to place all religious orders under close surveillance of the State, and to present a bold front against the machinations of the clerical forces.—Jewish Times (New York)

A Yankee having told an Englishman that he shot, on one particular occasion, 999 snipe, his interlocutor asked him why he didn't make a thousand at once. "No," said he; "it's not likely I'm going to tell a lie for one snipe." Whereupon the Englishman, determined not to be outdone, began to tell a story of a man having swum from Liverpool to Boston. "Did you see him yourself?" asked the Yankee suddenly. "Why, yes, of course I did; I was coming across, and our vessel passed him a mile out of Boston Harbor." "Well, I'm glad ye saw him, stranger, cos yer a witness that I did it. That was me!"

THE TRUE RING.—A characteristic specimen of the hearty sympathy of the rough and ragged newsboys of New York was given by a few of them who contributed ten dollars in pennies, five-cent pieces and ten-cent stamps, for the relief of Chicago sufferers. As they handed over their costly gift to the chairman of one of the Relief Committees, their spokesman said:—"Here, boss, is our stamp. We hain't got much, but we likes to do a little for Chicagoer now she's busted up."—Christian Weekly.

That compositor has his own way of punctuating and spelling, and this is the way he treated a familiar passage of scripture:—"The wicked flee, when no man pursueth but the righteous, is bold as a lion."

CHURCH VS. DISTILLERY.

Some years ago, the rich proprietor of a distillery in Canada (no matter in what part of it) erected a church in the neighborhood of the distillery, to which (the church, not the distillery) he gave the name of Saint —. So far he was to be praised. But, unfortunately, forgetting that "humility" is an indispensable ingredient in all true religion, and not recollecting the divine precept, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," he caused to be affixed over the principal entrance of the edifice dedicated to God, this inscription, dedicated to himself:—"Thomas — (we omit, of course, his surname) built this church at his own sole expense." A wag, passing by, remarked it, and gave birth to the following effusion:

"A lover of wealth a distillery built,
But, knowing 'twould plunge wretched creatures in guilt,
And fasting to leave their poor souls in the lurch,
He near the distillery built, too, a church;
Thus nicely with good conseribalancing evil,
And placing a saint as a check on the devil.
"The cost of erecting the church was his own;
But as merit is nothing unless it be known,
And he was unwilling time's process to wait,
He caused a large slab to be put o'er the gate,
With these words (very plain to the vulgar sense)—
"Thomas Cash built this church at his own sole expense."

"A teetotaler, who by both buildings had passed,
And indignantly mused at the strange contrast,
One dusky night to the distillery went,
And, on plucking the rich self-flattering beast,
Scrabbling over the gate, with a piece of charcoal,
"Thomas Cash built this place at the expense of his soul."

These lines getting wind, down came the inscription, and was replaced by a quotation from Scripture, taken from "Hebrews, XX." This change, although for the better, did not place the distiller (who was also a brewer) in a state of perfect security, for another wag, on passing the same way and remarking it, exclaimed:—"Ha! the old fellow has an eye to business, even on Sundays, for he advertises in his church that 'Hebrews XX,' (he brews double X.)—Exchange.

A donkey, the other day, stubbornly refused to come out of a boat which had brought him across the Mersey; at last, after many kicks had been applied, and other persecutions of that kind, a man stepped forward, addressing him affectionately, "Come along, brother"—and the donkey obeyed at once.—Hutchinson.

A New Haven landlord who lately presented his bill for rent to a tenant, an M. D., was led into his private office and shown a skeleton, with the remark,—"That man came in here just two weeks ago with a bill." He was startled, but quieted down a little when told that "he could be excused for this time. But in future!"

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the OROON, in the new BRASS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WHEELER OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending June 1st.—A. Bonert, $10; E. B. Morrill, $2; Francis Dykes, $2; Mrs. W. W. Perkins, $1; N. Douglas, $1; A. U. Thomas, $1; A. C. Mann, $2; Daniel G. Grandon, $2; Geo. Lieberknecht, $2; J. T. Blakeney, $1.50; G. S. Dillon, $2; Rev. A. W. Stevens, $2; Thomas Tasker, $2; Daniel White, $2; J. C. Ochiltree, $2; H. H. Hastings, $2; Merritt Pockham, $2; John Stephens, $2; J. B. Briggs, $1.50; G. G. Corwell, $2; C. W. Blackwell, $2; C. W. N. T. Dickenson, $2; Dr. C. W. Eastbrook, $1; Chas. M. Weatherby, $2; Miles J. Dunham, $2; Marion Hoyt, $2; Oscar Koon, $2; D. C. Proctor, $2; Joo. E. Haynes, $2; H. L. Green, $2; Mary E. VanRensselaer, $1; T. H. Evers, $1; Wm. A. Jenkins, $1; W. L. Taylor, $2; Ernestine L. Ross, $2; Josiah Fowler, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittance acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

RECEIVED.

THE ENGLISH LIFE OF JESUS. By THOMAS SCOTT. Published by THOMAS SCOTT, Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate, 1872. 16mo. pp. 849.

THE REASONER: A SECULAR AND CO-OPERATIVE REVIEW. Edited by GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. May, 1872. [London.]

THE MANCHESTER FRIEND. May, 1872. London: P. BOWEN KETTO, 5 Bishopsgate Street Without.

THE MEDICAL RECORD. A Semi-Monthly Journal of Medicine and Surgery. May 15, 1872. [New York.]

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH. A New Monthly devoted to Health on Hygienic Principles. July, 1872. S. R. WELLS, 330 Broadway, New York.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL. June, 1872. JOHN E. MILLER, Chicago.

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE. Mrs. M. COMA BLAND, Editor. May, 1872. Chicago.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW ON THE APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS OF THE SENATE. Two PRINCIPLES OF CHARLES SUMNER. Against the Competency of the Senate Committee to Investigate the Sale of Arms to France: March 26 & 27, 1872.

CLAIMS ON ENGLAND—INDIVIDUAL AND NATIONAL. Speech of Hon. CHARLES SUMNER on the Johnson Clarendon Treaty for the Settlement of Claims.

PHYSIOLOGICAL THOUGHTS. By S. M. LANDIS, M. D. Philadelphia, 1872.

CHRISTIANITY: Its Origin, Nature and Tendency, considered in the light of Astro-Theology. By D. W. HULL. Baltimore: COSMOPOLITAN PUBLISHING CO., 136 W. Baltimore St. 1871.

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL ORIGIN OF JEREMIAH-GOD OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. By D. W. HULL. Chicago: BIRNEY HAND, 128 W. Madison St. 1872.

Poetry.

THE LOOK OF HAIR.

There seems a love in hair, though it be dead.
It is the gentlest, yet the strongest thread
Of our frail plant—a blossom from the tree
Surviving the proud trunk; as though it said—
"Patience and gentleness is power. In me Behold affectionate Eternity."

LEIGH HUNT.

The Index.

JUNE 8, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000.

SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 26, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. of each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MUMFORD, New Harmony, Ind.	One Share, 100
D. AYRES, JR., Brooklyn, N. Y.	" " 100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT, Danvers, Ohio	" " 100
" " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " "	" " 100
J. T. BRADY, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " "	" " 100
MAX PRACHT, Cincinnati, Ohio	" " 100
O. " " " " " " " "	" " 100
H. HATHELMANN, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
C. FOLSON, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
S. C. EASTMAN, Palmyra, Mo.	" " 100
J. O. MARTIN, Indianapolis, Ind.	" " 100
L. T. IVES, Detroit, Mich.	" " 100
E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.	Three " 300
A. FOLSON, Boston, Mass.	Two " 200
W. F. HARRIS, Dayton, Ohio	" " 100
HENRY COLT, Snep'n Bridge, N. Y.	One " 100
SAMUEL COLT, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
CHARLES NASH, Worcester, Mass.	Two " 200
" " " " " " " "	" " 100
S. F. WOODARD, Livonia, N. Y.	One " 100
H. A. MILLS, Osborn, Ohio	Two " 200
J. W. BARTLEY, Mt. Carroll, Ill.	One " 100
OSCAR ROOS, Dover, N. H.	" " 100
MRS E. S. MILLER, Taylor's Falls, Minn.	" " 100
JAS. R. STONE, Geneva, N. Y.	" " 100
D. K. INNES, Cincinnati, Ohio	" " 100
A. TAFT, " " " " " " " "	Five " 500
" " " " " " " "	One " 100
B. L. WILSON, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
PETER H. CLARK, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
G. E. WILSON, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
I. T. SUTTON, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WALT. F. AGNEW, Pittsburgh, Pa.	" " 100
MRS C. E. NOURSE, Cincinnati, Ohio	Two " 200
JAS. FISHER, Shreveport, La.	One " 100
G. H. HOLTMAN, Pittsburgh, Pa.	" " 100
L. VON BLESSING, N. Y. City	Five " 500
W. H. BOUGHTON, Brooklyn, N. Y.	One " 100
W. P. CHAMBERS, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
TITUS L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.	" " 100
A. MCD. YOUNG, Milwaukee, Wis.	" " 100
G. W. PECKHAM, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
C. T. HAWLEY, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WM. BECKER, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
MRS. G. D. NOURSE, " " " " " " " "	Five " 500
ROBT. C. SPENCER, " " " " " " " "	One " 100
C. M. LAWLER, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
E. R. LELAND, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WM. BLACKMORE, Palmyra, Ohio	" " 100
R. H. RANNEY, Boston, Mass.	" " 100
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York, N. Y.	Five " 500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY, Richmond, Ind.	One " 100
J. E. WHEAT, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JAMES SMELSER, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JOHN H. POPE, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
THOMAS DAVIS, Indianapolis, " " " "	" " 100
ALEX. METZGER, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
BERNARD LIEBER, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
CLARENCE VANHOOT, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
FRED. CHRISTMAN, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
HENRY SCHMULL, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " "	" " 100
M. R. DOOLITTLE, New Bedford, Mass.	" " 100
M. S. BEACH, Washington, D. C.	" " 100
L. S. BAON, Lawrence, Kan.	" " 100
C. ROBINSON, " " " " " " " "	" " 100
$50,000

Mr. Max Pracht, of Cincinnati, a spicy communication from whom has been in type several weeks, and at last gets into our crowded columns to-day, is authorized to act as our agent in any part of the country, and to receive subscriptions both to THE INDEX and to Index Association stock. At present he is travelling in the West, his latest letter being dated Leavenworth, Kansas; and we recommend him to all our friends with entire and unclouded confidence.

"Take my advice, honorable sir," said Mr. Yellowplush,—"listen to a humble footman; it's generally best in poetry to understand puffishly what you mean yourself, and to ignore your meaning clearly afterwards,—in the simpler words the better, p'raps." Let us extend the advice so as to include prose.

PROSPECTS AND WANTS OF THE INDEX.

On Saturday evening, June 1st, the First Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association was held, according to legal notice, in the Office of THE INDEX, 80 St. Clair street, Toledo. The Report of the Executive Committee was read and adopted, and the old Board of Directors was unanimously re-elected; after which the meeting adjourned. A printed record of the proceedings will be mailed to every stockholder as soon as possible.

So encouraging, however, are the prospects of THE INDEX, as shown by the Report, that it is judged best to lay some of the facts before the general public, as the most persuasive argument for continued and increased support.

1. The Index Association is entirely out of debt, and has a handsome surplus in the hands of the Treasurer.

2. The actual earnings of THE INDEX alone, exclusive of stock subscriptions and everything except bona fide subscribers and advertisers, have been $605.87 in excess of printing it since its publication was assumed by the Association.

3. Of the INDEX TRACTS designed for sale, 15,450 have been printed, of which 6,000 have been already sold. Moreover, of the Tracts designed for free distribution, 20,000 copies of "The Impeachment of Christianity" have been printed and already distributed; 14,000 copies of Mr. Pillsbury's "New View of the Fall of Man," 6,000 copies of "The Demands of Liberalism," and 2,000 copies of "The Sunday Question," by H. I. J., have also been printed and partly disposed of. The total cost of all these Tracts has been at this date only $12.23 greater than the actual receipts from their sale; and the value of the Tracts now on hand, for which there is a constant demand, is many times this amount.

4. With regard to the circulation of THE INDEX, the actual gain of new subscribers within the past seven months has been 2,800, including about 1,600 trial subscribers for short terms at half price; and it is more than likely that a very large per cent. of the above-mentioned trial subscribers will renew at regular rates. Many, in fact, have already done so, without waiting for the expiration of their trial terms.

We believe that the above simple facts tell their own story, and show far better than any words of ours could do that the publication of THE INDEX is a legitimate, healthy, and needed enterprise. The concluding paragraphs of the Report are as follows:—

"A few words in conclusion respecting the principles which have governed the Executive Committee in their action, and respecting the most urgent wants of THE INDEX in the immediate future.

"THE INDEX has a special reformatory work to do which is believed to be of inestimable importance. Its chief aim is humanitarian, not financial or in any sense selfish. The money subscribed for shares has been intended, probably in every case, to be devoted to humanitarian ends, with very little real expectation of any pecuniary return; and it should therefore be held and used most sacredly as a trust-fund for the furtherance of these ends. In short, THE INDEX has a special work to do, to which the making of profit should be entirely subsidiary; and this fact has been steadily kept in mind in the conduct of all our business. But in order to carry out these ends and perform this work, we have endeavored so to conduct affairs as to ensure the largest possible receipts at the least possible expense, believing that THE INDEX can never be a permanent and powerful institution until it has become beyond all question a complete business success. In this endeavor, we believe that we have made large progress since the Association undertook to publish the paper, as the foregoing facts clearly prove. Strict integrity, practical wisdom, and indomitable perseverance we believe to be the only road to a success that shall endure; and we shall endeavor to travel this road so long as the management of your interests is entrusted to our hands.

"In order to obtain a great circulation and be made acceptable to the average reader, THE INDEX needs to be enlarged by doubling the number of its pages, and to have a greater variety of contents. It will never push its circulation to the highest figure until these improvements are made. But they cannot be made without additional funds to work with. The cost of enlargement must be provided for with reasonable certainty before any change is attempted; and this will involve, not only the added expenses of paper and printing, but also the salary of an assistant editor. THE INDEX cannot be considered as other than precariously situated so long as the regularity of its issue depends entirely on one man's health; and it is earnestly desired that the entire stock of the Association may be taken, in order to enable us to guard against all such risks as this. With a good assistant editor and with the proposed enlargement, THE INDEX could not fail to reach a measure of prosperity far surpassing its present possibilities.

Respectfully submitted,
F. E. ABBOT, } Executive Committee
A. E. MACOMBER, }
P. H. BATESON, } Board of Directors."

With the foregoing statement now before the public, illustrating the manner in which the Directors of the Index Association are using the money so generously placed under their control by the stockholders, we believe that we are warranted in making an appeal to the liberals of the country for increased means. Of the $100,000 of the capital stock of the Association, nearly $60,000 have been already subscribed, and the remaining $40,000 are only two-fifths of the entire amount. There is abundant wealth in the possession of American radicals, far more than sufficient to subscribe this $40,000 with ease. If the preceding exhibit does not tend to create a well-grounded confidence in THE INDEX as the rising paper of the time, destined eventually to become the universally recognized organ of the most intense humanitarianism, the most advanced thought, and the most expansive religious aspiration of this country, it must be because the necessities of newspaper growth are very poorly understood. If any one considers the unpopularity of the extreme position occupied by THE INDEX in connection with these evidences of genuine vitality, he will scarcely fail to be convinced that the times are ripe for a more definite and pronounced radicalism than has yet appeared, and will at the same time appreciate the formidableness of the obstacles which THE INDEX has already overcome. Never were we more confident of the great possibilities of the highest usefulness opening before this journal. Never have we believed in THE INDEX as the true instrumentality of the new reform, as we do to-day. Its work is unique; it has a definite and special purpose of its own; it has struck the key-note of the future. Proofs multiply on every hand that its power is felt even by those who most affect to despise it; and we speak now to the free-minded and free-hearted with a faith in the justice of our appeal which rests no longer on dreams, but on facts. We have felt the actual beating of the people's heart, and we know that it throbs in deepest sympathy with the leading ideas of THE INDEX, however inadequately put. Despite all faults, deficiencies and imperfections, which are doubtless many, the little paper nevertheless stands for a great cause, interprets a great movement, and works for great results. Its task is only begun. Friends! we ask you to ensure its completion.

Will you not either take shares in the Association yourself, or use your influence to induce others to do so?

MORE PETITIONS.

The following lists of names to our Counter-Petition have been received since our last issue:—

Mr. Nelson Thwing, Akaman, Minnesota, sends seventy-three names; Mr. George Lieberknecht, Geneseo, Illinois, twenty-six; Mr. James M. Mercer, Zanesville, Ohio, sixty-eight; Mr. C. W. Wilcox, Keene, New Hampshire, thirty-two; Mr. E. H. Minot, Pulaski, New York, seventeen; Rev. A. W. Stevens, Cambridge, Massachusetts, twenty; Mr. Granville S. Dillon, Belmont, Ohio, thirty-four; Miss F. M. Clark, Boston, Massachusetts, thirty-seven; Mr. Joel P. Davis, Des Moines, Iowa, twenty-three; Mr. L. H. Lee, Hartford, Connecticut, twenty-eight; Rev. W. J. Potter, New Bedford, Massachusetts, twenty-eight; Mr. H. Kleindinst, Waller, Ohio, fifty-four; "H. L. B. B.," Ravenna, Ohio, sixteen; Mr. W. H. Crowell, Jefferson, Ohio, seventy-five; Miss Arethusa Hall, Northampton, Massachusetts, forty-three; Mr. H. W. Beach, Antrim City, Michigan, sixty-seven; Mr. Adolph Vogl, Boston, Massachusetts, forty-eight.

The total aggregate of names which we have thus far acknowledged as received at this office is more than THIRTY-THREE THOUSAND. The lists have already been prepared for presentation in Congress, and make a monster Counter-Petition eight hundred and sixty-eight feet in length. About two-thirds of the lists sent in contain double columns of names; but, reckoning these as only one-half of the whole, the entire list of remonstrants, if written in a single column, would be over thirteen hundred feet long—about a quarter of a mile.

Several liberal papers, having copied and circulated the Counter-Petition as first published in these columns, promised, as we stated at the time, to send their lists to be incorporated with the above, in order to give greater force to the protest by making it a united one. If any of our readers have been looking for acknowledgments of lists sent by these papers, we can only say that we have received none at all.

After announcing our intention of transmitting the remonstrance to Congress at this time, several friends in whom we place great confidence suggested doubts of the wisdom of this course. This long list of protestants against the Christian Amendment (though not yet so long as we hoped to have secured) has cost too much labor, both to our friends and to ourselves, not to be put to the best use. Wishing to have the benefit of the largest experience in such matters, we have ventured to ask the advice of Senator Sumner on the subject, and have been favored with a kind reply, just received. Mr. Sumner recommends that the remonstrance be held back till next winter; and we have concluded to adopt the recommendation. At present the interest of the country is absorbed in the presidential election; and as the present session of Congress is drawing to a close, and its necessary business demands all its attention, it is plainly the wisest course to postpone the presentation of the remonstrance till a more favorable opportunity occurs. There is no doubt that the "National Association to Secure a Religious Amendment to the United States Constitution" will hold next winter another National Convention; and that will be the best time to transmit our Counter-Petition.

For the present, therefore, we shall still retain it. During the summer and autumn we hope that the more earnest and far-sighted friends of the liberal cause will continue to solicit names, and we shall be very glad, as heretofore, to furnish petitions EXTRA to all who will use them. It will now be possible to increase the list greatly; and a new stimulus will be given to all such efforts when another Christianizing Convention is announced. We do not want to weary our friends with continual exhortations; but they will know without further words that we shall thank them personally for any exertions they may make to enlarge the number of signers to the protest. Such lists as may be sent in we shall acknowledge promptly, as hitherto; and if the grand total can be raised to one hundred thousand by December or January, so much the better for the cause we all have at heart. With grateful acknowledgments for all past services, we trust that quiet but persistent endeavors will still be made to make the remonstrance weighty and effective, and to remove from the liberals of America the stigma of torpidity and short-sightedness. Let us disregard equally the opposition of the fanatical and the sneers of the over-wise, and patiently work away to perform a service in behalf of religious freedom which our posterity will remember with lasting gratitude.

A hurried note from our good friend, Mr. Giles B. Stebbins, dated Boston, May 31, says:—"Free Religious meeting opened well last night. Amendment to Constitution, opening membership to all, of whatever views, passed with hearty unanimity, and very animated talking—all on one side!" We thank Mr. Stebbins for taking pains to send us this good news in time for this week's issue of THE INDEX: Mr. Potter will doubtless give us a more detailed report next week. It should be understood well, however, that the new Amendment does not "open" the door at all, but only points an emphatic finger at the door which has stood wide open from the beginning. Will the editor of the Christian Register, who has been more than just to us and less than just to the Free Religious Association, be so kind as to state frankly whether the Amendment now adopted does not clear away all doubt of the Association's fidelity to perfect freedom and perfect hospitality?

P. S.—Since writing the above, we have received a similar note from Mr. Potter, for which we are equally grateful. He will surely forgive us for letting our readers enjoy it also:—

BOSTON, June 1, 1873.

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

I cannot leave town without just announcing to you the safe passage of the amendment,—and not only its safe passage, but that it passed enthusiastically. I knew it would pass, and I did not anticipate any expressed objection, unless it was perhaps that the amendment was useless. But I did not anticipate so much positive demonstration in its favor. Several speeches were made for it, all without any reserve; and not only was there no dissent by vote, but every hand seemed to go up in the affirmative. The feeling was excellent. And we have had a good Convention. Ever yours,

W. J. POTTER.

BIBLE.

The announcement of Mr. Giles B. Stebbins' book, "Chapters from the Bible of the Ages," will interest many people as being the first considerable essay towards a new enterprise of great significance and boldness. I have not seen the book, and have now but a single word to say on the general subject, in advance of criticism. They who entertain the idea of a Bible of Humanity, and quote admirably texts from the sacred Scriptures of other religions than their own, are charged with undervaluing the Hebrew and Christian Bibles. This is a great mistake, and would be an unaccountable one but for the familiar assumption on the part of every nation that its own Bible is the only inspired one. This assumption, and this alone, offends the believers in Free Religion, and suggests the preparation of works like this of Mr. Stebbins. No doubt there is a desire on their part to vary the stately monotony of the Jewish Scriptures by introducing gems of religious thought and expression from other literatures—Persian, Indian, Chinese, Arabian, Egyptian. They contain thoughts that the Jewish sacred writings do not contain—thoughts deep as the deepest and pure as the purest, original in genius and profound in reach. For instance, the Dhammapada opens with this sentence:—"All that we have is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts, it is made up of our thoughts. If a man speaks or acts with an evil thought, pain follows him as the wheel follows the foot of him who draws the carriage." The successive sentences amplify the idea, and whole chapters are devoted to its illustration. Neither Old Testament nor New contains anything like it, yet all can see its importance and can appreciate its moral significance. Would not the incorporation of such passages enrich the Bible of Christendom? And if passages equally noble and fine can be found elsewhere, would not their introduction increase greatly the instructing and edifying power of our religious books? Few will deny—few thoughtful or reasonable people at all events will deny—that they would be exceedingly interesting and profitable. Grant that such fine passages are few, and must be culled out from much rubbish—that is nothing to the purpose; the fewer they are, the more choice; the less easily found, like diamonds, the more precious. A single additional pearl may give to the crown the last touch of brilliancy.

But it need not be contended that the religious literature of other nations would contribute original readings of spiritual truth, entirely new interpretations of moral experience. Suppose them to contain statements similar in purport to those written in our Bible, only expressed in different language or under new figures of speech, there are still excellent reasons for insisting on their recognition: this reason first of all, that the question of their recognition challenges the assumption that moral truth owes its validity to the locality in which it is found, not to any intrinsic quality of its own. It is this assumption that gives offence. Nobody that we ever heard of has denied that sentences grand as were ever penned are found in the Jewish and Christian Bibles; nobody is disposed to detract in the least from the glory of Isaiah, the majesty of Moses, the sweetness of the Psalmist, or the spiritual dignity of the Sermon on the Mount; in fact the rationalists have probably a juster intellectual appreciation of the literary wealth of the Bible than they have who never apply to the book the literary laws of judgment. Herder disclosed the beauties of the Hebrew poetry to hundreds of orthodox believers who had never read it with natural eyes. Nobody denies, so far as we know, that the number of noble things in our Bibles greatly exceeds that of similar things in other sacred books; indeed nothing is more obvious to an unprejudiced mind than the superiority of our Bible, as a whole, to the Vedas, the Avesta, the Koran, the writings of Confucius and Mencius. This, however, is not the point. The question is, are the moral sayings that are found in the Vedas, the Avesta, the Koran and elsewhere equally wise, true, inspired, with the moral sayings of the same import in the Bible? Do they proceed from the same source? Are they as worthy of being read from "sacred desks" on "holy days"? Do they contain and convey as much nourishment for the mind? They who say they do not must show why they do not. They who say they do must qualify materially their claim of supremacy for the Jewish and Christian Scriptures; must rest it rather on the ground of quantity than of quality; must concede the universality of inspiration; must regard the Bible of Christendom as only one fountain of the sacred literature of mankind; must revise their doctrine of revelation; must reconsider the questions of the genesis of religion, the fountain of religious authority, the title to pre-eminence of particular faiths and churches—in short, must adopt a new religious philosophy from the beginning.

These are the issues raised by volumes like this by Mr. Stebbins. Questions like these were no doubt in his mind when he meditated his compilation. It was a wish to give to them his own answer, and to provoke the answers of others, that carried him through the task of collecting and arranging his materials. The task may be well executed or not—that is of secondary consequence. The idea is the chief thing, and that should be clearly apprehended. Were Mr. Stebbins' book as faulty as no doubt it is excellent, it must contain that idea. O. S. F.

"SIT DOWN!"

Several years ago when Father Taylor was addressing the seamen in his Bethel, a man arose in the audience and began to speak.

"Sit down, sir," said Mr. Taylor, "I will do the talking here this afternoon."

"No," said he, "I will speak."

"You can't speak here to-day."

"I must speak."

"You can't speak."

"The Holy Ghost sent me here, and gave me permission to speak here to-day."

Father Taylor looked at him in his peculiar manner, and with a peculiar tone of voice said, "You will please give my compliments to the Holy Ghost, and tell him I say you can't speak here to-day. Sit down!"

The man sat down, and the Holy Ghost that was in Father Taylor appears to have done the talking the rest of the day without further interruption.

A radical seaman this, as well as a witty one. It is the seed, the cell-spirit of all radicalism. The fact that Taylor trusted to his own Holy Ghost rather than another's, stood up for his own and made the other "sit down," stamps him as a "radical," though Zion's Herald might not admit it. The sailor-preacher becomes a self-asserter in opposition to the authority of one who said—"the Holy Ghost sent me." We must therefore pronounce Taylor as bad a radical as Emerson or Abbot, Wasson or Weiss, Bartol or—we were about to say Beecher—but since his address before the Divinity students of Yale college we hesitate to rank Taylor with the great radical of Brooklyn. Said Beecher to these young men: "My first desire is to know what is true; and then I am very glad if John Calvin agrees with me; but if he don't, so much the worse for him." That is not only making Calvin "sit down" with a vengeance, but politely kicking him down the back stairs. Exit John Calvin. And how long before the other great authorities will go out? If Mr. Beecher dare tell John whose father was Calvin "to sit down," why may he not say the same to John whose father was Zebedee?

Father Taylor and Brother Beecher, and, in fact, most Christian preachers, do not fear to order any man to sit down whose Holy Ghost interrupts or contradicts them, if the man's name is Martin or Theodore, Ellery, Ralph or Francis; and why should they surrender the floor to men because their names happen to be Matthew or Mark, John or James, Paul or Peter? It is true these men were Jews; but are Jews better than Americans, or is their Holy Ghost higher in rank and authority? St. Paul was a brave man: an acute thinker and benevolent-hearted; not weak-headed, if he was weak-bodied. We respect and admire him notwithstanding he lived a celibate; but what was there about this man that the Holy Ghost of Truth which sends and inspires Beecher should humble himself before the Holy Ghost of St. Paul or any other saint?

Father Taylor, it seems, did not ask what the man's name was who tried to put him down with the assurance that "the Holy Ghost sent me here and gave me permission to speak." Who knows but that man was a second Paul, divinely commissioned to reveal a saving truth to a dying, sin-sick world? Perhaps Father Taylor committed the "unpardonable sin" in not listening to and obeying the so-disant messenger of God. Perhaps,—but the "perhaps" does not frighten us. We think people are in far more danger of committing an unpardonable sin by yielding the floor to presumptuous intruders from Judea, than in standing their ground and running the risk of "talking against time" and of flooring some inspired saint now and then.

Mr. Beecher says—"While I accept the work that God did by Calvin in the interpretation and systematization of truth, yet it seems to me that I have the same Lord Jesus Christ that Calvin had, the same Paul, the same John that he had, and nothing hinders me from looking right into their hearts and forming my own idea of what they were and how they felt, just as he did; with the additional advantage that I have in the light of hundreds of years' unfolding of the Christian Church, which he had not." True; and by virtue of the "light of hundreds of years" from the Church and the world, why cannot Mr. Beecher see, not only as well as or better than John Calvin, but as well as John, son of Zebedee, Paul of Tarsus, and even Jesus, son of Joseph? Why draw a charmed circle around Palestine and name it "Holy Land," or christen one book "Holy Bible," or accord to some score of men a special inspiration and authority, so that, whenever or wherever they rise to speak in Christian lands, every other voice shall be silent and every knee shall bow in humble confession of the supremacy of their particular Holy Ghost? We will listen to them respectfully and gladly, but rationally, when it is in order for them to speak; but when any one attempts to get the floor and rule us out on the assumption that "the Holy Ghost sent me here," we may not, like Father Taylor, give our "compliments," but we will say to him—"sit down." W. H. S.

"THE RADICAL."

With great regret we learn that the Radical will be discontinued with the number for the current month. First started in 1835, it has been ever since the organ of the best thought, noblest purpose, and finest spiritual life of the time; and the world owes not a little gratitude to the quiet, modest, and persistent unselfishness of its Editor, Mr. Sidney H. Morse. The Orthodox press will doubtless make the most of the demise of the Radical, and moralize anew over the impossibility of sustaining an "infidel" publication, forgetting how many Orthodox publications are born but to perish. We call special attention to Mr. Morse's advertisement on our last page. A considerable quantity of back numbers of the Radical will be disposed of at very cheap rates; and as they contain papers of great permanent value, we trust that they will all fall into the hands of intelligent readers. It would be a pity to have them sold for old paper. Do not neglect to send a dollar for many dollars' worth of the best literature.

The following "Petition for the Abolition of the Death Penalty," by Mr. Parker Pillsbury, is one of the sharpest and most amusing bits of satire that we have seen for a long time:—

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Ohio:

"The undersigned, citizens of Ohio, earnestly desire you, the Legislators of the State, immediately to revoke the Penalty of Death, as now due to crime, particularly as relates to woman, who, though a citizen, holder of property and tax-payer, has never voted to enact that nor any other law, being wholly denied the inestimable right of suffrage.

"But if the fearful penalty must still be executed on man, who makes the laws, then your petitioners ask that the execution, being the most solemn act ever done by man, shall be made wholly a Religious Service, and committed to the clergy. Provided always that no human being shall ever be violently sent into the dread realities of eternity, until, in the judgment of a clergyman of his choice, or of his nearest friends, he is fully prepared to meet them; nor until he shall have witnessed that preparation by receiving the ordinances of Baptism and the Sacramental Supper, thus becoming a member of the visible church; and that then the dreadful act of hanging shall always be performed by an ordained clergyman with appropriate Religious Services, and on the first day of the week, commonly called the Sabbath."

"Only light and vicious minds are made sceptical by an examination of the facts of natural science," says Rev. Edward Fontaine, Professor of Theology and Natural Science, in his recent book on—"How the World was Peopled." When did the Church ever treat free thought as otherwise than vicious? But the author of the above words ought to be "Professor of Theology and of Natural and Acquired Ignorance." The two departments of his professorship would then be no longer incompatible.

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCES IN EUROPE (D. Appleton & Co.), by Mrs. E. D. Wallace, author of "Strife, A Romance of Germany and Italy," etc. A solitary journey in England, France, Germany and Italy, narrated in a lively and superficial style,—with in fact an overstrained vivacity. But when one makes a special effort to please, it is good manners to be pleased; and traveller's chat about Paris, Dresden, Vienna, Venice, Rome, Naples, London, even if less edifying than meditations on the utility of the unattainable, is vastly more amusing. To those who take delight in such personal adventures as may befall an intelligent and unescorted lady in foreign lands, the book will have its attraction. Indeed, considering that "all good Americans go to Paris when they die," it is interesting to get news direct from Paradise, and to reflect that Shakespeare was behind the age when he talked of "the bourne whence no traveller returns."—Price $1.50; for sale by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

SPECTRUM ANALYSIS EXPLAINED, (Half-Hour Recreations in Popular Science, No. 3.—Lee & Shepard, Boston) is made up of extracts from Dr. Schellen's great work on the same subject, strung together with connecting remarks by Mr. Dana Estes, the editor of the series. Comparison of the diagrams and illustrations with those of the superb English edition of the original work before us reveals their relative inferiority; but they are nevertheless creditable to the American publishers. Enough is contained in this number of the series to introduce the subject to the reader; but its best service will be to induce him to have recourse to the complete work of Dr. Schellen, or to the scarcely less valuable, though less recent, one by Prof. Roscoe. The subject itself is of surpassing interest, and stands connected with the most wonderful discoveries of modern science, especially in the department of solar and stellar chemico-physics.—Price 25 cents. Sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

MONKS, POPES, AND THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES, by Mr. John Alberger, of Baltimore, is, in the words of the author, an attempt "to show that the Catholic Church is intrinsically a gigantic conspiracy against the liberties of the world—ingenious in its construction, opulent in its resources, extensive in its ramifications, and formidable in its character." In support of this proposition, he quotes history at considerable length, but probably with insufficient reference to authorities to satisfy unsympathetic readers of the accuracy of all his facts. The style is that of vehement invective; and while we think a more moderate manner would have made more converts, it would be difficult to indulge in denunciation of Romish cruelty, duplicity, and ambition so severe as to exceed the bounds of historic truth. The most terrible condemnation of Rome is the bare record of her career in some respects; and notwithstanding that justice requires a frank admission of the good she has directly or indirectly wrought (as wonderfully portrayed by the arch heretic Comte), it is impossible for any free-thinker to dispute the general soundness of Mr. Alberger's estimate of her. Not the least striking part of his indictment is his quotations of her own words, as pronounced by recognized Catholic authorities; and these show too plainly what Rome will do again if she ever regains her former power. Consider well the following citations, for instance:—

"Religious liberty is merely endured until the opposite can be carried into effect without peril to the Catholic world."—Bishop O'Connor, of Pittsburgh.

"If the Catholics gain, which they surely will, an immense numerical majority, religious freedom in this country will be at an end."—Archbishop of St. Louis.

"Catholicity will one day rule America, and religious freedom will be at an end."—Bishop of St. Louis.

It would have been a great deal more satisfactory if the author had given exact references to the original sources of these quotations. They justify, however, the utmost vigilance in view of the rapid relative increase of the Catholic population of this country.—Published by the author, Baltimore, Md.

THE WORLD BEFORE THE DELUGE (D. Appleton & Co.), by Louis Figuier, newly edited and revised by H. W. Brissow, F. R. S. It contains a very convenient and valuable "Table of British Sedimentary and Fossiliferous Strata," with a diagram of "Sedimentary Rocks" by the English editor; also a complete index of subjects, the absence of which is a serious deficiency in Figuier's books on the "Mammalia" and on "Primitive Man." The present volume is, like all the author's works, characterized by what might be called scientific sensationalism—which is a very different thing from endeavors to popularize science. The true science-popularizer does not aim to make science theatrical, or to minister to a craving for the startling and impressive, but rather to divest the subject of all unnecessary technicalities and details, to the end of imparting to the general reader a clear idea of the leading facts and principles which form the groundwork of the various branches of exact knowledge. Such admirable little compendia as Huxley's "Physiology," or Tyndall's "Light and Electricity," exemplify the true ideal in this direction. Figuier is an indefatigable compiler of results, without just claim to originality of research, but with certain mischievous hobbies of his own which detract not a little from the value of his books. He must needs defend the Mosiac account of the Noachian deluge, going so far as to say:—"Nothing occurs, therefore, in the description given by Moses, to hinder us from seeing in the Asiatic deluge a means made use of by God to chastise and punish the human race, then in the infancy of its existence, and which had strayed from the path which he had marked out for it." [p. 489.] All this is beneath criticism. It is just such puerile and trashy talk as this which makes atheism, and throws deserved contempt on what claims (but falsely) to be religion. The book, as a whole, is a useful one, as it enables any person of ordinary intelligence to arrive at clear ideas of the general development of the globe, and the true order of appearance of fossil species. Artificially considered, the wood-cuts are execrable; but the figures of restored fossils are generally correct, and assist the mind not a little in fixing their chief peculiarities in the memory.—Price $3.50, reduced from $5.00; sold by H. S. Stebbins.

YESTERDAYS WITH AUTHORS (James R. Osgood & Co., Boston) contains beyond all comparison the most charming chat about authors that we ever read. Mr. Fields was the junior partner of the well-known firm of Ticknor & Fields (now James R. Osgood & Co.), and as such came into close personal relations with many of the greatest geniuses of the age. In this handsomely printed volume of 350 pages, he records recollections of his intercourse with them, and publishes for the first time a large number of their most delightful letters. It is difficult to see just cause why Alexander Pope should be introduced into this company, since he died in 1744; and the author of this youngest and freshest of books will never convince his readers that his reminiscences reach back into the last century. A favorite portrait of the poet, in Mr. Fields' possession, appears to be the pretext for a few pages about him which are intrinsically very interesting. But it is the papers on Thackeray, Hawthorne, and Dickens which give the chief value to this treasury of precious memoranda. To their publisher and friend these regal spirits unveiled themselves as they did not to the public; and nothing more utterly fascinating can be found than some of their letters here preserved. To those who have enshrined Thackeray and Dickens in their hearts, and indulge themselves secretly in a little idolatrous love and veneration for the greatest masters of modern fiction, there are feasts of delight in the rich tables here spread before them. Seldom is such a reporter found for such sayings and doings. One would almost consent to be a "big bug" for the pleasure of being embalmed in such amber. Mr. Fields has absolutely conquered us, and we surrender at discretion. The critic suffers the ring to be put through his nose, and is led submissively by a flowery chain, not by reason of the strength of its links, but rather by the irresistible deliciousness of the perfume exhaled from the roses that compose it. For this book we have nothing but unqualified and unmitigated praise. Its style is elegance, brilliancy, humor, pathos, kindness itself. Even the not wholly concealed complacency of the writer at having such illustrious friendships to discourse upon never becomes offensive, for he proves himself thoroughly worthy of them by the delicacy of his appreciation and the transparent gentleness of his attachment. It is greatly to be hoped that Mr. Fields will record his recollections of the other great writers, especially those of his own country, with whom he has been intimately connected, even if the manuscript should not be published for many years. The world cannot afford to lose the pure pleasure of seeing them through eyes so observant, so faithful, and so affectionate, as his.—Price $2.50. For sale by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

LIST OF OFFICERS

OF THE CHRISTIAN AMENDMENT ASSOCIATION.

By special request, we republish the list of officers of the "National Association to Secure a Religious Amendment to the United States Constitution," elected at the Cincinnati Convention, February 1st, 1872. We copy from the pamphlet Report of that Convention published by the Association itself, which can be obtained by addressing Rev. T. P. Stevenson, 1405 North Eighteenth Street, Philadelphia.

PRESIDENT:—The Hon. Wm. Strong, United States Supreme Court.

VICE PRESIDENTS:—His Excellency, W. B. Washburn, Governor of Massachusetts (name withdrawn); His Excellency, James M. Harvey, Governor of Kansas; His Excellency, Seth Padelford, Governor of Rhode Island; the Hon. J. W. Mc Clurg, ex-Governor of Missouri; the Hon. W. H. Campbell, Lieutenant Governor of Indiana; the Hon. Wm. Murray, Supreme Court of New York; the Hon. M. B. Hagan, Superior Court of Cincinnati; Felix R. Brunel, Esq., Board of Indian Commissioners, Pittsburgh, Pa.; John Alexander, Esq., Philadelphia, Pa.; Chas. G. Nazro, Esq., Boston, Mass.; Thos. W. Bicknell, Esq., Commissioner of Public Schools, Rhode Island; James W. Taylor, Esq., Newburgh, New York; Prof. Taylor Lewis, LL.D., Union College, N. Y.; Edward S. Tabor, Esq., Boston; Russell Sturge, Jr., Esq., Boston; the Right Rev. Mantou Eastburn, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts; the Right Rev. G. T. Bedell, D.D., Assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio; the Right Rev. G. D. Cummins, D.D., Assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Kentucky; the Rev. C. S. Finney, D.D., formerly President of Oberlin College, Oberlin, O.; the Rev. F. Merrick, D.D., LL.D., President of the Ohio University, Delaware, Ohio; the Rev. Joseph Cummings, D.D., LL.D., President of the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.; the Rev. A. D. Mayo, D.D., Cincinnati; the Rev. T. A. Morris, D.D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, Springfield, O.; the Rev. J. H. McIlvaine, D.D., Newark, N. J.; Prof. O. N. Stoddard, LL.D., Wooster University, O.; the Rev. M. Simpson, D.D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church; the Rev. J. Blanchard, D.D., President of Wheaton College, Ill.; John S. Hart, LL.D., Princeton College, New Jersey; the Right Rev. John B. Kerfoot, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Pittsburgh; the Right Rev. F. D. Huntington, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Central New York; the Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D., Brooklyn; the Rev. Levi Scott, D.D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, Delaware; Prof. Julius H. Seelye, D.D., Amherst College, Mass.; the Right Rev. Charles P. McIlvaine, D.D., LL.D., D. C. L., Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio; the Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., President of Tufts College, Mass.; the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., Peoria, Ill.

GENERAL SECRETARY:—The Rev. D. McAllister, 410 West Forty third Street, New York.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY:—The Rev. T. P. Stevenson, 1405 North Eighteenth Street, Philadelphia.

RECORDING SECRETARY:—The Rev. W. W. Barr, Philadelphia.

TREASURER:—Samuel Agnew, Esq., 1196 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:—The Secretaries and Treasurer of the Association, ex officio; K. B. Sterling, Joshua Cowpland, John Alexander, Jas. S. Martin, the Rev. S. U. Wylie, D.D., Robert Taylor, Wm. McKnight, Thos. Walker, Phil. Brown, Philadelphia, Pa.; Henry Harrison, Robert E. Maxwell, William Neely, Walter T. Miller, Jas. Wig, Jas. Henry O'Neill, Geo. Silver, James Spence, Hugh Carlisle, New York; the Rev. Wm. S. Owens, Indiana, Penna.; D. Chestnut, Esq., Pittsburgh; Henry Martin, Esq., Cincinnati.

George Brinley said of Thackeray—"He could not have painted Vanity Fair as he has, unless Eden had been shining in his inner eye."

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

FREE-MASONRY AND ATHEISM.

MR. EDITOR:—

A Masonic trial lately occurred here which has attracted considerable attention and been a subject of conversation among Masons and non-Masons, Christians and Freethinkers alike. Dr. Benj. Nichols, a worthy citizen of this town and a member in good standing of the Masonic fraternity, was tried before his lodge on a charge of "unmasonic conduct." The specifications on which an attempt was made to sustain this charge were, briefly and substantially, that he "disbelieved the Scriptures of God"—that he had said "the Bible was a make-up of incredible stories"—that he did not believe on a Supreme Being as taught in the Bible nor in the immortality of the soul—and that he was industriously engaged in promulgating infidel sentiments as taught by Voltaire, Thomas Paine, and B. F. Underwood.

The accused admitted the correctness of these specifications; but that they furnished any just ground for the charge of "unmasonic conduct" he boldly denied. He went into the trial determined to make no concession, and to ask no quarter.

The argument for the defence was that Masonry has no right to meddle with the religious opinions of its members; that it in no way requires belief in the inspiration of either the Jewish or Christian Scriptures, in the God of the Bible, in a future state of existence, nor in any other doctrine concerning which differences of opinion prevail among intelligent and honest men; that Masonry, interpreted in accordance with the liberal and tolerant spirit of the age, allows men to believe as much or as little as accords with their reason; that a Mason may be a Jew or a Christian, a Pagan or a Mahometan, a Theist, a Pantheist or a Naturalist; that Masonry has no business to set up any religious standard, and it is the height of impudence to attempt to stretch an "infidel" brother on the Procrustean bed of the Christian theology.

After a trial lasting several hours, the question was submitted to the Lodge, and the accused was acquitted, the verdict being "NOT GUILTY."

When the charge was preferred, Dr. Nichols was told that there was no intention of reflecting on his character as a citizen and gentleman; but the main object was to test the question whether a man of his views could properly be a Mason. The affair was not confined to the Lodge, but was generally known in the community; and the merits of the case and the probable result were discussed among outsiders before the trial, with as much interest and warmth as inside of the Lodge. The bigoted and narrow-minded among the Christians, including some of the anti-Masons, hoped for the conviction of the heretic, as a punishment for the trouble and anxiety he was giving them by his avowal of liberal views and active dissemination of heterodox literature.

The manner in which the trial terminated will be gratifying not only to liberal-minded Masons, but to Free Thinkers generally.

B. F. Underwood, of Boston, appeared as counsel for Dr. Nichols, and conducted the defence during the trial. AN INFIDEL MASON.

WASHINGTON, Ill., May 25, 1871.

[Within the last four years we have several times declined to become a Free-Mason, chiefly because we were told that every Mason was required to profess belief in God in some sense or other. Although personally believing in God, we refuse to join any association from which any man is excluded on account of his theological opinions; and the door is shut to us which is shut to the upright atheist. Were we misinformed? Is an openly avowed atheist permitted to join the Free Masons? We invite brief, concise testimony on this point.—ED.]

SCENES FROM REAL LIFE.

NEWARK, OHIO, April 30, 1872.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Friend:—To-night finds me here, after having made the rounds from Toledo via Cleveland, Steubenville, Wheeling, and Zanesville, and having done more or less in each place for the good cause, meanwhile preaching INDEX incessantly and always. I was amused at a little occurrence on the cars between Toledo and Cleveland. I went through the train, giving to such as desired to read copies of the "Impeachment of Christianity" and the "Fall of Man"—among others to a long drawn-out specimen of an imported article of the Catholic Priest.

While engaged in conversation with a knot of liberals whom I found in the rear end of the car, some one tapped me on the shoulder from behind. Turning round, I beheld my friend of the black cloth, his otherwise ghastly face livid with rage. Holding in his hands the innocent cause of so much mischief, he tore it into a hundred fragments, and, stamping them under foot, he hissed out—"This is nothing worth, nothing worth!" and regained his seat amid the laughter of the passengers who had seen this act of impotent bigotry, and who evidently pitied the poor creature for his want of sense and lack of good breeding.

Since the above occurred, I have not met with any manifestations of that kind until to-day, when in the course of my business I entered the book-store of — & —. Having stated my business, I presented a sample copy of THE INDEX, and asked permission to send him a certain number of copies per week, to sell on our account.

In the course of the conversation upon the merits of the paper, I mentioned, as one of the qualifications which rendered it attractive to liberal thinkers of all kinds, that it "accepts every result of science and sound learning without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible." Upon this, one of the proprietors curtly informed me that "any paper which did not accept the truth of the Bible in all respects could not be sold from his counter." And yet he had exposed for sale such publications as the Days' Doings, New Varieties, and Sporting Times!

Now, Mr. Abbot, what do you think of these two manifestations of the spirit of religious bigotry,—the one emanating from the superstition which once trampled under foot the nations of western civilization, as its representative trampled upon the fragments of a liberal tract; and the other representing the more modern phase of the same superstition? The latter case is too contemptible for contempt. The man who will sell or expose for sale the papers I have mentioned need have no fears of being made any worse by reading THE INDEX, or destroying his chances of salvation by selling it from his counter.

Your friend,

MAX PRACHT.

UNJUST CHARGES AGAINST SCIENTIFIC MEN.

MR. ABBOT:—

Dear Sir,—I thank you for your defence of scientific men who are denounced for refusing to investigate the phenomena of Spiritualism. In "The Debatable Land," Robert Dale Owen condemns "the manner in which the magnates of science are wont to treat spiritual researches." "The ablest scientific leaders," he says, "abandon to untrained experimentalists an unpopular field. Or, if they speak, it is to give us prejudices only," that is, "opinions, however true, without weighing them against their opposites, however false." He makes an exception to this sweeping denunciation in favor of Crookes, and disregards the protest made against such denunciations in the opening address of the President to the Biological section at the last meeting of the British Scientific Association. Dr. Allen Thomson says:—

"It has been the habit of the votaries of Mesmerism and Spiritualism to assert that scientific men have neglected or declined to investigate the phenomena with candor and attention; but nothing can be farther from the truth than this statement." "Men of eminence, and fully competent, by their knowledge of biological phenomena, and their skill and accuracy in conducting scientific investigation, have made the most patient and careful examination of the evidence placed before them by the professional believers and practitioners of the so-called magnetic, phreno-magnetic, electro-biological, and spiritual phenomena; and the result has been uniformly the same in all cases, when they were permitted to secure conditions by which the reality of the phenomena or the justness of their interpretation could be tested—namely, either that the experiments signally failed to elude the results proposed, or that the experimenters were detected in the most shameless and determined imposture. I have myself been fully convinced of this by repeated examinations."

Similar convictions are the result of the investigations of numerous scientific men during the last thirty years. In proof I refer to the statements by Dr. Forbes in the Lancet, in 1844; and by Dr. Carpenter in the Quarterly Review for 1853, and in his "Human Physiology," 1855.

Such denunciation of scientific men does not sustain Mr. Owen's reputation for being "eminently fair, honest and charitable." Owen quotes Bichat to show that "an immense interval separates physics from the science of organized bodies; and that for that reason the latter should be treated in an entirely different manner." R. D. Owen says that both "are subject to fixed and universal laws; and the reality of both must be judged according to the same canons of evidence;" but if "the habits of rigorous investigation acquired by such men" as Faraday, Herschel and Liebig in the domain of physics, and "the same purely materialistic and unconditioned standards" are applied to investigations in the province of organic life, such men "are liable to go astray and to miss satisfactory results." He gives an illustration of his manner of investigating, of which he seems rather proud. He says of an apparition that seemed to be about the size of a small human hand without a defined outline, which floated about the room, and at his suggestion made raps at places named and touched his wrist, that, when asked by an aged friend of the medium if he was not tempted to grasp the hand, he replied that "one is not justified in doing so." The reason why he refrained he gives in a note:—"I have had communications to the effect that the spirit thus manifesting its presence suffers when this is done, and that a spirit would have great reluctance in appearing in bodily form to any one whom it could not trust to refrain from interference with the phenomena, except by its express permission. In my experiments I have always governed myself accordingly; and I ascribe my success in part to this continence."

We must wonder that any sane man can prescribe this as a rule of scientific investigation. As you say, it is the "sheerest farce."

R. D. Owen prefers the opinion of Bichat—who died at the age of thirty, to that of later eminent biologists who have spent longer lives in the same line of investigation. Prof. Lehmann, in his "Physiological Chemistry," 1850, says, that there is no essential difference between organic and inorganic bodies when exposed to the clear light of a rigid logic. Prof. Owen, in his "Anatomy of Vertebrates," 1863, says that the so-called vital forces are really chemical forces. What reasonable person can suppose that these magnates of science have not examined vital phenomena in every mode that reason has suggested? And their opinion, though opposed to Bichat's, comes with at least the weight of greater knowledge. Prof. Owen's investigations have led him to conclude that "spirit" does not exist apart from a "brain." He says this idea that all mental phenomena are the result of cerebral action is objected to as materialistic and adverse to the notion of an independent, immaterial mind or soul. What the objector means by "materialistic" he says he can find "nowhere intelligibly laid down," except that the objector means that the idea weakens the faith in a future life and the resurrection of the dead, which faith, Prof. Owen says, cannot be supported by experience, but rests solely on a divine revelation.

He complains that the endeavor of the physiologist to comprehend the function of the forces called "brain," is hindered and troubled by the baneful influence of dogmatic theology; but physiology has now established, and does accept as the truth, that all such terms as "life," "vital principle," "spirit," "soul," and "mind," are not distinct entities, but mere abstractions—mere names for our sensations and for the inferences we make respecting the nature of their cause. The term "life," he says, "is a sound expressing the sum of living phenomena," that is, of "modes of force into which other forms of force have passed from potential to active states, and reciprocally, through the agency of these sums or combinations of forces impressing the mind with the ideas signified by the terms 'monad,' 'moss,' 'plant,' or 'animal.'" The terms "spirit," "mind," or "soul," he says, are no "other than the personified sum of the psychological manifestations." In "my attempts to analyze all sensations and volitions, I know of nothing outside of myself of which I have any clearer knowledge by calling it 'material,' than I have of that which originates force from within myself, by calling it an 'immaterial' entity, mental principle, or soul." "Our ideas of things, without as within the 'ego,' are the action and reaction of forces as 'material' or 'immaterial' as the ideas themselves."

Prof. Owen says of the baneful influences like those which Robert Dale Owen is striving to perpetuate:—

"But it is a gain to be delivered from the necessity of speculating where the 'soul' wanders when thought and self-consciousness are suspended: or how it is to be disposed of until 'the resurrection of the body,' glorified or otherwise; of which re-integrated sum of forces 'soul' will then as now be a parcel. If the physiologist and pathologist had done no more than demonstrate 'the universal law of our being,' which cuts away the foundations of 'purgatory' or other limbo, from the feet of those who trade thereon,—not to mention the kindred baser brood of 'Spiritualists and Spirit-Rappers'—they would deserve the gratitude of the Christian world."

Yours respectfully,

JOHN CHAPPELLSMITH.

NEW HARMONY, Ind., May 19, 1872.

[The last quotation from Prof. Owen weakens his position, for it is discourteous to speak of the "kindred baser brood of Spiritualists." We must concede that such an expression betrays an unscientific prejudice, and does something towards palliating the injustice of which too many Spiritualists are guilty in making irrational complaints against scientific men.—ED.]

MR. HOWARD'S CRITICISM.

MR. ABBOT:

Nearly every number of THE INDEX contains evidence of your remarkable liberality towards your adversaries by copying their assaults upon your doctrines. Your last number furnishes a signal example of this in reprinting from the New York Christian Advocate an article by Rev. R. H. Howard. I frankly acknowledge, however, that, if this were a solitary instance, I should not ascribe it to a spirit of liberality, but should regard it rather as the dictate of sound policy, to aid you in the emancipation of your fellow-men from the thralldom of a hoary superstition. Mr. Howard obviously enters on his task of refutation with all his might. And how has he executed it? Not a word of logic, or even of sophistry. A recital of the great truths and principles you are laboring to propagate, each followed by a meek in brackets—that is all! That is all he seems to suppose his readers will require. What must be his estimate of their intelligence, we may readily infer. That will do, Master Howard. Eat your supper, and go to bed. A. C.

UTICA, 27th May, 1872.

A poetical person residing in the First Ward, has a porker of the female persuasion, which he has named Maud, because, as he says, she has such a tendency to "come into the garden." She does it, however, without invitation.—Toledo Blade.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, OR REPRESENTATIVE PASSAGES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and is the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents a conception of him that is worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testament. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, and no able, fairer, or more voracious in every instance; with references to the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. SHAFER. A very clear, polished, and able argument against the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Creed in the U. S. Constitution, —the list of its most prominent supporters, —and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
90 St. Clair Street, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL
FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address S. H. MORSE,
122-14 25 BROADFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

J. F. RUGGLES, BIBLIOPOL.
BRONSON, MICH.

All obtainable books furnished on short notice and at fair prices. Special attention given to filling orders for rare, curious, and "out of print" works! Regular importations from London.

We solicit the patronage of ALL, whether Free Religionists, Infidels, Spiritualists, or the rest of Mankind! 1231

"THE MASTER-PIECE OF A MASTER-MIND."
THE TRIAL OF THEISM.

By Geo. J. Holyoke, 12mo, 178 pp. cl.

"What I find to be Truth shall be welcome to me, let it sound as it may. I will know! And should this be impossible, this much at least I will know, that it is not possible."
—Fichte, (Author's motto.)

A balance in which the vagaries of all phases of Theism are weighed and found wanting. Just imported from London, postpaid $1.

Address—J. F. RUGGLES,
1864 Bronson, Michigan.

Back Numbers of the Index
FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. E. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, New York, N. Y.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA E. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN COONE, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

D. R. LOCKE,	Toledo, O.,	Twenty Shares,	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER,	" "	Fifteen "	1,500
C. COKE,	" "	" "	1,000
EDWARD BISSELL,	" "	Forty "	4,000
F. E. ABBOT,	" "	Ten "	1,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY,	" "	" "	1,000
GORDON MARK,	" "	" "	1,000
P. H. BATESON,	" "	" "	1,000
E. P. BARNETT,	" "	Three "	300
H. E. HOWE,	" "	" "	300
W. C. FISK,	" "	" "	300
J. M. RITCHIE,	" "	" "	300
V. KERN,	" "	" "	300
ALFRED WOOD,	" "	" "	300
WILLIAM KRAUS,	" "	Five "	500
J. G. HOLLEWARTH,	" "	One "	100
JOS. E. MARK,	" "	" "	100
C. AUGLAND,	" "	" "	100
ASA K. BUTTS,	New York, N. Y.,	Thirty "	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON,	New York, R. I.,	Five "	500
ALICE COOPER,	Franklin, Pa.,	Two "	200
GEO. BROADLY,	Cincinnati, O.,	One "	100
MISS A. HALL,	Northampton, Mass.,	" "	100
G. N. JENNINGS,	Tonica, Ill.,	" "	100
J. SEDGWICK,	Painesville, O.,	Three "	300
CARL POST,	Monroe, Cal.,	Five "	500
HERNIMILLER,	Sacramento, Cal.,	One "	100
L. K. SUNDERSLAND,	Quincy, Mass.,	One "	100
J. L. WATSON,	Boston, N. H.,	" "	100
LOUIS BARNETT,	Croydon, N. H.,	" "	100
J. E. SUTTON,	Olathe, Kan.,	" "	100
SAM. T. DURKEE,	" "	" "	100
J. M. HADLEY,	" "	" "	100
B. L. HILL,	Florence, Mass.,	Ten "	1,000
W. H. SPENCER,	Haverhill, Mass.,	Two "	200
JON. F. BARRETT,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	200
E. W. WEIR,	La Grange, Ind.,	" "	200
FRANK PRATHER,	Boston, Mass.,	Five "	500
E. F. DINSMORE,	Wellsville, Kan.,	One "	100
J. T. DICKINSON,	New York, N. Y.,	Two "	200
W. J. POTTER,	Middlefield, Mass.,	Fourteen "	1,400
G. C. GLATTE,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Three "	300
W. C. GANNETT,	Kendallville, Ind.,	" "	300
MISS M. C. PERKINS,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	300
MRS. S. EMMERSON,	Dover, N. H.,	One "	100
MISS E. EMMERSON,	" "	" "	100
W. H. DOWNER,	Birmingham, Ct.,	" "	100
B. B. SMITH,	Lansing, Mich.,	" "	100
R. B. SMITH,	Warren, Pa.,	" "	100
W. C. RUSSEL,	Ithaca, N. Y.,	" "	100
WM. CLARKE,	Toledo, O.,	Three "	300
C. L. SMITH,	" "	One "	100
" "	" "	Twenty "	2,000
J. N. LYMAN,	Cincinnati, O.,	One "	100
L. G. FELCH,	Monroe Centre, Mass.,	Three "	300
A. FOLSON,	Boston, Conn.,	One "	100
L. O. BASS,	Colebrook, Mass.,	Five "	500
S. E. SEWALL,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	500
ELIUR WRIGHT,	" "	" "	500
E. B. WARD,	Detroit, Mich.,	Twenty "	2,000
A. D. WILK,	Dayton, O.,	One "	100
S. S. BONER,	Keokuk, Iowa,	" "	100
WM. JONES,	Brookfield, N. Y.,	" "	100
" "	Oskaloosa, Iowa,	" "	100
S. H. DAVIS,	Dover, N. H.,	" "	100
J. H. YORK,	" "	" "	100
JOS. HAYES,	" "	" "	100
G. P. FOLSON,	" "	" "	100
"A FRIEND,"	" "	" "	100
Mrs. H. E. PERKINS,	" "	Two "	200
" "	" "	One "	100
WILLIAM GREEN,	Boston, Mass.,	One "	100
"A FRIEND,"	Orange, N. J.,	" "	100
D. B. STEINMAN,	Lowell, Mass.,	" "	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTIAN,	Brattleboro, Vt.,	" "	100
C. W. FABIOT,	New York, N. Y.,	" "	100
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Kelley's Island, O.,	Two "	200
Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	One "	100
MISS M. A. WRIGHT,	Jersey City, N. J.,	" "	100
E. B. BROWN,	Worcester, Mass.,	" "	100
EDWIN BROWN,	" "	" "	100
R. P. HALLOWELL,	Boston, Mass.,	Five "	500
BENJ. KODMAN,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Three "	300
H. B. CLARKE,	" "	" "	300
FRANK J. SCOTT,	Toledo, O.,	Six "	600
M. L. HOLBROOK,	Houlton, Me.,	One "	100
W. H. BOUGHTON,	New York, N. Y.,	One "	100
" "	" "	" "	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON,	" "	Two "	200
E. G. BURNETT,	Webster, Mass.,	" "	200
J. E. FOLLETT,	Winona, Minn.,	One "	100
JOS. WARRASSE,	Newton, N. J.,	" "	100
" "	Franklin, Pa.,	" "	100
T. M. LARK,	Worcester, Mass.,	" "	100
W. H. DYKE,	Prairie du Chien, Wis.,	" "	100
W. H. SPALDING,	Duluth, Minn.,	" "	100
LOUIS BELBORE,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	Two "	200
LEWIS KURTZ,	Augusta, Kan.,	One "	100
SAM'L WARRASSE,	La Fayette, N. J.,	" "	100
W. L. RAYNE,	Amesbury, Mass.,	" "	100
W. EMMERSON,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	100
C. H. HOBBS,	Dover, N. H.,	Two "	200
MISS I. THOMSON,	" "	One "	100
BENJ. HALLOWELL,	Sandy Spring, Md.,	" "	100
Mrs. M. E. VAN RENSSLAER,	N. Y. City, N. Y.,	" "	100
R. B. STONE,	Penn.,	" "	100
WM. ROTCH,	Fall River, Mass.,	Two "	200
Mrs. J. WHITAKER,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Five "	500
S. H. ROPER,	Boston, N. Y.,	One "	100
Mrs. R. D. FRANCIS,	Boston Highlands, Mass.,	Two "	200
CHAS. BONNALL,	Salem, N. Y.,	One "	100
G. H. BRIGGS,	Amesbury, Mass.,	Two "	200
J. T. CLARKSON,	" "	" "	200
C. W. NEWTON,	Castleton, Ill.,	One "	100
HENRY KENT,	Toledo, O.,	Two "	200
OTTO KLEIN,	" "	" "	200
H. G. NEUBERT,	" "	Two "	200
A. RUCKERT,	" "	One "	100
" "	Detroit, Mich.,	Thirty "	3,000
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.,	Toledo, O.,	Thirty "	3,000
T. K. PRICE,	Westminster, Ct.,	Two "	200

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of New York, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. K. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly exponent of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 22, Toledo, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-122.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 20

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 40

Either Series, 20 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[22-28] 19 PINEKEY ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS
FROM

THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.
FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pyramids, Talmuda, Bible, Philo Judaeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epicurus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novels, Kennan, Tallelah, Milton, Penn, Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman, Tyndall, Max Muller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tattle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."
The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."
The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."
400 pages: Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address by
G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT.

A $5.00 GREENBACK
AND A SPECIMEN OF THE
GREAT INDUSTRIES
OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.
Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 188 in eight days, another 208 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

[196-191.] J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $3.50 and 72 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JUNE 15, 1872.

WHOLE No. 129.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible to at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARNOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS, PROVERINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM B. SPENCER, MISS E. D. CUNNETT, ROSE CHARLES YOTNEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONSIEUR D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Science and Spirits.

BY PROFESSOR JOHN TYNDALL.

[From "Fragments of Science for Unscientific People," pp. 402-409, Amer. Ed.]

Their refusal to investigate "spiritual phenomena" is often urged as a reproach to scientific men. I here propose to give a sketch of an attempt to apply to the "phenomena" those methods of inquiry which are found available in dealing with natural truth.

Some time ago, when the spirits were particularly active in this country, a celebrated philosopher was invited, or rather entreated, by one of his friends, to meet and question them. He had, however, already made their acquaintance, and did not wish to renew it. I had not been so privileged, and he therefore kindly arranged a transfer of the invitation to me. The spirits themselves named the time of meeting, and I was conducted to the place at the day and hour appointed.

Absolute unbelief in the facts was by no means my condition of mind. On the contrary, I thought it probable that some physical principle, not evident to the Spiritualists themselves, might underlie their manifestations. Extraordinary effects are produced by the accumulation of small impulses. Galileo set a heavy pendulum in motion by the well-timed puffs of his breath. Elliot set one clock going by the ticks of another, even when the two clocks were separated by a wall. Preconceived notions can, moreover, vitiate, to an extraordinary degree, the testimony of even veracious persons. Hence my desire to witness those extraordinary phenomena, the existence of which seemed placed beyond a doubt by the known veracity of those who had witnessed and described them. The meeting took place at a private residence in the neighborhood of London. My host, his intelligent wife, and a gentleman who may be called X., were in the house when I arrived. I was informed that the "medium" had not yet made her appearance; that she was sensitive, and might resent suspicion. It was therefore requested that the tables and chairs should be examined before her arrival, in order to be assured that there was no trickery in the furniture. This was done; and I then first learned that my hospitable host had arranged that the séance should be a dinner-party. This was to me an unusual form of investigation; but I accepted it, as one of the accidents of the occasion.

The "medium" arrived—a delicate looking young lady, who appeared to have suffered much from ill health. I took her to dinner and sat close beside her. Facts were absent for a considerable time, a series of very wonderful narratives supplying their place. The duty of belief on testimony was frequently insisted on. X. appeared to be a chosen spiritual agent, and told us many surprising things. He affirmed that, when he took a pen in his hand, an influence ran from his shoulder downward, and impelled him to write oracular sentences. I listened for a time, offering no observation. "And now," continued X., "this power has so risen as to reveal to me the thoughts of others. Only this morning I told a friend what he was thinking of, and what he intended to do during the day." Here, I thought, is something that can be at once tested. I said immediately to X.:—"If you wish to win to your cause an apostle who will proclaim your principles to the world without fear, tell me what I am now thinking of." X. reddened, and did not tell me my thought.

Some time previously I had visited Baron Reichenbach, in Vienna, and I now asked the young lady who sat beside me whether she could see any of the curious things which he describes—the light emitted by crystals, for example? Here is the conversation which followed, as extracted from my notes, written on the day following the séance:

Medium.—"Oh, yes; but I see light around all bodies."

I.—"Even in perfect darkness?"

Medium.—"Yes; I see luminous atmospheres round all people. The atmosphere which surrounds Mr. R. C. would fill this room with light."

I.—"You are aware of the effects ascribed by Baron Reichenbach to magnets?"

Medium.—"Yes; but a magnet makes me terribly ill."

I.—"Am I to understand that, if this room were perfectly dark, you could tell whether it contained a magnet, without being informed of the fact?"

Medium.—"I should know of its presence on entering the room."

I.—"How?"

Medium.—"I should be rendered instantly ill."

I.—"How do you feel to-day?"

Medium.—"Particularly well; I have not been so well for months."

I.—"Then, may I ask you whether there is, at the present moment, a magnet in my possession?"

The young lady looked at me, blushed, and stammered, "No; I am not en rapport with you."

I sat at her right hand, and a left-hand pocket, within the inches of her person, contained a magnet.

Our host here deprecated discussion, as it "exhausted the medium." The wonderful narratives were resumed; but I had narratives of my own quite as wonderful. These spirits, indeed, seemed clumsy creations, compared with those with which my own researches had made me familiar. I therefore began to match the wonders related to me by other wonders. A lady present discoursed on spiritual atmospheres, which she could see as beautiful colors when she closed her eyes. I professed myself able to see similar colors, and more than that, to be able to see the interior of my own eyes. The medium affirmed that she could see actual waves of light coming from the sun. I retorted that men of science could tell the exact number of waves emitted in a second, and also their exact length. The medium spoke of the performances of the spirits on musical instruments. I said that such performance was gross, in comparison with a kind of music which had been discovered some time previously by a scientific man. Standing at a distance of twenty feet from a jet of gas, he could command the flame to emit a melodious note; it would obey, and continue its song for hours. So loud was the music emitted by the gas flame, that it might be heard by an assembly of a thousand people. These were acknowledged to be as great marvels as any of those of spiritism. The spirits were then consulted, and I was pronounced to be a first-class medium.

During this conversation a low knocking was heard from time to time under the table. These were the spirits' knocks. I was informed that one knock, in answer to a question, meant "No;" that two knocks meant "Not yet;" and that three knocks meant "Yes." In answer to the question whether I was a medium, the response was three brisk and vigorous knocks. I noticed that the knocks issued from a particular locality, and therefore requested the spirits to be good enough to answer from another corner of the table. They did not comply; but I was assured that they would do it, and much more, by-and-by. The knocks continuing, I turned a wine-glass upside down, and placed my ear upon it, as upon a stethoscope. The spirits seemed disconcerted by the act; they lost their playfulness, and did not quite recover it for a considerable time.

Somewhat weary of the proceedings, I once threw myself back against my chair, and gazed listlessly out of the window. While thus engaged, the table was rudely pushed. Attention was drawn to the wine, still oscillating in the glasses, and I was asked whether that was not convincing. I readily granted the fact of motion, and began to feel the delicacy of my position. There were several pairs of arms upon the table, and several pairs of legs under it; but how was I, without offence, to express the conviction which I really entertained? To ward off the difficulty, I again turned a wine-glass upside down and rested my ear upon it. The rim of the glass was not level, and the hair on touching it caused it to vibrate and produce a peculiar buzzing sound. A perfectly candid and warm-hearted old gentleman at the opposite side of the table, whom I may call A., drew attention to the sound, and expressed his belief that it was spiritual. I, however, informed him that it was the moving hair acting on the glass. The explanation was not well received, and X., in a tone of severe pleasantry, demanded whether it was the hair that had moved the table. The promptness of my negative probably satisfied him that my notion was a very different one.

The superhuman power of the spirits was next dwelt upon. The strength of man, it was stated, was unavailing in opposition to theirs. No human power could prevent the table from moving when they pulled it. During the evening this pulling of the table occurred, or rather, was attempted, three times. Twice the table moved when my attention was withdrawn from it; on a third occasion, I tried whether the act could be provoked by an assumed air of inattention. Grasping the table firmly between my knees, I threw myself back in the chair, and waited, with eyes fixed on vacancy, for the pull. It came. For some seconds it was pull spirit, hold muscle; the muscle, however, prevailed, and the table remained at rest. Up to the present moment this interesting fact is known only to the particular spirit in question and myself.

A species of mental scene-painting, with which my own pursuits had long rendered me familiar, was employed to figure the changes and distribution of spiritual power. The spirits were provided with atmospheres, which combined with and interpenetrated each other, considerable ingenuity being shown in demonstrating the necessity of time in effecting the adjustment of the atmospheres. In fact, just as in science, the senses, time, and space constituted the conditions of the phenomena. A rearrangement of our positions was proposed and carried out; and soon afterward my attention was drawn to a scarcely sensible vibration on the part of the table. Several persons were leaning on the table at the time, and I asked permission to touch the medium's hand. "Oh, I know I tremble," was her reply. Throwing one leg across the other, I accidentally nipped a muscle, and produced thereby an involuntary vibration of the free leg. This vibration, I knew, must be communicated to the floor, and thence to the chairs of all present. I therefore intentionally promoted it. My attention was promptly drawn to the motion; and a gentleman beside me, whose value as a witness I was particularly desirous to test, expressed his belief that it was out of the compass of human power to produce so strange a tremor. "I believe," he added earnestly, "that it is entirely the spirits' work." "So do I," added, with heat, the candid and warm-hearted old gentleman A. "Why, sir," he continued, "I feel them at this moment shaking my chair." I stopped the motion of the leg. "Now, sir," A. exclaimed, "they are gone." I began again, and A. once more ejaculated. I could, however, notice that there were doubters present, who did not quite know what to think of the manifestations. I saw their perplexity, and as there was sufficient reason to believe that the disclosure of the secret would simply provoke anger, I kept it to myself.

Again a period of conversation intervened, during which the spirits became animated. The evening was confessedly a dull one, but matters appeared to brighten toward its close. The spirits were requested to spell the name by which I am known in the heavenly world. Our host commenced repeating the alphabet, and when he reached the letter "P," a knock was heard. He began again, and the spirits knocked at the letter "O." I was puzzled, but waited for the end. The next letter knocked down was "E." I laughed, and remarked that the spirits were going to make a poet of me. Admonished for my levity, I was informed that the frame of mind proper for the occasion ought to have been superinduced by a perusal of the Bible immediately before the séance. The spelling, however, went on, and I came out a poet. But matters did not end here. Our host continued his repetition of the alphabet, and the next letter of the name proved to be "O." Here was manifestly an unfinished word; and the spirits were apparently in their most communicative mood. The knocks came from under the table, but no person evinced the slightest desire to look under it. I asked whether I might go underneath; the permission was granted; so I crept under the table. Some tittered; but the candid old A. exclaimed, "He has a right to look into the very dregs of it to convince himself." Having pretty well assured myself that no sound could come from under the table without its origin being revealed. I requested our host to continue his questions. He did so, but in vain. He adopted a tone of tender entreaty; but the "dear spirits" had become dumb dogs, and refused to be entreated. I continued under that table for at least a quarter of an hour, after which, with a feeling of despair as regards the prospects of humanity never before experienced, I regained my chair. Once there, the spirits resumed their loquacity, and dubbed me "Poet of Science."

This, then, is the result of an attempt made by a scientific man to look into these spiritual phenomena. It is not encouraging, and for this reason: the present promoters of spiritual phenomena divide themselves into two classes, one of which needs no demonstration, while the other is beyond the reach of proof. The victims like to believe, and they do not like to be deceived. Science is perfectly powerless in the presence of this frame of mind. It is, moreover, a state perfectly compatible with extreme intellectual subtlety and a capacity for devising hypotheses which only require the hardihood engendered by strong conviction, or by callous mendacity, to render them impregnable. The logical feebleness of science is not sufficiently borne in mind. It keeps down the weed of superstition, not by logic, but by slowly rendering the mental soil unfit for its cultivation. When science appeals to uniform experience, the Spiritualist will retort, "How do you know that a uniform experience will continue uniform? You tell me that the sun has risen for six thousand years; that is no proof that it will rise to-morrow; within the next twelve hours it may be puffed out by the Almighty." Taking this ground, a man may maintain the story of "Jack and the Bean-stalk" in the face of all the science in the world. You urge in vain that science has given us all the knowledge of the universe which we now possess, while Spiritualism has added nothing to that knowledge. The drugged soul is beyond the reach of reason. It is in vain that impostors are exposed, and the special demon cast out. He has but slightly to change his shape, return to his house, and find it empty, swept and garnished.

"WHAT PHENOMENA OCCUR?"

[From the Boston Banner of Light, May 25.]

We find in THE INDEX, of May 11th, a sensible communication signed "Engineer" in which the writer, though not a believer in Spiritualism, has the following remarks, the justice and moderation of which will be apparent to all competent witnesses:—

"That strange phenomena do occur, any man may satisfy himself almost any day; and what we ask is, that these gentlemen who are skilled in all the means of detecting truth and exposing falsehood explain the cause, or declare that they cannot account for the occurrences by any known satisfactory force." * * * If it is of no use to declare the manifestations supernatural. What one has absolutely felt, heard and seen repeatedly, and can feel, hear or see under the same circumstances at any time, is not supernatural. The time has come when men of science must face the issue. That the phenomena occur, is proven. Now what is the cause?"

To these remarks, so obviously true, temperate, and even cautious, the editor of THE INDEX replies in the spirit of the dogmatist who has nothing but contempt for the testimony of thousands of his fellow-creatures, who are probably as well qualified as himself to test a plain matter of fact. If the testimony conflicts with his own preconceived notions of the possible and the probable, then let it be vilified and condemned! Such would seem to be his sentiment. Let it should be supposed we do the editor injustice, we quote his comments in full:—

"What phenomena occur? The witnesses have not yet learned to separate what they have actually seen, heard or felt, from what they merely infer. The exact nature of the alleged facts is to be first determined; everything illusory, extraneous or irrelevant is to be most severely ruled out of court; and such inferences only as are logically irresistible are to be admitted to the rank of explanations. What is usually called 'investigation' of this subject is the shrewdest farce. When 'mediums' will submit to such investigation as must precede intelligent conviction, scientific men will be willing enough to enter on it; but so long as they insist on precisely such 'conditions' as absolutely preclude it, what can they expect but to be treated with neglect by all but those who are already saturated with belief? When Spiritualism will submit to really scientific investigation, it will undoubtedly receive it. Our own repeated attempts to 'investigate' have been very unfortunate, although we make no claim to be a 'scientist'."

THE INDEX, published at Toledo, is the organ of the religious radicals who have seceded from the Unitarian ranks, and who profess a wide liberality in the recognition of truth, from whatever quarter it may proceed. But we have rarely seen more of stiff, old-fashioned bigotry, assumption and conceit concentrated in a paragraph than is to be found in the above. It reminds us of the angry invectives of poor Prof. Felton, years ago, in the columns of the Boston Courier. Since that time Spiritualism has gone on spreading and winning converts by millions, until now every man of common sense and common intelligence sees that there must be a broad basis of truth to account for the prevalence and the unprecedented extension of the belief in the spiritual phenomena. If the supercilious remarks of THE INDEX had proceeded from the Rev. Mr. Fulton, we should not have marvelled; but that they should come from the preacher of liberalism par excellence is a matter of some surprise.

The obvious assumption of the editor and of the class of assailants he represents is, that the five or six millions of people who have satisfied themselves of the facts of Spiritualism are imbeciles and dupes; that they don't know how to "separate" what they have actually seen, heard or felt, "from what they merely infer!"

Now what does this editor, who would have us suppose he is the very type of candor and liberality, mean by an impertinence like this. In the face of facts with which, as an honest chronicler, he ought to be perfectly familiar? Does he mean to say that there is no record of an eminent man of science who has examined and admitted the phenomena of Spiritualism? Did he never hear of Robert Hare of Philadelphia? Of Mr. Varley, the electrician? Of Robert Chambers? Of William Crookes of the British Royal Society? Of Mr. Huggins, a member of the same distinguished Association of scientists? Of the late Professor De Morgan, who, as the encyclopaedias tell us, was one of the first mathematicians of the age? Of the Austrian Reichenbach? Of Drs. Elliottson and Ashburner, two of the most eminent London physicians? Of the lamented J. W. Jackson, one of the first of contemporary anthropologists? Of Camille Flammarion of France, admitted to be one of the most profound of living astronomers? Of Hermann Fichte, the worthy son of the great contemporary of Kant, and who, in the abstract sciences, has probably no living superior?

The editor of THE INDEX is a frequent eulogist of Mr. Darwin, the ingenious expounder of the theory of evolution. If the editor will look at Mr. Darwin's last volume, he will find in it long quotations from Mr. Alfred R. Wallace; and of Mr. Wallace, Dr. Hooker, the President of the British Scientific Association, spoke as follows, in his address at the meeting at Norwich, in August, 1883:—

"Many of the metaphysicians' objections have been controverted by that champion of natural selection, Mr. Darwin's true knight, Alfred R. Wallace, in his papers on 'Protection,' 'the Westminster Review,' and 'Creation by Law,' in the 'Journal of Science,' October, 1867, etc., in which the doctrines of 'Continental Interference,' 'the Theory of Beauty,' and kindred subjects, are discussed with admirable sagacity, knowledge and skill; but of Mr. Wallace, and his many contributions to philosophical biology, it is not easy to speak without enthusiasm; for, putting aside their great merits, he, throughout his writings, with a modesty as rare as I believe it to be in him unconscious, forgets his own unquestionable claims to the honor of having originated, independently of Mr. Darwin, the theories which he so ably defends."

We presume that the editor of THE INDEX will not "go back" on his magnus Apollo, Mr. Darwin, so far as to deny the claims of Mr. Wallace to be ranked as a man of science. Now Mr. Wallace admits the phenomena of Spiritualism, and here is something he has to say on the subject:—

"One of the most popular objections to miracles consists of making a supposition and drawing an inference, which looks like a dilemma, but is really none at all."

"This argument has been put in several forms. One is, 'If a man tells me he came from York by the telegraph-wire, I do not believe him. If fifty men tell me they came from York by telegraph-wires, I do not believe them. If any number of men tell me the same, I do not believe them.' Therefore Mr. Home did not float in the air, notwithstanding any amount of testimony you may bring to prove it."

"Another is, 'If a man tells me that he saw the lion on Northumberland House descend into Trafalgar Square and drink water from the fountains, I should not believe him. If fifty men, or any number of men, informed me of the same thing, I should still not believe them.'"

"Hence it is inferred that there are certain things so absurd, and so incredible, that no amount of testimony could possibly make a sane man believe them."

"Now these illustrations look like arguments, and at first sight it is not easy to see the proper way to answer them; but the fact is that they are utter fallacies, because their whole force depends upon an assumed proposition which has never been proved, and which I challenge anyone to prove. The proposition is, that a large number of independent, honest, sane and sensible witnesses can testify to a plain matter of fact which never occurred at all."

"Now no evidence has ever been adduced to show that this ever has happened or ever can happen. But the assumption is rendered still more monstrous when we consider the circumstances attending such cases as those of the cures at the tomb of the Abbé Paris, and the cures of modern scientific men being converted to a belief in the reality of the phenomena of modern Spiritualism; for we must assume that, being fully warned that the alleged facts are impossible, and are therefore delusions, and, having the source of the supposed delusion pointed out, and all the prejudices of the age and the whole tone of educated thought being against the reality of such facts, yet numbers of educated men, including physicians and men of science, are convinced of the reality of the facts, after the most searching investigation. Yet the assumption that such an amount and quality of independent converging evidence can be all false, must be proved to be a fact, if the argument is to have the slightest value, otherwise it is merely begging the question. It must be remembered that we have to consider not absurd beliefs or false inferences, but plain matters of fact; and it cannot be proved, and never has been proved, that any large amount of cumulative evidence of disinterested and sensible men has ever been obtained for an absolute and entire delusion. To put the matter in a simple form, the asserted fact is either possible or not possible. If possible, such evidence as we have been considering would prove it; if not possible, such evidence could not exist. The argument is therefore an absolute fallacy, since its fundamental assumption cannot be proved. If it is intended merely to enunciate the proposition that the more strange and unusual a thing is, the more and the better evidence we require for it, that we all admit; but I maintain that human testimony increases in value in such an enormous ratio with each additional independent and honest witness, that no fact ought to be rejected when attested by such a body of evidence as exists for many of the even a turned miraculous or supernatural, and which occur now daily among us. The burden of proof lies on those who maintain that such evidence can possibly be fallacious; let them point out one case in which such cumulative evidence exists, and which yet proved to be false; let them give me supposition, but proof." ("An Answer to the Arguments of Hume, Lecky and Others, against Miracles," by Alfred R. Wallace, author of "The Malay Archipelago," and "Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection." London: 1871.)

Mr. Wallace's remarks hit the case of those false friends of science, who, like Dr. Carpenter, argue as if what they consider impossible must be impossible.

With regard to the "conditions" on which THE INDEX lays so much stress, did it never occur to the editor that it is barely possible that the nature of things may choose to prescribe its own conditions, and not accommodate itself to the whims or processes of so-called scientists, or even of radical editors? The "mediums" being the mere instruments for certain occult intelligent forces to play upon, what an absurdity it is for the investigator to attempt to bully those "forces" into conformity with his own notions of what is most suitable, convenient or convincing! The "conditions" are prescribed, not by the medium, but by the operating forces. The pseudo man of science thinks he may stand on his dignity, and say to Nature, "Do as I tell you to, or I will not condescend to investigate your marvels." Is this the spirit in which a genuine scientist will interrogate Nature? Conform to my conditions or I will none of you? Nay; it is the duty of science to wait upon Nature, to reverently listen to what she chooses to tell, and in the way it pleases her to utter it, and deal with the facts that are manifested, and not ignore them because others are not manifested. We should be glad to learn her lessons on the conditions she chooses to prescribe, thankful to accept such insight into her arcana as she vouchsafes to grant.

"When Spiritualism will submit to really scientific investigation," says THE INDEX, "it will undoubtedly receive it." Now what presumptuous absurdity there is in this remark, if Spiritualism is, what we claim it to be, the manifestation of a preternatural intelligent force! The editor speaks precisely as if Spiritualists were trying to show off something of their own invention or contrivance; as if they themselves were responsible for the "conditions" under which the phenomena occur! Whereas if the phenomena are spiritual—that is, subject to the control of forces and intelligences wholly independent of the will and action of the parties present—the demand for human conditions is simply arrogant and preposterous. As well might this condescending editor have said to some of the phenomena of electricity, before they were verified: "You much vaunted power of electricity, I will stoop to investigate you as soon as you will conform to the conditions I may impose!"

The truly scientific state of mind is one of humility and not of self-assertion. The real scientist does not measure the grand phenomena of Nature by his own notions of the possible and the proper. It is only narrow and bigoted, or ignorant and undeveloped minds, that are thus hampered and pre-occupied. Mr. Wallace, in the remarks we have already quoted, ably sets forth the position which the truly scientific observer ought to occupy toward the marvels of Spiritualism, Mesmerism and Somnambulism.

For THE INDEX to ask, "What phenomena occur?" at this period of the world's progress in reference to these subjects, shows either that the editor has shut his eyes to what is going on about him, or that he is so very wise in his own conceit as to have an immeasurable contempt for the ability of the rest of mankind to investigate occurrences appealing to their senses and their common sense. The fact that he himself has been "very unfortunate" in his "repeated attempts to investigate" is by no means a final and conclusive argument against the reality of the phenomena. It is hardly wise to measure Nature's possibilities by our own narrow experiences. We have heard of other men who were unfortunate in their repeated attempts to investigate; who were disaffected, disgusted, baffled, but who at last, when they had nearly abandoned their researches, received the one priceless proof which satisfied them that the cloud of witnesses to the phenomena were neither dupes nor liars.

We repeat, therefore, that it is simply an arrogant slander for the editor of THE INDEX to assert, as he virtually does, that such men as Hare, Loomis, Varley, Crookes, Brougham, Chambers, Gray, Wilkin, Shorter, Coleman, Flammarion, Favre, Howitt, Arnold, Hazard, Gunning, Denton, Owen, Edmonds, Mountford, Putnam, White, Trollope, Fichte, Jackson and Wallace, are such simpletons and imbeciles as to be "unable to separate what they have actually seen, heard or felt, from what they merely infer!"

Such a gross impertinence on the part of the editor would seem to imply that he is less anxious for truth than for what may strike the superficial as victory; that these inconvenient phenomena come in the way of some of his own pre-conceptions and pre-committals; that it would be very awkward for him, after all his opposition, his skill in dialectics, his display of erudition, to be compelled to admit that the "babes and sucklings" are nevertheless in the right, and he, the great theistic philosopher, in the wrong. We would not judge the editor uncharitably; but his imputation upon the common sense of the gifted and (many of them) distinguished men we have named, not to speak of the millions who, like them, accept the phenomena as "proven," leaves us no escape from one of two alternatives: either he is densely ignorant, or, in reference to Spiritualism, absurdly self-conceited, bigoted and illiberal—what, in college days, we used to call a prig; and a prig who affects liberality is a prig indeed.

The July number of "OLD AND NEW," to be issued June 15th, will repeat the highly successful experiment of last year, and will be an EDUCATIONAL NUMBER. It will contain a graphic account of life at the famous ROUND HILL SCHOOL established and conducted by George Bancroft and Dr. Cogswell; a comprehensive view of the whole range of instruction now given at HARVARD UNIVERSITY; other papers upon topics of educational importance, and a COLLEGE DIRECTORY, giving the name, locality, course of study, faculty and number of students of 175 or more of the principal collegiate institutions of the United States—being an extremely convenient reference list.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of 85 cents, by the publishers, Messrs. ROBERTS BROS., Boston.

I admire this in Gothic architecture, that you cannot master it all at once; that it is not a naked outline, but as deep and rich as human nature itself, always revealing new ideas. It is as if the builder had built himself and his age up into it, and as if the edifice had life. Grecian temples are less interesting to me, being so cold and crystalline.—Hawthorne.

DICKENS AND HIS CLERICAL TRADUCER.

[From "Yesterdays with Authors," by JAMES T. FIELDS, pp. 172-174.]

Let me commend to the attention of my numerous nameless correspondents, who have attempted to soil the moral character of Dickens, the following little incident, related to me by himself, during a summer-evening walk among the Kentish meadows, a few months before he died. I will try to tell the story, if possible, as simply and naturally as he told it to me.

"I chanced to be travelling some years ago," he said, "in a railroad carriage between Liverpool and London. Besides myself there were two ladies and a gentleman occupying the carriage. We happened to be all strangers to each other, but I noticed at once that a clergyman was of the party. I was occupied with a ponderous article in the Times, when the sound of my own name drew my attention to the fact that a conversation was going forward among the three other persons in the carriage with reference to myself and my books. One of the ladies was perusing 'Bleak House,' then lately published, and the clergyman had commenced a conversation with the ladies by asking what book they were reading. On being told the author's name and the title of the book, he expressed himself greatly grieved that any lady in England should be willing to take up the writings of so vile a character as Charles Dickens. Both the ladies showed great surprise at the low estimate the clergyman put upon the author whom they had been accustomed to read, to say the least, with a certain degree of pleasure. They were evidently much shocked at what the man said of the immoral tendency of these books, which they seemed never before to have suspected; but when he attacked the author's private character, and told monstrous stories of his immoralities in every direction, the volume was shut up and consigned to the dark pockets of a travelling bag. I listened in wonder and astonishment, behind my newspaper, to stories of myself which, if they had been true, would have consigned any man to prison for life. After my fictitious biographer had occupied himself for nearly an hour with the eloquent recital of my delinquencies and crimes, I very quietly joined in the conversation. Of course I began by modestly doubting some statements which I had just heard, touching the author of 'Bleak House,' and other important works of a similar character. The man stared at me, and evidently considered my appearance on the conversational stage an intrusion and an impertinence. 'You seem to speak,' I said, 'from personal knowledge of Mr. Dickens. Are you acquainted with him?' He rather evaded the question, but, following him up closely, I compelled him to say that he had been talking, not from his own knowledge of the author in question; but he said he knew for a certainty that every statement he had made was a true one. I then became more earnest in my inquiries for proofs, which he arrogantly declined giving. The ladies sat by in silence, listening intently to what was going forward. An author they had been accustomed to read for amusement had been traduced for the first time in their hearing, and they were waiting to learn what I had to say in refutation of the clergyman's charges. I was taking up his vile stories, one by one, and stamping them as false in every particular, when the man grew furious, and asked me if I knew Dickens personally. I replied, 'Perfectly well; no man knows him better than I do; and all your stories about him from beginning to end, to these ladies, are unmitigated lies.' The man became livid with rage, and asked for my card. 'You shall have it,' I said, and, coolly taking out one, I presented it to him without bowing. We were just then nearing the station in London, so that I was spared a longer interview with my truthful companion; but, if I were to live a hundred years, I should not forget the abject condition into which the narrator of my crimes was instantly plunged. His face turned white as his cravat, and his lips refused to utter words. He seemed like a wilted vegetable, and as if his legs belonged to somebody else. The ladies became aware of the situation at once, and, bidding them 'good day,' I stepped smilingly out of the carriage. Before I could get away from the station the man had mustered up strength sufficient to follow me, and his apologies were so nauseous and craven, that I pitied him from my soul. I left him with this caution:—'Before you make charges against the character of any man again, about whom you know nothing, and of whose works you are utterly ignorant, study to be a seeker after Truth, and avoid lying as you would eternal perdition.'

Last autumn the New York Independent (or rather one of its editors) used abusive language concerning us because we quoted the common saying that "it takes three dollars to send one to the heathen." We only charged the missionary system with a great waste of money that could be better employed. But the annexed paragraph from the Independent itself, of June 6th, shows that we should have been guilty of no injustice if we had made (as our critic falsely charged us with doing) a direct accusation of fraud:—

"We are glad that the little dishonesties which have tainted the financial reports of some few of our benevolent societies have in several cases been removed from this year's reports. Last year the Baptist Home Missionary Society cut down its apparent percentage of running expenses by a little jugglery. The amount stated in the treasurer's report as cash paid for services of secretaries, treasurer and clerks at the rooms, is put down as only $6,940.98; and yet there were three secretaries, at a salary of $3,600 each; an assistant treasurer, at $1,900; residing secretary, 1,300; clerks, $600—making $13,800. Add to this rent and other expenses of the rooms, amounting to $3,321.37, and we have a total of $17,121.37, in which is not included the further cost of agents. We do not understand the whole of this matter; but we believe that the secretaries at Boston have been in the habit of charging half of their salaries to the missionary account, although, as a correspondent of the Examiner and Chronicle remarks, $1,800 for half a year's missionary work is more than it is customary to pay for visiting the feeble churches. This year, we believe, this deceptive system is abolished, and the charges are put where they belong. The correspondent asks whether any other societies adopt this half-and-half plan of paying their secretaries. The same has been done in the case of the American and Foreign Christian Union, which has been in the habit of dividing its secretary's salary between the department of home missions, publications, and expenses of management, and its agents' salaries between home missions and expenses of management. We are glad to see that this year, while continuing the same policy, the report expressly and prominently states the fact, so that anybody that pleases can correct for himself the erroneous figures. The public ought to examine carefully the financial reports submitted, and to demand that they be not abbreviated into a single page of general summary."

RELIGION IS SENTIMENT, NOT SCIENCE.—Its business is to interpret the universe, not to analyze it; to set its known facts in the celestial sunlight, not to scrutinize or classify them. It does not study the material constitution of the world by the help of telescope or microscope, chemistry, or the spectrum. These instruments it leaves, confidently, to the man of science who are skilled in their use. To the results of their labors religion is indifferent. It has no cosmogony to defend—no theory of the firmament, the origin of the planet, the descent of man, the mechanism of the cosmic laws, for the truth of which it holds itself responsible. The facts, so far as they are discovered, it accepts. It is equally at home with Moses, Ptolemy, Copernicus, Newton, Laplace, Darwin and Agassiz. It accommodates itself as well to Herbert Spencer's doctrine of evolution as to Mr. Owen's doctrine of creation by special fiat. It has no quarrel with the scientific schools, but accepts whatever is known, and eagerly waits for more knowledge, being interested solely in the effort to lift all knowledge up into the light of God—to associate the facts of the world and of human life with thought of a divine purpose, a heavenly wisdom, a celestial love. It assumes these, nothing more. To keep alive reverence, trust, humility, the spirit of gentle confidence and holy fear, the ennobling, glorifying, beautifying idealism of the devout heart, is its province; and this it does, not by plying the geologist's hammer or watching the chemist's retort, but by showing how the universe of the geologist, the astronomer, the geometrician, naturalist, physicist, manifest the Supreme thought and goodness.—O. B. Frothingham.

SEALED TO SATAN.—The Mormon saints have a pious way, we are told, of "sealing" certain hapless souls to brother Brigham, and sundry other elders and apostles of their luxurious faith.

But our Methodist saints, it would seem, are decidedly ahead of the Mormon brethren in this "sealing" business. They have nothing to do with agents and understrappers, but send the arrow of conviction straight home, and seal to the devil direct. So it would appear, at least, from a report of a sermon delivered recently by Rev. and Hon. Mark Truitt before the Methodist Conference at Worcester. In this discourse he is said to have dilated with great force upon the utterly lost and hopeless condition of out-and-out free-thinkers and rationalists, declared them "sealed over to the devil," and added—"whose damnation is just."

To put a still finer point upon it, he illustrated, as reported, thus: "There is that impertinent and terribly persistent Unitarian tract-distributor, who is here besieging us in our own houses and defiantly flaunting his miserable and delusive tracts in our very faces—that man is lost, brethren, damned, sealed over to Satan, just as strictly and certainly as if he were already locked up in hell!" This outburst of prophetic inspiration (?) is said to have been received by the Conference with marks of strong approbation. We repeat, then, the Methodists are ahead in the sealing business.—"H." in Christian Register.

"The school question, in this country at least, is a bottom simply a question between infidelity and Christianity—that is, whether the children of this land shall be trained up to be Infidels or Christians. Disguise it as you may, this is the question at issue. The sects by godless schools injure us, no doubt, but they injure themselves more, for when infidelity by their aid has got rid of the Catholic Church, it will make short work with them."—N. Y. Tablet (Catholic).

Secular or ecclesiastical—that is indeed the educational issue, call the contestants by what names you please. But this educational issue is only one phase of the deeper antagonism between Christianity and Free Religion, which reappears in many other forms. Most persons look superficially at the various questions that arise; but a few look deeper, and their number is rapidly increasing.

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"Your remarks on Christian Propagandism call to my mind the statement of a conversation of the king of Siam, which was published in the Atlantic Monthly for June, 1870, page 782, in a series of articles entitled, 'The English Governors at the Siamese Court.' Speaking of a new school of Buddhists and of their views of the Dity, she says:—'Nor can they be brought to admit the need of miraculous intervention in the order of Nature. In this connection, it may not be out of place to mention a remark which the king (still speaking as a high priest having authority) once made to me on the miracles recorded in the Bible: 'You say that marriage is a holy institution; and I believe it is esteemed as a sacrament by one of the principal branches of your sect. It is of all the laws of the universe, the most wise and incontestable, pervading all forms of animal and vegetable life. Yet your God (meaning the Christian's God) has stigmatized it as unholy, in that he would not permit his son to be born in the ordinary way; but must needs perform a miracle to give birth to one divinely inspired.' I believe the whole has since been published in a book by Fields, Osgood & Co., which you may have seen. In missionary work, it would seem to be necessary to send the heathen at least as correct views and sound logic as that they already entertain."

"It seems to me that your little paper grows better and better all the time, and I hope it will meet with the success you wish for. I will not do without it until I am reduced to the necessity of one meal a day. I try to get subscribers, and have some hope that a friend to whom I sent a dozen odd numbers yesterday will be induced to take it. The world is growing up to the ideas advanced so courageously, and your reward is sure to come, if you persevere in your endeavors to lift the human race out of the darkness of superstition into the broad light of reason."

"Please put my name down for one share in the Index Association. I wish I could make it ten. THE INDEX must live and prosper. Should it die out now for want of pecuniary aid, after so promising a commencement, the friends of progress would be greatly to blame. Indeed I should consider it a great personal loss to be deprived of THE INDEX. The position it occupies is the only one broad enough for the universe to stand on; and anything narrower than that is narrower than God's platform, and too narrow for me."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the NEW EXHIBITION BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WASHINGTON OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending June 8th.—Geo. B. Wood, 10 cts.; Crosby Carleton, 50 cts.; H. L. Green, 25 cts.; E. A. Everett, 15 cts.; Wm. A. Parker, 40 cts.; Henry B. Richardson, $42.21; Dr. F. A. Barber, 35 cts.; Richard P. Halliwell, 23 cts.; Mrs. M. J. MacIntosh, 50 cts.; H. L. Green, 20 cts.; Mrs. J. E. D. Landon, 25 cts.; James Daniels, 50 cts.; T. R. Davis, 10 cts.; D. B. Lamson, 21 cts.; W. C. Oliver, 10 cts.; Mrs. H. B. Bosworth, 21 cts.; George Lewis, 23 cts.; Mary C. Shannon, 24 cts.; Jno. W. Orin, 22 cts.; Edward Doyle, 21 cts.; Hazell & Reed, 50 cts.; Isaac Allen, 22 cts.; E. B. Potter, 23 cts.; C. L. Flint, 23.30; Clay McCauley, 23.10; J. W. Topping, 22.10; S. Newell Hamilton, 20 cts.; Cyrus Pierce, 25 cts.; W. Walker, 25 cts.; Chas. C. Sewall, 20 cts.; Geo. O. Smith, 24 cts.; C. A. Peck, 21 cts.; Avery Lamb, 50 cts.; B. F. Hyde, 21 cts.; Jos. Hayes, 10 cts.; J. Scott, 24 cts.; Ira O. Ellenwood, 21 cts.; Earl Broad, 23 cts.; A. R. Palmer, 15 cts.; E. W. Bryant, 50 cts.; J. Beck, 21 cts.; J. Greenbaum, 50 cts.; Dr. C. Newman, 50 cts.; H. W. Gillett, 50 cts.; M. Hoffman, 50 cts.; R. Belge, 50 cts.; Theo. Egerdoff, 50 cts.; R. Partridge, 50 cts.; S. F. Atwood, 50 cts.; A. Stelnacker, 50 cts.; Samuel Coles, 23 cts.; Miss Hannah E. Stevenson, $100.00; Miss Rebecca Bowker, 10 cts.; C. A. W. Crosby, 10 cts.; Jas. A. Dupee, 10 cts.; Joo. C. Haynes, 220 cts.; J. M. Clarke, 21 cts.; Jno. T. Edgar, 23 cts.; C. S. Goodrich, 50 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

RECEIVED.

STUDIES IN POETRY AND PHILOSOPHY. By J. C. SHAFER, Principal of the United College of St. Salvador and St. Leonard, St. Andrews; Author of "Culture and Religion." New York: HUNT & Houghton. Cambridge: Riverside Press. 1872. 18mo. pp. 340.

PRACTICAL HORSE-SHOING. By O. FLEMING, F.R.C.S., M.A.I., etc., President of the Central Veterinary Medical Society, etc. With 29 Illustrations. New York: D. APPLETON & Co. 12mo. pp. 106.

PLEAS FOR FREE INQUIRY. Part II. Some Observations on "The Argument from Analogy." By "M. A.," Trinity College, Cambridge. Published by THOMAS SCOTT, Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate.

HYPOTHESES. P. J. FINCH. SHIMMUNDVOTTE, 12 ANN ST., New York.

THE INTERNAL TAXES.—Shall they be Perpetuated or Abolished? Speech of Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, of Pa., in House of Representatives, May 1, 1872.

SHOULD CONGRESS COMPEL AMERICAN LABORERS TO WORK FOR LOWER WAGES? Speech of Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, of Pa., in House of Representatives, March 16, 1872.

THE RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW. JUNE, 1872. Rev. JOHN H. MORSON, D.D., Editor. Boston: LEONARD C. BOWLES, Proprietor, 26 Bromfield St. $5.00.

THE DANGER OF IT.

Nathaniel Hawthorne suggested that the Bible should be printed in "ten or twelve duodecimo volumes," instead of a single volume either too bulky or too closely printed to be used with convenience. ["Yesterdays with Authors," p. 95.] The Orthodox clergy would never consent to this. The visible unity of the Scriptures in a single book is indispensable in maintaining the dogma of the invisible unity of their inspiration. To publish the Bible exclusively in a dozen volumes would probably do more to destroy the superstition of "one holy book" than all the arguments of all the rationalists combined. People would be sure to find that some of the volumes got read a great deal more than others; they would insensibly lose reverence for the disused volumes; and by degrees a habit of discriminating among the "inspired utterances" would be formed, which would quietly undermine the whole theory of the equal inspiration of all parts of the Scriptures—which is the great bulwark of Evangelicalism. On such small threads hang such vast interests! The single cover of the Bible is the coffin that has thus far preserved the skeleton of Orthodoxy entire. Take it out of the coffin, and it will forthwith crumble into dust.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following lists of signatures to the Counter-Petition have been received since our last issue:—

Mr. John Hanold, Keeler, Michigan, sends one hundred and sixty-two names; Mr. J. L. Munyan, Northampton, Massachusetts, fifty; Mr. Joseph Pratt, La Gro, Indiana, forty-six; Mr. J. G. Dodge, Grinnell, Iowa, thirty-one (obtained by Mr. Norris); Mr. Alexander Loos, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, ninety-one.

We are glad to know that Mr. Horace Seaver, editor of the Boston Investigator, was well received by the Free Religious Association, and that he feels so kindly towards it as the subjoined paragraphs in his last issue show:—

"The principle feature of the week was the Convention of the Free Religionists, which began on Thursday at the Parker Fraternity Rooms and was continued throughout the next day and evening at the Tremont Temple. There are some very able and liberal men connected with this movement, and the addresses by Messrs. Frothingham, Potter, Connor, Mills, Bartol, the venerable and good Madam Lucretia Mott, and others, were delivered to large, intelligent, and appreciative audiences. A kind invitation having been given us to speak at the meeting on Friday afternoon, we cheerfully accepted it, and we have the pleasure to add that we were received in a friendly manner and listened to with apparently respectful attention."

"S. T.—We profess to be the advocates of free thought, and on this account are friendly to Free Religion. One of its most noted and ablest champions, in a letter urging us to speak on its platform, nobly says:—"If the Free Religious Association is not free enough for you, it is not free enough for me." We are very happy to say that, having spoken several times on its platform and been kindly received with all our heresies, we conclude that it is about free enough—and further, that its Religion of Humanity is so near what we call Atheism that we can hardly tell the difference between them."

Miss Sedgwick ("Life and Letters of Catharine M. Sedgwick," p. 338) wrote in the following noble strain to her niece:—"I have been content myself with the great principle achieved and fixed by the Protestant battle—the right of private judgment. I never could—and now less than ever—feel the vital importance of one mode of faith over another. The Protestant, in all its modifications, seems to me to have an immense advantage in its political influence, and in its general development and advancement of the species. But that God should look with more favor on any individual because he is a Catholic or a Protestant seems to me incredible. That the infinite Father of all, looking over his universe, should respect the pens and fences set up by his short-sighted creatures! Some of these, no doubt, are far better for us than others; but no one nearer to his love than another. The great thing is to choose that best adapted to our spiritual wants; or rather, I should think, to rise to an elevation above them all—nearer to God's universal charity, and farther from man's ignorant restrictions."

Persons who send us illegible scrawls written with pencil need not inquire why they do not appear in print. We usually throw them into the waste-basket unread. It is an incivility to send them.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

According to the notice given in THE INDEX, the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1873 was held in Boston on the 30th and 31st of May. A Report of the meeting will be printed in pamphlet form as usual, but many readers of THE INDEX may like to have some sketch of the proceedings in advance of that more complete account. Let me try here to give such a sketch, with such reflections on the general character of the Convention as occur to me.

The Association assembled on the evening of the 30th in the Parker Fraternity Hall. This opening session of the Annual Meeting is designed to take all the details of business pertaining to the organization,—such as the election of officers, the hearing of reports, and the appointment of the necessary Committees for keeping the Association in running order,—so that the general Convention of the following day in Tremont Temple may be entirely free from these matters (which audiences usually pronounce very dry), and may be devoted wholly to the discussion of such questions of public interest as may be presented. At first this preliminary business-session was held at 8 o'clock in the afternoon, and attended only by the handful of persons most immediately interested in the organized work of the Association. This, in fact, was all that was expected. The necessary business was dispatched in an hour or so, and the little company separated, satisfied that these dull but essential details could be performed so smoothly and with so little waste of time. But the hour was so inconvenient even for some of those most personally concerned in the direction of the business of the Association, that last year it was resolved to hold the meeting in the evening instead of the afternoon. It was decided, too, that the session might be made interesting and profitable by discussion and addresses on the affairs and objects of the Association, since the mere business matters were slight and could not occupy the whole time. So the Committee arranged beforehand for two or three addresses to follow the formalities of business. The attendance was much larger than it had previously been, and the session was one of great interest. This year the same plan was adopted, and with results still more satisfactory. Indeed, the officers of the Association felt that this opening session was one of the most encouraging and pleasant features of the whole Convention. The Hall was nearly filled; and this though Boston had been drenched with heavy rain in the latter part of the afternoon, and the clouds were still threatening and dripping. And not only was the audience unexpectedly large, but it was an exceedingly attentive and even enthusiastic audience. The best of feeling prevailed. The Committee of Arrangements, supposing that, as in the previous year, the business would be soon completed and that there would then be time for more formal addresses, had provided for two or three set speeches, that no time might be wasted. But the speeches would not wait. They kept going off all along through the meeting, while matters of business were under consideration; and some of the best of them were made by persons whose attendance had not been counted upon. The whole meeting was spontaneous and hearty, and made us feel the pulsations of popular life in the Association as never before.

To give a brief abstract of this session:—The Treasurer's Report showed that all demands for the year had been met, and that a small balance remained in the treasury. Then came the proposed amendments to the Constitution. The first, to increase the number of Vice-Presidents from "three" to "twelve," having been explained by the President, passed unanimously without discussion. The President also stated that, this amendment having been referred to the Executive Committee at the meeting last year, the Committee had entered into correspondence with well-known persons supposed to be in sympathy with the general principles of the Association, with a view of securing such a list of Vice-Presidents as would answer the purpose of the amendment, and because also it was not desirable to use any person's name without his consent. The Committee's instincts in this matter had been very correct, for in no case had their application met with refusal. And the result, he thought, would be recognized as very satisfactory. It should be added that the instincts of the Committee proved true because they were not seeking simply to decorate the Association with a list of distinguished names, but because they aimed at selecting those who, besides being representative persons in different circles of thought and activity, had actually done solid and earnest work in various ways for the principles on which the Association is based. The entire list of officers, including the new Vice-Presidents, as afterwards reported and elected by the meeting, is as follows:—President, O. B. Frothingham; Vice-Presidents, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Gerrit Smith, Robert Dale Owen, Lydia Maria Child, Isaac M. Wise, George W. Curtis, Frederick Schünnemann-Pott, Edward L. Youmans, E. B. Ward, George Hoadly, T. W. Higginson; Secretary, Wm. J. Potter; Assistant Secretary, Hannah E. Stevenson; Treasurer, Richard P. Halliwell; Directors, John Weiss, Chas. K. Whipple, Ednah D. Cheney, John T. Sargent, Mary C. Shannon, Francis E. Abbot. It will be noticed that all the officers of last year are retained on the list, though two or three have changed places so as to bring the Directors as much as possible within the vicinity of Boston and the meetings of the Executive Board.

The second of the proposed amendments—namely, to insert in the 2d article of the Constitution these words: "and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being,"—this called forth more expression of opinion. But the expression was all on one side. I had never for a moment anticipated that there would be any serious opposition to the amendment, and was not surprised that there was no dissent. But I had not anticipated that it would be endorsed so heartily and enthusiastically. Not only was there no dissent, but everybody seemed to want to vote for it. It was not to be expected that the amendment would fail; for then we must have asked the question, For what did we ever organize and why should we continue to exist? Yet it is none the less gratifying that the amendment should have been welcomed so warmly, and that the principle of it, after a plain statement of its significance and logical consequences, should now be established beyond a doubt in the Constitution by so full and earnest a vote of the Association. An interesting feature of the discussion on this amendment was that Mr. Horace Seaver, the Editor of the Boston Investigator, was noticed in the audience and was called upon for a speech. Mr. Seaver responded in a few most friendly remarks, wishing the Association success, and said he had no doubt that the proposed amendment would strengthen it among all liberal people.

Other business of this session was the reading of the Report of the Executive Committee by the Secretary with brief remarks, on some points suggested in it by various friends present. The meeting continued with no break of interest till nearly 10 o'clock.

I have given more than half the space of my article to this opening business-session, yet not without design; for the unexpectedly large attendance and the hearty feeling manifested at this meeting were felt to have an important bearing on the future of the Association.

On Friday, the 31st, the sessions were held as usual in the Hall of Tremont Temple. The morning was quite rainy, and rain continued at intervals during the day. Yet the attendance at all three sessions was excellent; in the forenoon and evening falling not much below the average. This was another encouraging fact, especially as we did not advertise so many distinguished speakers as we have generally done. After a graceful opening address by the President, Mr. J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, at the morning session read a very bright and pungent paper on "Liberty and the Church in America." He took up the question of the proposed Christian amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and also the statutes and official acts of government by which the religious liberty of individual citizens is already violated, and argued for a consistent carrying out of the original American doctrine of separation of Church and State to the utter abolition of everything that can be called "official piety." Mr. Chadwick has been a friend and member of the Association from its origin, but is a new and most welcome speaker on its platform. He was followed in briefer addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott and Dr. Bartol. Mr. Chadwick's essay will be printed in full in the pamphlet and also a report of the other addresses, and no further attempt will be made to sketch them here. Mrs. Mott's interest in the Association grows with every year, and she made the journey from Philadelphia purposely to attend this Annual Meeting. Though eighty years old, she sat through nearly the whole of the three sessions of Friday, and her two addresses were very sweet and acceptable.

At the afternoon meeting, the question presented was, "Does Religion represent a permanent sentiment of the human mind, or is it a perishable superstition?" This was opened by a fine-toned address from Mr. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, N. Y. His central thought was that, while Religion in historical development becomes incrustated with errors, superstitions, evil institutions and practices which are continually passing away, in itself it represents the contact of the finite mind with the Infinite, and therefore in the nature of things can never become obsolete. Mr. Horace Seaver had been invited to come to give his views on this question, as it was supposed he would take the negative side. He did not accept the invitation in time to be advertised, but he was present and followed Mr. Mills in a cordial and manly speech. He did not wish to appear, he said, as an antagonist to the Association, for his sympathies were very much with it. He heard definitions of religion given on that platform which he could accept. But looking at religion in its popular sense and work, it was to him identified with bigotry and superstition, and so he made war upon it and believed it must finally pass away. Nor could he quite go with Mr. Mills in what he said of the Infinite—the Infinite Life and the Infinite Beyond. It was all very beautiful, but to him it was all a dream. He knew nothing beyond this world and humanity, and believed it would be better for mankind to confine their attention to the things that now are. Brief remarks were made by Mr. G. B. Stebbins, of Detroit, and Mr. J. L. Hatch, of Westboro, Mass.

The evening session was opened by an essay from the President, Mr. Frothingham, on "The Religion of Humanity." This paper was a remarkable one. It was both elaborate and brilliant. When printed, it must inevitably attract a good deal of attention, and will probably be regarded as marking a new departure in Mr. Frothingham's religious and philosophical views. This will not be strictly true, for, if I mistake not, Mr. Frothingham has held these views for some time. He has been thought to be inclining towards Positivism—not Comtism, but English Positivism—for several years: but this, so far as I am aware, is the most complete general statement on the subject that he has yet made. Addresses followed by Mrs. Mott, by Mr. Alexander Loom, who was present as a representative of the German Freie Gemeinden, and whose address agreed in sentiment very nearly with Mr. Frothingham's. The meeting closed with a few earnest words by Mr. Samuel Longfellow.

Thus ended the Fifth Annual Meeting of the Association. Aside from features of special interest already noted, these may be added. First, there were more friends of the Association present from distant parts of the country than have been known to be in attendance at previous meetings. Not only were New England and New York City represented, but Philadelphia and vicinity, Western New York, Cincinnati, Detroit, distant Dubuque, and other places. Second, the number of persons who gave their names as members of the Association was more than double the number who have subscribed at any previous meeting.

W. J. F.

"One night," says James T. Fields, in his charming "Yesterdays with Authors," "we made the acquaintance of a cabin-boy on board a brig, whom we found out duty, and reading a large subscription volume, which proved on inquiry to be a Commentary on the Bible. When Hawthorne questioned him why he was reading then and there that particular book, he replied, with a knowing wink at both of us, 'There's consid'ble her'y in our place, and I'm a-studying up for 'em.'" Query: did this precocious lamb of Orthodoxy grow up into a battering-ram? Who knows but he was that famous butter and rebutter, Rev. J. D. Fulton?

AN HOUR AT THE ROYAL INSTITUTION.

LONDON, May 16.

Among the signs that indicate the advancing tendencies of religious liberty in this country may be reckoned the freedom with which the Royal Institution has been treating some of the problems which bear immediately upon the theology of the day. The Royal Institution exists by authority of the government, and naturally has all the caution which might be expected of a representative institution. It is under the immediate charge of Professors Tyndall and Huxley, on whom more, perhaps, than on any other men in the country lynx-eyed Orthodoxy has its keen peepers (it can only peep!) fixed. Yet these men have a strong conviction that they have a duty to perform to the intelligence of the country as well as to its ignorance, and they have of late been assuming the extraordinary responsibility of doing that duty. You have already had republished in America Max Müller's lectures delivered there on the "Science of Religion," in which the Hebrew faith was treated as one of the Asiatic Religions. The lectures had indeed a few sops for the Cerberus of Prejudice, but they were not sufficient to diminish the weight of the radical fact that all Religions, including those regarded by the masses as divinely authentic, were included by the Royal Institution as mere phenomena for scientific classification and investigation. For the passing of a thing into the realm of Science corresponds now with its passage, in earlier times, into the domain of Mythology. Dante and Milton fossilized the infernal powers which had long haunted the human imagination; and such thinkers as Max Müller are fossilizing the whole realm of supernaturalism. Since those lectures were delivered, the Royal Institution has admitted a rationalistic series of lectures on Demonology, which included a relegation of Satan to the region of mythical personifications. And now we are having a very important series of lectures in the same institution on the origin and development of primitive beliefs and customs of mankind, by the author of "Primitive Culture."

Mr. Edward B. Tylor, the lecturer to whom I allude, may be regarded as the rising man among the philosophic ethnologists of England. He is as yet a young man, but has, in an extraordinary degree, the confidence of the scientific world. He has all the knowledge and resources of Sir John Lubbock, but has, what the very able baronet lacks, an imaginative power which, restrained as it is by both culture and conscientiousness, enables him to enter very profoundly into the various states of mind in which certain primitive ideas have been formed. Tylor is perhaps the keenest man alive in tracking to its far-off beginning the old customs which now and then crop up amid civilized life without having any rational relationship to the present social or moral conditions. A curious incident, by the way, happened just before he began these lectures. The first of them led him to trace the origin of the wide-spread belief among savages and barbarians (between which ethnology now draws a sharp distinction in favor of the latter) that an enemy may be affected or injured by what is done to some effigy or chosen representative of that enemy,—of which so many instances exist from the brand on which the life of Meleager was supposed to depend to the little wax figure which wizards used to melt by slow fires, in the belief that with it would perish the individual after whom it was named or shaped. While Mr. Tylor was engaged in preparing his statement on this subject, he heard of a queer incident which had occurred in a country tavern not far from his residence, which is in Somerset county. Some men who had gathered around the fire-place in that tavern were astonished at the falling of a number of small objects down the chimney. On examination they proved to be onions. How did they get up the chimney? Mr. Tylor hearing of the incident hastened to the tavern, and, after some difficulties, succeeded in obtaining two of these onions, which he showed us at the Royal Institution. Each of them was stuck full of pins, so that hardly a particle of the onion could be seen because of the pin-heads, and on each was a paper-label inscribed with the name of a distinguished gentleman of the county,—one being a near relative of Mr. Tylor himself, who as a magistrate had opposed the licensing of that tavern when last applied for. Unquestionably the irate publican had regarded the onions as sufficiently connected with the men whose names were written upon them to believe that they would feel the pins thrust in the vegetable and suffer by the smoking-process to which they were subjected! Mr. Tylor analyzed very carefully the condition of mind represented by this superstition, showing that it was an ignorant first attempt at generalization. The human mind seizes on the most superficial resemblances,—in this case the mere bearing of a common name,—between two totally unrelated objects, and from that inferred an entire relationship. It was such a notion which lead the primitive man to believe that the mere utterance of a sacred or an infernal name would affect the being to whom it was supposed to belong. "Talk of the devil, and he will appear." It may, said Mr. Tylor, seem to you strange and droll that such a superstition as this should be found in the present day in an English county; but if you will examine closely the relation of symbolism to the religion of even the higher classes around us, you will find in it a survival of this same phase of the savage mind. The belief that an image may carry with it the virtues of that which it represents, or that symbols are endowed with the power to communicate actual powers, is by no means confined to this publican puncturing his onion with the idea that he is puncturing the human flesh of the man whose name he has written on it. Of course it would not do for a lecturer at the Royal Institution, especially when invited to handle a delicate subject before persons of different beliefs without imposed conditions, to avail himself of the position to propagate any peculiar views on religious points. Mr. Tylor, therefore, having directed the minds of his hearers, leaves them to follow to their own conclusions. But there is much in an eye, a voice, a face; and these went farther than the man quietly leaning on his elbows and stating his facts permitted his language to go. No one present could fail to perceive that to the mind of the scholar the fancy that moral good flowed through the channel of eucharistic bread and wine, or through the baptismal font, was but another form of the onion-puncturing philosophy. Such indeed was the general sense of the conversation which ensued. And I am happy to state that the interest and enthusiasm with which this and other very interesting and quasi-heretical points made by the lecturer have excited in his fashionable audience, show plainly that the Royal Institution has not far outrun public sentiment in taking up the cognizance of those sciences which bear upon popular Theology.

Among the many fine heads which I observed at Mr. Tylor's last lecture, none was finer than that of Thomas Wentworth Higginson, now in London, who, with his keen instinct for the best thing that can be got, has already taken his seat in the auditorium of the Royal as if he were born to it. When the lecture was over, Col. Higginson had a conversation with Mr. Tylor, who very soon discovered that he had no ordinary listener in the American before him, and soon had out his Note-book writing down the vast number of appropriate facts and important references which our friend gave him. Nor was this their last meeting. Col. Higginson has mingled with many of the best thinkers in London and has already gained a place in their esteem which causes a deep regret that he can only remain with us for a few weeks. Last night I had the pleasure of seeing the author of the charming satire, "Ought Women to learn the Alphabet?" surrounded by a bevy of those brilliant young ladies who have of late taken up the rights of their sex with an enthusiasm which astounds society, and they followed him about as lambs their shepherd. "Malbone" has already been republished in this country, and had many admiring readers; and after the high praise recently bestowed upon the Atlantic Essays of the same author by the Spectator and the Examiner (which declare Higginson as among the most brilliant of American writers). I have no doubt that England will be enabled to enjoy fully the exquisite wit of the Interpreter of "Saints and their Bodies" and "The Greek Goddesses." At any rate, the presence of the Colonel has already given liberal circles in London a new sensation, and it is probable that, since Emerson was here, no finer audience has collected around an American thinker than that which will listen to him in South Place Chapel next Sunday morning. M. D. CONWAY.

It is the few great truths, scattered like pieces of camphor through the musty old-clothes chest of the Bible, that have kept the moths out so long. But the moths have been thereby cheated out of their own. By and by mankind will pick out the truths, and turn over the rags to their proper owners.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errors.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

JOTTINGS.

Boston, May 25, 1872.

MR. ABBOT:—

I have just been enjoying THE INDEX of the 25th. I quite agree with you that Christianity is aggressive and should be resisted. I rather grudged three of your columns to Mr. Howard's article from the Christian Advocate, and I should like his authority for his "Vicioli, Galileo." Gibbon cites an eyewitness of Julian's death scene, and gives the emperor's philosophic address to his friends on the occasion, which certainly contradicts the assertion of Mr. Howard (Edit. Philadelphia, 1804, Vol. 8, p. 215.) And in notes at the foot of the same page, the learned historian says:—"The whole relation of the death of Julian is given by Ammianus, an intelligent spectator." "The calumnies of Gregory and the legends of more ancient saints may now be silently despised." Perhaps I may here interpolate a remark on the oft-imputed "sneer of Gibbon." As I read him, I seem to see the friend and associate of erudite Christians saying to them:—"I do not wish to stir up ignorant people to warfare upon you; but between ourselves, as scholars and seekers after truth, what do you say to facts of this sort?" When he says of the Jews (Vol. 2, p. 81):—"That singular people seems to have yielded a stronger and more ready assent to the traditions of their remote ancestors than to the evidence of their own senses,"—he appears to me to be addressing Dr. Johnson and the Archbishop of Canterbury. And referring to your good note to our admired Mr. Frothingham, where you speak of the error of denouncing Christianity as wilful imposture, let me say that this is the weak point of Thomas Paine. If he had omitted his charges of personal dishonesty against the clergy, his "Age of Reason" would have been unanswerable. The rest of it is mere "Scripture"—or obvious inference therefrom. There have always been systems of theology, and clergy as well as laity who believed in them.

The statement by Mr. Howard that "the foes of the Church have hardly ever been fewer, less confident, or less earnest and determined than to-day," the present writer (as Carlyle says, in contravention of Pelham's Dogma, that it is permitted to mortals under certain conditions to wear white trousers) contents himself with respectfully but firmly denying.
 C. W. B.

DEHUMANIZING TENDENCY OF CHRISTIANITY.

It has been too often conceded that, because the New Testament contains in some passages a lofty and terse expression of love as the highest duty of man, Christianity as a system must be of an ennobling tendency. But, in truth, Christianity does not properly nourish the moral nature of man as good food nourishes the body. It is rather like those sweetened alcoholic beverages which delight and stimulate only to pervert and finally destroy that which they should nourish.

Christianity makes an insidious and often fatal attack on the moral nature of man by substituting for the sentiments of love and duty to our fellow-beings, which constitute the paramount law of every noble nature, the sense of obligation to blind obedience to an infinite, mysterious and revengeful Being. In the Christian ethics there is no paramount duty to man—no undying love to our fellow-beings. An abject obedience to an awful and dangerous Power is the real principle of Christian morality. When this is substituted for our innate love of our fellow-beings and we learn to look upon their infinite torture with complacency, the moral nature is as effectually destroyed as it can be by dogma. Conscience and love would be utterly dead, were it not for the fact that humanity cannot be totally transformed by the most debasing belief.

All history for the last fifteen hundred years is a dark and bloody illustration of the heartless and tyrannical cruelty produced by substituting obedience, coerced by fear, for all the nobler impulses of humanity. That Christianity does substitute obedience, or rather fear, for every noble sentiment, is sufficiently illustrated in the writings of theologians generally; but the most apt and striking illustration of this demoralization is found in the aptly, earnest and amusing letter of Rev. Mr. Chamberlain on page 154 of THE INDEX, in which with naive unconsciousness, he shows the state of mind to which theology has reduced him. He says:—

"If atheism be true, there is no certainty of any truth, since my mind itself may be a lie, and all phenomena delusions. I say there is no such thing as right and justice, since nowhere is there a fountain of the same or a law to fix the same. I say there is no government of right above me, except it be my will, unless it be the right of the bayonet or the slave-whip in the hands of power—a right of force, which is exactly no right at all, for there is no God to teach me obedience. I say there is no morality except my own lust, since there is no God to bid me be pure. I say there is no philosophy, since my fellow-man and I are only beasts that perish, and there is no God to tell me man is my brother—no anything except my will and that of other men to fight together for the mastery of mere force, as the brutes do; and we are all brutes, playing with lies by the aid of steam and electricity."

If such be really the condition of any serious mind, it is obvious that he needs some terror, some fear of hell or the hangman, to keep him from crime. Yet Christianity produces that very condition, and then asserts its own ability to control by terror, when it has dethroned the moral sense.

It is difficult to believe, however, that the Rev. Mr. C. is so demoralized as he asserts. On the contrary, it is highly probable that, if he could get rid of his fear of a ferocious Divinity, he would find a moral sentiment springing up in its place, purer, nobler, and more delightful in its effects, and would be able to prescribe skillfully for his fellow-victims of a debasing delusion.
 B.

PRO AND CON.

EVANSTON, ILL., March 29, 1872.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

THE INDEX has been making me acquainted with you for the past six months. I like you some, and some I don't. I like a certain straightforward manliness there is about you; but I don't like the way you have of pitching into everybody that does not think just as you do. If I had a litter of promising kittens in the blind state, I should not set about performing surgical operations to get their eyes open. I should see too that they got their regular food. It is more material, I doubt not,—also more philosophical. But then you are not material.

Permit me to introduce myself to you as a Christian—a genuine, Simon-Pure Christian. I am also a Free Religionist; that is, I believe in letting everybody enjoy his own religion. I never could be anti-Christian, because to be anti-Christ is to be anti-Love; and Love is about all there is of God, to me. I might be extra-Christian, perhaps, if I could imagine anything good that is not in Christ. Christ stands to all the ages for love, as no other human being ever did. He is one with God by virtue of his infinite, inexhaustible love. "D. A. W." says that all souls are not equal, which proves that he has not comprehended Christ, however he may deny him. When Christ's mission shall be fulfilled, and infinite, equal love shall equally bless every infinite, equal soul, if there is anything extra, I shall want it; but I have a suspicion that you will never find anything good outside of God.

It seems to be a query with you how you shall carry Free Religion to the poor and degraded. Let me recommend the Christ-method. Heal the sick, cure the blind, make the lame to walk and the dumb to talk, by a practical love which shall see the soul through the condition, and recognize it as the equal of your own. I would like to see Christ recognized by all governments in that way.

But not the other. The proposed Amendment is the Fugitive Slave Law of Orthodoxy. It sounds the tocsin for the great battle. Let the movement be once successfully inaugurated, and the end no man can comprehend. My name is on one of your lists, but I gave it half heartedly. I don't know that I really want to roll back the car. War is nothing; physical suffering and death are nothing. The open road from the soul of man to the soul of the Infinite—that is the thing, and that lies just in the wake of the Amendment.

Yours in the love of truth,
 CAROLINE F. CORBIN.

NOT FAR OFF, BUT NEAR.

The almost infallible sign of the constant and promising growth of "Free Religion" is the increasing aggressiveness of liberated thought, from which spring all "religions." All Christendom is startled too, and on the alert to keep down this new infection!

Its growth is rapid, because of the genuineness of the menacing foe, which assails priest and layman, ritual and creed, from within religion and not from without, as in any former time. It is deadlier than a shower of bullets, more to be feared than the tramp of armed men. Nothing can compare with the power of a logical foe over an illogical one.

If, at this stage, there is not an actual personality to "love" and "gaze after" with a very vague and wandering faith, there is a deepening and widening of a humanity-loving creed, growing up and winning over to itself a new power of loving, so superior to the other that the mythical and shadowy must give place after awhile to the real and practical belief in real and practical beneficence toward the whole of humanity.

What a beautiful "religion" "humanitarianism" might become! To do so sweet a thing as to love our neighbors as ourselves; to strive toward so perfect a state as the spirit of the golden rule would bring us into; to make virtue so lovely by living it, gradually and patiently, that a "Christ" would dwell among us not vaguely, but really: not as a memory, not as a far-off, half-credited history, but duplicated in this and every age, the outgrowth of a brotherhood not possible in the world when men are looking away from themselves, and trampling justice and forgiveness under their feet.

Science has fairly instituted a "search after God." A vain search, after all, it must be, if God ever hides himself. It may prove to be reaching after what we could not grasp, were it grappled and brought down to the level of our thoughts.

The man who erects a building with the money he could double and treble in bank stocks, and inscribes over its doorway, "Free Lunch," need not go to Science to ask where God is; the overshadowing presence is so near that the feet of the passing through who go in to be fed by his hand carry the glad news to him, as ten thousand "British Reviews" could not.

The woman who waits all her glorious youth, and through the ripening years, till old age comes with gray hair and bent form, to see the shadow pass by, and the cloud lift that has blighted and scathed her life, and at last pushes her into her grave without appeal, with the hunger in her own heart for love unfed; bares her white bosom to nourish the famished lips of babes not her own; cools the feverish pulse by nights and days of assiduous watching; stands at the bedside of the dying; loves without love; forbears, suffers, hopes for others, and forever lingers herself on the borders of a secret despair—such an one "sees God" in her inward illuminations in a way that the scientist who inducts by method and parallelogram, never sees him, and never will as she sees, and knows, through the mediumship of her charity and plenitude of her love for the human nature which is itself a revelation of Deity and the best religion the world needs.
 C. A. B.

HORACE GREESLEY.

WELLSVILLE, Kan., May 23, 1872.

ED. INDEX:—

Suffer me to express the reasons for my political preference through your paper. Horace Greeley stands at the head of our honest, progressive, liberal citizens—at the head of the people who labored to emancipate the negro, to aid the immigrant, to lead the masses on to the glorious results of industry and peace.

As to Grant, he is, as a military man, a success; as a statesman, a failure.

We are nursing a viper in perpetuating the feud between North and South. When will the country ever be united under the present régime?

I further ask, who has greater demands on the people at large than Horace Greeley?

FRANK PRATHER.

[Mr. E. L. Crane has now expressed his preference for Grant, and Mr. Prather for Greeley. For the present at least, we judge it necessary, on account of the smallness of THE INDEX, not to enter further into the presidential contest. So many opportunities for political discussion are to be found elsewhere that no one will consider it a violation of free speech, if we prefer to devote THE INDEX mainly to subjects on which the political press preserves a very politic silence. The successful hunter always takes aim at something, and THE INDEX aims at Slavery. One target at a time.—ED.]

THE CHURCH LEECH.

NEW YORK, May 24, 1872.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In Washington, day before yesterday evening, Prof. Doolittle and I called at the rooms of Judge Wm. D. Kelley, the distinguished member of Congress for Philadelphia. I showed him the last tract, your "Demands of Liberalism." He read the first demand, and said—"I fully agree to that;" and he then went on to tell us that there is now a bill before Congress to admit a chime of bells for a church free of duty, and, said he,—"I am told there are more than fifty precedents for it, and also for the admission of church organs free of duty; and in every case they have been for Catholic churches."

Tell your Protestant friends of this way of robbing the Treasury, so that they may all go about it and defeat the scheme. When will the Free Thinkers of this country become weary of being taxed to prop up decaying and debasing superstition?

Yours in hope,
 A. K. B.

NO ATHEISTIC MASONS.

CINCINNATI, June 7th.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

Just taken up THE INDEX of this week, in which you ask the question—"Is an openly avowed atheist permitted to join the Free Masons?"

Answer—"No."

Yours truly,
 A. BATE—One Who Knows.

To those liberals who smile at the least reference to "persecution" nowadays, as the dim delusion of over-heated brains, we recommend perusal of the following from the Boston Commonwealth of May 18:—

"A respectable citizen of Brooklyn was arrested and brought before a Justice's court in that town on Tuesday morning last, under the charge of tying up a passion-flower about his front-door on Sunday, found guilty upon the testimony of a policeman, and fined! The defendant appealed to another court, and the case will go to Dulham. But what shall we say of the bigotry that induces such a prosecution? Must we foster it, till, too grievous to be borne, an indignant public sentiment sweeps away all Sunday restraints? We confess we think there is danger of the latter."

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—One hundred copies for One Dollar, or a less number at the same rate, namely, One Cent a copy.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no abler, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Sixty copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Sixty copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Sixty copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

or

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address—S. H. MORSE,
138-14 25 BROMFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

J. F. RUGGLES, BIBLIPOLE.
BRONSON, MICH.

All obtainable books furnished on short notice and at fair prices. Special attention given to filling orders for rare, curious, and "out of print" works! Regular importations from London.
We solicit the patronage of ALL, whether Free Religionists, Infidels, Spiritualists, or the rest of Mankind! 138-14

"THE MASTER-PIECE OF A MASTER-MIND."
THE TRIAL OF THEISM.

By Geo. J. Holyoake, 12mo, 176 pp. cl.

"What I find to be Truth shall be welcome to me, let it sound as it may. I will know! And should this be impossible, this much at least I will know, that it is not possible."
—FICHTER, [Author's motto.]

A balance in which the vagaries of all phases of Theism are weighed and found wanting. Just imported from London, postpaid $1.

Address—J. F. RUGGLES,
Bronson, Michigan.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, so much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

St. Louis, Quincy, Hannibal, Keokuk, Toledo, Wabash & Western R. R.

PULLMAN PALACE SLEEPING CARS!

THE Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway Co., having recently extended its line of Railway to the City of Saint Louis, will commence running all its regular passenger trains through to that city on and after the 14th day of May, 1871. The day trains will be equipped with new and elegant passenger coaches, and all night trains with the much celebrated and popular Pullman Palace Sleeping Coaches.

	Special Thro' Express.	Pacific Express.
Leave Toledo.....	11:15 A. M.	11:15 P. M.
Ar. St. Wayne.....	8:00 P. M.	8:30 A. M.
" Lafayette.....	7:40 "	8:30 "
" Danville.....	10:05 "	11:50 "
" Springfield.....	8:35 A. M.	4:10 P. M.
" Quincy.....	8:45 "	9:35 "
" Keokuk.....	9:50 "	10:45 "
" St. Louis.....	7:00 "	7:15 "

Trains arrive from the West at 2:15 A. M., 8:40 P. M., and 5:00 P. M.

GEO. H. BURNOWS,

Gen'l Superintendent.

JOHN U. PARSONS,

Gen'l Ticket Agent.

[9017]

Lake Shore & Mich. Southern R. R.

1872.

ON and after Sunday, Jan. 14th, 1872, Passenger Trains will leave Toledo daily (Sundays excepted) as follows (Cleveland time):

CLEVELAND & TOLEDO DIVISION.

LEAVE TOLEDO.

8:00 A. M. Atlantic Express East, daily, arrives at Cleveland at 7:25 A. M.
6:00 A. M. Day Express will stop at Elmore, Fremont, Clyde, Bellevue, Monroeville, Norwalk, Townsend, Wakeman, Oberlin, Elyria and Berea, arrives at Cleveland at 10:30 A. M.
10:30 A. M. Cincinnati Express, stopping at all stations, reaches Cleveland at 8:45 P. M.
6:30 P. M. Special N. Y. Express, will stop at Fremont, Clyde, Monroeville, Norwalk and Elyria, arrives at Cleveland 10:15 P. M. Sleeping cars to Buffalo and Rochester.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

10:40 and 10:35 A. M., and 7:40 and 11:00 P. M.

MICHIGAN SOUTHERN DIVISION.

TRAINS DEPART.

MAIN LINE—8:15 A. M. Mail; 11:15 A. M. Special Chicago Express; 5:45 P. M., Coldwater Accommodation; 8:00 P. M., Night Express.
AIR LINE—11:05 A. M., Accommodation; 11:30 P. M. Pacific Express.
DETROIT—6:00, 11:30 A. M., 5:30 and 8:00 P. M.
JACKSON—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.
KALAMAZOO AND GRAND RAPIDS—11:15 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

TRAINS ARRIVE.

MAIN LINE—6:30 and 10:35 A. M., and 5:40 & 6:30 P. M.
AIR LINE—2:40 A. M., and 6:55 P. M.
DETROIT—10:40 and 12:01 A. M., and 6:05 and 9:00 P. M.
JACKSON—10:35 A. M., and 5:51 P. M.
COLDWATER ACCOMMODATION—10:35 A. M.

CHAS. F. HATCH, Gen'l Supt.,

Cleveland, Ohio
S. H. WARING, Ticket Agent, Toledo, O. [9017]

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents.
Vols. I and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $3.00.
Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,

110-116 Bow, Box 2398, St. Louis, Mo.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

Free Religious Association.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the ANNUAL MEETING of the FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION for 1871, can be obtained by applying to the Secretary, W. J. POTTER, NEW BEDFORD, MASS. It contains Essays, by John Weiss, on "THE ATTITUDE OF SCIENCE TO RELIGION;" by O. B. Frothingham, on "SUPERSTITION AND DOGMATISM;" and by Wm. J. Potter, on "THE NATURAL GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY;" also a report of addresses by Dr. Bartok, T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Prof. Denton, A. M. Powell, and others, together with other proceedings of the meeting. Price 25 cents; in packages of five or more 25 cents each.

THE ANNUAL REPORTS for 1868, 1869, and 1870 (at 25 cents each), Rev. Samuel Johnson's Essay on "THE WORSHIP OF JESUS" (50 cents), Rev. W. H. Channing's Essay on "THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA" (30 cents), Col. T. W. Higginson's Essay on "THE STRENGTH OF RELIGIONS" (30 cents), and an Essay on "REASON AND REVELATION," by Wm. J. Potter (10 cents), all published through the Association, can also be obtained as above.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 80 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 25 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. PROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-120.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[28-38] 19 PINEKNY ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS

FROM

THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Talmud, Bible, Philo Judaeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novales, Renan, Tellelein, Milton, Penn, Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman, Tyndall, Max Muller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Fittie, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."

The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

404 pages: Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address by
G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT.

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1300 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufacture, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 238 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

[126-131.]

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $2.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

Digitized by Google

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JUNE 22, 1872.

WHOLE No. 130.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTATUUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH ELLINGWOOD, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENNEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONTEGUE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

On Truth and Historical Truthfulness.

BY PROFESSOR FRANCIS WILLIAM NEWMAN.

All persons of moderate cultivation are aware that the most permanent and widespread religions of the world are supposed to rest on historical fact, guaranteed by written books which are regarded as Holy Scripture. Most of us know that Mohammedans, Brahmins and Buddhists revere sacred books, and accept as fact of history or truth of morals whatever they contain; yet Christians are very slow to reflect that men of foreign religions have the same ostensible justification of trust in their Scriptures as Christians have. "The learned and the wise," it is said, "receive them as authentic and true; they come down from high antiquity; they were believed by our forefathers; the law of the land has adopted them; the most pious persons revere them; the impious despise them." To this, Christians add that men of foreign religion are less worthy of trust and honor, less moral, in short, than are Christians; but when pressed with unpleasant facts, they modify the statement into "less moral than are true Christians." Thus they compare the mixed masses of foreigners with a select portion of their own nation, and have no difficulty in satisfying themselves that the latter are morally superior; moreover, they are unaware of the grave fallacy involved in imputing all moral superiority of religious persons to their religion. The Austrians, the Neapolitans and the French have long professed the same religion; so have the Irish and the Spaniards; yet national institutions cause wide moral differences among them even in matters of prime importance. The same thing may be observed of the Russians and the Greeks. It must be added that many nations which are not Christian meet wretched specimens of Christianity in the sailors, soldiers, statesmen or merchants with whom they are chiefly acquainted; and they are pardonable in believing that their own religion more conduces to moral goodness. Are we then to assume that no such fallacious tendency besets us? Do we not judge of foreign goodness by the coarse average which turns up on the surface? If we freely avow that of professing Christendom only a small fraction are "true" Christians, and are fair specimens of the religion, surely we ought to consider how scant are our opportunities of knowing the homely goodness of thousands in humble or retired life among the vast millions of foreigners, of whom we are apt to judge by the conduct of their lords and oppressors, or their official tools, or perhaps from those who are corrupted by foreign contact.

While much deduction, nay, very much, has to be made from the self-complacent admiration of Christendom, indulged in by those who say (as said the Jews of old according to the prophet), "The kingdom of the Lord are we," it is not intended here to deny that Christianity on the whole, as a moral system, is superior both to the older national religions and to Mohammedanism. But that at which I here point is, that the moral goodness of religious precepts in no sense guarantees to us the truth of historical any more than of scientific statements made in the books of a religion; not even though the religion inculcate Truth as a duty. To judge rightly of historical truth is a faculty which grows up slowly and uncertainly—a faculty which only a very small fraction of the most cultivated nations has yet attained. Out of a multitude of honest Englishmen or Americans, taken at random, no large percentage is capable of telling accurately the details of an unusual and exciting event. A still smaller fraction can sift the truth of a story which has passed from mouth to mouth through several narrators; and the more any alleged marvel gratifies the moral cravings of mankind, so much the more greedily do a majority of simple good men believe it. The phenomena of Mormonism are very instructive. "Good news" is preached, far and wide, that there is a land of sacred industry and blessed equality, governed by a divinely appointed leader. There the poor are anxiously looked after by the public authorities, whose first duty is to organize industry, so that pauperism is unknown. The happiness of that peculiar land is sanctioned and secured by a divine revelation in the book of Mormon, which is the guide of public as well as private life. The acceptableness of the general proclamation causes many of the simple-hearted in England, North Germany and Scandinavia to welcome it zealously, and to submit to the Mormon rule with a ready faith which few would have expected. Catholics cannot easily be proselyted to the new creed, because of the influence of their priests; but from simple Protestants, who are able to follow their private judgment, numerous converts are made, and the assumption which deludes them is that "excellence in a doctrine proves the truth of an alleged revelation." Here it is the more remarkable, because, in the secondary phase of Mormonism, since the ascendancy of its present leader, it has been encumbered by the doctrine of Polygamy, which cannot have been a moral recommendation to any one. It is in spite of this that Mormonism has won the allegiance of simple, honest people.

Whatever talk there may be in favor of Truthfulness, whether in morals or religion, it is certain that this virtue grows up very slowly, and under peculiar difficulties, even in the higher minds; and very numerous grounds are either avowed or practically admitted for justifying deceit, which are ever liable to render moral perceptions obscure and doubtful in this matter. In no part of duty has casuistry become more scandalous; precisely because in extreme cases so many arguments, true or plausible, can be alleged to justify deceit.

Deceit towards wild animals, whom we capture by traps and various fraud, is justified on the ground that we are not in moral relations towards them. We kill them for our wants or our convenience, and do not count it to be murder; neither then do we regard baits and tricks as lying. The same argument is used concerning truthfulness to insane persons. When we are in open war with a foreign nation, whom it is believed necessary and lawful to resist and attack with deadly weapons, this suspension of moral relations, though it is only a suspension, inevitably draws after it a suspension of the duty of truth. But out of this arise very delicate questions, when a renewal of moral relations commences but is incomplete; as when an enemy occupies a town, and treats a population mildly, on condition of peaceable behavior. A nation pressed down permanently under foreign armies is seldom able to attain any fixed convictions of the duty of truthfulness; much less is a nation of slaves. Now, in fact, this was the condition of all the great nations of the ancient world. To confine ourselves to the area which most concerns us, Western Asia and Europe, we see national independence everywhere overthrown. One empire dominates after another. Foreign armies trample down each in its turn, not excepting the imperial nation. If a Nebuchadnezzar, a Cyrus, an Alexander or a Caesar establish a wide military sway, he presently crushes his native state also by the troops derived from his numerous provinces. In the opening history of Persia, to ride, to shoot with the bow, and to speak the truth, were the received accomplishments of a Persian gentleman; yet in their later history no one will call the Persians truthful. The same degeneracy was remarked of the later Romans by those who believed in their early virtue; though here the very blood of the people was changed by the enormous waste of Roman life in perpetual wars, and by the incessant introduction of foreigners and slaves.

The Greeks, at their best, in spite of their high intelligence and their prevalent local freedom, were never esteemed for veracity; and ever since they fell under despotism, now two thousand years ago, this is nearly the last virtue which would be ascribed to them.

In many cases deceit appears to be as harmless as it is convenient; hence various forms of it become current among ourselves, such as are often called white lies, and are scarcely blamed. False statements are made to children, especially on certain subjects on which it is thought premature to enlighten them; or even from laziness, on the ground that to tell the truth is too lengthy. Fairy tales, wonderful stories of animals, terrors concerning bogies and spirits, mythologies notoriously untrue, are so recounted to them that they believe them as fact, at least for awhile, sometimes permanently. It is in my remembrance that English families have gradually become more scrupulous about truth when a visitor asks whether they are at home. To say—"My mistress is not at home,"—when she was merely indisposed to receive a visitor, used to be considered the ordinary duty of a servant who answered the door; though, before they were made callous by custom, most servants were distressed by it. But what is to be said concerning the lies of legal documents and of treaties with secret articles; concerning the deceit of ambassadors, concerning engagements to observe college statutes, concerning mercantile oaths, concerning subscriptions to articles and sacramental qualification for office?

In the last fifty years we have been struggling in England, not unsuccessfully, to shake off many of these scandals which passed unproved; yet to this day a law is held by Parliament "to work well," if it bring about the material results desired by aid of numerous breaches of truth. In certain religious matters the coarse contempt still allowed to rest on truth as such is really wonderful; but may be charitably ascribed to the over-occupation of Parliament. No legislators would now enact that which nevertheless is sustained. The Crown (which practically means the Ministry or the Prime Minister) appoints some clergyman to be made a Bishop, and gives to the Dean and Chapter permission to elect him. The Dean and Chapter are bound under terrible legal penalties to elect him, when permitted. And they are also bound to assemble and read prayers to God, entreating him to guide their choice to the right man—as if they had any power of choice left to them. This mockery was intended to satisfy weak minds that all due formality was observed for retaining the Apostolic succession of Bishops, elected by the Dean and Chapter, and consecrated by other Bishops; while it gave to the Crown the real appointment. The statesmen who originally enacted such things were anxious for a peaceful settlement: this, they thought, was to be had by a compromise between different opinions and different strivings. Probably, so far from thinking themselves unscrupulous, they believed that they were providing by wise policy for the public welfare.

In religious tenets most of all, not only are honest men liable to confound history with morality, but well-meaning "editors" of a nation are peculiarly apt to indulge laxity as to truth. The forms under which the teaching of moral truth grew up in antiquity tended not merely to make historical fact subordinate, but to sanction, ennoble and embalm fiction. Parable and allegory predominated in very early times as a vehicle of ethical thought; perhaps to invest it with substance and coloring, such as should excite the imagination and impress the memory. Sometimes parable was used for insinuating unwelcome truth into a royal ear, as harmlessly as in a modern novel; but the general result of mythos, allegory and fable was, that fiction for a moral end passed as perfectly legitimate, with extremely little care whether the tales told were or were not literally believed. In this spirit the Greek Xenophon wrote his Cyropædia. But from the very birth of nations, poets, story-tellers, seers—whichever might predominate, as earliest representatives of literature—took endless liberties with truth of fact, without any deceitful intention. The poet avowed that a muse, or heavenly goddess, was inspiring him to sing, and revealed to him this or that matter of which he was not eye or ear witness, in distant times and countries. The story-teller, of course, had free leave of invention conceded, not being supposed, as the poet, to speak truth even in barest outline. The seer freely uttered, "Thus saith the Lord," to give weight to any sentiments which from his heart he believed to be divine truth; though, when seers contradicted one another, each was in some sense forced to declare the other a false prophet. Any ingenious moralist, then as now, was free to throw his sentiments into a narrative form, as may be seen (to take a single familiar instance) in the book of Job; where the writer prefixes a prose opening, and a prose ending to a series of poetical dialogues. The prose narrative, to any one acquainted with literature and not prepossessed by dogmatic teaching, is as visibly and certainly fiction as the ingenious introductions which Sir Walter Scott has prefixed to several of his novels, professing to explain whence he obtained his information; yet in a very short time, through religious reverence for the substance of the book, the narrative concerning Job was mistaken for real fact. The same error, in a different way apparently, was made concerning the song of Jonah; whose intense poetical imagery about sinking in the depths of the sea, where the weeds wrapped round his head, generated the fable of his praying to God out of the whale's belly, and gave rise to the prose explanatory narrative.

Total unconcern shows itself in all antiquity, so far as known to us, concerning fidelity to historical truth, at least until the latest stages of national development. In Greece we regard history as born with Herodotus; but that charming writer, though truthful in his intention, had no idea at all how untrustworthy is rumor, and legend, and what is called tradition. And though his immediate successor in historical writing (Thucydides) first enunciated the difficulty of sifting out the truth even on the commonest matters, and gave the noblest specimen of history which the world had yet seen; yet modern scholars have remarked on the quodvis trust which he rested on the details of Homer's poems, as though the poet had been a historian and an eye-witness. Moreover, in universal critical estimate, the after-writers of history in Greece are far from trustworthy. Some are superior to others, a few are very trustworthy; yet after three centuries and much experience very learned writers who aspire to philosophic history, as Dionysius of Halicarnassus, are credulous and theoretical inventors, mistaking mythology for history and their own fancies for fact, and put forward enormous speeches as historical, which we know to be pure fiction. Among the prosaic Romans, accustomed to State documents and registers, one might have expected sounder history of the past; but among them, while we do obtain excellent narratives of just the last age of the Republic, no sooner do they try to step back to more ancient times than the deficiency of written records fails them, and they miscegeously corrupt history by family traditions, or rather fictions, and popular fables. To ascribe speeches to great men out of the writer's own head, was thought quite legitimate.

When we find such phenomena in the quick-witted Greeks and the solid Romans, there is no rational ground for expecting that the Hebrews should have any greater power to preserve accurately the records of the past. In them, on a very slight examination, we see at once the tendency to make history not only out of poetical duties, but out of fancied etymology. Every scrap of antique poetry seems to have been counted historically precious, as Lamech's unintelligible address to his two wives. Because the compilation called the book of Jasher, which contained the dirge of David over Saul and Jonathan, made Joshua, when desirous of longer hours of daylight to complete a victory, apostrophize the sun and moon in the poetical words, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou, moon, in the valley of Aijalon!" a writer four to eight hundred years later than Joshua fancied he could make prose history out of the ditty, and founded upon it the miracle of the sun standing still. No doubt this was done in perfect good faith. It is highly probable that we have in Miriam's song the original source of the miraculous crossing of the Red Sea by the host of Israel. That which was narrated in the hyperbolic language of poetry as simply a wonderful and glorious event, is hardened by prosaic interpretation into something preternatural.

Many such probabilities might be pointed out, in perfect harmony with Greek delusion. But whether they bring conviction or not is of less importance, inasmuch as this topic is swallowed up in others still more fatal to the credibility of what the later Hebrews mistook for history, namely, the certainty that no conscience had arisen as to the sacredness of truth in history, of the sacredness of an author's name, of his title to his own writings, of the immorality of garbling or adding to them, or the meanness of pilfering from them. In no nation have we a more complete, exact and decisive narrative of the steps by which a sudden revolution was brought about by a priest and a prophetess, than in the book of Kings during Josiah's reign. Space here forbids to develop in detail the demonstrative proof which it gives, that our Pentateuch was wholly unknown to the Hebrews, from the prophet Samuel down to the reign of Josiah. In my book called "The Hebrew Monarchy," I tried to call attention to this important narrative a quarter of a century ago, and insisted that "to profess a discovery of the sacred law was to confess an invention." The argument has recently been worked out in the most convincing manner, with great fullness, in a special treatise—"The Finding of the Book"—by Rev. John Robertson, Coupar Angus, lately of the Scotch Church. It is published by Thomas Scott, Esq., Ramsgate, and to it I beg to refer my readers. Bishop Colenso has in the last ten years added largely to the establishment of the fact that the narrative books of the Old Testament are not only late compilations, variously enlarged and tampered with, but are widely inaccurate as to very ordinary matters of human life; much more are they untrustworthy as witnesses to things extraordinary.

But the Germans were much earlier in seeing these phenomena. The proofs of garbling are indeed so glaring that English divines have long been accustomed to ascribe very many obvious and undeniable marks of a later hand to Exra, who (they were good enough to assure us) "of course did it by divine inspiration." The long and short is that neither to tamper with ancient documents, nor to ascribe new compositions to an ancient name, was thought by the Hebrews of that age a moral offence, if it was done with a pious purpose.

It is not wonderful that the same tendencies reappeared in the Christian church of the second century, when the first gush of its present enthusiasm was spent. Literary criticism was so miserably low that among the Hellenistic Jews the Greek book called the Wisdom of Solomon passed as that king's composition; and what is more marvellous by far, the monstrous forgery entitled the Book of Enoch obtained credit. It is plainly avowed to be authentic by the writer, who calls himself "Jude, the brother of James;" it is alluded to as a source of knowledge in the first epistle of Peter, and it is reasonably to be believed that Paul drew from it many peculiarities distinguishing his doctrine from that taught by James. James and John, so far as we know, and Peter certainly at first, who were the most eminent of the disciples of Jesus, taught his moral precepts only—little concerning his human life. Paul, who came in as a meteor not very welcome to the church at Jerusalem, was resolute to owe nothing to human teaching; therefore took pains to learn nothing from the apostles and other disciples concerning their Master: nay, he avows himself unconcerned about "Christ after the flesh." And who can blame this, when Jesus himself took no step whatever to furnish future ages and distant countries with authentic copies of his discourses and a well attested account of his life and deeds? When he leaves us to guess, as we best may, who wrote the gospels, when, where and with what means of knowledge, it is perfectly evident and cannot be reasonably denied, that he had no foresight of the importance which would be attached to his exact words by remote nations, and no ambition to be a prophet to the world at large in distant posterity. Accordingly the whole preaching of Christianity, as known to us in the first century, was the broad doctrine of repentance from evil works and faith in a risen, ascended, glorified Christ, whose speedy return to judge the world would seat all his saints on the throne by his side. The narratives called Gospels which we now possess cannot be proved to have existed in their present shape until the second century, and they can be proved to abound with credulity and error; though few will doubt that the numerous gospels of that century were founded upon oral testimonies, of which private notes were taken at an early date.* But the fourth gospel, which cannot be traced higher than the middle of the second century, is a romance in violent and almost uniform disagreement with the other three that are esteemed canonical: yet it was greedily ascribed to the apostle John, just as the whole Pentateuch to Moses. There has been no more fatal sacrifice of truth to fancied edification in all Christian history than this; no forgery of mediæval Papists more disgraceful. And, marvellous to add, in this nineteenth century Christian divines who confess that the fourth gospel is historically untrustworthy—nay, is a pure fabrication written for a conscious purpose, and in fundamental contradiction both of fact and doctrine to the others, as also to the doctrine of the genuine epistle of the apostle James,—yet, to this day, speak of this gross forgery of miracle and doctrine and fact as a glorious and edifying "spiritual development." Thus, with all their clearness of criticism and high noble character, it would yet appear that they have not attained the perception that historical falsehood is an essentially evil work; and that, especially when it concerns pretended miraculous and divine events or persons, it is an immorality fraught with strife and bitterness and war and cruelty, and frauds innumerable and evils incalculable.

* In a small volume called "The English Life of Jesus," written and published by Thomas Scott, Esq., of Ramsgate, England, the English reader may find the errors of the received Gospels and the falsehoods of the fourth Gospel more fully exhibited, perhaps, than anywhere else hitherto. (This book can be obtained of H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.—Ed. Index.)

[FOR THE INDEX.]

RITUALISM.

It certainly seems on the face of it rather absurd to attach any serious importance to the color and fashion of vestments, the ringing of bells, the scattering of certain perfumes, the bending of one's knee at certain moments in certain places, or the form of buildings used for religious assemblies. But then here stands the fact that many men, on other topics manifestly quite rational, do attach great importance to these and similar things. And it would seem to be the part of modesty, to say nothing of charity, to assume always that the opinions, as well as the conduct, of one's fellow-men really have some rational ground to rest upon, even when we fail to perceive what that ground is.

But it especially behooves us, one might think, who believe in the coming of a one universal Religion, destined finally to take the place of, and thus put an end to, all the superstitions that now darken this fair earth, to seek for the underlying significance of every religious phenomenon presented to our observation. The Universal Religion of the Future must consist surely in the one common element, be it what it may, that runs through all existing forms of Religion. There is such a common element; and it, once discovered, and disengaged from the superin-

cumbent mass of outgrown Dogma by which it is concealed, or at least disguised, will continue to subsist and attain a splendor yet unapproached. What mind can doubt this which has escaped the trammels of theological superstition without losing, as so many now-a-days unhappily do, the religious spirit? Were there not such an element in religion, independent of all existing creeds, we should not see, as we so often do in this age of transition, a profoundly religious spirit surviving the last vestige of belief in those creeds.

Every essential element in the existing Religions, or forms of Religion rather—for it is the one common element which really constitutes Religion—must surely have its analogue in the universal Religion of the Future. No matter if many of the religious practices of to-day do look on the face of them absurd. They will none the less have down below the surface of things some real reason and foundation; there will always be some want of our inner life which these practices, bizarre as they may seem to a mind that has once escaped their fascination, do in their way supply. One who would appreciate, as far as can be done to-day, the true character of the Universal Religion of the Future, should endeavor to pierce through the outward shows down to this real reason and foundation; for this being ultimately found, as it always certainly will be by an honest persevering search, there may be discovered or devised a fully rational mode also, whereby that fundamental want of our nature may be adequately met. And thus will be developed one feature more of the Universal Religion of Humanity.

It matters not how much the several elements of the forms of Religion which now drag out a moribund existence among us may lay claim to a supernatural origin. That will in no wise deceive a mind really and profoundly emancipated from theological superstition. That the claim for supernatural origin was made in the first instance, and even continues now to be maintained, for the most part in good faith, he will unreservedly admit. The most completely emancipated minds are those who recognize, as the natural law of human intelligence, the fact that, at the outset, it must needs speculate on all subjects upon a theological method. But none the less, or rather all the more, will he also perceive the other fact, that these same elements, which claim a Divine, had really a Human, although generally a spontaneous, origin. Now that which springs up spontaneously to meet a genuine want of human nature can permanently disappear only on being replaced by something which will better supply that want.

The genuflections and posturings, the incense burnings, chantings and processions of the Ritualists seem absurd to us; they really are absurd regarded as offerings made to God, to please and gratify him. And so, even, may seem and really be the noble piles left us by the ecclesiastical architects of the Middle Ages. But Westminster Abbey and the Cathedral of Cologne are noble piles nevertheless. And the Masses of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven are sublime triumphs of musical genius. Let one be ever so completely emancipated from theological beliefs, the finely attuned soul will still feel that the Mass "performed" ever so perfectly in the concert-room is a very different thing from the same Mass "celebrated" in the Cathedral. And an immeasurably less noble thing! He is to be pitied who, being present at the latter, does not experience a profound religious thrill!

In religious worship, regarded as a phenomenon of human nature, there are, and always have been, two distinct elements. Worship has always been, in the intention of the worshippers, although in very different degrees, an offering made to some superior Being, and above all to the Supreme Being, so far as a one Supreme Being has been recognized; an offering supposed to be more or less grateful to him, and, as such, capable of bringing down upon the worshippers favors from his hand. But worship has always been, however unconsciously to the worshipper, a culture of the Ideal. And that this element has been to some degree recognized, too, seems indicated by the very term Cultus. As a matter of fact, especially, it has ever been an indirect culture of the moral nature of the worshipper. As a contemplation of a Being above him, it has helped, even in its rudest and most barbarous form, to develop the sentiment of veneration, so indispensable to all real aspiration. And in so far as the Supreme Being came to be not merely an irresistible Power but the Ideal of Perfect Goodness, its contemplation as naturally tended to assimilate the worshipper to itself.

Now this latter element is quite as much common to all forms of religion in the past as is the former, although very liable to be overlooked as long as religion remains in any wise theological. But what is more important to be observed is, that it is entirely independent of all theological or superstitious belief. It is an element that cannot but survive the decay of such beliefs, however far that decay may go, and remain an integral element of religion, and one of dominant importance, too, when religion shall have become ever so completely human, ever so exclusively mundane.

But from this point of view the Ritualist movement puts on quite a new aspect. Whatever other elements there may still seem to be in it worthy of reprehension, as a claim, on behalf of the æsthetic sentiment, to its due share in the institution of worship, it ceases, at all events, to be absurd. And it may even be entitled to respect; as most assuredly is its claim, as above formulated, to serious consideration.

Art, in all its forms, has at least this much in common with the religious spirit, that it seeks for ideal perfection. There is a certain solidarity between all the different sorts of perfection. Aspiration after the best in any one direction reacts favorably upon the pursuit of goodness in all other directions. And if art will sometimes, particularly the most special arts, aim, or seem to aim, only at technical perfection, perfection of mere form irrespectively of subject matter, its grandest inspirations evidently come from some higher and nobler impulse above itself. Traced down to its last analysis, this higher and nobler impulse is always the aspiration after the ideal perfection of Human Nature itself. And what but this is the essential spirit of Religion?

The natural connection between religion and art it is, at all events, easy enough empirically to observe as a fact. The noblest architecture, the noblest painting, the noblest sculpture, the noblest music, have all manifestly been religious. And if the same does not seem on a superficial view to hold good of poetry, that is perhaps from our want of a profound conception of the real nature of religion, rather than from any less degree of religiosity in this most general form of art.

It can hardly fail to be encouraging to those who believe in the gradual growth and development of one universal religion, destined ultimately to replace, and by replacing abolish, all the now prevailing forms of superstition, to trace in those forms the sound element underneath the worn-out covering; and it were wise even to seek for this sound element not merely as an encouragement but also for direct instruction, and because the spontaneous institutions of the human race can be finally abolished only by an adequate replacement. Those profound needs of our inner nature whence the various elements of existing religious forms had their origin, cannot remain permanently without satisfaction. They must needs be better supplied by some more rational institutions, ere the human race can possibly dispense with its spontaneous institutions, let these be ever so much loaded down with abuses.

The worship of God will never be abandoned except on condition of being replaced by the worship of Humanity. A Cultus stripped of all superstition, based upon ideas exclusively scientific in their character, can be nothing but a worship—that is, a cultus—of humanity. For what is there, what can there be in our idea of God, when all that is superstitious is dropped, except an IDEALIZED HUMANITY?

Can we really and seriously imagine the universal religion of the future to be absolutely without a cultus—to have no system of worship properly so called—all systematic culture of the ideal to be deliberately given up? Surely not if we consider what is the true function of worship in religion. In this age of transition we are too apt perhaps to confine our attention exclusively to the function of pure intellect in religion. To the untrammelled intellect it belongs doubtless to answer the question: What is true? Although even in this its own sphere it can by no means functionate in so entire independence of sentiment as is pretended by the metaphysical philosophy. For the most important of all the many questions into which the one question, "What is true?" naturally subdivides itself, is surely, "What is good?"—a question evidently no more accessible to the man who has never known by actual experience the sentiment of purely disinterested sympathy than is the theory of color to the man born stone-blind. But let pure Intelligence have ever so clearly demonstrated what is true, including moreover what is good, it remains yet to bring home this truth to the minds of men, and this goodness to their hearts, and so to apply both to their practical lives. In the mass of men pure intellect is altogether too sluggish to enable a merely logical demonstration to take firm hold of their being. The true ideal of life must be enabled to seize their imagination and entwine itself around their affections.

It is, then, the presentation of the truths demonstrated by the intellect, especially the supreme order of truths furnishing the ideal of life, under forms of ravishing beauty and seductive loveliness to the imaginations of men, through their imaginations seizing their hearts, that is the function of art in religion. And this is worship. None the less worship when stripped of the last vestige of superstition.

Are not the rituals performing, then, a really useful function, however different from that they themselves imagine they are fulfilling, in keeping alive, beyond the pale of the Roman Catholic church, some of the best traditions of that church, until the day comes for pressing them into the service of the universal Religion of the Future; and especially in maintaining a standing claim on behalf of the employment of our æsthetic resources in commending to the imaginations and the hearts of men, and so enforcing upon their lives, the highest result of the intellect? Is the fact that sublime moral and religious truths shall at last have been positively demonstrated by science, any reason for not employing the resources of art in rendering them attractive to men? Are men in general so intensely rational, so ardent, moreover, in their love of and desire for goodness for its own sake, that they stand in need of no sort of persuasion to embrace the Truth and to do the Right? Have the mass of men no sort of inducement to prefer in any case the false to the true? No temptations to follow after evil rather than to strive for the good? Does goodness no longer need striving for? Because we have outgrown the superstition of total depravity, doctrines of devils, etc., are we quite sure that the path of virtue is the broad and easy way, full only of flowers and obvious joy, certain therefore to be taken by every one as soon as it is but pointed out to him? Is it sure to be enough henceforth to know what is the right, in order to have it done by everybody? Are the mass of men rational enough even to comprehend the demonstrations of science, when these are ever so perfect? Do they at all events care enough about truth and goodness in the abstract to take the trouble to comprehend those demonstrations?

Or must not religion always need, when her doctrines have become ever so completely scientific, that truth and goodness shall be presented to the masses of men under an aspect of beauty? Nay: are not truth and goodness naturally also beautiful, so that, when art shall have idealized them to her uttermost, she shall only have made them more profoundly true?

To be really enduring, religious dogma must be elaborated by the thinker. And that means, in this age, that it must be scientifically demonstrated. To acquire its just and necessary social predominance, it must be popularly and therefore summarily disseminated—the true and normal function of the Catechism. But that predominance can acquire its rightful completeness, nay, even the dissemination itself can be finally entirely accomplished, only by the presentation of that dogma under forms of ideal loveliness. In one word, Religion becomes fully and completely Religion only when condensed into a corresponding Worship. And in this fact lies the true sociological significance of Ritualism.

BRENTWOOD, L. I.

HENRY EDGER.

THE ASSAULT UPON THE CORNER-STONE.

[From the New York Union Advocate, June 1.]

While we are discussing our minor and unessential points of theology, it is well for us to remember that the enemy is attacking the very corner-stone of religion itself. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that infidelity is advancing with alarming strides. While our statesmen are proclaiming the benefits of a Christian education, while our clergy are insisting upon their dogmatic theses, scepticism pervades the whole atmosphere of thought, leads the most learned societies, colors much of the religious literature of the day, and even mounts into the pulpit of the Church. There is very little interest now in the public mind as to the controversies between the sects of Christendom: the doubt and discussion applies to the truthfulness of Christianity itself. Men have not for fifteen hundred years been so unsettled upon this subject as now. Unbelief does not hide in corners and quietly go its way, it is organizing and proclaiming itself; it gathers into societies, it publishes newspapers, it erects chapels, it scatters tracts, and speaks from the platform.

Such men as the Rev. Mr. Voysey in London, and the Rev. Mr. Frothingham in New York, publicly argue from their pulpits to large congregations against the Scriptures, and proclaim that Christianity is the enemy of mankind. A society organized in our country to combine Atheists, Theists, Infidels, Materialists and Spiritualists in one common cause against the Redeemer's kingdom, has already collected a capital stock of $58,000, and is constantly adding to it by subscriptions from all parts of the land. It proposes to flood the United States with documents against the inspiration of Holy Writ and the claims of Jesus Christ. Several newspapers as the organs of these people have already attained a large circulation. They declare that through the leadings of science the human mind has progressed beyond the Bible, and that the ecclesiastical organizations of Europe and America are honeycombed with doubt. Christians will some day have to stand shoulder to shoulder against this terrible foe, and if they must unite for self-defence, would it not be better for them to do so now?

JEFFERSON'S ADVICE.

Read the Bible, then, as you would Livy or Tacitus. The facts which are within the ordinary course of Nature you will believe on the authority of the writer, as you would do those of the same kind in Livy or Tacitus. The testimony of the writer weighs in their favor, in one scale, and their not being against the laws of Nature does not weigh against them in the other. But those facts of the Bible which contradict the laws of Nature must be examined with more care, and under a variety of phases. Here you must recur to the pretensions of the writer to inspiration from God. Examine upon what evidence his pretensions are founded, and whether that evidence is so strong, that its falsehood would be more improbable than a change in the laws of Nature, in the case he relates. For example, in the book of Joshua we are told the sun stood still several hours. Were we to read that fact in Livy or Tacitus, we should class it with their showings of blood, speaking of statues, beasts, &c. But it is said the writer of that book was inspired. Examine, therefore, candidly, what evidence there is of his having been inspired. The pretension is entitled to your inquiry, because millions believe it. On the other hand, you are astronomer enough to know how contrary it is to the laws of Nature, that a body revolving on its axis, as the earth does, should have stopped suddenly, should not by that sudden stoppage have prostrated animals, trees, buildings, and should after a certain time have resumed its revolutions, and that also without a general prostration. Is this arrest of the earth's motion, or the evidence which affirms it, most within the laws of probability?—Jefferson in a Letter to Carr, Aug. 10, 1787.

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"Enclosed is two dollars, for which please send THE INDEX to William Lloyd Garrison, Boston. If you have the numbers, I should like him to have them from 23 July last; if not, do the best you can. I should like to have Mr. Garrison so interested in your movement as to take the lead in this region in forming auxiliary societies to yours, in order to overthrow Church and State influences before they have to be met by force. He is pretty free now, and is only interested in the woman question, I think. I have fought with him since 1833 on the slavery question; I am too old to take any active part in a new battle, but would be very glad to unite with him again so far as I can in this cause. You may add my name for one share ($100) towards the $50,000. The amount I will pay whenever it shall be needed, without regard to the whole $50,000 being subscribed."

"It grieves me to write without sending on my name towards the stock subscription to the Index Association, and I feel I owe an apology therefore. I am a mechanic, dependent upon Saturday night for bread and butter for self and family. Many are the books I thirst after, and feel I must have or perish (or stagnate, another word expressing the same meaning), but have to forego. Often I grow sick at the thoughts that will arise, and wonder whether the first great conundrum of the Catechism on the Chief End of Man has ever yet been answered! I wish every one of your subscribers felt the need of (shall I say its or) your success so fervently as to subscribe, or feel compelled to apologize for the omission."

"Enclosed find one dollar, and continue to send THE INDEX until I order it stopped; and don't me as soon as my subscription expires, and I will remit. Also find ten cents for two back Nos. 90, containing 'A Fortnight in a Dutch Town,' which answers the question so often put to me—'What kind of society should we have, if all men were unbelievers of the Bible?' Also find twenty-five cents for 'Lecture on the Bible,' by Rev. Chas. Voysey, as my papers get so worn lending I prefer the tracts. I expect to get some new subscribers for you soon."

"I send you herein one dollar for your INDEX for half a year. The reason I don't send for the whole year is that I am now in the four-score and seventh year of my age, and I find it necessary to change my residence. I do not now know where I may locate myself, if I should live; and I think I had better determine my residence soon. From what I have read in your paper, I think I shall not be without it, if I should live, as free thought and independence of mind are to me the mainspring of life."

"I wish you to continue the paper, and if you did not receive the money I sent, notify me of the fact and I will send again. Will send P. O. order next time. Am sorry if the money is lost, as I am an invalid and poor, and can ill afford to lose it. The paper I must have, as it is nearly all the spiritual food and comfort I have."

"I wish one hundred copies containing 'Persons and Ideas' could be scattered among the dry bones of Poughkeepsie."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the new EXPRESS BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WAREHOUSE OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending June 12th.—C. A. W. Crosby, $1; J. W. Winkley, $2; J. B. Sargent, $2; Hugh B. Brown, $2; Chas. Howard, $2; Geo. Chamberlain, $2; Miss Constantine, $1; J. Maddock, $1; Dr. H. Knapp, $1; Wm. W. Smith, 50 cts.; E. M. Davis, 50 cts.; W. W. Skinner, 50 cts.; Drs. Hartwig & Cole, $2; Dr. W. W. Grant, $10; Dr. E. S. Barrows, $10; J. J. Burris, $2; W. E. Booroom, $12; J. L. Linn, $12; A. Werra, $10; J. P. Dinmore, $20; Maria Mendel, 50 cts.; W. H. Van Brunt, 50 cts.; W. W. Maynard, 50 cts.; Wm. Walker, 50 cts.; O. E. Hobbs, 50 cts.; Dr. H. H. McCabe, 50 cts.; Sargent & Carter, 50 cts.; W. S. McDowell, 50 cts.; J. M. Detsou, $1; Chas. S. Foote, 50 cts.; H. G. White, $10; Theo. Wehle, $2; Toledo Printing Co., $10; Prof. E. Whipple, $2; S. L. Wilder, $10; H. L. Croon, $2; Wm. Dudgeon, $2; Rev. H. L. Howard, 50 cts.; E. B. Volcott, $2; H. O. Bigelow, $2; C. B. Lusk, 50 cts.; Henry N. Stone, $10; J. A. Allen, $2; C. A. Gurley, $2; Geo. W. Smith, $2; S. H. Smiley, Jr., $2; L. D. Wright, 50 cts.; Philena Carkin, $2; Mrs. J. G. Kinley, $1.00; Dr. W. M. Ogden, $1; Hugh B. Brown, $2; G. P. Baskette, 50 cts.; Frederick Beck, $10; B. F. Smith, 10 cts.; Benj. Rodman, 20 cts.; Wm. Waggoner, 50 cts.; A. L. Bailey, 10 cts.; A. L. Houghton, $1.50; T. A. Kinney, $2.50; Jessie S. Moss, $2; H. H. Howard, 25 cts.; George Lewis, 10 cts.; J. Knight, $2; W. W. Randall, 50 cts.; Lewis Boutelle, $2; David Wright, $1; Geo. Draper, $2; Johnson Stover, $1; Isaac Mills, $1; Edw. M. Davis, $20.00; Mrs. Lucella Mott, $20.00; C. A. Greenleaf, 35 cts.; M. J. Mackintosh, 15 cts.; Chas. Mason, $1.10; Wm. R. Grow, 50 cts.; Laura M. Fleming, 60 cts.; Josephine S. Titton, 15 cts.; J. D. Moyer, 30 cts.; Walter H. Wilney, $1.25; D. A. Robertson, $2.50; Mrs. E. S. Miller, $10; A. J. Strambagh, 50 cts.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittance acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000.

SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having announced the publication of THE LANCET, the Directors have decided an assessment of ten per cent. on all shares for the year ending Oct. 30, 1879. All future descriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. on the stock actually subscribed; and the sum assessed will be exactly completed by the subscription. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED ELSEWHERE, FIVE HUNDRED SHARES, $50,000
THOMAS MURFORD,	New Harmony, Ind.,	One Share,	100
D. AYRES, JR.,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	"	100
Mrs L. E. BLOUNT,	Evansville, Ind.,	"	100
"	Danville, Ohio,	"	100
"	Bryan, Ohio,	"	100
J. T. BRADY,	Sabetha, Kan.,	"	100
"	Northampton, Mass.,	"	100
MAX PRAGHT,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	100
H. HETTERMAN,	Tolco, Ohio,	"	100
C. FOLSON,	Zanesfield, Ohio,	"	100
B. C. EYTHMAN,	Palmyra, Mo.,	"	100
J. O. MARTIN,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	"	100
A. FOLSON,	Boston, Mass.,	Two	200
W. F. HEIKES,	Dayton, Ohio,	One	100
HISAN COLT,	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	"	100
SAMUEL COLT,	Worcester, Mass.,	Two	200
CHARLES NASH,	Livonia, N. Y.,	One	100
"	Osborn, Ohio,	Two	200
E. F. WOODARD,	Mt. Carroll, Ill.,	One	100
H. A. MILLA,	Dover, N. H.,	"	100
J. W. BARTLETT,	Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	"	100
OSCAR ROOS,	Genoa, N. Y.,	"	100
Mrs E. S. MILLER,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	"	100
JAS. B. STONER,	"	"	100
D. K. INKES,	"	Five	500
A. TATT,	"	One	100
S. L. WILDER,	"	"	100
PETER H. CLARK,	"	"	100
G. K. WITTINGTON,	"	"	100
J. T. SUTTON,	"	"	100
WALTER F. AUSTIN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	"	100
MISS C. E. NOBLES,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two	200
JAS. FISCHER,	Shreveport, La.,	One	100
G. H. HOLZMAN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	Five	500
L. VON BLASINGHEM,	N. Y. City, N. Y.,	One	100
W. H. BOUGHTON,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	"	100
F. P. CHAMBERS,	"	"	100
TISSU L. BROWN,	Binghamton, N. Y.,	"	100
A. McD. YOUNG,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	"	100
G. W. PECKHAM,	"	"	100
C. T. HAWLEY,	"	"	100
WM. BECKER,	"	Five	500
Mrs. G. D. NOBIS,	"	One	100
ROBT. C. SPENCER,	"	"	100
C. M. LAWLER,	"	"	100
S. R. LELAND,	"	"	100
W. R. BLACKMORE,	Painesville, Ohio,	100
R. H. RANNETT,	Boston, Mass.,	100
O. B. BROTHINGHAM,	New York, N. Y.,	Five	500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY,	Richmond, Ind.,	One	100
J. R. WAT,	"	"	100
JAMES SKEILER,	"	"	100
JOHN E. POPP,	"	"	100
THOMAS DAVIS,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	"	100
ALBY METZGER,	"	"	100
HERMANN LIEBER,	"	"	100
CLEMENS VANGSUT,	"	"	100
FRED. CHRISTMAN,	"	"	100
HENRY SCHULTZ,	"	"	100
"	New Bedford, Mass.,	"	100
M. H. DOOLITTLE,	Washington, D. C.,	"	100
M. S. BRACE,	Lawrence, Kan.,	"	100
L. S. BAON,	"	"	100
C. ROBINSON,	"	"	100
HENRY STAGO,	St. Louis, Mo.,	"	100
J. C. ROONEY,	"	Two	200
JACOB SPRINKEL,	St. Joseph, Mo.,	One	100
R. P. HOLLOWELL,	Boeton, Mass.,	Five	500
ELIUS V. HIGHT,	"	"	100
JAS. A. DUPES,	"	One	100
E. S. DURHAM,	"	"	100
JOSE F. MULLS,	"	"	100
J. C. HAYNES,	"	Three	300
G.	"	"	100
GEO. W. PARK,	"	One	100
FREDERICK BECK,	"	"	100
J. W. WINKLEY,	"	"	100
D. J. KING,	"	"	100
Mrs R. B. BOWKER,	"	"	100
"A Friend"	"	"	100
Mrs H. E. STEVENSON,	"	One	100
M. LUCE,	"	Two	200
HENRY N. STONE,	"	One	100
E. S. BARROWS,	Dayenport, Iowa,	"	100
W. W. GIBART,	"	"	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTERN,	New York, N. Y.,	"	100
W. WELCH,	New York,	"	100
W. E. BOORAKE,	"	"	100
J. LIENAN,	"	"	100
H. G. WHITE,	Buffalo,	"	100
J. P. DIMESMORE,	"	Two	200
B. W. PIERCE,	"	Ten	1,000
JOS. T. WHITE,	"	Five	500
L. E. JONES,	Detroit, Mich.,	Two	200
W. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit, Mich.,	Five	500
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphs, Pa.,	One	100
Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT,	"	"	100
WERNER BOECKLIN,	Burlington, Iowa,	"	100

"In many parts of France," says a reviewer of the new edition of Sir Charles Lyell's "Principles of Geology" in Nature for April 11, "the destruction of the woods has proved a source of very great injury, as they caught the rain and parted with it slowly, the roots all the while protecting the soil. But now that the woods have been cut down, the water runs off at once, scouring away the earth from the slopes of the hills, and in the valleys causing sudden floods which sweep everything before them. In America it is especially interesting to watch the effect produced by man in this way upon climate and water supply." These statements are apparently made on the authority of Sir Charles himself. They are worthy of serious attention in this country, where the effects of our wanton waste of forests are something more than "interesting."

"Peace without justice is not peace, but a truce of war," is a noble saying of Professor Newman.

The Index.

JUNE 22, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio."

THE BATTLE OVER THE BIBLE.

A telegraphic dispatch to the Toledo Commercial describes a significant occurrence at the third day's session of the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the "International Young Men's Christian Association." The whole report is interesting, and we subjoin it:—

LOWELL, June 14.—At last evening's session of the Y. M. C. A., fraternal addresses were delivered by Rev. D. Banks, of Edinburgh, and Prof. Milligan, of Aberdeen, Scotland. Rev. John Marshall Long also delivered an address. The topic presented was the "Temptation of Young Men." The speakers were Hon. C. Brainard, of New York; Joseph Anderson, of Waterbury, Conn.; Rev. J. G. Joyce, of Philadelphia, and H. P. Floyd, of Cincinnati. Mr. Lathrop, of New Jersey, spoke in favor of opening public libraries on the Sabbath, for the suppression of houses of bad fame and gambling houses.

In the Young Men's Christian Association Convention this morning, a resolution was offered by Rev. T. A. Ferny, of Pennsylvania, to the following effect,—That this International Young Men's Christian Association Convention pledges itself to resist to the utmost all attempts that have been made or that may be made to exclude the Word of God from the public schools of the nation, and that where it is temporarily excluded, we will use special efforts to put the Bible in every Roman Catholic family.

Considerable discussion was excited by the proposition, and among other speakers, T. G. Strout made an argument in opposition to the resolution maintaining that the country is a free one, where no trammels of sect should be established, or attempts at undue religious pressure sustained. These expressions were greeted with hisses, mingled with faint applause, from every quarter of the house. Great excitement prevailed. The efforts of the presiding officer and the good judgment of some of the delegates lulled the excitement, and an apology was made for the acts of disapproval, and Strout concluded his remarks. The resolution passed, when the topic of 'lectures and lecturers' was treated upon by Rev. Mr. Morton of New York.

At the afternoon session the standing committee reported a series of resolutions:

1. Endorsing the "Association Monthly" as the official organ of the Association, and authorizing the Executive Committee to provide for its publication in its present form, and, if deemed expedient, make a weekly issue, etc.

The resolution called out a lively debate. Mr. Cowdret, of Detroit, thought in its present form it was read by but few, containing as it does many reports of societies and advertisements. It was not read by the masses, and was not worth ten cents a ton.

Mr. Frink wanted an organ to make prominent proper literature for a news-stand. Selling the current morbid literature of the day was worse than four lager beer saloons.

Mr. Bralnard, on the Executive Committee, said, if a tithe of the money expended on the erection of public edifices and elegant rooms throughout the country had been applied in a wise direction, a far different sheet could have been circulated. A member thought that an active daily of ten thousand circulation would be worth more to the Association than a million of monthly issues as now conducted. He wanted a paper that would be sought after by adults, and that children would cry for.

The resolutions were generally passed, and the resolution to appoint an Executive Committee for three years introduced, considerable difference of opinion arose. The report embraced all the old members who had served six years, and all from New York.

New York.

Mr. Anderson, from Boston, thought that other places than New York were entitled to it. Cincinnati had money and brains, and so had other cities. He wanted an infusion of new blood, and moved the addition of three each, from Cincinnati, Philadelphia and Boston. Mr. Martin, of Brooklyn, said that, although contiguous to the city of New York, the Brooklyn Association are unable to find out anything from the Executive Committee. Mr. Braicard replied that, as far as the combinations were concerned, he had never yet been able to get the man he wanted for President of the Association. Mr. Miller made a happy reply.

The following are the names of the Committee:—Charles Brainard, W. P. Lee, Jos. Stokes, Jr., Timothy G. Sulloway, Jr., Thomas Cochrane, Jr., and Roswell Miller. Various other resolutions were acted on relative to general business, and to-morrow fixed as the time for subscription to the organ of the Association. All the little unpleasantnesses were amicably adjusted after the adjournment.

In the New York Post of June 12, another aspect of this Bible-in-schools controversy is presented:

Nowhere has opposition to the reading of the Bible in the public schools taken such serious shape as at Long Island City. During the trouble last fall, even riot was threatened; the different departments were at loggerheads, and, when the teachers were assaulted and stoned in the streets, the courts afforded them no protection; several children were expelled under the rules of the school for disobedience, and many were sent to school only to excite the public feeling by behaving in such a manner as to secure their expulsion.

The Roman Catholics made a strong protest against the reading of the Bible, and after contending for several months, the matter rested until the Board of Education received notice of an appeal to Superintendent Weaver. Yesterday his decision was filed with the clerk of the city. The following are extracts from it:—

"The claim by trustees of the right to enforce the attendance of pupils in the public schools upon religious exercises therein has been frequently passed upon in this department by my predecessors in office, and by myself, and it has uniformly been held that no such right legally existed. The object of the common school system of this State is to afford means of secular instruction to all children resident therein. For their religious training the State does not provide, and with it does not interfere. No distinction is to be made between Christians, whether Protestants or Romanists, and the conscience of none can be legally violated. There is no authority in the law to use as a matter of right any portion of the regular school hours in conducting any religious exercises at which the attendance of scholars is made compulsory. On the other hand, there is nothing to prevent the reading of Scripture or the performance of other religious exercises by the teacher in the presence of such of the scholars as may attend voluntarily or by the directions of their parents or guardians, if it be done before the hour fixed for the opening of the school or after the dismissal of the school."

"The action of the Board of Education of Long Island City, in directing the reading of a portion of the Bible as an opening exercise in the schools, or excluding pupils from these schools on the grounds of declining to be present at such reading, has been without warrant of law.

"The appeals must therefore be and are hereby sustained. The proper course for those who are dissatisfied, or who desire a different or more explicit regulation on the subject, is to apply to the legislature for such enactment as will meet their views."

Mr. Weaver fortified his position by adducing the opinions of Secretary Spencer and V. M. Rice. Of course the decision does away with the reading of the Bible during school hours in Long Island City, and, as the principles are the same in every case, the decision affects the entire State.

At 9 o'clock this morning the schools were opened as usual. The Bible was read and prayer was offered. Soon after a great crowd of people collected about the First Ward school to witness the application for admission of the expelled children. They were duly presented, but the Principal refused to receive them unless they conformed to the rules, which they declined doing. The Board of Education will appeal from Mr. Weaver's decision. Their official life, however, is short, as they will doubtless be removed in July by the new Mayor, who was elected principally on this issue. The Roman Catholics were greatly incensed when the Principal refused to receive the children, and it is feared that trouble will ensue.

Consider these two extracts in connection.

On the one hand, the "International Young Men's Christian Association" passes a resolution pledging its members "to resist to the utmost all attempts that have been made or that may be made to exclude the Word of God from the public schools;" and a protest offered on the spot by a liberal member is greeted with "hisses" and "faint applause."

On the other hand, the New York Superintendent of Public Instruction makes a decision which excludes Bible-reading and all other religious exercises from the schools of the entire State; and the only appeal lies to the State Legislature.

What is to be the final issue of the controversy so uncompromisingly waged?

If the New York Legislature passes a law overruling the Superintendent's decision, and requiring Bible-reading in the public schools, the matter will not rest there. Sooner or later this question of free and unsectarian education must in some shape or other be carried up to the United States Supreme Court. Under the Constitution as it now is, the Evangelical cause can receive no support. The separation of Church and State is so clear in our national organic law that the action of the Superintendent will be sustained. But the Evangelicals will not accept this solution of the question. "Error always dies game." The moment the whole Church party perceives the impossibility of maintaining its present ascendancy in our educational system, that moment will it perceive the necessity of the Christian Amendment of the United States Constitution, if it is determined to preserve this ascendancy. Then will begin a really active and formidable attempt to secure that Amendment. We commend these considerations to the most thoughtful attention of the liberals of America.

MASSING THEIR FORCES.

There is a paper in Pittsburgh, Pa., which calls itself the Christian Radical. Its "Radicalism" realizes the wish of Sidney Smith, who sighed one hot day to "take off his flesh and sit in his bones;" while its "Christianity" resembles John Phoenix's old lady, who went to a dentist to have a tooth pulled and had her whole skeleton neatly extracted. What with the fleshlessness of the one and the bonelessness of the other, it is hard to decide whether the Christian Radical is on the whole more osseous or gelatinous. Its piety is as soft as a deliquescent jelly-fish, while its thought is as nutritious as a thoroughly picked drumstick.

The above paragraph was written several weeks ago, and has been ever since crowded out of our columns. The Christian Radical, having meantime changed its name to the Union Advocate, is now published at New York under the editorial management of "Clergymen of various Evangelical Denominations." This change is very significant. Formerly the paper was devoted to the advocacy of a union of all Evangelical Christians with "no creed but Jesus Christ;" and it fought with equal imbecility against creeds, on the one hand, and free thought, on the other. Such an attempt at union is futile on the face of it, as every one knows who studies the history or logic of Christianity in the most superficial manner. There could be no future for a paper started with such a self-contradictory purpose; and we only wonder it could live as long as it did. The Union Advocate, removed from Pittsburgh to New York, is of a very different character. It now urges with vigor, ability and earnestness a union of all Evangelical Christians on the basis of the "great fundamental" doctrines of Christianity; and we all know what that means. It declares that "the Church is one, and that it is FEASIBLE and VERY IMPORTANT to make this unity AT ONCE manifest to the world." (We copy just as capitalized by the Union Advocate itself). In short, it proposes, with great force of logic and great determination of purpose, to effect an alliance, offensive and defensive, of all the Orthodox sects; and it takes hold of this measure in a spirit that means business and must produce a deep impression on the churches in the course of time.

This transformation of the Christian Radical into the Union Advocate, we repeat, is very noteworthy as a sign of the times. Able and popular writers contribute to its columns; and a significant article entitled "The Assault on the Corner-Stone" (copied on a previous page of our present issue) shows that the "union" they advocate is not chiefly desired for sentimental purposes. The tendency to a consolidation of forces and concentration of energies on the part of all the Orthodox sects is too marked to escape the attention of any watchful student of the age; and this new sheet is only one of many similar indications of it.

Supposing that the contemplated union of all Evangelical denominations can be effected (and nothing but the dread of growing free thought, the common enemy, will ever act as a centripetal force to bring them together), the unification of the Protestant Church of the United States will pave the way for a vigorous attempt to secure the passage of the Christian Amendment to the Constitution. This will not happen in one year, or in two. Such great movements are of slow growth. But that will be the necessary result. It is mutual jealousy, far more than respect for spiritual liberty, that now operates to make the sects hesitate to take up the Christian Amendment project. Remove this obstacle, and they will soon begin to feel the power of the Christianizers' logic. Looking forward as we do to a time when this Protestant Union shall be an accomplished fact, and seeing clearly that it will be only the beginning of a powerful effort to Christianize or Protestantize the United States Constitution, we have curiously watched for some indication of sympathy with the Christianizers in this new though coy ally of theirs. The following brief article suffices to show that the undercurrent of the Union Advocate's sympathies is setting in their direction, though perhaps in a half-conscious manner—

THE GREAT SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES.—Apropos of the discussion of the proposed "religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States," there is an interesting confirmation of the foresight and religious feeling of the founders of the Government in the inscription and devices upon the reverse of the great seal of the United States. With-in an equilateral triangle the well known symbol of Deity is the All-Seeing Eye. Over it are the words—"Annuit Cœptis," i. e., "He assents to our undertakings." Underneath is the legend—"Novus ordo Sæculorum," i. e., "The new order of the ages." Between these inscriptions is the date MDCCLXXVI.

The reader may find an engraving and a full account of this seal in Loesing's Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution. Read in the light of the century which has nearly passed since its adoption in that ever-memorable year, how prophetic are its legends, and how ceaseless has been the watchful care of that unsleeping Eye, which has approved our great undertaking, in the beginning of this new order of things! If the Fathers of our Republic did not insert the name of God in the Constitution, they surely did not forget him in the great seal which legalizes all its public acts.

MORE PETITIONS.

The following lists of signatures to the remonstrance against the Christian Amendment of the United States Constitution have been received since our last issue:—

Mrs. Mary J. Wilcoxson sends ninety-three names from Lawrence, Kansas; Mr. J. P. Greenleaf, Boston, Massachusetts, eleven; Mr. David Wright, Des Moines, Iowa, thirty-one.

LIBERAL THINKERS AND SECTARIAN INSTITUTIONS.

Constant appeals are made by the directors of sectarian institutions to the general public for contributions to their funds. They apply to Unitarians, Radicals, "Free Religionists," as freely as to their own people; and many of these last-named classes subscribe freely under the idea that they are thus carrying out their own unsectarian principles and showing that respect for the conscientious belief of others which they claim for their own.

But it seems to me a nice discrimination should be exercised in affording assistance to such institutions. I do not at all question the right of any sect to establish schools or hospitals, or benevolent or economical associations of any kind to favor their own views. Indeed, those who hold their religious tenets to be of supreme importance, both as regards this life and the next, may well feel called upon to make them their first care in everything. It is a standing wonder how any one who has once received the tremendous belief into his mind that the eternal salvation or damnation of immortal souls may depend upon his exertions, does not, like Hamlet—

"From the tablet of [his] memory
* wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there,
[That this] commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of his brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter."

That men professing to believe that money rightly applied can help on this work, should yet build fine houses, wear costly clothes, drive expensive equipages, and let these salvation-producing institutions languish, seems a strange anomaly.

But ought those who believe most sincerely that these doctrines are not only false but pernicious, that they hinder the progress of humanity and destroy the good influence of religion, contribute money to build up institutions whose object is to keep up the influence of these views?

The only difficulty in meeting this question arises from the blessed inconsistency of human nature. Men are so much better than their creeds, and do so much good in spite of them, that we are tempted to help everybody to work in his own way, although it may not be the one we most approve.

But where, as is often the case, there is a free college beside a sectarian one, or a hospital which cures by science and skill instead of by prayers and the laying-on of hands, it seems a plain duty for those who believe that truth is good and falsehood evil, to support the former before the latter.

That we should feed, clothe and teach the needy, whatever their religious views, is a plain precept of humanity,—so also that we should accept their good work whatever it may be; but that we should aid others to build costly churches or establish sectarian schools or newspapers in the support of views which we believe to be false and pernicious, seems to me an excess of liberality that becomes a weakness. What is our duty in this matter? E. D. C.

RELIGION AND MORALITY.

I.

No great religion has ever existed which has not, at least in its highest and purest teaching, proclaimed morality to be an essential part of itself. The Hebrew religion may be said to have begun as an organized social power in the Law alleged to have been given by Jehovah to Moses,—that is, in the Ten Commandments. But six of the Ten Commandments are ethical, referring strictly to duties between man and man, and not to duties towards God. And after the religion had developed into shewy and punctilious ceremonial, the prophets were continually reminding the people of the moral character of their faith,—as when they cried in the name of Jehovah, "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice;" "Is not this the fast that I have chosen, to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

Turning to the New Testament as the primitive utterances of the Christian religion, we find the same strain continued and emphasized. A distinguishing, if not the special, characteristic of the teaching of Jesus was, that he set forth constantly the superiority of inward truthfulness, purity, kindness, good deeds, to mere religious profession and ritual. "By their fruits ye shall know them"—was his test of piety. The heretical Samaritan, devoting himself to acts of humanity, he held up for example before the pharisaic ceremonial observance and doctrinal conformity of the priest and the Levite. Paul, too, though eminently a theologian and having a mental temperament inclining to religious mysticism, yet laid great stress on the ethical virtues. "Owe no man anything," he says, "but love; for love is the fulfilling of the law." "Let us walk honestly, as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying." "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." "Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good." He roundly scolded the members of the Corinthian church for their vices. And the words of the epistle attributed to James have passed into a proverb—"Faith without works is dead."

If we look into the best teaching of other religions, we must recognize the same fact, that morality is regarded as an essential and vital part of religion.

Brahminism, which probably more than any other faith has laid stress on the purely spiritual, mythical, and contemplative side of religion, has also such fine doctrine as this—"The way to eternal beatitude is open to him who without omission speaketh truth." "If any one assumes the garb of the religious without doing their works, he is not of the religious. Whatever garments he wears, if his works are pure, he belongs to the order of pure men." "To a man contaminated by sensuality, neither the Vedas, nor liberality, nor sacrifices, nor strict observances, nor pious austerities, will procure felicity." "A wise man must faithfully discharge all moral duties, even though he does not constantly perform the ceremonies of religion. He will fall very low, if he performs ceremonial acts only, and fails to discharge his moral duties." "The sacrifice of a thousand horses has been put in the balance with one true word, and the one true word weighed down the thousand sacrifices."

The religion of Zoroaster made, as its most objective point, the moral battle of the soul with evil. To keep pure in body and mind was one of its most constant precepts. "I lay hold on all good thoughts, words and works,"—this, the language of one of its liturgies of worship, was its appointed way of salvation.

The best religious thought of Greece and Rome always included a strict regard for the moral law. Seneca summed it up in the saying that "Virtue is the only immortal thing that belongs to mortality."

As to Buddhism and Confucianism, these religions have given to the ethical element such pre-eminent domain that they may be characterized as ethical rather than as spiritual religions. Their most ancient teaching has more to do with the relations and acts of men towards one another in this life than with the relations between man and the Supreme Being, or between this life and a future existence. They inculcate temperance, integrity, kindness, justice, industry, self-restraint and self-reliance, but have

Digitized by Google

Mohammedan one. The murderer of Lord Mayo made an edifying religious end, at Viper Island, India, as follows:—"The party arrived at Viper about 6 A. M., the convict sleeping the greater part of the distance. He attempted to say something on the way to the police, but was prevented. On his removal from the cell to the gallows, the prisoner exhibited no symptoms of fear, neither did he attempt to display any bravado. He asked Maj. Playfair to allow his body to be removed by men of his own creed—a request that was denied. The prisoner, looking in the direction of the rising sun, expressed a wish to die with his face towards Mecca. He prayed fervently, making use of the ordinary Mohammedan prayer. The cap was then drawn over his head, and the drop fell. He did not die with his face towards Mecca, as in the act of falling the body turned round."

I cannot but believe that there was more honest fidelity to a sincere faith in the end of the poor fellow at Viper Island, impotently trying to die in his Jesus, than in that of the three American scamps who got passed into heaven by making a few mental motions towards the name of Jesus and the scene of Calvary. And if the Almighty, in the shadow behind the scaffold, accepts such efforts as those of Messner and Botts, and even opens eternal life to Jim Fiske, Jr., he cannot be very particular, and need not stand upon the poor show made by his Mohammedan creature. Is not this so? Is the mere accident of Botts, Fiske and Messner knowing and using the name of Jesus, and Shere Ali, at Viper, not knowing it, to keep the best man of the four out of a chance of favor with God?

What do these ministers, who apply redemption on the scaffold, and pronounce deliverance to the dying moments of scoundrels like Fiske, imagine? They never hesitate to swing an assassin right into the arms of Jesus. Botts was a bloated impersonation of the lusts of the flesh, a drunken brawler and companion of harlots; but we are assured that the swing by the neck which justice gave him landed him in heaven. Messner mixed his whiskey and his Christ, in hope of easy strangling and speedy enjoyment of eternal bliss. And the Orthodox theory and practice invariably assume that such men may thus lay hold upon and die in Jesus.

Suppose that somehow this is right; that such men may be thus switched off from the road to hell on to that which leads to heaven. Yet these very ministers, with their miserable means of reaching the soul on such occasions, do one and all declare that what they do here neither angels, nor divine powers, nor God himself can do, or may do, as the trembling soul goes forth from the strangled flesh. Both means and motives, they pretend, are so changed in that scene to which the spirit flies, that God would not if he could, and could not if he would, apply redemption. What impious, insane conceit in any man! If we use meagre resources, and accept the meanest results, in hope of more and better to be done afterwards, we may be sure that the world to come, with its infinite resources, can commence the work, no less than continue it, at least as well as we.

On the Orthodox theory, if a Botts murders his rival, who has stolen his harlot, he sends that rival to hell, and himself, by dying in Jesus, gets to heaven. And even if the murderer strikes the best man or the purest woman, who has lived in goodness, but not in Jesus in the Orthodox sense, the victim goes without hope to hell, and the foul assassin, by a mere motion of his mind, to heaven. A pure life does not secure even a chance in the future, but a motion of consent, made in ignorance and fear, renders redemption certain. There is no baser heathenism than this.

In any decent sense, and in the sense considered Christian by the writer of this, to die in Jesus is impossible to any gallowbird, or to any scoundrel scared by the sudden approach of death. All such folk must die in hell, and expect the purgation of fire, and no humane mind can wish that it should be otherwise. The issuing of assurance of salvation to scamps like Fiske and Botts is a heathen delusion. The name of Jesus, as a name of Christian religion, means purity of character, as when Paul says—"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and fulfil not the lusts of the flesh." The name is thus a symbol, not a mere personal name; it stands for character, not for an historical individual.

By so much as we can awaken in hardened souls the belief that infinite law and order doth seize and hold them, and will purge and recreate them, until they become like the typical man of the Creator's thought, by so much may we say that such die in hope of perfect manhood, and the Orthodox phrase for this might be to die in Jesus; but this is very far indeed from being what a heathenized Orthodox means, in the ordinary use of the phrase.

ANOTHER GOOD MOVEMENT.

MAPLE GROVE SCHOOLHOUSE, June 2, 1873.

Pursuant to a call, a meeting was held at Maple Grove Schoolhouse, in Walnut township, Polk county, Iowa, at 4 o'clock P.M., for the purpose of organizing an Association for moral, social and religious culture.

F. E. Baker was appointed President; Abbie W. Baker, Vice-President; P. Watrous, Secretary; J. A. Stephens, Treasurer,—all pro tempore. After exercises and due deliberation, the meeting adjourned to meet at the same place at 4 o'clock, June 9th.

June 9th—Met according to appointment. Mr. F. E. Baker was chosen permanent President; Mrs.

Abbie W. Baker, Vice-President; Mr. J. A. Stephens, Treasurer; Mr. Jas. W. Wright, Secretary. At the same time the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved—1. That the main object of this Association is "moral, social and religious culture."

2. That this Society meet every Sunday at four o'clock P.M.

All are cordially invited to participate.

J. W. WRIGHT, Secretary.
Box 490, Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. ABBOT:—I would willingly write you a long letter, telling you how we are situated, and how we commenced, and how we are progressing, and how we are going over into the new heaven and the new earth, and how old things are falling away, and how a few of us (a mere handful) are enjoying the dear, blessed Free Religious Association through the precious little INDEX (every number seems to be the best), and how it came to be introduced in our neighborhood, and that we organized a free Sunday meeting last Sunday in our country schoolhouse, and that we are all green, and that we need some good, liberal, religious, scientific books and tracts, and that we don't know enough about liberalism to be correct judges of what kind would be best for such a green set of earnest seekers as we are, and that we want to know where we can obtain them, and that we have hope of doing something that will tend to awaken inquiry. The most of us have our names on your list as subscribers to THE INDEX, some for during life-time, others on probation. We were quite alone in subscribing to THE INDEX from Vol. 1, No. 1; and by diligent labor you may set it down that nearly all (or quite all) the present subscribers to THE INDEX have been through that smallest of beginnings. So now there is Mr. S. F. Wornicks and Mr. F. E. Baker, who have sent in subscriptions and have sent names to the counter-pledge, and Mr. Joel P. Davis also. We shall in all probability get some more. To be sure, we have pulled down the wrath of an angry clergy on us by taking a stand in and out of Christianity, "setting one foot on the land and one on the sea." They have "set their seal and ordered their watch;" and they have left us out of their synagogues, and their Sunday (Sabbath) schools and their love feasts, class and prayer meetings; in short, turned us "over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh." All this we are prepared to meet; and if we all go down together, there will be but a very few. But we are not going to be disposed of in that kind of unceremonious way. We are preparing our forts, to defend ourselves against any mythical set that may dare to attack our fortress. We have the God of Science and Humanity, the God of the universe, to help us against their detached, local, and venal God. We intend to elevate man; we intend to raise the muzzles of our guns high, yes, as high as the dear little INDEX-finger will dare to point. Yes, we would like (love) to write you; we would like to see and converse with you, and learn to be useful in so great a cause as we have espoused. But I know, yes, I know, that you have your work to do, and not ours. But you are there, and we are here; we are green, and need help, that is, guidance to a library that could teach us "Free Religion," "scientific religion." That is what we want. Now I will let you off—give us some advice, how we had better proceed.

DAVID WRIGHT.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

P. S. I have just received a copy of Mr. Stebbins' new "Bible." It's a good one.

[We thank our friend for his interesting letter, and congratulate the new society on its formation. Nothing is more difficult than to advise other people about their reading, and this difficulty is increased by the costliness of the best books on the subjects alluded to. If we can secure the aid we desire, we hope by and by to prepare a list of books with special reference to such cases as the above; but we cannot do it at present.—ED.]

DEEDS IN EMBRYO.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq:

Dear Sir,—Personal character is the character of a person, and, however disposed in certain cases to animalvert severely upon that, I never permit myself to desire to harm the mere figurehead of character—the physical man—no, not even so much as to disturb a hair of it.

Buckle, et al., may find what they esteem "excellent private character in the Spanish Inquisitors;" but I confess to too great obtuseness of intellect to make a like discovery. Whenever grapes shall be gathered of thorns, or figs of thistles, one may look for such results.

Your opponents of "God in the Constitution" notoriety would be powerless without other instrumentalities than words to array against your ideas. They know that their will could not be enforced by words, and of course contemplate the use of other forces to effect their purposes. I cannot associate excellence (in either Christians or Inquisitors) with such sentiments, which are deeds in embryo, and therefore cannot entertain a shadow of respect for their entertainers and actors.

But help will come to you and your cause from a quarter now almost denied, and against those too, by whom ignorantly affirmed. Interesting and trying events are close at hand, and I rejoice in view of the promised upheaval and overthrow.

These remarks were suggested by the criticism of your correspondent, S. N. W., and your reply in THE INDEX of April 13th. Truly yours,

K. N.

MISSIONARY MORALS.

"The Social Life of the Chinese," by Rev. Justus Doolittle, for fourteen years member of the Fuhchau Mission of the American Board [vol. ii, page 127, in Harper's edition of 1867], says, after describing the custom of borrowing a small loaf of bread from the heathen temples of the "Nine Happinesses" on the promise of returning two loaves next year in payment for the one, which is divided among the family of the borrower to secure the blessing of the Five Rulers, to whom the temple is dedicated:—

"Five young men belonging to one of the American missions in this city, before their conversion to Christianity, received loaves on application to the Five Rulers. Three of them paid in due time the customary thanksgiving (the two loaves); the other two never have and of course never will pay it, if they are true Christians. One of them delayed paying it a year or two for some reason; afterward, becoming connected with the Mission boarding-school and somewhat interested in the doctrines of the Gospel, the question occurred to him whether he ought not to settle the account in the regular manner. He was advised not to do it, as being inconsistent with the principles of the Christian religion."

No wonder that Doolittle says a little later [page 460]:—"Missionaries universally regard as great obstacles to the reception of the Gospel the distribution of these books and tracts;" that is, books which he has just described as giving such precepts as—"you should not forget benefits received from others; you should not plan how to deceive people; you should not obtain money by false pretences." Other precepts in these tracts compiled by the Heathen Chinese are—"you should not smoke opium; you should not commit infanticide; you should not act, or hire others to act, an obscene theatrical play; you should not be remiss in doing good works." Doolittle further says that the Chinese are "quick of discerning the vast difference between the sentiments of the native books and those of foreign origin. While they praise the sentiments of their own books, they assert that the sentiments of the books of foreign origin are unsuited to their tastes, customs and views. Although they may do well enough for foreigners who are pleased with them, they are of no use in China! They prefer those writings which teach the performance of so-called meritorious acts to those which teach men to repent of their sins and rely on the merits of the Savior." This wise missionary also mentions [page 398] among "much to lament in the religious notions of the Chinese," that they "believe in the native purity and goodness of the heart. In the first line of the Trimetrical Classic, one of the books first studied by school-boys in China, it is distinctly asserted that 'Man's heart is originally good.'" F. M. H.

A DENUMER.

NEW HARMONY, Ind., June 2, 1873.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Allow me to demur to the charge that Prof. Owen "betrays unscientific prejudice" in his remarks on Spiritualists. He is not "discourteous" to believers in purgatory, purchasers of indulgences, or to the generality of Spiritualists; but he is severe towards those "who trade on the foundations of purgatory or other humbo;" and to those who by oral communications, by signs, by books, or by any other means make a trade of Spiritualism.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN CHAPPELLESMITH.

[The manifest suggestion of Prof. Owen's words was that "mediums," like clergymen, are as a class guilty of such trading; and even if this were always true (which it is not), to speak without qualification of "the kindred baser brood of 'Spiritualists and Spirit-Rappers'" was to extend this personal slur beyond the circle of professional "mediums." No such slur, just or unjust, ever proceeds from the scientific spirit; it betrays too much feeling. The tone of science is always cool and utterly impersonal. We regret that Prof. Owen should drop an expression which must necessarily, and we think justly, offend entirely innocent parties. It is not science, but prejudice, that does this.—ED.]

The whole education of Rome is in the hands of the Jesuits. A catechism issued by the Jesuit fathers furnishes some novel bits of political instruction: Q. What are republicans? A. Enemies of God and the Church. Q. What are their doctrines? A. Liberty, Equality, Fraternity. Q. What do they mean by Liberty? A. The right to do as they like without any restraint of law. Q. What do they mean by Equality? A. That all should equally do wrong and try to make others do so. Q. What do they mean by Fraternity? A. Joining together to commit all kinds of wickedness. Q. Do republicans believe in God? A. No, they hate Him and blaspheme Him.—Ez.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Full of figures, facts, and interesting extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS OF THE RADICAL FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address S. H. MORSE,
128-17 35 BROMFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,
ARCHITECTS,
75 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[180-181]

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE

Presents a higher and more progressive type of literature and more sensible views of life and its needs than any other literary publication in this country.

The ADVENT HERALD, of Boston, says of it:—"At last we have a Ladies' Magazine we can cordially recommend to our readers. It is a sensible Woman's Magazine."

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS JULY FIRST.

Those who subscribe before August get Six Numbers Free. This Ladies' Own is a Progressive, Literary, Household and Fashion Monthly of 48 pages, printed on book paper and beautifully illustrated. Terms $1.50 a year.

AGENTS WANTED.—Large Cash Commissions Paid. Samples 10 cts.
M. CORA BLAND,
Editor and Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Back Numbers of the Index! FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

UNCOMMON AND VALUABLE BOOKS!

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

"Originals of the Bible."—AN INQUIRY INTO THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGINALS OF KING JAMES' BIBLE: When were they written? Where were they written? Who wrote them? And how have they been preserved and handed down? Only a limited number printed. In large 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"In conclusion, the author gives an excellent summary of Man's Nature,—Pathological, Intellectual, Physiological, Chemical,—as the most reliable standard by which we can measure or weigh the credibility of history and of revelation."

Why and What am I?—THE CONFESSIONS OF AN INQUIRER—A Heart Experience; or, the Education of the Emotions. By JAMES JACKSON JARVIS. Published in Boston, and afterward suppressed.

"The 'Inquirer' is full of revolutionary ideas. He tells what he heard and what he did before and since his birth, and very truthfully and powerfully portrays his experience and emotions."

Hebbes' (Thomas) Works.—English and Latin. Now first collected and edited by Sir Wm. Molesworth. Portrait, etc. London: 1830. Complete set, 16 vols. 8vo, cloth, $30.00.

"One of the greatest and most original thinkers in the English language."

Gospel Paganism; or, REASON'S REVOLT AGAINST THE REVEALED. With reprint of a Letter to (London) Social Science Association, 1868. By GEORGE RANKIN. London: 1864. In 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Fourier (Charles).—The Life of. By CHARLES PALLARIN, M.D. With an Appendix. Translated by FRANCIS GEORGE SHAW. Portrait. In 12mo, paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth, $1.00.

"Contains a very comprehensive view of Fourier's writings."

Bhagvat-Geeta (The); or, DIALOGUES OF KRISHNA AND ARJUN. In Eighteen Lectures, with Notes. Translated from the original, in the Sanskrit, or Ancient Language of the Brahmins, by CHARLES WILKINS. Only a very limited edition printed. In royal 8vo, boards, $2.50.

"The antiquity of the original of the Bhagvat-Geeta, and the veneration in which it has been held for so many ages by a very considerable portion of the human race, must render it one of the greatest curiosities in the literary world."

Law (The) of Nations. Affecting Commerce During War: with a Review of the Jurisdiction, Practice and Proceedings of Prize Courts. By FRANCIS H. UPTON, LL.B. In large 8vo, law sheep, $1.00.

Life of Thomas Paine.—Mover of the Declaration of Independence, Secretary of Foreign Affairs under the First American Congress, Member of the National Convention of France, Author, etc., etc. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. With Portrait. In 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.

Principles; or, NATURE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.—Theory of Universal Electro-Magnetism Simplified. Demonstrating the Existence and Operation of Repulsive Force, co-existent with Gravitation. By L. L. CHAPMAN. In 12 mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Wonderfully comprehensive and bold."

Hoback (Dr. C. W.). The Mysteries of Astrology and the Wonders of Magic. With numerous Illustrations and Portrait. Boston: 1859. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

"Contains an account of Geomancy, Chiro-mancy, Physiognomy, etc."

Bible Exposed (The). By BRAHMA. A critical and curious book by a modern writer. In large 8vo, cloth, $1.75; paper covers, $1.25.

"In Appendix, the author gives his own ideas concerning Natural Religion, and endeavors to show that he is not anxious to overthrow all religions."

Materialism of the Present Day.—A Critique of Dr. Buchner's System. By PAUL JANET. Translated from the French by GUSTAVE MANSON. In 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Advice to a Mother on the Management of her Offspring. By PRY HENRY CHAVASSE. A good treatise on Infancy, Childhood and Youth. In 16mo, cloth, 50 cts.

Moore's (Hannah) Works. Containing "Celebs in Search of a Wife;" "Tales, Stories and Allegories." In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

"Hannah Moore's works have established her name as a great moral writer."

Candide. By VOLTAIRE. "The spiciest, wittiest and most exciting book in the French language." Fully translated into English. In 16mo, cloth, 25 cts.

"* Contains 'Apostrophe Americana,' 'Perfect Happiness,' and 'Amours of Famous Men and Women,' in Appendix."

Gil Blas: THE ADVENTURES OF GIL BLAS OF SANTILLANE. Translated from the French of LE SAGE, by SMOLETT. Illustrated with twenty Steel Engravings by ROBERT SMIRKE. In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $3.00.

"The popularity of 'Gil Blas,' which equals that of any of the most famous productions, may afford a lesson to the writers of fiction who are ambitious that their works should live."

Rural Rambles; or, SOME CHAPTERS ON FLOWERS, BIRDS AND INSECTS. By A LADY. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The author of 'Rural Rambles,' like the insect and the bird gathering honey for the hive and the twig for the nest, has passed from treatise to authority, ever seeking to throw around her subject the charms of association and poetry."

Poetic Album (The). Consisting of Choice Selections from the POEMS OF ALFRED TENNYSON, MRS. BROWNING AND ALEX. SMITH. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The selections have been made with consummate skill and strict fidelity. To winnow the wheat from the chaff has been the main object of the accomplished compiler."

Writing Reader (The). Comprising, in the different Handwritings of the present day, [very excellent] selections from Standard Authors, with Specimens of French, German, Spanish and Italian Commercial Penmanship, designed for the use of Schools and Families. By T. GILBERT and F. PHARES. In royal 8vo, half roan, $1.00.

Any of the above will be carefully sent by mail, on receipt of price; or by Express, if so ordered, payable on delivery (C. O. D.) Address

DIGN THOMAS, Bookseller,

141 Fulton Street, New York City.
[180-180cw]

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 30 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 23 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. PROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expounder of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Nationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-129.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 20

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 40

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[28-38] 19 PINCKNEY ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS FROM THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.
FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Talmude, Bible, Philo Judaeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novels, Roman, Tallefin, Milton, Penn, Barclay, Mary Fletcher, Newman, Tyndall, Max Müller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucretia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ.
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."
The Detroit Free Press says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

400 pages; Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address by G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY TO ANY BOOK AGENT, A $5.00 GREENBACK AND A SPECIMEN OF THE GREAT INDUSTRIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 136 in eight days, another 963 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.
[186-181]

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $2.50 and 72 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JUNE 29, 1872.

WHOLE No. 131.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLIWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS, FREDERICK H. HODGSON, THOMAS WENTWORTH HODGSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLGREN, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VORSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Radicalism and Conservatism.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

A Lecture read to the Twenty-Eighth Congregational Society, of Boston (Theodore Parker's), on Sunday morning, Sept. 30, 1866.

From time immemorial two great parties have appeared in every crisis involving human welfare. The names by which they are best known to-day are those of Radicals and Conservatives. When controlled by intelligence and virtue, these two parties discharge different but perhaps equally important functions,—the Radicals being the party of progress and reform, and the Conservatives being the party of order and stability. When not so controlled, they become respectively the parties of anarchy and of reaction. For example, in the French Revolution the Radicals carried the day, and plunged society into a condition for which military despotism seemed a most grateful exchange; while, on the other hand, if the great political Conservative party of to-day had succeeded in getting the upper hand here in America, the result would have been a state of things infinitely worse than that "Union as it was" for which they sighed. I propose this morning to speak of those two great parties of Radicals and Conservatives,—of their relation to each other and to the times in which we live.

The pith and marrow of genuine Radicalism is Faith in Human Nature and Human Progress,—Faith in Man as by the very law of his being developing upwards and not downwards. So far as the race is concerned, it holds that every age is an advance, an improvement on the age preceding; that, viewed in large segments, man's Present is better than his Past and worse than his Future. His origin must have been mean; his destination must be sublime. Radicalism puts the story of Adam and Eve, with their primitive Paradise of innocence and perfection, just where it belongs,—among other fables and myths and old wives' tales. The Golden Age of humanity must lie in front, not in rear. The development theory, so far from degrading us, is the most hopeful and inspiring theory possible; for if this magnificent animal, man, has in truth been evolved out of the trilobite [Ascidian] to what heights of greatness may he not aspire in the future? The chasm between the archangel Gabriel and the Chimpanzee is no greater than that between the Chimpanzee and the trilobite. Given time enough, and the abyss is bridged. As with the race, so with the individual. Radicalism holds that no life is wasted, no soul flung into the arena of existence to be trampled under the heel of an angry God. The infinite Love that cares for the sparrow will fulfil the splendid prophecies graven on the human spirit, and evoke a beautiful cosmos out of the chaotic elements of the worst character. The evil in man must perish, the good survive. Hell had no other origin than the nightmare, and the Devil dates from a fit of indigestion. In the grand, calm universe of God, man has everything to hope,—nothing to fear but his own folly and crime; and even these can never quench the divine spark in his soul that is fated to shine. Thus, whether as to the race or the individual, Radicalism is the spirit of hope, aspiration, enthusiasm, faith; it is the soul's joyous consciousness of its divine birth, its divine education, and its divine destiny. It affirms that man's Hereafter must outshine his Heretofore, and consequently draws its inspiration not from the Past, but from the Future. It demands free play for every human faculty. In a word, Radicalism is an earnest affirmation of progress as the great law of human life, an earnest protest against all that obstructs progress, and a deep purpose to achieve progress in spite of all obstructions.

On the other hand, the pith and marrow of Conservatism is Distrust of Human Nature, Negation of Human Progress. If left to themselves, mankind would rush into anarchy and ruin; they need therefore to be held in check and subjugation by means of established institutions in Church and State. Not being fit to take care of themselves, they must be governed and guided. Mankind is a fierce brute by nature, and is quite unsafe unless led by a ring through his nose. To trust men to the guidance of their own natural instincts, reason and conscience,—to rely on their natural tendency towards what is true, beautiful and good,—is nothing but folly; their tendency is to destruction, not perfection. They need supernatural helps and institutions to keep them in order. Hence Conservatism believes in the superhuman origin of the State and the Church, and regards these products of humanity as greater than humanity itself—as invested with authority to rule it. Its denial of the law of progress which is inherent in human nature makes it believe in a Golden Age behind us, when men were holier than they are to-day, when prophets and Christs appeared on earth, and when God spoke to man face to face. Degeneration, not development, it holds to be the key-note of history. It sighs over the "good old times," and magnifies the intelligence, virtue and happiness of antiquity,—expatiates on the wisdom of the fathers, venerates what it calls "primitive Christianity," cherishes old books as the wisest and old customs as the best, and sets its face like a flint against innovation and improvement. It holds fast to that which is, as good enough both for us and for our posterity. The race and the individual should cling to the established, and trust rather to what has been done for them than to what they can do for themselves. This distrust of human nature and its great latent powers, this sceptical denial of the law of progress, makes conservatism eminently calm and cool. Who ever heard of an enthusiastic conservative? It is never inspired and never inspires; your men of inspiration, who lift up humanity to higher levels, belong to a different school. It discourages all enthusiasm, disbelieves in modern inspiration, advocates no morality higher than that of business and fashion, and no religion higher than that of form. It develops only mediocre goodness and average intelligence, and throws over the fine enthusiasms and aspirations of its victims the freezing restraints of conventional propriety, decorum and respectability. In a word, by its cold denial of human progress, its distrust (deepening sometimes to despair) of man's natural upward tendencies, and its sceptical negation of the safety of universal liberty, it betrays its own negative spirit, and shows itself iconoclastic of the great hopes that make humanity divine. Its fittest motto is the declaration of Mephistopheles in Faust:—"I am the spirit that evermore DENIES."

These two great parties, therefore, of Radicals and Conservatives, the one affirming and the other denying the great law of progress, can never come to terms. Their nature compels them into ceaseless antagonism. And yet we should regret the annihilation even of our antagonists, the total disappearance of the make-weight party. The Conservatives are the heart-wood in the great tree of humanity, the stiff, hard, solid cells in its massive trunk, giving weight and inertia by their very deadness; while the Radicals are the cambium-layer, the tissue of new and forming cells that encircle the dead wood, and maintain the fresh currents of vitality in the whole tree. Radicalism is the life of the world; but it would languish without the co-operation of Conservatism. As the world goes, the danger of excess inherent in us all makes each party necessary as the corrective of the other. If Radicalism should perish, there would be an end of reform and progress; but the repression of reform beyond a certain limit inevitably brings on explosion. If Conservatism should perish, the car of progress would rush forward with such velocity that its smoking axles would spontaneously inflame; the denial of progress must insure progress itself by putting on the brakes. Time is a most important element in all lasting reform; and because radical enthusiasm is always in a hurry, conservative frigidly always becomes its ally by retarding the process. That is the way in which Nature makes even stupidity and pig-headedness subserve the great cause of human development. The two parties must co-exist, as the world goes, until Conservatives are wise enough to become Radicals, and Radicals are wise enough to "hasten slowly." Baron Münchhausen, in one of his great chivalrous adventures, says he attacked a city single-handed, and rode triumphantly through the main gate on his gallant steed; but observing after awhile that his steed seemed to find some little difficulty in advancing, he turned round to discover the cause. To his amazement he perceived that, in passing through the gate, the portcullis had fallen on his horse just behind the saddle, cutting him in two, and the poor beast was galloping forward as well as he could on only two legs. Mankind, like the worthy Baron's charger, would doubtless be embarrassed in its onward progress by the loss of its conservative hind-legs.

While, however, the fact can hardly be disputed that in the present condition of the human race the complete suppression of Conservatism would be a great disaster, it by no means follows that Radicals should cease their active opposition to it. On them lies the responsibility of ensuring human progress. The resistance of the atmosphere enables the bird to fly; but the bird will remain forever motionless unless he stoutly beats the atmosphere with his wings. The true Radical never seeks to destroy, except to create anew, and is falsely charged by his opponents as being recklessly destructive. Look at the great Radical party of to-day which insists on controlling the action of our own government; its single, conscious and avowed purpose is reconstruction alone—reconstruction on the basis of absolute and universal justice. Radicals in religion aim no less truly at reconstruction—reconstruction on the basis of absolute and universal truth. It is Conservatism, not Radicalism, whose spirit is negative and whose action is destructive. Conservatism has succeeded in putting fetters on the free limbs of humanity; these, it is true, Radicalism aims to destroy—will destroy. It would be cowardly and recreant, if it were not pitilessly hostile to quackery and shams of every kind. But the aim of Radicalism is not accomplished by the mere destruction of conservative fetters; this is essential only as a preliminary step. Its complete aim is the EDUCATION of humanity, its development into larger liberality, higher morality, purer religion; it will not be content till every man respects himself, body and soul,—loves his neighbor as himself,—loves God with supreme affection and perfect trust. But the second step in progress is impossible until the first is taken; and the first is, I admit, radically destructive. Let us see what it is that needs, in the present, actual condition of society, to be thus destroyed.

Conservatism intrenches itself behind "Supreme Authorities," fortifies itself with Finalities, undertakes to garrison fixed and permanent institutions. It puts its faith, like McClellan, in the spade, not the sword. Radicalism, therefore, in its great campaign against ignorance and superstition, must abandon these intrenchments and fortifications, and set out, like Sherman, on its triumphal "March to the Sea." We hear now and then (I do not vouch for the fact) of a toad taken alive out of the solid rock which has imprisoned it for thousands of years. Well, the poor toad is only a successful Conservative,—a Conservative who has succeeded in self-imprisonment. Finalities of every kind hamper and check the free, expansive tendencies of human nature; as the first step, therefore, in genuine progress, radicals who are in deadly earnest, and dare to be enthusiastic in the great cause of civil and religious reform, must do their best to overthrow them. We say, perish all institutions that humanity has outgrown! Institutions are only the clothes of humanity, and from time to time, as these become worn out, the race must order a new suit. To insist on any institution as a permanence, on any book as an authority, on any teacher as a finality, is to keep the adult man in the petticoats of the infant. It is of no use; the growing limbs of the youth will rip, tear and burst the garments of his childhood. Whatever the dangers of innovation, the danger that lies in repression is terrific; explosion and cataclysm are the penalty of such folly. The only safety consists in timely change to meet increase of development.

We must look at these Finalities a little more in detail.

First, then, in the State we find the Constitution set up as a finality, as the perfection of human wisdom, to be obeyed without thought of change or improvement. "Let it stand," say our Conservatives; "it was good enough for our fathers, and is good enough for us."

Now the great Rebellion has shown the utter folly of all this. We did "let it stand," until the explosion came. Slavery was in the Constitution, and is not out yet. The Radicals say—Out with the aching tooth, roots and all! Not chattel slavery alone, but every vestige of inequality in civil and political rights. We demand impartial suffrage on the basis of adult humanity. We demand it not only for loyal white men and loyal negroes, who always vote right, but also for disloyal Copperheads, who always vote wrong; we demand it for all of them—for all men of whatever color, white, black or green. Nor will bold and consistent Radicals stop there. We must demand equal rights for all races, and both sexes,—equal suffrage, not manhood suffrage, but humanity suffrage. There can be no stifling or bushing up the woman question, any more than the negro question. The great social and industrial wrongs of woman will never be redressed until she obtains her political rights. You may clamor till doomsday for female emancipation, if you withhold female suffrage. It is now fashionable to advocate negro suffrage; but whoever advocates female suffrage puts his "respectability" in peril. Let him who will, care for that; "respectability" is neither eternal justice nor Almighty God, and I for one choose to obey these. Charles Sumner fell back into a disheartening conservatism, when he argued last winter in the Senate against female suffrage. America has got to come to that, and it is best to see whether the great stream of destiny is bearing us. We are going to trust humanity with a large and generous faith; and when we enfranchise the negro, let us be ashamed to keep our own mothers and sisters, our own wives and daughters, in the degradation of disfranchisement. Whether they now demand it or not is of no moment: the ballot must be thrust upon them as at once a right, a duty and a trust. When women vote, and we are all so much accustomed to the sight that delicate and gentle women will not shrink from the duty as unfeminine, our American politics may become less vile and corrupt than they certainly are to-day. No, genuine Radicals will not tolerate the Constitution itself as a finality; they will insist on mending it till it suits the times and squares with eternal right.

Next, in Religion. For more than a thousand years the Church has claimed to be a finality,—an immutable, infallible authority; and, making its claim allowed, it plunged Europe into the gloomy midnight of mediævalism. That finality is soon to be shaken to its foundations; the Pope has packed his carpet-bag, and the Eternal City will soon be rid of its Old Man of the Sea. In England and America, however, we find an offshoot of the great Catholic finality in the Protestant Episcopal Church. There is indeed grandeur in the venerable antiquity of the vast Roman hierarchy, with all the prestige of fifteen centuries on its head; but when this proud paragon, with its scanty three centuries of existence, this bastard daughter of Rome that can boast of no better father than Henry VIII of England, claims to be the one and only Church, the claim is simply ludicrous. It reminds us of the old fable of the bull-frog that envied the size of the ox, and in emulation strained, swelled and puffed himself up until he burst. The Episcopal Church may learn a useful lesson from old Esop.

Luther and his fellow-reformers set up the Bible as the next finality, and the great majority of Protestants to-day venerate it as such. They call themselves Evangelical because they build their whole theology on Scripture, and accept Chillingworth's famous statement—"The Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants."

Now, little as is my respect for Bibliolatry,—for this blind, stupid and insensate reverence that men feel for the product of their own faculties,—I feel no inclination to laugh or sneer at the Bible. It is a great and noble book,—yes, I may truthfully call it one of the greatest and noblest of books; it has fed millions on millions of hungry souls with divine bread. In temptations and trials, in sorrows and miseries without number, it has been the great stay and staff of God's toiling children. I cannot forget that it was the slave's only consolation and comforter in the dreadful woes of plantation-life; and that everywhere in Christian lands it has helped to educate the pure and sweet and holy souls that have blessed, and bless still, the whole human race. I cannot forget that its quaint stories and beautiful sayings are forever associated with our mothers' love and the tenderest memories of our childhood. Far be it from me to fling away the Bible with contempt; I will not concede to the superstitious of other men so great a power over my own heart. But the Bible is no more a finality than the Vedas, the Zend Avesta, or the Koran. With all its rare and high truth, it is also full of false facts, false ideas, false ethics, false religion. Common sense demands that we sift out the wheat from the chaff. The Bible is becoming daily less and less a finality among thinking people, and I rejoice to believe that the day will come when men will honor, without adoring, the grand and venerable old book. I love it too much to handle it carelessly or flippantly, and sadness is more becoming than laughter when good men make a fetish of it.

The New York Unitarian Convention has set up

Jesus as the last finality. It proclaims him Lord and King, and, passing by the Bible, contents itself with swearing allegiance to him. Without considering all we know of Jesus comes from the Bible, and that, if the Bible is not historically trustworthy, we know neither what he said nor did, they neglect to affirm the historic truth of the gospel records (which would be very unsafe and ticklish business), and yet profess to regard Jesus as supreme Authority and Master. This illogical and curious inconsequence is characteristic of the Conservative Unitarian mind, and only shows the halfness, the greenness, of the whole movement.

Now in honest reverence for the great human quality of Jesus, for the godlike spirit that pervades most of his sayings, and for the divine life that must lie behind the imperfect records of it, I will yield to no man. Everything that is good in me responds to his voice and life. I would as soon make a mock of her that bore me, as scoff or jeer at Jesus. I hold that man to be dead to all spiritual beauty and divine truth, who is not profoundly moved by the faint glimpses we catch of that wonderful man. But when it comes to pinning our faith to whatever the gospels say he said, or to clothing him with an abnormal and impossible sinlessness in any absolute sense, I say—No! The Conservative Unitarians call him Lord; some Radical Unitarians call him Leader; I can call him neither Lord nor Leader. I follow no man's tracks, and ask no man to follow mine. Beneath God the Infinite Spirit and All-Loving Father, I acknowledge no Leader or Lord. We must give up "leaders," and trust ourselves boldly to the leadership of our own conscience and reason. The American people are learning this lesson of self-trust and self-guidance, as Johnson and Seward, Raymond and Doollittle, are discovering to their cost. Even Henry Ward Beecher, whose course I behold with respectful sorrow, perceives how empty and meaningless an epithet is that word, "leader." In looking among the great intellects and souls that have shone in human history, I find no one that can stand to me in that relation; modestly, I trust,—at any rate decidedly,—I have resolved to follow no man. I have been called a Parkerite, but I always disclaim the epithet. Smith should be a Smithite, and Brown a Brownite: every man should be his own "ite." There is no hope of him who will not free himself from the tyranny of reputations. No man of the nineteenth century more thoroughly commands my admiration and affection than Theodore Parker—would to God he stood here to-day, and I sat silent in your midst! His great and lofty spirit is a perpetual inspiration to me, and his theology wins my sympathy more than that of any other man I could name. But I not infrequently differ from him. In some points he seems to me a little too conservative,—not quite radical enough. He builds his theology on private intuition,—I build mine on the broader basis of universal science. When he makes the idea of a "Being of Infinite Power, Wisdom and Goodness a universal intuition of all men, permanent and alike in all," he puts the personality of God beyond all doubt or question; but I find this the very point now most in dispute. Radicalism, as I understand it, bids us shift the basis of our great beliefs from Intuition to Science, and inscribes this august name of Science on her banner, as the grand sign by which we must conquer. New truth is ever dawning, and I for one will acknowledge no leader but Truth herself. We have given up Jesus as a finality; let us not make Parker another. How indignantly would his great, free soul have rebuked such idolatry of a fallible man! I cannot say of him what I could not say to him. Trusting that the ocean of truth is still unexhausted, Radicals listen evermore for the latest murmur of its waves, and trust the inward interpreter in their own bosoms to make known to them its solemn message. Nothing in humanity is permanent or fixed but the faculties by which it lives; the products of these faculties, whether churches, books, intuitions or ideas, are subject to the great law of development. No FINALITIES! That is the first and fundamental principle of Radicalism, the primary condition of all new inspirations and ennobling insights into new truths. And that is the word I have to say to-day.

RADICALS AND CONSERVATIVES.

[From the New York Nation, July 18, 1871.]

RADICALISM has of late been bringing good people into such strange places and queer company that many have begun to ask, in some alarm, whether one must really give up one's interest in reform and one's desire to promote it, through fear of falling into or helping the excesses to which attempts at reform have in some cases led. Are they to give up all effort to settle the labor question, through fear of Communism; all efforts to improve the condition of woman, through fear of "free love"; all efforts to abate intemperance, through fear of the trickery and unreason of prohibition? Just now, owing to events which are present in everybody's mind, this halting mood is more than usually widespread. Many persons who have been Radicals all their lives are in doubt whether to be Radical any longer; but at the same time have such a traditional horror of standing still, that they shudder at the thought of bringing on themselves the name of "Conservatives."

To all these doubters we think we can offer one or two consolatory suggestions, and suggestions that may possibly be useful in other ways than consolation. To those of the younger generation all over the country, and their number is large, who have entered on their careers since the questions by which the last generation was most fiercely agitated were laid to rest, and who, while sincerely anxious to serve their kind, hesitate about the banner under which they should enroll themselves, we take the liberty of saying that there is no more necessity of calling themselves either Radicals or Conservatives than Guelfs or Ghibellines, or Whigs, or Tories, or Federalists, or Democrats, Legitimists, or Republicans, and for the simple reason that, in politics and sociology, the great question has ceased to be, Shall we stand where we are, or go forward? The question which now occupies men's minds is, What is the next best thing to do? In other words, none, or next to none, now maintain that things are best as they are; all admit that change may be a good, and that change is inevitable; the differences in our time are about the changes which it is best to try to hasten by active efforts, and the changes which it is best to leave to their natural course. There are, of course, old Conservatives who do not understand this, and who go about armed cap-à-pié, looking for Radicals, and who, expecting to find them murdering children and gutting houses, are surprised to find them teaching schools and nursing in hospitals; so also there are old Radicals who are always collecting the power of the country to help them to root Conservatives out of their feudal strongholds, and are surprised to find them living in frame houses, and playing on pianos, or reading penny papers. But these eccentricities are the traditions of a period when Conservatives had no scruple in saying that they liked the world as it was because they got a good deal out of it, and when Radicals were so exasperated by this that they elevated mere assault and destruction into a mission.

There is no occasion any longer to belong to either faction, because there has come over the world a sense, which is none the less strong for not always finding expression or recognition, that the affairs of men in society are to a large extent the subjects of scientific adjustment, and in fact cannot be adjusted in any way but scientifically, and that, though the "enthusiasm of humanity" may often be necessary to keep the machinery in motion, in the construction and arrangement of it something totally different from enthusiasm is necessary. When we say this, nobody need fancy that we are trying to administer a dose of Positivism in disguise; we are only saying what every thinking man, no matter what his views about the freedom of the will may be, acknowledges to be true. No opinions about the rightfulness or wrongfulness of the sale and manufacture of whiskey, for instance, affect a rational man's recognition of the fact that there is a point beyond which a tax on whiskey cannot be raised; and no opinions about the final cause of disease ever shut any intelligent person's eyes to the fact that cholera is controllable or preventible by certain sanitary precautions. We might multiply these illustrations indefinitely if it were necessary. What they would all show would be the fact that science has taken firm hold of society, and although we may not say, or believe, that the laws of human society will ever be discovered, or that there is not a wide margin reserved to individual freedom, the perfecting of the social arrangements is now, and must become more and more every day, the result of the careful collection, arrangement, and skilful comparison of facts and of the study of human character.

When we say this, we suggest some curious reflections as to the precise status of the Radical as we all know him, and as many of us love and respect him. If a gentleman should present himself to Professor W. D. Whitney with his cravat off and his hair streaming in the wind, and tell him that he was utterly disgusted with the received theories about the origin and structure of language, that nothing good had ever come of them, and he was going to war against them perpetually till he had overturned them and established new ones, and he were to confess on examination that he had never studied language, that he knew nothing of any tongue but his own, and did not understand the grammar of that, and that he had the merest smattering of ethnology, the Professor would certainly think he was either a very impudent or crazy person, and would waste but little time on him. Or if another was to visit Professor Peirce, and denounce astronomy as now taught, and vow never to rest till he had worked out a new and very superior solar system of his own, and were then to acknowledge that he was totally ignorant of mathematics and chemistry, or of the history of astronomy, and meant to remain so, the Professor would in like manner drive him off as a bore or fool. But a very large proportion of the Radicals of the day are really conducting themselves with absurdity almost as great over a subject even more recondit than language or astronomy. There is nothing deeper hidden than the springs of human action, and yet all our legislation and social arrangements have to be based on the imperfect glimpses we have got of them here and there through many ages.

The road before the reformer of to-day is, in fact, plainer than ever it was. His one duty is to find out things. His father was occupied in assailing monstrous and palpable evils, and getting the government into the hands of the many; the son has no such duty. He has no abuse of any magnitude to attack which is maintained by the few for their own comfort. His work is to adjust the relations of the individuals of the great crowd to each other, so that they may be enabled to lead a quiet, and comfortable, and free life. There is no need, therefore, of his hiring himself out to a "cause," or taking service under a banner, or calling himself either a Preserver or an Uprooter. He will preserve or uproot just as seems best, without fancying that there is any more merit in one kind of work than in the other, or that it is a peculiarly noble thing to keep continually putting down plants and sowing seeds which he has no reasonable ground for believing to be suited either to the climate or soil. He will not, in order to give the laborer a better chance in life, spend his days howling against capitalist greed; nor, in order to elevate women in the social sphere, devote himself to denouncing men and marriage; nor, by way of promoting municipal independence, apologize for the burning of cities.

If it would not be travelling out of our domain, we should venture to suggest an application of what we are here saying to our esteemed and active friend, the Religious Radical, who just now hardly ever passes a night in his bed, and discovers a new object of adoration every week, and if he can only get people to worship his god, will reciprocate the politeness by worshipping any other well-endorsed deity that is presented to him. It is apparently the opinion of this gentleman that some prodigious gain will result to mankind by having the greatest possible number of people lay before the world and work into each other's brains the greatest possible variety of odds and ends of religious ideas; and the amount of activity expended in this way by men and women whose speculation even on mean or simple subjects are of little value, and whose speculations on time, space and eternity are absolutely worthless, is one of the most curious phenomena of the day. Now, what we would say on this point to any young man who is starting in life with the desire of either making the world better or promoting his own culture, is that, considered from the social standpoint, religion is of little or no interest or importance, except in so far as it promotes right living. Religious opinions which purify and elevate character, promote truthfulness, justice, temperance and chastity and brotherly kindness, or, in other words, supply springs of action, are infinitely valuable; religious opinions which do nothing more than help debating clubs to chop logic, and give people who have not learned how to think something to sharpen their wits over, and which a man may hold and proclaim daily without leaving off lying, or distorting, or slandering, or cheating, or stealing, are things which nobody who wants to keep his brain clear, healthy and strong, and his moral perceptions in good working order, will have anything to say to. They are to the mind what tipping is to the body.

HITTING THE NAIL ON THE HEAD.

[From the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, April 27, 1872.]

The following editorial from a late number of the Independent reaches down to the roots of denominationalism, and exposes the nakedness and flimsiness of the sectarian peculiarities which are allowed to perpetuate division and strife. It is worthy of much more than ordinary attention:—

Every Christian church claims to rest upon Christ as its cornerstone. Every Christian church accepts the saying of Paul:—"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

It is not intended here to dispute this claim in any instance. In a historical sense it is true, of course, that every Christian church does rest upon Christ as its foundation; although the various churches largely accuse each other of being false to this principle.

Passing by the mutual excommunications, and allowing each its claim to rest upon Christ, we find that every church has—laid, as it were, upon the great corner-stone—its fundamental position, the reason of its distinctive existence, what may be called its sole foundation. It is worth while for us to remember what this is, in the case of each of the principal churches among us.

It should be observed that by the phrase "sole foundation" is not meant all that any church declares to be fundamental truth; but only that one position which, if it were taken away, would take away the necessity of a distinct, separate existence from the church which is resting upon it. That is all that we mean here by the "sole foundation."

Taking the churches in alphabetical order, then, we say:—The sole foundation of the Baptist Church is the theory that Christ requires every person who would be a member of his church to be immersed in water by some person who has himself been immersed.

The sole foundation of the Congregational Church is the theory that Christ has given to all Christians an equal right to vote and act in the government of the church.

The sole foundation of the Episcopal Church is the theory that Christ enables bishops to communicate to other persons, by laying hands on their heads, the power to give a peculiar spiritual efficiency to language, water, bread and wine.

The sole foundation of the Methodist Church is the theory that every Christian receives a special revelation to the effect that his sins are forgiven.

The sole foundation of the Presbyterian Church is the theory that a representative of church government is most agreeable to the teachings of Christ and the example of the apostles.

The sole foundation of the Roman Catholic Church is the theory that Christ appoints each successive bishop of Rome lieutenant governor of the universe.

The sole foundation of the Swedenborgian Church is the theory that supernatural revelations, in addition to those contained in the Scriptures, were made to Emanuel Swedenborg.

The sole foundation of the Unitarian Church is the theory that a man need not believe the doctrine of the Trinity in order to be a Christian.

The sole foundation of the Universalist Church is the theory that men will not be punished to all eternity for the sins they commit in the present life.

By carefully studying the above, it will be seen that there is no church named which might not instantly coalesce with some other church on the list. If the theory stated as its "sole foundation" should be laid aside as being either untruthful or unimportant; and so we have here, as materials to be used in the study of things that make for peace, the actual points that divide the Christian world.

We concluded, after reading the foregoing, that we would carefully reconsider the peculiarities of the movement in which we are engaged, and see whether we must cry, with those above enumerated—"My leanness! my leanness! woe unto me!" Of course we hold much in common with all the religious bodies mentioned above—but what do we hold that they do not hold? Excluding all that is held by others and ourselves in common, we mention the following particulars in which we are unlike them all.

1. The exclusion of all names for the church but such as are given in the New Testament.

2. The presentation of one article of faith to such as desire to unite with us to serve the Lord—namely, That Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.

3. The immediate admission to baptism of all who voluntarily confess that, with all the heart, they accept this confession of faith.

4. The immersion of believers, and believers only, for the remission of sins.

5. The admission of all such immersed believers to church fellowship without assent to any article of faith, merely enjoining on them to walk in the light of New Testament teaching.

6. Nothing binding in the church but faith in the Christ, and obedience to his will as revealed by the apostles. All outside of this is private property, no one being responsible to another for his opinions, and no one being allowed to force his opinions on others.

7. The weekly observance of the Lord's Supper.

8. The rejection alike of the doctrines and practices which cause division, retaining and insisting on those which all believers in the divinity of Christ admit. The Bible only as the book of authority; in all matters of expediency in which the Bible gives us no explicit directions, a general agreement in such measures as may be deemed most advisable; and the law of love to regulate us in the exercise of Christian liberty. Faith in the Son of God as our Prophet, Priest and King, to the ignoring of all other faiths. Repentance towards God. Immersion as that which all can accept, and the rejection of sprinkling and pouring, which are but partially accepted. The immersion of believers, which all admit, and the rejection of infant baptism, which but part approve.

That will do for one sitting.

A WORD IN SELF-DEFENCE.

[From the Christian Radical.]

Here, now, are lying in our drawer a number of manuscripts unprinted. Some of them have been lying in that drawer for months. Their authors wonder why they do not put in their appearance. Still they lie there. Perhaps we are suspected, if not openly charged with a want of appreciation. Well, now, we do not desire to suffer even the suspicion of censure, and therefore must make a defence.

And first—a number of these manuscripts are well written, but are not authorized by any responsible name. These we cannot publish, simply for this reason, even if they had been written by Paul or Gabriel. It is required of all newspapers that contributors furnish their real names, which will be published or not, as the writers desire. That an editor should have such guarantee is most reasonable. This rule is so common that it has become law.

And second—there are a number of manuscripts in the drawer that have merit, and are filled in with excellent thoughts and clear common sense, but are slovenly written, carelessly constructed and run down at the heels. The writers of these generally say to us that "this article was written in great haste, and the punctuation and spelling are not the best; you will please make corrections."

Well, we are inclined to do this whenever we discover a rich vein of solid sense buried underneath the rubbish of bad grammar; but we have so much else to do that our time and strength will not allow us to execute our good wishes to this class of writers. Better take a little more time. Better heed the old Latin proverb, festina lente, hasten slowly, when you write for the paper, friends. It is not fair that the editor should do his work and yours too, and besides you do not thus get the profit that a thorough doing of your work would bring you. These manuscripts are not likely to hear the voice of resurrection soon.

Third—there is another class of manuscripts that are unfit for our columns. They are void of brains, and show no touch of culture. To print them would do us harm, and do their writers no good. If published, they would not be read, and not to have one's article in the newspaper read is worse than to be noticed by the preacher when he visits the home-stead. These we cannot publish.

We desire contributions; we plead for them; we beseech all who have a ringing and convincing word to utter, to utter it in the name of the infinite Christ whom we exalt; but do not, friends, burden us with the labor of fitting your manuscripts for the press. We cannot do this—it will kill us to do it.

London papers relate curious stories of the blunders made by Oxford undergraduates in the Scripture examination which they have to pass before taking their degrees. It is told of one that when asked to mention "the two instances recorded in Scripture of the lower animals speaking," the undergraduate thought for a moment, and then replied, "Balaam's ass." "This is one, sir. What is the other?" Undergraduate paused in earnest thought. At last a gleam of recollection lit up his face as he replied:—"The whale! The whale said unto Jonah, 'Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian!'"

J—, the other day, was describing a soldier-craft to his mother, he being much interested in natural history, and endeavoring to give as strong an idea as possible of its warlike characteristics, and power to harm those who molest it. Little R—sat by, quietly listening and sewing, and at last, lifting her head, she remarked, "I hope God did not hurt himself when he was making him!"—Emuthorne.

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"I like the paper much, and have sent you several new subscribers from this office, and expect to send more, and were I out of debt, I would take one or more shares of your capital stock. You have my earnest wishes for success; and if I had a few specimen copies and also a few tracts, I think I could scatter them in a manner that might be productive of good results to your enterprise. I think your views and teachings embody the sentiment and feeling of a vast body of nominal Christians, however unwilling at present they may be to admit it. The old idea of the 'bloody atonement' to effect a reconciliation between God and his children is fast assuming among people who allow themselves to think the proportions of a horrible and ridiculous absurdity; and I hope to live to see the day when all men will feel at liberty to come out and express their views on all of the great moral and social questions, without the fear of Orthodoxy before their eyes, to make them tremble for their social position."

"Although we have probably never met, yet I feel that we are quite closely allied in sympathy on what people generally call religious subjects. Having had a birth-right in the Orthodox society of Quakers, I have passed through the Evangelical ordeal, and, although still in membership with the Hicksite or Unitarian portion of the Society, I am convinced a new era must dawn upon the human mind; and THE INDEX seems to point more clearly to the advent of Free Religion, untrammelled by clergy, Bible, or sect, than any other instrumentality I can find. It has been my purpose for some time past to add one to the subscription list. Please find two dollars enclosed. I would like to have it from commencement of volume 2, if you can send it."

"I think THE INDEX just the right size now. One can afford the time to read it through—not skip half of it, as a busy person must the mammoth Independent. We as a nation ought to read less and digest more."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The regular meetings of this Society are held in the ODEON, in the NEW EXCHANGE BUILDING on St. Clair Street, opposite the WINKLER OPERA HOUSE, on Sunday mornings, at 10½ o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending June 22d.—Henry Miller, $1; W. C. Sheldon, $1; John Gregg, $2; N. E. Armstrong, $2; P. Jericho, $1; Chas. Price, $2; W. S. Murphy, $1; W. H. Schlep, $2; Dr. Pearson, $2; Rev. E. C. S. Brown, $2; S. M. Archer, $2; Mrs. Fred Sims, $10; Chas. Kahlo, $2; Geo. Coburn, $2; Casper Dressel, $1; Theo. Myers, $1; Mary C. Davis, $2; M. M. Becor, $2; D. Roggenbush, $2; E. McSherry, $1; F. Schneider, $1; Samuel Ritchie, $1; Antony Krump, $1; Samuel Bauman, $1; B. Lichtenfeld, $1; J. Barocky, $1; James Beaupre, $1; Jno. C. Caven, $1; Chas. Ordway, $1; J. C. Lukes, $2; Thomas Dickinson, $2; Ch. Heck, $2; J. O. Paddock, $2; Charles H. Lee, $2; Henry Guenther, $1; Dr. A. H. Hoy, $1; Edmund Brunsen, $2; Ernest Pruegel, $1; Mrs. Julia J. Perkins, $2; D. Lyman, $2; A. Williams & Co., $3.17; A. J. Grover, $20; J. F. Higgins, $2; R. H. Day, $2; A. R. Mott, $2; Joseph Dickson, $2; D. H. Doss, $2; H. Mathos, $2; Thos. E. Ash, $2; Henry Zimmer, $2; Jno. J. Graner, $2; Calvin Griswold, $2; C. N. Overbaugh, $2; Jno. Alexandre, $2; Parker Pillsbury, $2; Jno. S. Gilliland, $2; Rev. T. F. Stevenson, $1; E. M. Hendrick, $2; Jno. N. Lyman, $2; G. B. Stebbins, $2; George Lieberknecht, $1; G. Bruchmans, $2; Geo. T. Mott, $2; William Youngblood, $1.50; A. B. Gibbs, $2; Ely Upton, $2; James Tinker, $2; F. H. Lee, $2; James Ford, $2; Samuel Leonard, $1; J. B. Nesbitt, $2; M. Brandes, $2; Henry Pearson, $2; Jacob Miller, $1; H. H. Everts, $1; Geo. P. Delaplaine, $1; James G. Richardson, $2; James Aron, $1.50; Lyman Cross, $2; Jas. Riddle, $2; J. T. Harrell, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

RECEIVED.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN; FROM HIS BIRTH TO HIS IN-AUGURATION AS PRESIDENT. BY WARD H. LAMON. With Illustrations. BOSTON: JAMES H. OSGOOD & CO. (late Ticknor & Fields, and Fields, Osgood & Co.) 1872. 8vo. pp. 347.

THREE BOOKS OF SONGS. BY HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW. BOSTON: JAMES H. OSGOOD & CO. 1872. 16mo. pp. 304.

HEBREW MEN AND TIMES. FROM THE PATRIARCHS TO THE MESSIAH. BY JOSEPH HENRY ALLEN. Second Edition, with an Introduction. BOSTON: HORACE B. FULMER, 14 Bromfield St. 1872. 12mo. pp. 448.

ANCIENT YORK AND LONDON GRAND LODGES: A Review of Freemasonry in England from 1267 to 1812. BY LEON STEVENSON. Philadelphia: Office Mrs. WILLIAM CURTIS, Manassas Furnishing Depot, 146 N. Sixth St. 1872. 16mo. pp. 122.

REMARKS OF THE TIMES AND OTHER CHIEFS. BY C. BRUGH-SAVERN. New York. 1872. 12mo. pp. 310.

THE ALBION for July, 1872. JAMES SUTTON & CO., 25 Liberty Street, New York, $5.00 a year (including Oil Chromo Premium).

THE DRAMA IN COLLEGE. BY JAMES K. HOGKES, Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in Antioch College. [From The Atlantic Monthly for July.]

AMONG DIVINES; OR, LOVE-SCENES IN THE ORIENT. I. Mary Magdalene. II. Salome. III. Martha and Mary. IV. Joanna. New York: W. E. HILTON. Publisher's Agent, 125 Nassau Street. 1872. Paper. pp. 67.

FIRST ANNUAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE FULTS MEDICAL COLLEGE, OF CINCINNATI, Session of 1872-73. June, 1872. Press of BRADLEY & POWELL, Cincinnati.

Poetry.

SONG
OF THE COBBLER OF HAGENAU.

Our ingress into the world
Was naked and bare;
Our progress through the world
Is trouble and care;
Our egress from the world
Will be nobody knows where;
And I could tell you no more,
Should I preach a whole year!

LONGFELLOW'S "THREE BOOKS OF SONG."

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000. SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 30, 1872. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MUMFORD, New Harmony, Ind.,	One Share, 100
D. AYRES, Jr., Brooklyn, N. Y.,	" " 100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT, Evansville, Ind.,	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
J. T. BRADY, Sabetha, Kan.,	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
MAX PRAGHT, Northampton, Mass.,	" " 100
H. HETHELMANN, Cincinnati, Ohio,	" " 100
C. FOLSON, Toledo, Ohio,	" " 100
S. C. EASTMAN, Zanesfield, Ohio,	" " 100
J. O. MARTIN, Palmyra, Mo.,	" " 100
A. FOLSON, Indianapolis, Ind.,	" " 100
W. F. HEIKER, Boston, Mass.,	Two " 200
HIRAN COLT, Dayton, Ohio,	" " 100
SAMUEL COLT, Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One " 100
CHARLES NABH, Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One " 100
S. F. WOODARD, Worcester, Mass.,	Two " 200
H. A. MILLS, Oxborn, Ohio,	Two " 200
J. W. BARTLETT, Mr. Carroll, Ill.,	One " 100
OSCAR ROOS, Dover, N. H.,	" " 100
Mrs E. S. MILLER, Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	" " 100
JAS. R. STONE, Geneva, N. Y.,	" " 100
D. K. INNES, Cincinnati, Ohio,	" " 100
A. TAPP, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Five " 500
B. L. WILDER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
PETER H. CLARK, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
G. K. WITTINGTON, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
I. T. SUTTON, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WALT. F. AUGUST, Pitts-burgh, Pa.,	" " 100
Mrs C. E. NOURSE, Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two " 200
JAS. FISCHER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
G. H. HOLTZMAN, Pitts-burgh, Pa.,	" " 100
L. VON BLESSING, N. Y. City,	Five " 500
W. H. BOUGHTON, Brooklyn, N. Y.,	One " 100
W. P. CHAMBERS, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
TITUS L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.,	" " 100
A. MOD. YOUNG, Milwaukee, Wis.,	" " 100
G. W. PECKHAM, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
C. T. HAWLEY, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WM. BECKER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
Mrs. G. D. NORRIS, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Five " 500
ROBT. C. SPENCER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
C. M. LAWLER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
E. R. LELAND, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WM. BLACKMORE, Palmyra, Mo.,	" " 100
R. H. RANNEY, Boston, Mass.,	" " 100
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York, N. Y.,	Five " 500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY, Richmond, Ind.,	One " 100
J. R. WEIST, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JAMES SMELSER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JOHN H. POPP, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
THOMAS DAVIS, Indianapolis, Ind.,	" " 100
ALEX. METZGER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
BERNARD LIEBER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
CLEMENS VANNOUT, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
FRED. CHRISTMANN, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
HENRY SCHNELL, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
M. H. DOOLITTLE, New Bedford, Mass.,	" " 100
M. S. BEACH, Washington, D. C.,	" " 100
L. E. BACON, Lawrence, Kan.,	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
C. ROBINSON, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
HENRY STAIG, St. Louis, Mo.,	" " 100
J. C. ROONEY, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Two " 200
JACOB SPRINKEL, St. Joseph, Mo.,	One " 100
R. P. HOLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.,	Five " 500
ELIAB WRIGHT, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JAS. A. DUBREY, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
E. S. DUNHAM, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
JOHN F. MILLS, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
J. C. HATNER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Three " 300
" " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
GEO. W. PARK, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
FREDERICK DECK, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
J. W. WINKLEY, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
D. J. KING, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
Mrs R. BOWKER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
" " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
Mrs H. E. STEVENSON, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
M. LUZE, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Two " 200
HENRY N. STONE, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
E. S. BARROWS, Davenport, Iowa,	" " 100
W. W. GRANT, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTERN, New York, N. Y.,	" " 100
A. WERNER, New York, N. Y.,	" " 100
W. E. BOORAEK, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
J. LIENAN, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
H. G. WHITE, Buffalo, N. Y.,	" " 100
J. P. DYERSON, New York, N. Y.,	Two " 200
B. W. PRITCH, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Five " 500
JOB T. WHITE, " " " " " " " " " " " "	One " 100
L. T. IVES, Detroit, Mich.,	Two " 200
E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.,	Five " 500
EDW. M. DAVIS, Philadelphia, Pa.,	One " 100
Mrs. LUCRETTIA MOTT, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
WERNER BORCKLIN, Burlington, Iowa,	" " 100
D. G. CUTTENDEN, Milwaukee, Wis.,	One " 100
Mrs. FRED. SIER, Kokok, Iowa,	" " 100
E. B. WOLCOTT, Milwaukee, Wis.,	" " 100
C. D. KENDRICK, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
THOS. HOOVER, " " " " " " " " " " " "	" " 100
Mrs. MARY C. DAVIS, " " " " " " " " " " " "	Two " 200
Mrs. PRINCE, Chicago, Ill.,	Five " 500

$95,400

The Index.

JUNE 29, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio."

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL."

"These three great Christian ideas of the Father, hood of God, the progress of the race towards final good, and the brotherhood of all men, are, like the idea out of which they are born [i. e. the doctrine of the Incarnation], underived from any other teaching, and original to Christianity. No Eastern or Western religion taught them, no Jewish sages conceived them in anything like a practical form, in anything like their full extent. We find, as it were, filmy phantoms of them here and there; we do not find their substance. Christ sent them forth to run as living fire through the world, and their life is derived from the fact of the union in him of God and Man" [Christ in Modern Life, by Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, p. 87.] In the light of this passage should be read the following also [Ibid. p. 177]:—"It is the business of Christian teachers, while setting aside the negotiations [of infidelity], to claim as their own those positive ideas which, though developed in a foreign soil, are yet derived from Christian seeds. They will say, 'We have learned from our enemies; they have told us what the age desires. In answer to that desire they have unwittingly fallen back upon Christian ideas and expanded them, led unconsciously thereto by the ever-working spirit of God. Those expansions are ours; we did not see them before, but we claim them now.' If we do that, the infidelity of the infidel, that is, his negations, will slowly share the fate of all negations; and the scattered truths he teaches, taken into Christianity, find in it their vital union with all its past, and form stepping-stones for its future growth."

It is on this principle that Christian clergymen generally claim for Christianity all the credit of civilization; but we never before saw it so brazenly stated. We cannot use a milder term. Defining what he means by the "positive ideas" taught by "infidelity," Mr. Brooke thus describes the affirmative aspect of Secularism, as presented by the "conscientious Secularist":—"He believes that Nature contains all things necessary for the guidance of mankind, that duty consists in a steadfast pursuit, according to the laws of Nature, of results tending to the happiness of the race, and that in doing that duty he becomes happy. His God is duty, his Bible is Nature, his heaven is in the happiness of man and the progress of mankind to perfection. His sin is in violating natural laws, because such a violation is sure to bring evil on man."

These, then, are the "positive ideas" which Mr. Brooke claims for Christianity as its peculiar property! Duty, Nature, Law, Happiness, Progress, Perfection—these are to be appropriated as the special products of the Incarnation doctrine! Why, long centuries before the Christ was heard of or even dreamed of by the prophets, these ideas were ancient truisms in the world. Confucius preached them as the teaching of sages even in his day venerated as belonging to hoar antiquity. The Brahmins taught them; Zoroaster taught them; Buddha taught them; the Greeks taught them. What insanity of egotism for a Christian minister to claim them for his parvenu religion! "Practical form?" Are they practised to-day in Christendom? "Full extent?" Are they co-extensive to-day with human society? So far as clearness of thought and explicitness of statement are concerned, the Bible adds nothing whatever to these simple, great truths of Paganism; and so far as practical application is concerned, one searching glance at "Christian" lands, nay, at the Christian Church itself, is sufficient to dissipate the proud and arrogant pretence. No—not to Christianity belongs the glory of truths that well up from the very depths of humanity itself; and if the avowed "business of Christian teachers" is to steal from Man in order to aggrandize the Church, they have themselves alone to thank if they are at last called to face the felon's doom.

ESCAPED PRIVATEERS.

In a report by the London Inquirer of the forty-seventh anniversary of the "British and Foreign Unitarian Association," Rev. James Martineau makes the following remarks in the course of his speech:—

Next, what were the obligations of English Unitarianism to America, which was this day represented by the late Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, Mr. Lowe? No doubt some persons thought there was a drawback to these obligations, and that some of the later spirits that had gone forth from Boston had in some degree compromised the honor of the sect from which they arose; but for his part he never confessed that. He never confessed it in regard to Parker (applause), and, when his books first came to England, he felt that, however much he might differ from him, or regret the strength with which his convictions were on some points expressed, he was yet a true prophet of the future, and that the positive and creative power which was in that man would survive when all that would be regretted in the vehemence of his expression had entirely disappeared. He was not ashamed to say the same of the Radical party which had gone out from the Unitarians, for though he did not agree with them, it was impossible to look at the spirit which animated them, and not feel sure that whatever was false would drop away, while that which was good in their teaching would be permanent. If, therefore, any rigid English Unitarian thought that England had a claim for indirect damages which these Radicals had caused, and that American Unitarians ought to have watched their religious ports, and not allow such men as Frothingham, well armed and equipped for many an inroad upon hostile armies, to have gone out; if they said that Samuel Johnson and Abbot, and other such men, ought to have been kept at home, and even Mr. Conway, he, for his part, greatly as he differed from these men, regarded the high seas of God as open to every one. Let all men have their sail across them, and let no claim for indirect damages be made in consequence." (Applause.)

There is something irresistibly funny in this oblique comparison. Perhaps we ought to feel grateful to Mr. Martineau for the liberality which thus forbears to bring in a big bill for indirect damages against American Unitarians on our account. That, however, would have been distressingly unfair to them. They might have "watched their religious ports" till doomsday; but they could not have "kept us at home," unless they had first established some show of authority for meddling with our movements. We neither skulked out of port like the Alabama, nor yet took out sailing-papers at the Unitarian custom-house. On the contrary, we minded our own business, and the Unitarians minded theirs. If THE INDEX is indeed a religious Alabama, the Unitarians at least are not responsible for its ravages. Mr. Martineau evidently made his allusion in a sportive mood; yet it shows how, even unconsciously to themselves, the most liberal of Christians think of all thorough radicals as somehow belonging in the same category with rebels and pirates.

To "B. E. J."—The remark about "illegible scrawls," in THE INDEX for June 15, was not intended for you, as your letter was not illegible, but was immediately suggested by a complaint sent us because we did not publish an article so badly and faintly written in pencil that we gave up in despair the attempt to read it. No person should send to an editor, whose time is necessarily precious, any manuscript that cannot be readily deciphered. When almost every moment is required for work that must be done promptly, excuses are no substitute for legibility. "If it is uncivil to send such letters," you say, "it is equally so not to read them." If you had our work to do, you would think quite otherwise. Such neglect is simply a necessity of self-preservation. We are willing to spend and be spent, but not in the cause of other people's laziness. Your letter is quite friendly in tone, and we thank you for taking so good-humoredly a whipping by no means intended for your back. It is too bad that the innocent should always suffer for the guilty!

In some of the copies of our last issue the saying of Professor Newman quoted at the bottom of p. 190 was erroneously printed. It should have read—"Peace without justice is not peace, but a truce of war." The compositor's substitution of "justice" for "peace" in the sixth word was not discovered till quite a number of copies had been struck off.

Our attempts to accommodate all our contributors are as abortive as those of a candidate for Congress who should endeavor to seat a torchlight procession on a three-legged stool, a trunk, and a coal-scuttle.

ENGLISH UNITARIANISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The Unitarians have lately been celebrating their anniversaries, and the various sermons and speeches delivered on the occasion are very instructive. Nothing is more certain than that the body as a church is rapidly following in the steps of all other churches in the world. It shows its vitality by the very divergence of opinion among its members and ministers. There are two or three strongly marked sections already engaged in a friendly antagonism; and it is worthy of notice that hitherto the acrimony so commonly exhibited by theological disputants is nowhere to be found in the speeches to which I have referred. Those who regard Christ from that peculiarly illogical position called Arianism, and those who hold to the humanitarian views of Theodore Parker, alike recognize each other as lawful and honest ministers of the same church. There is of course a deep undercurrent of vexation on the part of the more Orthodox, that such a rejection of the old Unitarian views should have been proclaimed from Unitarian pulpits; but there is no abuse, no cruel insinuation, no declaration of war in consequence.

I feel the greatest pleasure in calling attention to this feature among the present generation of Unitarians, because it is a rare thing in the history of the churches.

But I observe with almost equal pleasure that the new view of the nature of Christ is spreading fast and widely among the Unitarians. Theodore Parker is no longer a dreaded or suspected name. Ministers do not hesitate to express their sorrow that he was ever exposed to annoyance or persecution at the hands of Unitarians. It is very significant too, that, so well known as my own views were, they did not prevent my being invited to preach in Unitarian pulpits many more times than I was able to accept.

In almost every instance, I found a small minority who complained that I went too far; the majority were entirely on my side.

I was present at a meeting not long ago, in which two speakers, Unitarian ministers, declared again and again that there could be no religion without Christ, without a personal relation to him (whatever that may mean). Being permitted to reply to this, I protested against it as contrary to fact, saying that for five and twenty years I had been a religious man, in the sense of having an abiding confidence in my Creator, a grateful love towards him, and a perfect repose in his good purposes; that all those years I had never named the name of Christ in my private prayers, never once turned to him as to a superhuman being, much less as to a God, for help in trouble or guidance in duty; that God alone had been my refuge and my faithful friend in a life of many cares, anxieties and distresses; that I had lived without Christ, and I would die without Christ.

I will not pretend to say that no one present was shocked. I feel sure that three or four at most, out of about sixteen who were present, were pained by what I said; but the faces of many of the rest showed that I had been speaking for them as well as for myself, and that the day would soon arrive, through the decay of the old foundations of New Testament authority, when God alone will be recognized as the true, invisible, but ever-present friend of man; and the world will wonder that we ever needed the help of any departed saint or hero to supplement his own.

But this is the question of the day—the question which is to divide all Christendom into two great armies—"What think ye of Christ?" And for my part, without wishing to wound tender feelings, I shall nevertheless be ready, whenever I am challenged, to give a plain, straightforward answer: Jesus Christ was only a man, albeit a very noble man; he is not in any sense the author or the finisher of my faith; he is of no use whatever to me in my theology or my devotions. My theology I have learned for myself; and into my devotions no human name shall ever dare to intrude—no human face shall ever cast its shadow between me and my God.

No doubt this great plainness of speech drives some away who might have been retained by a compromise. But at what cost hereafter? Sooner or later this vital question must have come to the front, and then the rupture and the schism would be only ten times more violent and ruinous.

I hope you will not think the time has been wasted in giving my impressions about the Unitarians in England. In America you are surrounded by them too, and this chance-shot of mine may fan into a flame the smouldering sparks of the great controversy.

When Christ has ceased to be regarded as essential to religious life, he will fall back into his proper rank among the most illustrious of our departed brethren.

I am, sir,

Very truly yours,

CAMDEN HOUSE,
Dulwich, June 1, 1872.

JOSEPH MAZZINI.

The friends of the Religion of Humanity should know something of its high priests; and of one of the chief among them, Joseph Mazzini, they may now know something authentic through the book just published by Hurd & Houghton, of New York. The volume consists of an autobiography containing an account of his public career, and his aims, purposes, beliefs and principles, as bearing thereon. This is preceded by an interesting introduction by Wm. Lloyd Garrison, who knew him, and who gives a sincere report of the impressions that personal intercourse made on his mind; and it is followed by a concluding chapter by the editor, presenting the wonderful Italian in his personal aspect and in his more familiar social relations. A portrait in photograph adds the one thing needful to a very simple but very complete picture of one of the most extraordinary men of the century—a picture certainly not exaggerated or over-colored, and therefore the more trustworthy.

Mazzini was in all respects a unique and singularly interesting man; but the aspect of him that should chiefly attract the readers of THE INDEX is that of the religious believer and reformer. Religious reform was with him the basis of all reform. His faith was first of all in the principles of religion. He was primarily a man of aspiration and faith; a splendid idealist; free, bold, lofty in his disdain of spiritual authority, from that of the pope to that of the preacher; a proud defier of sectarian insolence, but a meek and enthusiastic worshipper of intellectual principles. The one thing he could not tolerate was selfishness, individualism, low-mindedness, moral indifference and scepticism, sordidness of aim and narrowness of spirit, to which he gave the comprehensive name of materialism. The passage of his biography in which, lonely, poor, baffled, an exile, he solemnly reviews his philosophy, and judges his own soul in the presence of his martyred friends whose shades stand around him as witnesses, is one of the most affecting in literature. Then he rebuilds his entire edifice of moral philosophy.

"The ancient religion of India had defined life as contemplation; and hence the inertia, the immobility and submerging of self in God, of the Aryan families. Christianity had defined life as expiation; and hence earthly sorrows were regarded as trials to be endured with resignation, even with gladness, and without any duty of struggling against them. Hence the earth was viewed as an abode of suffering, and the emancipation of the soul was to be achieved through indifference and contempt for earthly things. The materialism of the eighteenth century has gone back two thousand years to repeat the pagan definition of life as a search after happiness; and hence the spirit of egotism it instilled into the souls of men under various disguises; hence the setting up of material interests above principles." "Every instinct of my soul rebelled against that fatal and ignoble definition of life." "The religious idea is the very breath of humanity—its life, soul, conscience and manifestation. Humanity only exists in the consciousness of its origin and the presentiment of its destiny." Mazzini was a theist, but in the finest spiritual sense. He saw God manifest in humanity alone. "From the idea of God I descended to the conception of progress; from the conception of progress to a true conception of life, to faith in a mission and its logical consequence—duty the supreme rule of life; and having reached that faith, I swore to myself that nothing in this world should again make me doubt or forsake it." He believed in the "immortality of life, and in a progressive series of existences, which, in the eyes of the believer, transforms our sufferings here into the trials and difficulties of one who ascends a steep mountain at the summit of which is God."

These are very noble words, and the best of all is that they were backed by one of the purest, bravest, most consecrated lives of which we have record. Mazzini was a brilliant example of what a believer in the religion of humanity, a genuine "Free Religionist" of the extreme description, may become and may accomplish. The faith of the Romanist could not be more explicit or more ardent, the spiritual freedom of the Progressive Friend could not be more absolute. Such testimonies are precious. When the ancient religion points to its long line of saints and challenges the rationalist and the radical to show anything like them, it is encouraging and consoling to point to such instances of heroism and consecration as this.

O. B. F.

RELIGION AND MORALITY.

II.

In an article in THE INDEX last week I noted the fact, that all the great religious faiths of mankind, in their highest and purest teaching, have declared morality to be a vital and necessary part of religion. Yet it is a fact quite as universal that, when religious faith has been organized into institutions and has developed a history, there has been a strong tendency to a practical separation of religion from morality. Religion has come popularly to be connected with beliefs and ceremonies rather than with matters of justice and mercy. No historical religion has escaped this peril. The very exigencies of an instituted religion develop a tendency towards the substitution of formalistic service for virtuous deeds, ritual for reality, noisy demonstrations of emotions and pious professions of belief for the harder tests of true aspiration and true living. Evidence need hardly be adduced for this statement. The history of every religion is full of the evidence. That very teaching of the great prophets and sages quoted in the article last week is proof of the wide-spread danger. In Christendom nothing is more common than to find the religious sentiment apparently active, but satisfying itself with ecclesiastical confessions and observances, without seeming to stimulate to a higher virtue in every day life. Sometimes the separation becomes painfully sad, as when in the excitement of a "revival" season the emotional part of religion may become very demonstrative, and at the same time conscience so weak as not to forbid gross immoralities.

On account of this state of things, and since it is admitted, in accordance with the best teaching of all faiths, that there can be no true religion without morality, many excellent people ask, Why make a distinction between the religious sentiment and the moral sentiment? Or, if there be a distinction, is there anything in the religious sentiment, when it is developed by itself apart from morality, that is worthy of preservation? Is religion separated from ethics anything but a mass of bigotry and superstition? At least, if it be admitted that practical virtue is such an essential part of religion as to be its best evidence and fruit, is it not better, saying nothing of the culture of the religious sentiment, to work directly for this practical result of moral goodness?

Now there is a truth implied in these questions which ought to be recognized in the institutions and practical efforts of religion. But at the same time it can hardly be admitted that a correct philosophy of human nature or of religious history will absolutely identify religion with morality, and, much less, confound the religious sentiment with the moral sentiment. Nor, however much of bigotry and superstition has been developed from the religious sentiment, does it seem probable that such a philosophy will pronounce the religious sentiment itself at its root to be false and worthless. Religion, in its true significance, necessarily includes and covers morality, yet is more than morality. The ethical sentiment is one of the vital elements of the religious sentiment, but the religious sentiment has other constituent elements, of which the ethical sentiment knows nothing. The ethical sentiment may be defined as man's consciousness of obligation to serve the right; and morality is the conduct that results from acting upon this sense of obligation. But religion is something more than this. Matthew Arnold says—"Religion is morality suffused with emotion." This indicates the distinction, but does not seem wholly adequate. No definition of religion, I think, will satisfy the philosophy of the subject which does not in some way denote the contact which the finite mind has with the sustaining and vitalizing Energy of the universe. It is not necessary that the definition should embrace the idea of a personal Deity; not necessary that it should attempt the impossible problem, which most theological systems do attempt, of defining the Infinite; but in order to cover all the facts of religious history and experience, it must in some way recognize the Infinite,—in other words, that the human soul is conscious of a life that is not bounded by any limits which itself can measure, but opens outward into the whole infinity of things and is a natural, inherent part of the universal order. The religious sentiment may be defined as man's feeling of his connection with the Infinite Life and Order,—not necessarily in any supernatural way, but by the organic laws of his being. And religion may be defined as the effort of man to bring his own life into harmony with what he conceives to be the law of this higher and larger Life of which he is a part.

In this statement of man's connection with a sphere of things outside of himself, nothing is intended to be implied which reason will not recognize, though it may not fully comprehend, and of which science might not take account, though it may not yet understand the whole process. The fact of man's organic connection with the sphere of the universe and the feeling of the fact—a sphere of life, as it were, within a larger sphere and related to that larger sphere at every point—will not be denied. Yet it is evident that the religious sentiment, when thus defined, is not a simple but a composite sentiment. There enter into it several elements,—as the sense of truth, the sense of right and goodness, the sense of beauty, order, perfection, the sense of causality bringing that wondering inquiry with which the human mind has always searched into the primal source and permanent sustenance of things and into man's relation thereto. Without adopting the view that these ideas are innate or assuming any theory as to their origin, it is certain that through them the human mind finds itself confessing allegiance to a law of mental and moral life that is not of its own creation and not bounded by the sphere of its own existence,—just as the human body is connected by organic law with the outer material universe. These ideas and perceptions man learns to interpret as indicating the purpose and law of the Infinite Life of which he is a part. And when he yields himself to them in a joyful endeavor not only to attain the highest and purest good for himself but to serve the universal end, then he becomes religious. Rational religion—to adopt a thought floating in my mind from Emerson, which I do not remember so as to quote exactly—is to do by intelligent choice what the plants and stones do by their structure: it is to furnish a channel, an organism, through which the ceaseless, eternal Energy may work to its end.

But these perceptions are accompanied by emotions, which also enter as essential elements into the religious sentiment,—as the emotions of reverence, of wonder, of awe, of aspiration, of expectancy, of hope and fear, of solicitude and joy. It is impossible that these perceptions whereby we peer out of our little sphere of existence into the world's infinity and are put into relations with things that are illimitable, these perceptions that necessarily stretch back to the sources of all mental and material power, and downwards or upwards to the primal cause of things, should not be attended by such emotions. And these emotions will vary in intensity and manner of combination according as one or another of the perceptions may be in excess or deficiency, or, in general, according to their culture. And from the union of the perceptions and accompanying emotions, variously combined, and moulded by the intelligence and culture of a people, come the various theologies, mythologies, beliefs and ceremonies of instituted religion.

Two or three other thoughts connected with the aspects of the subject here considered must be left till another number.

W. J. P.

Gruffly acknowledging the receipt of some INDEX Tracts, Zion's Herald, of Boston, whose editor has been promoted to a Bishopric by the late Methodist General Conference, explodes as follows:—"As neither Mr. Abbot nor his precious INDEX would ever be heard of half a mile from home, unless quoted and commented on by the Evangelical journals, we simply inform that gentleman that Zion's Herald does not advertise for nothing, and then only what it approves." Considering that the editor of the Herald had just previously sent to THE INDEX for review a copy of his "Life of Father Taylor," which we did "advertise for nothing," we conclude the new Bishop has the manners of a wild boar. We knew already that he had the theology of a tame one.

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

PRACTICAL HORSESHOEING, by G. Fleming, F.R.G.S. D. Appleton & Co., 1873. This little treatise of about one hundred pages received the first prize for the best essay on the subject, offered in July, 1869, by the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The award was made by high authorities in veterinary science; and such attention as we have been able to bestow upon it satisfies us that it will be a very useful book to all who have the care of horses and wish to treat them with humanity.—For sale by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

PASSAGES FROM THE FRENCH AND ITALIAN NOTE-BOOKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, published by James R. Osgood & Co., Boston, 1873. These are charming volumes, as would be expected by every one who has ever tasted the fine flavor of Hawthorne's style. They are full of fresh impressions of art and artists—not only the old, but the new, which are discussed about in a very modest and unpretentious manner, and yet so as to create no little confidence in the critic's natural good taste. Many Americans known to fame, such as Powers, Story, Miss Hosmer (whose name it is easy to read under the blank put in place of the letters that might just as well have been used), and many foreigners of distinction, such as the Brownings, Miss Bremer, Mrs. Jameson, and others, figure in Mr. Hawthorne's pages, and are sketched so vividly that the reader will long retain remembrance of their features and personalities. The artist's eye and hand appear also in the delightful little descriptions of incidents and adventures that befell the traveller, as for instance in the following passage (Vol. I, p. 188):—"I sat down on a bench near one of the chapels, and a woman immediately came up to me to beg. I at first refused, but she knelt down by my side,—instead of praying to the saint, prayed to me; and being thus treated as a canonized personage, I thought it incumbent on me to be gracious to the extent of half a pail. My wife, some time ago, came in contact with a pickpocket at the entrance of a church; and, falling in his enterprise upon her purse, he passed in, dipped his thieving fingers in the holy water, and paid his devotions at an shrine. Missing his purse, he said his prayers, in the hope, perhaps, that the saint would send him better luck another time." Could any indignant denunciation be half so effective as this humorous and satirical narrative, in exposing the hollowness of all religion that is divorced from morality? The same point is also illustrated elsewhere, as follows (vol. II, p. 33):—"As one instance of the little influence the religion of the Italians has upon their morals, he [Mr. Powers, the sculptor,] told a story of one of his servants, who desired leave to set up a small shrine of the Virgin in their room—a cheap print, or bas-relief, or image, such as are sold everywhere at the shops—and to burn a lamp before it; she engaging, of course, to supply the oil at her own expense. By and by her oil-lamp appeared to possess a remarkable property of replenishing itself, and Mr. Powers took measures to ascertain where the oil came from. It turned out that the servant had all the time been stealing the oil from them, and keeping up her daily sacrifice and worship to the Virgin by this constant theft." The reflective tone of Mr. Hawthorne's mind, and the delicacy and refinement of his genius, betray themselves on almost every one of these fascinating pages, and make these two volumes not only minister to momentary amusement, but also to permanent instruction and a fine culture of mind and heart. No man lives in vain who leaves behind him such pure and noble writings to perpetuate his influence. To read these note-books of Hawthorne is like straying beside his own loved Concord River. The quiet beauty of his thought and style fully justifies Longfellow's fine tribute to his genius:—

"Ah! who shall lift that wand of magic power,
And the lost clow regain?
The unfinished window in Aladdin's tower
Unfinished must remain."

—Price $4.00 for the two volumes; sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

CHRIST IN MODERN LIFE (D. Appleton & Co.), is written by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, who will be remembered by many as the friend and biographer of F. W. Robertson, one of the noblest and (during his lifetime) least appreciated men that ever occupied an English pulpit. This book contains twenty-seven sermons by Mr. Brooke, who is "Honorary Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen;" and it shows that the English Church is not yet depleted of earnest thought and generous sentiment. There is a great deal in these discourses to command the respect and sympathy of the freest minds of the age; and while we cannot be blind to the limitations of his horizon, and his consequent failure to understand much that he dares to denounce, we yet bear cheerful witness to the general elevation of his spirit, the honorable frequency of his outbreaks of true liberality, the fine-grained character of his thought, the charm of his rhetoric, and the virile force with which he seeks to solve the great problems of human life and destiny. For instance (page 77), he rejoices in being "freed from the dreadful burden of condemning the Theist and unchristianizing the Unitarian." But there is a limit to the liberality of this progressive Churchman, as there is and must be to that of every Christian, however liberal:—"Mankind will bear a great deal, but it will not long bear the denial of a God of love, the attempt to throw away the hope of being perfect and our divine faith in immortality. These things are more precious than all physical discoveries. The efforts made to rob us of them, when they are made, and they are but rarely made, are not to be patiently endured. They are far less tolerable than the ill-advised attempts of Christian men to dominate over science. These latter efforts are absurd, but the former are degrading to human nature" (page 28). With all seriousness we say that the world will have to "bear the denial of a God of love," so long as it sees nothing but "thievery" and "robbery" in the men who do deny him. It is this very intolerance and bitter injustice which makes men deny him. Far as we are from sympathizing with the denial itself, we yet see that the one-sidedness of the honest denier of God (and there is no presumption whatever against his honesty) is a far less evil to "endure" than the narrowness and bigotry that dare to stigmatize him as a "thief" and a "robber." Mr. Brooke has yet much to learn, of the tone and temper of those whom he characterizes as "infidels." The general position assumed in this volume is that Christianity is not a system,—is indeed incompatible with system; that it is a vital force in the world, ever creating systems and ever outgrowing them. Mr. Brooke directly identifies Christianity with "the life of a perfect man" (page 8); and this life he supposes to embody all that is or ever will be needful to supply the religious wants of the race. In the doctrine of the Incarnation of Christ, therefore, he finds the essence of Christianity; and he straightway proceeds, notwithstanding his protest against system, to make one of his own, and to defend "the natural development of the great religious ideas from the doctrine of the Incarnation" (page 79). So futile and insane it is for any thinker to attempt to dispense with system! The whole pretence of getting rid of system is simply a confession of mental bewilderment—a positive inability to grasp the many as one, or to comprehend the intricate relationships which bind all truths into a harmonious whole. And the moment the mind begins to think, it sees these relationships and begins to—systemize! This is what Mr. Brooke has done. But his synthesis is practically valueless, because his prior analysis is the same; and instead of getting rid logically of the worst dogmas of Christian theology, he has to fling them overboard by an act of violence, in defiance of all logic. In short, his book is one more of the uncounted failures to reconcile Christianity with modern thought; and while we admire most heartily a great deal that it contains, and conceive a high idea of the writer's manliness and love of truth, we find no approximation, even, to a successful reconciliation of the two.—Sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

TO "A. C."

1. "Not a word of logic." The article replied to by myself was but a catalogue of assertions. Hence the aforesaid charge lies as much against the "Impeachment" as against my reply. Besides, when a man makes an unsupported statement, it is "logical" to deny and challenge proof. [Mr. Howard thinks otherwise when the Bible makes such statements.—Ed.]

2. "A sneer in brackets—that is all." I beg leave to inform Mr. "A. C." that very important and significant facts can be stated in "brackets."

3. "That is all." Indeed! Mr. Abbot, I regret to notice, doubtless unintentionally, omitted several brief rebutting statements, which give one important portion of the article reviewed the appearance of having received no attention. But if "A. C." will please traverse ever so small a portion of my article, even as published, and "show the folly of it"—indicate its utter lack of logic and reason, I shall be extremely obliged to him.

R. H. HOWARD.

MILFORD, MASS., June 11, 1873.

[We were not aware of any omissions in Mr. Howard's article, as reprinted in THE INDEX. If he will specify them, we will cheerfully make amends for the compositor's carelessness by publishing them. It was our intention to give the article entire.—Ed.]

DEATH-BEDS.

BETHEL COLLEGE,
PALMYRA, MO., June 17, 1873.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I cannot afford to give you $100.00 as Mr. Eastman of our town has done; but now answer me candidly and honestly a query or two,—I hardly expect any answer in THE INDEX, for you will feel I am right and you are wrong.

Did Atheism, Spiritualism, or Infidelity ever shut up a grog-shop, or restore to her friends a fallen woman, or cheer a dying bed?

I know that Christianity has accomplished all these results. Can you or Mr. Frothingham give me anything better to take its place? If you can, let me know what it is, and how it can rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory. You may blind and befool the living; but to the dying nothing is more precious than "Christ Jesus and him crucified."

Respectfully,

ROBERT H. WALKER, M.A.

[Men do humane deeds in proportion to the amount and energy of their practical humanity; and this is independent of their "Atheism," "Spiritualism," "Infidelity"—or "Christianity." To no theological opinions whatever do we attribute the actual good they do. Relatively to their numbers, Atheists, Spiritualists, and Infidels do quite as much good as Christians, so far as our observation goes.

As to the influence of theological opinions in "cheering dying beds," we have had no large experience; but what we have had convinces us that Free Religion is the best death-bed friend, because it is the best friend of intelligence, virtue and happiness during life. We consider it a great deal "better" than Christianity in its influence on individual character and social welfare, because it aims directly rather than indirectly at these. Whatever makes men and women noblest as individuals, best fits them to die with dignity and peaceful composure; and we pity any one who has no higher object in life than to die with a "hallelujah" on his lips. That religion is worse than useless which makes the last few hours of life more important than its threescore years and ten.

What we consider as "better" than "Jesus Christ and him crucified," and how we believe it will "rob death of its sting," Mr. Walker can easily find out, if he chooses, by reading THE INDEX with a candid mind. A free and enlightened intellect, a pure conscience, a loving heart, and the memory of a faithful life, are worth more than all the "faith" in Christendom.—Ed.]

"MORE LIGHT."

258 W. 25TH ST., NEW YORK, JUNE 11, 1872.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I like your little paper for its radicalism, and bid you God-speed in a very necessary work; but allow me to say that there are some things that you have not searched out, and others that have not been revealed to you.

Though Herod slew all the babies "in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof," yet he did not extinguish the light then shining; and though the world's conservators from that day to this have sought to repress truths in their early dawn upon the race by a wholesale slaughter of innocents, yet by some good providence their purposes have failed, and the light still shines.

Now permit me kindly to add—do not attempt to repress this light, not one ray of it. It is all needed. If Spiritualism is not a truth to you, yet it is to me and to ten thousand other minds—a reality as potential as the sun-light, accumulating intensity day by day. More is being done to unfetter men from their religious thralldom by this new instrumentality than all others combined.

Do not "fight against God," nor contend with the inevitable.

"More light!"

Sincerely yours,

L. H. WATERS.

CLAIRVOYANCE.

282 MAIN ST., CINCINNATI, JUNE 17, 1872.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Sir,—You say that "the hypothesis of Spiritualism is a legitimate one, provided the phenomena can be proved to have an extra-human origin." Aside from the question of their truthfulness, what could be made out of the following facts? Could anything be predicated upon them looking towards the establishment of spiritual existences? The very faint hope that something good might come from presenting them to your consideration would not have induced me to trouble you, were it not for the great (I may say inexhaustible, though almost hopeless) desire I have that Spiritualism should prove true.

One word more before I proceed with the facts. I am exactly in accordance with you and Professor Tyndall on this whole subject, except that possibly we may differ as to your hypothesis above quoted, though I think not. I have experienced again and again just such treatment as the Professor relates; but mark well—I never met with any difficulty while Spiritualism was in the embryonic state under the name of clairvoyance, mesmerism, magnetism, biology, etc. I have not been able to establish any new facts since it passed this stage and took on the more startling title of Spiritualism.

Imagine yourself, if you please, in my place. I wrapped up three printed words in three separate papers, four thicknesses each—no one knowing the contents but myself. A clairvoyant read them as freely and correctly as though she had had the papers open before her natural eyes.

A deceased relative was described as follows:—"I see a tall, stout, healthy-looking female of middle age; stands straight and firm; blue eyes; fine brown hair; eye-brows moderately arched; the hair rather thin; forehead high; nose straight and rather long; mouth of medium size; the lips rather thin and pale; chin and whole face longer than usual; complexion fair; cheeks a little fresh but not ruddy." After a half-minute's pause, she added:—"I see a little child—a boy." This description was precisely, in every single particular, as it would have been had the deceased been alive and standing before us.

Now what can you make of such facts? "Not true?" "Only one more added to the thousands afloat?" Well, that is just the way it would fall upon my ear from a stranger's lips or pen, though I might think never so well of his honesty of character and convictions. Only he is credulous—marvellously credulous—that's all! So I will not ask you to believe; belief on hearsay evidence as to supernaturals! It would not be respectful to a true scientist or philosophic mind. He would say—"Why ask me to believe on secondary evidence while ocular and auricular demonstration can be made to me, as you say it has been to you?"

I will not ask you just now to believe the facts above stated; that is not now my object. But I will ask you and all persons concerned to suppose (if you can) these facts established beyond all controversy; what should be inferred from them? How accounted for? What explanation? Do they afford any evidence, and if so, of how much weight, as to the existence of disembodied spirits?

Upon the supposition of the truth of the facts, then, it would seem that the clairvoyant must have had an image in her mind such as she so exactly described. Her language and whole manner corresponded to this hypothesis. "I see—I see a little child—a boy!" If she had a picture in her mind, how did she obtain it? There was no such person or body in existence—no sitter, dead or alive, to paint from or take likeness from. If she spoke without such picture, what then? Were her lips moved by superhuman power? Can any logical inference be drawn thence for or against the existence of spirits? Can such facts be said to have a human origin?

Is it to be admitted that some human beings can perceive material objects, not merely while such objects are still in being, but after they have been dissolved and gone back to earth?

Very respectfully yours,

E. W.

THE GENEALOGY OF JESUS.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Not long since, in reading the first chapter of Matthew's Gospel, I discovered that the two statements made by Matthew in reference to the lineage of Jesus are contradictory. I can hardly think it possible that they have not been noticed and perhaps harmonized by Biblical commentators, still I have never seen them referred to as contradictory. What I allude to is the genealogy of Jesus which affirms that he was the son of David, and the assertion that he was begotten of the Holy Ghost.

The chapter begins as follows:—"The Book of the generations of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham"—and continues giving a genealogical account from Abraham through David down to Joseph (the husband of Mary) and Jesus.

Now Matthew asserts that Jesus was the son of David, and produces as evidence the names of the descendants of David down to Jesus, and then says concerning his birth that it was in this wise:—"When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost." Then further on he says:—"And he (Joseph) knew her not until she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name Jesus." As Matthew does not rest the relationship of Jesus to David either upon Mary or the Holy Ghost, but upon Joseph, one of these two statements must be false.

If Jesus was conceived and brought forth before Mary knew Joseph, how then can he be the son of David? If the genealogy is true, then the assertion that Mary conceived and brought forth Jesus before she and Joseph came together, cannot be true.

Then again, if certain prophecies were fulfilled by a "Righteous Branch being reared to David" in the birth of Jesus (see Jer. xxv), how can the Jesus who was conceived by the Holy Ghost be the Jesus whose birth fulfilled these prophecies?

Yours truly,

HENRY APTHORP.

ASHTABULA, O., April 14, 1872.

AN UNBELIEVER'S BELIEF.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., May 30, 1872.

EDITOR OF INDEX:

Yesterday a friend passed me, for perusal, THE INDEX, and to-day your "Impeachment of Christianity." From youth up I have been an unbeliever (so-called); and being raised by strictly pious and consistently Christian parents, I have always felt the "cramping" power of religious creeds. My unbelief (in the doctrine of divine revelation) was put down to the score of hard-headed contrariness, even by those who thought as I did but didn't have the pluck to say so. I believe Christianity has done good, at least to some. If not, a sudden change from bad to good is sometimes injurious; and hence, although to some I would give my views, yet I never attempt to argue the point with old and consistent Christians, believing that, if they are happy in their present faith, it is best that they should not be undisturbed. If self-respect is one of the chief foundations of peace and order (and I argue it is), why, let us never attempt to make any one feel less happy or less regard for his own judgment by deriding his particular opinion. I would amend the above by the proviso—"unless they tread on my toes." Although Christianity may have done some good, yet I am of those who believe it to be a worn-out system, and, like all other effete systems, soon to give way to more independent thought—to a more enlightened judgment. Now, holding the belief I do, I am exceedingly rejoiced to find some who are ready to speak up for the silent millions who look from "Nature up to Nature's God."

My particular belief is—

1. In one true and only God, the creator and controller of all things—the causa causarum, the causa finalis, a Being "without variableness or shadow of a turn," but doing everything rightly and for the good of all.

2. Whatever is, is right.

3. In Nature as God's Bible, read and understood by all nations and tongues if let alone by creed-worshippers.

4. That all things present and to come are just as God intends and daily superintends, and that consequently "there is a destiny that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will."

5. That our belief in an over-ruling Providence is not inconsistent with a man's endeavors to earn a decent living in an honest way; and besides, that Jesus never taught that he was the Son of God any more than all men are sons of God.

6. "He is happy that knoweth the causes of things."

7. That none knoweth all the causes here, and hence no one is ever happy; but that the time will come when we shall all know the causes and all be happy.

8. That true religion will not be found until all the causes are known, because, until we know God thoroughly, we shall not rightly adore him; and to be truly religious, we must rightly adore him.

Yours, etc.,

B. JEWETT.

SELF-RESPECT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is a chronic habit of mankind to disparage themselves. Whether this low-esteeming-of-self spirit is inborn, or whether it can be traced to the influence of the Biblical fable of Eden, I know not. Be that as it may, an actual, morbid propensity of that sort exists. Preachers ceaselessly proclaim man's debasement, and poor listening humanity enwraps itself in the robe of false humility. The results of this habit, however, since it tends to eliminate self-respect, to breed despair, to paralyze effort and thus to clog the wheels of progress, must be disastrous. For there is no elevation apart from the courage which springs from the thought of a higher than all past possibilities.

Bearing the above in mind, we see why men have been so weakly zealous to exalt and worship an unsullied character. A man hopelessly bemired fancies his better-favored fellows to be on a plane to himself inaccessible. The spark of manhood, however, is unquenchable, and can readily be fanned into a salutary flame. On proper stimulus many a son of degradation has risen from the slough of despond, to win fair laurels of integrity and fame. There lies in human nature a possibility of improvement beyond our boldest dreams. The Orthodox elevate their Head to the viceroyalty of the universe; and Jesus may have been perfect and stainless. Is he therefore heaven-high above his fellow-men? No. Whatever obscure significance of divinity he may have possessed, the level of his manhood is attainable by man. Did right ideas prevail, all would behold in Christ perhaps the grandest production hitherto, though not necessarily the grandest of the destined productions of humanity. Though he spoke and acted as none other ever spoke and acted, this is explicable by the fact, that he was a glorious, yet natural outgrowth of the race; worthy of earnest emulation, yet liable to be equalled. To dignify him as an example, it is not needful to ascribe to him super-human virtues. Far more effectual would be his influence were men taught that by striving they might compass his attainments, than if forever urged to adore him as a being of infinite powers. His was indeed a high-lowering greatness. But who may rightfully specify the limits of human development, or designate the earth-born partakers of Godhood?

As there are singular examples of great gifts in many departments of life—a Shakespeare among dramatists, a Newton among men of science, so among the founders of religions, by an inevitable analogy, a genius must arise, a sort of religious King Saul, overtopping his compeers by a head and shoulders. Perfection in the system of such a teacher would be expected, even as the works of most great masters are elaborate and flawless. If the world defies the Hebrew Christ, why does it ignore the celestial claims of Milton, or of Mozart? If unusual excellence deserves apotheosis, the lists of fame but poorly recognize the deserts of illustrious names. All honor to Jesus which the sublimity of his character may evoke from a rational mind. But let us not so scorn the endowments of humanity, as to deem its worthiest exponent the fit recipient of that homage due only to God.

T. W.

Moncure D. Conway gives the following account in the New York World of a Communist, a woman, who was recently shot in Paris. Mr. Conway vouches for the truth of the touching story:—

During the Commune an eminent surgeon in Paris, who had no sympathy with it, employed himself in aiding the wounded who were brought to his hospital. His chief assistant was a woman—a Communist—who, day and night, nursed the wounded, and was the most valuable assistant the surgeon had. When the Commune fell, the surgeon was arrested and marched to the drum-head court-martial. He supposed he would be shot. As he approached the door of the tribunal, he met his late female assistant coming out between two soldiers. "Why, Adèle!" he exclaimed, "how came you here?" The woman fixed hard eyes on him, and said—"I don't know you, sir." The surgeon concluded that his case must indeed be hopeless, as this woman declined to acknowledge his acquaintance. Nevertheless, he got off somehow, and then learned that at the moment when Adèle said—"I don't know you, sir," she was on her way to be shot, and was shot. For fear of prejudicing his case she had repressed any disposition to cry to him for aid—she had denied herself the last word of sympathy proffered on her way to death!—Nat. Standard.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PA-PERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christ-ianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition).

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testament. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no abler, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Fall of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies
Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution? "Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution?" By Rev. ARTHUR
B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies
One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—
Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHING-HAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents;
Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies, Five Cents;
Twelve copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, *The Bible Argument Against Woman
Suffrage*, and Answered from a Bible Standpoint, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents;
Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address, S. H. MORSE,
128-17 25 BROMFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPHLET,
ARCHITECTS,
78 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[130-131]

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE

Presents a higher and more progressive type of literature and more sensible views of life and its needs than any other literary publication in this country.

The ADVENT HERALD, of Boston, says of it:—"At last we have a Ladies' Magazine we can cordially recommend to our readers. It is a sensible Woman's Magazine."

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS JULY FIRST.

Those who subscribe before August get Six Numbers
Free. THE LADIES' OWN is a Progressive, Literary, home-build and Fashion Monthly of 48 pages, printed on book paper and beautifully illustrated. Terms $1.20 a year.

AGENTS WANTED.—Large Cash Commissions Paid.
Samples 10 cts. M. CORA BLAND,
[130-132] Editor and Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound.
But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON,
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
P. H. BATESON,
A. E. MACOMBER,

President.
Vice President.
Secretary.
Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA K. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONE, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

D. R. LOCKE,	Toledo,	O.,	Twenty Shares,	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER,	"	"	Fifteen	1,500
C. CONE,	"	"	"	1,000
EDWARD BISSELL,	"	"	Forty	4,000
F. E. ABBOT,	"	"	Ten	1,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY,	"	"	"	1,000
GEORGE MARX,	"	"	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON,	"	"	"	1,000
E. P. BASSETT,	"	"	Three	300
H. E. HOWE,	"	"	"	300
W. C. FISK,	"	"	"	300
J. M. RITCHIE,	"	"	"	300
V. KERR,	"	"	"	300
ALANSON WOOD,	"	"	"	300
WILLIAM KEARSE,	"	"	Five	500
J. G. HOLSWAITE,	"	"	One	100
JOS. E. MARX,	"	"	"	100
C. ACHARD,	"	"	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS,	New York,	N. Y.,	Thirty	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON,	Newport,	R. I.,	Two	200
ALICE COCHRAN,	Franklin,	Pa.,	Five	500
GEORGE HOADLEY,	Cincinnati,	O.,	Two	200
"	Defiance,	"	One	100
MRS. A. HALL,	Northampton,	Mass.,	"	100
G. N. JENNINGS,	Tonica,	Ill.,	"	100
J. SEDGWICK,	Painesville,	O.,	"	100
CARL POST,	Monroe,	Mich.,	Three	300
HENRY MILLER,	Sacramento,	Cal.,	Five	500
L. E. SUNDERLAND,	Quincy,	Mass.,	"	100
J. L. WHITING,	Croydon,	N. H.,	"	100
LOUIS BRISTOL,	Olathe,	Kan.,	"	100
J. E. SUTTON,	"	"	"	100
SAM. T. DUBREE,	"	"	"	100
J. M. HADLEY,	"	"	"	100
S. L. HILL,	Florence,	Mass.,	Ten	1,000
W. H. SPENCER,	Haverhill,	"	Two	200
JON. F. BARNETT,	Boston,	"	"	200
E. W. WAIS,	La Grange,	Ind.,	"	200
"	Boston,	Mass.,	Five	500
FRANK PRATHER,	Wellsville,	Kan.,	One	100
E. F. DIMSKORE,	New York,	N. Y.,	Two	200
J. T. DICKINSON,	Middlefield,	Ch.,	Fourteen	1,400
W. J. POTTER,	New Bedford,	Mass.,	Three	300
G. C. GLATTE,	Kendallville,	Ind.,	"	300
W. C. GARNETT,	Boston,	Mass.,	"	300
MRS. M. C. PARKIN,	"	"	One	100
MRS. S. EMERSON,	Dover,	N. H.,	"	100
W. H. DOWNS,	Birmingham,	Ch.,	"	100
B. B. SMITH,	Lansing,	Mich.,	"	100
R. B. SMITH,	Warren,	Pa.,	"	100
W. C. RUSSEL,	Ithaca,	N. Y.,	"	100
W. CLARKE,	Toledo,	O.,	Three	300
C. L. SMITH,	"	"	One	100
J. N. LYMAN,	Cincinnati,	"	Twenty	2,000
L. G. FELCH,	Monroe Centre,	"	One	100
A. FOLLOE,	Boston,	Mass.,	Three	300
L. O. BASS,	Colebrook,	Conn.,	One	100
E. E. SEWALL,	Boston,	Mass.,	Five	500
ELIZA WRIGHT,	"	"	"	500
R. B. WARD,	Detroit,	Mich.,	Twenty	2,000
A. D. WILT,	Dayton,	O.,	One	100
S. S. BOWER,	Keokuk,	Iowa,	"	100
WM. JONES,	Peekskill,	N. Y.,	"	100
"	Oskaloosa,	Iowa,	"	100
S. H. DANE,	Dover,	N. H.,	"	100
J. H. YORK,	"	"	"	100
JOS. BAYES,	"	"	"	100
G. P. FOLSON,	"	"	"	100
"A FRIEND,"	"	"	"	100
MRS. H. E. PERKINS,	"	"	Two	200
O.	Boston,	Mass.,	One	100
WILLIAM GREEN,	Orange,	N. J.,	"	100
"A FRIEND,"	Lowell,	Mass.,	"	100
D. B. STREKON,	Brattleboro,	Vt.,	"	100
MRS. F. W. CHRISTEN,	New York,	N. Y.,	"	100
C. W. FARGOT,	Kelley's Island,	O.,	Two	200
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphia,	Pa.,	One	100
MRS. LUCRETIA MOTT,	"	"	"	100
MRS. M. A. WRIGHT,	Jersey City,	N. J.,	"	100
A. S. BROWN,	Worcester,	Mass.,	"	100
EDWIN BROWN,	"	"	"	100
R. F. HALLWELL,	Boston,	"	Five	500
BENJ. BODMAN,	New Bedford,	"	Three	300
H. B. CLARKE,	"	"	"	300
FRANK J. SCOTT,	Toledo,	O.,	Ten	1,000
M. L. HOLBROOK,	Houlton,	Me.,	One	100
W. H. BOUGHTON,	New York,	N. Y.,	"	100
"	"	"	"	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON,	"	"	Two	200
B. G. BUNKETT,	Webster,	Mass.,	"	200
J. E. FOLLETT,	Winona,	Minn.,	One	100
JOS. WARRASSE,	Newton,	N. J.,	"	100
"	Franklin,	Pa.,	"	100
T. M. LAMB,	Worcester,	Mass.,	"	100
W. H. DYKE,	Palmer da Chien, Wis.,	"	"	100
W. H. SPALDING,	Duluth,	Minn.,	"	100
LOUIS BELMONT,	Philadelphia,	Pa.,	Two	200
LEWIS KURTZ,	Augusta,	Kan.,	One	100
SAM'L WARRASSE,	La Fayette,	N. J.,	"	100
W. L. RAYNE,	Amesbury,	Mass.,	"	100
W. E. EMERSON,	Boston,	"	"	100
C. H. HORSCH,	Dover,	N. H.,	Two	200
MRS. I. THOMSON,	"	"	One	100
BENJ. H. BALLOWELL,	Sandy Spring,	Pa.,	"	100
MRS. M. R. VAN RENSSELAER,	N. Y. City,	"	"	100
R. B. STONE,	Warren,	Mass.,	"	100
WM. ROTCH,	Fall River,	Mass.,	Two	200
MRS.	New Bedford,	Mass.,	Five	500
J. WHITAKER,	Kerbonkton,	N. Y.,	One	100
S. H. ROPER,	Boston Highlands,	Mass.,	Two	200
MRS. R. D. FRANCIS,	New York,	N. Y.,	One	100
CH. S. BLOOM,	C. Salem,	O.,	"	100
G. H. BRIGGS,	Amesbury,	Mass.,	Two	200
J. T. CLARKSON,	"	"	"	200
C. W. NEWTON,	Castleton,	Ill.,	One	100
HENRY KIERZ,	Toledo,	O.,	Two	200
OTTO KIERZ,	"	"	One	100
H. G. NEUBERT,	"	"	Two	200
A. HUNERT,	"	"	"	200
"	"	"	One	100
"	Detroit,	Mich.,	"	100
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.,	Toledo,	O.,	Thirty	3,000
T. K. PECK,	Westminster,	Ch.,	Two	200
				$20,000

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 28 Vesey
Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial
Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS
of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Branson, Mich.
[131cwtw]

AGENTS WANTED for "JESUS." By Charles F.
Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationally proved. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address U. S. PUB-LISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis.
117-139.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 50 Cents; Both, 80 Cents.

Address CHAS. E. WHIPPLE,
[13-38] 19 PINEKNY ST., BOSTON.

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy.

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents.
Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $5.00.
Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,
110-161cwtw. Box 2888, St. Louis, Mo.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1300 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It calls to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufacture, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 238 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[136-151.]

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $2.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JULY 6, 1872.

WHOLE NO. 132

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name and initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARNOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS, BROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WERTWORTH, BUCKINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. GIBBERT, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONTEGUE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Jesus and the Future Life.

A SERMON BY THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, PREACHED AT ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LONDON, DECEMBER 10, 1871.

"Then said one unto him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And he said unto them, Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able."

LUKE xiii. 28, 30.

Two branches of our inquiry remain now to be examined—namely, what did Jesus teach concerning the future life, and what did he teach about the devil? I will endeavor to reply to both of these questions this morning.

I shall not be sorry to close for the present a discussion on which I could not enter without reluctance, and which I could not pursue without pain. If people think there is any amusement or gratification to be derived from making an attack on the most cherished belief of one's countrymen, it is because they have never been called upon to discharge a duty so repugnant. There are numbers of really excellent, kind-hearted, and intelligent persons—far removed indeed from the extravagant superstitions of Orthodoxy—who yet retain opinions or sentiments about Jesus which are utterly unsupported by the facts of his history. The name "Christ" has been associated in their minds, from earliest childhood, with all that is purest and most beautiful in human nature; it has been the synonym for moral perfection and the finest spiritual insight. The pity is not that people should have had such an ideal to dwell upon and admire, but that it should have been associated with an historical personage like Jesus, whose biographies represent him as being far from perfect either in wisdom or humanity. Jesus may or may not have been morally perfect—no one can possibly decide such a question now with anything like certainty; but what tells most heavily against the theory of his perfection is the fact that the very records of his life, character, and sayings prove that he was imperfect. These, when examined, dispel the illusion, and leave us convinced that they afford no ground for it whatever. It has been asked, Why disturb this graceful, this harmless belief in an ideal Christ? My answer is, because it is not harmless, because its attractiveness is only a garment hiding a falsehood, because it does really decoy our hearts' love and adoration from a still higher and more legitimate object of our contemplation. It comes between us and God; it leads us to think more of the creature than of the Creator; and, in any case, if it be untenable, if Jesus were not really or nearly perfect man, it must do harm to believe a falsehood. He either was this perfect man or he was not. If he was, let us have the grounds for believing it; let the true outlines of that perfection be also constantly set before us, for our imitation. But if he was not perfect, if he really had human infirmity, was guilty of human faults, or failed anywhere in human duty, let us, in the name of God and truth, know that also; let us, at all cost of sentiment and feeling, get at the truth of things if we can, and bravely cast from us the idol which we have ignorantly cherished, trusting God to compensate our hearts for their bitterest loss, and being very sure that whatever sacrifice we make for the truth's sake we are making for him, and in the very act of self-surrender we are enriching and elevating our souls.

To turn now to our more immediate subject, I find that in the first three Gospels there is a great deal of confusion of thought on the subject of the Future Life. We have first the proclamation of the Kingdom of God, or Kingdom of Heaven, many of the features of which are grossly materialistic, and were evidently intended as literal representations of an earthly condition. In some of the parables, e.g., that of the leaven and the three measures of meal, and the grain of mustard-seed, it would seem that the kingdom was to be begun then and there in the lifetime of Jesus and his followers, and to be gradually spread over all the world. But in other and plainer teachings of Jesus, it was not to be inaugurated till after his death and his return to glory. Even then, the twelve apostles (including Judas and excluding Paul and Matthias, I suppose) were to sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

Then, again, we find quite another view of the kingdom. It was to be a purely spiritual one; they who enter into it were "neither to marry nor to be given in marriage, but were to be as the angels of God." The saints were to rise from the earth, i. e., from some spot in Syria, and to meet the Lord in the air, while the dead were to come forth out of their graves, with their bodies, and assemble for the final judgment.

The whole subject is such a hopeless tangle, that we can only infer from the recorded sayings of Jesus two leading ideas, namely, that he taught that there was a life beyond the grave, and that there would be a bodily resurrection. Science has, of course, disposed of the latter theory as impossible and even absurd. No scientific light has yet been thrown on the future life, in which, nevertheless, we entirely believe, and which we hope for on grounds never hinted at by Jesus. We gather further, from two passages, that Jesus believed in an existence apart from the body. The last words to the thief on the cross, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," and the parable of the rich man and Lazarus show that Jesus recognized the continued existence of a soul or spirit between the death and the supposed resurrection of the body.

All this is profoundly uninteresting and utterly valueless. I only allude to it because I could not well ignore it under this division. All the interest of this subject turns upon what Jesus taught about the ultimate destiny of mankind. And this, I fear, we shall find very unsatisfactory, and very strongly supporting the darkest features of Orthodox belief. My text sums up the opinion of Jesus in the most emphatic way. One came and said to him, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" No new question, alas! on the lips of men weighed down by the memory of the past, the burden of the present, and the omens of the future. Some poor tender soul who had been living, perhaps, among very degraded people, or who had guilty sons and daughters, and for whom the thought of eternal woe sat like a nightmare upon his spirit—one who had, perhaps, been scared by a flash from the bottomless pit, and who trembled at the peril of standing on its brink, hoping against hope that he might be rescued among the crowd that were no better, no worse, than himself—"Lord, are there few that be saved?"—Can it be true that only a few out of these miserable dupes who have been brought into the world of sin and temptation without being asked whether they would accept the awful risk or not,—can it be true that only a few of all these will escape the impending doom? And Jesus answered in words still more dismal and perplexing, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." A very curious reason, indeed, for striving at all. I do not speak for others, but for myself I should call this the most discouraging answer that could possibly be given. The natural rejoinder would rise to my lips, "What is the use of striving, then, if some, nay, many, who seek to enter in, will not be able? What an inexpressibly infamous thing it seems, that those who want to be saved shall not be saved! I would rather take my chance with the crowd than strive on such conditions."

These words of Jesus are followed by one of those allegories in which he frequently indulged, in order to describe the utter hopelessness of the condition of the condemned. In the same strain he describes Abraham speaking to the rich man in hell: "Besides all this, there is a great gulf fixed, so that they who would pass from us to you cannot, neither can they pass to us who would come from thence." Not a gleam of hope is left after the sentence is pronounced. Three times in the 35th chapter of Matthew is this awful picture of final condemnation put before us, and in many other places as well. We cannot, on this point, censure Orthodox people for not following the teachings of the master. They are fully justified by the sayings of Jesus, over and over again, for teaching that only few will be saved, and that for the large majority of men and women there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, and everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

But mark what is taking place around us at this moment. Even the Orthodox have begun to shudder at this cardinal doctrine of their belief, and so some among them have risen up to try to prove that the Bible does not teach everlasting punishment; that the words of Jesus do not convey that idea, although he says, in answer to the question, "Are there few that be saved?" "Many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able;" although he says that he will say on the judgment seat, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

What will not people do and say to save their idols? When it was fairly established that the earth was moving round the sun, then the priests discovered all at once that the Bible never said that it did not. When it was discovered that the world was many, many long cycles in assuming its present aspect, the priests suddenly discovered that the Bible did not say the world was made in six days. And now that the doctrine of everlasting punishment for the majority of our race is utterly disbelieved, the priests are discovering that the Bible never sanctioned any such awful doctrine.

My friends, let me urge it upon you as a duty: do not spare these shifting, shuffling advocates of Christianity when you can effectually expose them. It is an absolute duty binding upon us as men and brethren, to show up these wretched attempts to sustain and uphold a tottering idol. No doubt the next thing we shall hear of is, that Jesus did not believe in the existence of a Devil, or his angels, as this too is a belief that is beginning to die.

And this brings us to our second question.

It is generally known and acknowledged that the source from whence the Jews derived their belief in the Devil was Persia; and that all allusions to the devil in their historical books were either interpolations by some post-Babylonian editor, or that they prove the late composition of the books in which they occur. The Book of Job, e.g., is a poem which opens with a colloquy between Ormuzd and Ahri-man, or Jehovah and Satan, in which they are represented as speaking to each other almost on equal terms. In the First Book of Chronicles an act is ascribed to Satan which in the Second Book of Samuel had been ascribed to Jehovah.

This dualism or the personification of the Powers of Good and Evil, as rival Deities, was quite a foreign element in the Jewish theology, and was, as I said, the result of their contact with the Babylonians. After the captivity it spread very much, and demonology was at its triumph in the days of Jesus of Nazareth. The story of his temptation in the wilderness was either a pure fabrication, or reported from his own lips, because no one but himself was present at the scene. If the story came originally from him, we want no further evidence that he shared in the delusion of the age about the personality of Satan. But you can hardly find a case of his curing diseases, excepting leprosy, in which the disease is not attributed to some devil, not merely to the agency of a Satan, but to the actual possession of men and women by evil spirits. These occasions, too, often gave rise to angry discussions between Jesus and the Pharisees, in which it is invariably represented that Jesus shared the common belief of his time. He speaks of a woman who had a natural disease as having been "bound eighteen years" by Satan. He constantly rebukes the evil spirits, and casts them out of their unhappy victims, and when they are about to confess that he is the Messiah, he suffers not the devils to speak, but commands them to hold their peace. On one occasion he pretends to send a whole legion of devils into a herd of swine, the property of a Gentile tribe on the shores of Genesareth, upon which the inhabitants very naturally besought him to depart out of their coasts. He speaks of Satan's Kingdom being divided against itself. He recognizes Beelzebub as being the prince of the devils, and distinguishes one sort of devil from another by saying, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

Finally there is the collection of passages already quoted about the "everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels," which express most painfully his own conviction that men were exposed to the constant evil influence of unseen spirits, who tempted them to sin, and afflicted them with bodily pain, and who were destined in consequence to everlasting torment as soon as the Kingdom of Christ should be established. Of course one is not surprised to find his own followers, Peter, James, and John, in their Epistles, taking up the same terrible strain, "Your adversary, the devil, goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour."

It may be asked why this belief in a devil should be made the subject of censure in treating of the teachings of Jesus. I would answer, because the belief in a devil or devils implies not only the limitation of God's power and rule in the world, but that He has a formidable rival in the person of Satan, who has disturbed all the Divine plans, and with whom the Almighty is in perpetual warfare, but who will at length so triumph over God's goodness, as to wrest from him ninety nine out of every hundred of the family of man, and to drag them down with him into everlasting sin and woe.

This belief in a devil makes God's empire ghastly, chaotic, and his sovereignty nearly contemptible. It establishes a conviction of the ultimate triumph of evil over good, quite as dishonoring to God as open blasphemy. It reduces men and women to the miserable condition of irresponsible beings, who are little better than the pawns and puppets in a drama of inconceivable horror and duration, in which we may have just one chance in one hundred of escaping endless perdition.

But there are higher grounds still for rejecting this belief, and it would be well if not only the Orthodox, but also many heretics and atheists, would consider and examine them. The belief in a devil arose out of a false estimate of the sufferings and ills of this life. When the atheist says he denies God because a good God would not allow any suffering to take place in his empire, he is taking the same ground precisely as those who attribute all our suffering to the devil. It is extremely short-sighted in us to pronounce such a verdict upon human and other suffering, among other reasons because we have not seen and cannot see how things will end; and this folly is further aggravated when we have already unmistakable proofs that some sufferings are productive of so much good as to make the appointment of them perfectly justifiable, and that some of the highest virtues known to man could never have had birth without suffering and even sin. I conceive then that I am fully justified in saying that the teaching of Jesus was signally defective and erroneous on this point; that he misconceived entirely the nature and purport of human sufferings, and that, in attributing these to the devil, he to that extent undermined the very faith in a loving and omnipotent Father which at other times he so eloquently taught. Moreover, when he went still further and taught not only that few were to be saved, but also that many would seek to enter the Kingdom of Heaven and yet would not be able, he contradicted deeply and irremediably the highest teachings of his own Sermon on the Mount, and drowned the little faith which his simple words had inspired in a flood of horrible and hopeless despair.

It was, I believe, chiefly because he was no parent himself and had not warm affections as a son that he absolutely failed to enter into all the comfort and tenderness and universal security which is pledged to us in that blessed name "Our Father in Heaven." Had he known more of fatherhood on earth, he would never have found room in his Father's boundless realms either for the devil and his angels, or for the unspeakable horrors of an everlasting fire into which not only fiends, but all their wretched victims among mankind would be mercilessly hurled.

But his gracious words, "Our Father in Heaven, hallowed be thy name," still live; and many and many a generation will pass away before all the sweetness, and hope, and bliss which they convey have died out of them.

We too will take up his Gospel of a Father's love to an infantile and struggling world, but will enrich it with our own deeper insight and wider experience, thanking God more and more for all the discipline and sorrow of life through which we learn our highest lessons of hope, and trust, and love.

The Postal Record says that during the last year there were sent to the Dead Letter office nearly three million letters. Sixty-eight thousand of these letters could not be forwarded owing to the carelessness of the writers omitting to give the county or State; four hundred thousand failed to be sent because the writers forgot to put on stamps, and over three thousand letters were put in the Post-office without any address whatever. In the letters above named was found over $92,000 in cash, drafts, checks, &c., to the value of $3,000,000. There were 39,089 photographs contained in the above letters. Of course nearly all the money and valuables were returned to the owners, but much needless delay, many charges of dishonesty, &c., might have been saved if the writers of the letters could have been a little more careful, and taken the precaution to see that their letters were in a mailable condition before depositing them in the Post-office. It is more than probable that nine-tenths of all the complaints, losses and delays which are laid to the Post-office Department are in reality due to the carelessness of their writers.

LIBERALISM VERSUS THE FORMS OF CHRISTIANITY.

BY NORWOOD DAMON.

(The following was the opening Essay at "The People's Sunday Free Discussion Meeting" at Hospitaler Hall, Boston, Mass., May 26th, 1872, on this resolution:—"Resolved, That Liberalism so-called is better than any form of Christianity.")

By "Liberalism" in the Resolution I understand "Free Religion" as supposed to be entertained and promulgated by Francis E. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX, and his coadjutors,—a body that seems tending towards crystallization, though still nebulous as compared with the old pole-star Catholicism, or even the lesser lights of modern religious constellations. What, then, is "Free Religion," and how is it proved better than any form of Christianity?

God's first revelation to man is found in himself, in his reason. This is the touchstone that tests all other revelations as acids test gold. This man applies to prophet, priest, seer, Messiah, and sacred book, or he knows nothing of them at all.

If unenlightened, his reason cannot serve him well; if grossly ignorant, scarcely at all,—he knows nothing and has no data even for belief. If he gives adhesion to a creed or sect, he draws a bow at a venture. If honest, he selects what seems to him most reasonable—what he hopes is saving truth. If dishonest, he chooses from caprice or what he thinks will subserve some present selfish end.

If enlightened, he is more assured. Some things he assumes to know, more he believes, and much more he hopes. His reason acts intelligently on evidence. If honest and conscientious, he chooses, with a view to truth and righteousness, the highest good of all, willing to abide all present sacrifices or crosses involved in the choice. If dishonest, he belittles and belies his reason, libels his real judgment, scorns and sears his conscience, for some paltry craving beneath his manhood's dignity; and all this because of a strange anomaly in his composition through which consciously, deliberately, voluntarily, he sometimes puts evil for good, does the unjust and unclean thing, and thus by his own act and choice constitutes himself a sinner.

Genuine "Free Religion," as I apprehend it, is strict fidelity to reason, God's first revelation to man,—strict fidelity in its exercise to the behests of conscience; and what reason decides, conscience always commands to obey.

One comes to you and says,—"Sir, the Pope is God's vicegerent, the link that couples heaven with earth; he and he only has for you God's infallible word. Accept him and be saved; reject him and you are lost."

Your reason (cultivated or uncultivated, it matters not which as regards this point) instantly steps to the front—you could not check it if you would—and inquires, "Is this statement true?" It uses what evidence it can command, and answers, if possible, yes or no. If it cannot decide, there can be no decision, and you can intelligently neither accept nor reject. If reason decide, the true "Free Religionist" accepts and obeys the verdict as an act of sacred duty. So of the Bible; if it cannot be certified as the Word of God to my reason, it is no Word of God to me; if it can, it is. And so of every other thing or proposition, let it lead where it may.

Behind all other real or supposed revelations, then, stands REASON, trying to tell us if they are true; and if she cannot tell us, nothing can. We cannot help respecting what she says, whether we live up to it or not, for she never is dishonest, though she may be mistaken. How important, then, that we cultivate and strengthen a faculty upon which almost our entire welfare depends!

If even God's spirit makes a man believe, it is by convincing his reason. If truth will show itself to the earnest seeker, it must bring the satisfactory proofs and lay them at the feet of reason. The reason only has convictions and power to believe; if not convinced, there can be no belief,—if convinced, and we must believe, we cannot doubt.

Belief is not an arbitrary act of the will. No man can will to believe and so cause belief, or will not to believe and thus prevent belief. You may will till doomsday to believe that the moon is made of green cheese, yet never get faith enough to take it at the market value. You may will not to believe that Dr. Shurtleff was ever Mayor of Boston, and yet forever have a lingering doubt if he has not had practice somehow with the city. The reason must have its pound of evidence, or there can be no decision; it is so nominated in the bond, and the real "Free Religionist" does not dispute the bond.

Measured by the above standard, how small a fraction of humanity is possessed of "Free Religion!"

Israelites indeed without guile are "like angels' visits, few and far between"—if that be the correct rendering of the poet. Men that follow truth when it brings darkness, woe, false estimation, crucifixes hope and even life—follow as cheerfully, as unflinchingly as when it brings the prelate's purple and the crowd's huzzas—where shall we find them? No wonder that the marvellous Nazarene graced his mark so deep on the ages that time nor eternity can wash it out.

What are the instincts that presume to desecrate reason's throne and take charge of our religion? Their name is legion. Narrow selfishness, groveling prejudices, morbid stubbornness, local discords, sectional animosities, personal enmities, antipathies and feuds. "He goes to that church—so I go to this, I will run down his choir, silence his organ, smash his chandelier, ridicule his minister and his dogmas, empty and desecrate his pews, and bring him down so low that everybody shall trade with me—come to my shop. My office, my church shall be the rage, and sweep all before them."

Avarice, of the earth earthy, the almighty dollar, business interests, political ambition, sectarian zeal, bigotry,—these all feel quite interested in the subject of religion, and often obtain at least a "hope,"—whether of salvation or of taking some one in, I will not say.

Sheer imbecility or cowardice brings in her contribution and does her little utmost. There must be stamina and persistence to resist pernicious doctrines that put forth the claims of centuries—perhaps in behalf of some divine ambassador who never made such pretensions for himself. The irresolute falter at the sound of battle, and capitulate unconditionally to the nearest or most powerful church.

Then comes indifference, want of all proper consciousness or appreciation of the subject. Ask a handsome, well-dressed youth, with cigar just extinguished, hurrying into the Church of the Unity,—"Why are you a Unitarian?" If candid, the chances are that he will say,—"Father is a Unitarian, owns a pew here; our folks were always Unitarians." Ask another—and he likes the organ and the choir, or the minister has a good voice and he likes to see him handle himself in the pulpit. Ask a third,—"Why, my girl goes there, Flora McFlimsey." "Yes, but what are the doctrines?" "Oh, I don't know nor care; I never trouble myself about such things. Schernerhorn or Hepworth can probably tell you; though I don't know about Hepworth, now that he has turned Orthodox. We always go to this meeting, and that's all I know or care about it."

How many young people would improve upon these replies, either in civility or intelligence, if you were to visit other sects and churches?

True, some self-opinionated ancient file might attempt to explain to you old Adam's fall, and death, and the restitution and rejuvenation through the new Adam. But you would see at a glance that he was only showing you an heirloom given him by his grandpapa, and that he was speaking his piece precisely as trained to it by that venerable relative.

The truth is that ninety-nine one-hundredths of your "religious people" are like the gray idolaters of Athens in the days of St. Paul. No intelligent man believed in it, but everybody gave way before it, for it was the immemorial fashion and custom, the dominant fixture-institution of the land; it must be submitted to; it was the only way to keep the peace and make things comfortable and tolerable.

But higher instincts join the train, become officious, and yet have no business on reason's throne.

I have intimated that heir-looms are sacred. Men love the old paths in which their fathers trod, meander where they may. There is fascination in the scenery and the associations; the imagination and feelings are aroused and enchanted, while sorrowing reason stands aside and uncertain impulse sways the sceptre.

Many a weary pilgrim still takes on his pack, filled with creeds, articles of faith, essential doctrines, forms, platforms, decrees of synods and councils, customary observances, usual services, time-honored ceremonies, rituals, rosaries, crucifixes, missals, allocutions, primers, prayer-books, psalm-books, catechisms, commentaries, annotations, expositions, marginals, bibles,—and a hundred promiscuous sacred articles, some of some value, but mostly rubbish,—a fearful load! Many a devoted pilgrim shoulders a burden such as this, and day after day sweats and journeys on for heaven, although he has seen the new celestial railroad, with free passes, through trains, and every accommodation except for baggage—and knows that it directly crosses his path, and that he has but to jump on, and in a twinkling begin to see the snowy sparkle of angels' wings, hear the annunciations echoes through the eternal archway, and be preparing for the flood of noontide glory that awaits to burst upon him the instant he emerges in the city of the golden streets. Yet he will not lay his burden down, or even look at the depot, nor stop one moment at the crossing.

Ab, how men's affections, like ivy on a ruined wall, cling to what their aires held dear! So our pilgrim travels and struggles on and on, now sleeping by a solitary desert-grave under the lonely stars, and now in ancient cities within cathedral walls.

He treads those dim religious aisles as in the bush of another world. A solitary sunbeam, pale and holy, like a golden harp-string, stretches across the transept and unites the nave and choir; peripatetic martyrs and apostles shrouded in particolored halos stand out and gaze at him from the chancel windows. From above the altar Christ and Moses and Elias look down upon him from the Mount of Transfiguration; beneath him sleep the cloistered dead, while high above among the starred vaults, columns and architraves, his eye wanders in a restless endeavor to find the local habitation of the infinite "I AM." Surely, to him, "This is none other than the house of God, and this the gate of heaven."

And when again he takes up his burden and resumes his weary way; when spire and dome have faded in the distance, the highest turret sunk away, and the great cathedral tower and bell are seen and heard no more,—Christ and the apostles, Moses, Elias and the Martyrs, and the divine sunbeam, still journey with him, cheer and inspire his heart, light up his pathway through the wilderness, and point him to the saint's immortal rest.

We have seen an infinite variety of things that should not—both ignoble and noble—urp the throne of reason, and make and mould our religion, and why so little religious liberty is found in all our sects.

But how is it with the alleged special interpreters and defenders of "Free Religion" to-day—Mr. Abbot and his friends?

That they write and say excellent things cannot be denied. Doubtless they utter foolish things also. But they certainly give the fullest scope to reason and conscience—their perfect freedom—and they extend fraternity and fellowship to men wholly irrespective of their beliefs.

This is what no "form of Christianity" does—no present form, unless we consider "Free Religion" itself a form of Christianity. Your reason may judge and decide with perfect independence and impunity so long as it harmonizes with the creed and form; but the moment it differs, you are church-mauled, or excommunicated, or, if a Unitarian, you lose caste to some extent at least, which amounts to about the same thing. No eccentricities of faith or action are voluntarily permitted. If the Orthodox had been strong enough to feel that it was safe to do it, Henry Ward Beecher would have been excommunicated long ago, with all others that kick in harness.

On the other hand, while denying Jesus the right of paternity to his best principles and rejecting his name, the "Free Religionists" practically adopt these very principles as their rule of life. Is not this a little squeamish and hypocritical? Why not take the name as well as the game, and not let Calvinistic pervers monopolize it until it becomes a by-word and a hissing? To-day it is a power to conjure by; why thriftlessly throw away such power?

Jesus, it seems to me, was as true a "Free Religionist" as ever lived. Does not Mr. Abbot imply as much when he says—"As a preacher of purely spiritual truth, Jesus probably stands at the head of all the great religious teachers of the past?" And who excels him in the present? Why not, then, let the great principles which he made so lucid sit go by his name? Why rob him of his laurels because others were less gracefully before his day?

I must conclude that true "Liberalism," or "Free Religion," is better, much better than any of the existing forms or systems of Christianity, because they are forms, systems and little else, and all put trammels on every disciple; while "Liberalism" gives liberty, "the glorious liberty of the sons of God."

Unless religion is in a true sense free, it is not religion; it is a mockery, a picnic fraud, rather a most impious fraud, the worst of slavery embalmed and perpetuated in the odor of sanctity, thus doubly damned, and made ten-fold more the child of hell than it was before.

"Liberalism" is better than the "forms" because it looks to and saves the substance of the good things that came out of Nazareth; while winnowing out the chaff, it saves the wheat. It tears away the scaffolding, clears out the rubbish, breaks the shackles and lets the fluttering soul go free, on lofty pens to mount to Paradise, and drink with Jesus and the angels personally of the river "that flows fast by the throne of God."

LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Mr. L. S. McCoy, Secretary of the "First Free Religious Society of St. Louis," has favored us with a copy of the Constitution and By-Laws of that Society, which we publish for the benefit of the numerous correspondents who have made inquiries concerning the best form of local free religious organization. These articles are in the main exceedingly judicious, and very faithfully embody the principles of the free religious movement:—

CONSTITUTION OF THE FIRST FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY, OF ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

"The world is my country—to do good my religion."

ARTICLE 1.—Name.

The name of this Society is, "The First Free Religious Society of St. Louis, Mo."

ARTICLE 2.—Corporation.

This Society is organized under the Statutes of Missouri pertaining to religious societies.

ARTICLE 3.—Object.

The object of this Society is to promote the search for, and discussion of, the nature, origin, duty and destiny of man, so far especially as they are related to his happiness as a moral, intellectual, rational and spiritual being.

ARTICLE 4.—Belief.

Any member of this Society shall not, as such, be held on any account responsible to the organization for either his belief, unbelief or conduct; and it shall be the duty of the Society to secure to each and every member, or person having the floor, a courteous, full and free presentation of his views, upon any topic under consideration. But any member may be held to account for unparliamentary language or conduct had in its presence.

ARTICLE 5.—Membership.

The members organizing this Society shall determine upon the amount which each member shall pay, as an organization fee, for dues for the first year of their membership. Any person may subsequently become a member by signing this Constitution, or by written request, authorizing the same. But a fee, as per by-laws, shall be paid annually, except as provided in organizing the Society, by each member, to entitle such member to vote in the business of the Society: Provided, that the Society may, by a vote, authorize the vote of all persons in any of its assemblies to be taken upon other than business matters.

ARTICLE 6.—Officers.

Section 1. The officers of this Society shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Board of Trustees, who shall be elected yearly, and who shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and installed; having the powers, duties and liabilities usually incident to such officers, in corporate bodies, except so far as the same may be modified by this Constitution, or by vote of the Society.

Sec. 2. The Board of Trustees shall consist of the President and Secretary elect, and three others, not officers, elected from the members of the Society, who shall make all the necessary arrangements for the meetings of the Society, and have charge of its business. And it shall be the duty of the Board of Trustees, at least once in each six months, to make a full report in writing of the financial expenditures, and condition of the Society. Three of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

ARTICLE 7.—Withdrawals.

Any member may withdraw from this Society, terminating all subsequently incurred liabilities of the same, by giving one week's notice, in writing, to the Secretary, of his or her intention, and, if indebted to the Society for dues or otherwise, by settling such indebtedness; on compliance with the foregoing, any such member may terminate his membership by erasing his name from the roll of members appended to this Constitution, noting (or if he neglect to note, the Secretary shall enter) upon the roll the date of such erasure.

ARTICLE 8.—Amendments.

This Constitution may be amended at any regular meeting of the Society: Provided, that two months' notice shall have been first given, that such amendment would be moved, and a copy of the same then deposited with the Secretary. But no amendment shall be made which shall in any manner impair the object of the Society, as set forth in the third Article, or subject any member, as such, to answer for either his belief, unbelief or conduct, as set forth and modified in the fourth Article, nor to alter this Article, as related to said Articles three and four of this Constitution, except by the unanimous vote of all the voting members of this Society.

The above Constitution, as amended, was read and adopted at a regular meeting of the members of "The First Free Religious Society of St. Louis, Missouri," held at Avenue Hall, on the 5th day of May, 1873.

L. S. McCoy, Sec'y.

OFFICERS:—HORACE FOX, President; ISAAC COOK, Vice President; L. S. McCoy, Secretary; S. Gallion, Treasurer; B. G. Hall, Mrs. A. M. Fox, H. C. O'Brien, Trustees from Society.

BY-LAWS OF THE FIRST FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

ARTICLE 1.—Regular Meetings.

1. Any regular Sunday Meeting of this Society shall be competent to transact business, if a quorum of voting members be present.

2. Ten voting members constitute a quorum. But a less number may adjourn from time to time.

3. The Society may adjourn a business meeting until any definite time, when it will not conflict with the Constitution and By-Laws.

ARTICLE 2.—Meetings of Board of Trustees.

The business meetings of the Board of Trustees shall be at least once in each month, (the first Sunday in each month, if not otherwise provided for), at such time of day and place as may be determined upon by a majority of the Board. And such meeting shall be open to all members of the Society.

ARTICLE 3.—Election of Officers.

1. The Officers of this Society shall be elected on the first Sunday of March of each year. But the Society may, by vote, or, if not then holding regular meetings, the Board of Trustees may, by proper notice, adjourn such election for four weeks, but no longer.

2. Elections for President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Trustees shall be by ballot, a majority of the votes cast being necessary to elect.

3. In case of the vacation of an office in this Society, by death or otherwise, an election for such office, for the unexpired term, may be had at any regular meeting of the Society, after one week's notice, given by the Society or the Board of Trustees, one week previous to election, in the daily papers of the city, if the Society be not holding regular meetings once in each week.

ARTICLE 4.—Removals.

Any officer may be removed from his office in this Society, by impeachment, for any act incompatible with his duty in such office, if two-thirds of the voting members present concur. The accused shall be furnished by the Secretary with a copy of the charges against him, at least one week previous to trial.

ARTICLE 5.—Expiration of Office.

At the expiration of his term of office, each officer shall turn over all books, paper, money, or property of the Society in his hands, to his successor.

ARTICLE 6.—Money.

1. Members of this Society shall subscribe and pay to the Secretary of the same the amounts they may feel able to pay annually, which amounts may be paid on time, but not longer than by quarterly instalments. But a payment of one dollar per annum shall be necessary to entitle a member to vote.

2. All moneys subscribed for the purposes of this Society, shall be considered as a promissory note, and subject to collection the same—the assurance of public meetings in behalf of free religious investigation being the consideration for the same.

3. Members may make deposits of money with the Treasurer, for special purposes, upon which the Society cannot draw for any other purposes, without the consent of the depositor.

4. No money shall be pledged from any regular fund of the Society for any purpose until such amount is in the hands of the Treasurer.

5. No appropriation of funds of this Society shall be made for a greater amount than ten dollars, unless the Society is out of debt.

6. The debts of the Society shall be paid in the order in which they fall due.

7. No speaker shall be employed until the amount of compensation agreed on shall have been collected and paid into the treasury.

ARTICLE 7.—Secretary.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep accurate minutes of the proceedings of the Society; to receive and receipt for all moneys coming to the same, turning them over immediately to the Treasurer, taking his receipt therefor.

ARTICLE 8.—Treasurer.

The Treasurer shall receive and receipt for all moneys of the Society coming into his hands from any quarter, and shall enter the amount, date and source of each sum, in a book kept for such purpose; and shall pay out no moneys except upon the order of the Society, or the Board of Trustees, when duly authorized, and such order shall be signed by the President and countersigned by the Secretary.

ARTICLE 9.—Report of Trustees.

The Board of Trustees shall report in writing, once in each month, the financial expenditures, receipts, and condition of the Society: Provided, the Society meet so often as once a month; otherwise, they shall report at each meeting, unless by vote the same be postponed.

ARTICLE 10.—Books.

The books of the Society shall be open at all times to the inspection of the Board of Trustees, or any member thereof; and to the whole Society at any time that it shall by a vote so decide.

ARTICLE 11.—Called Meetings.

If the Society be not holding meetings as often as once a month, any five voting members, by one week's notice in two daily newspapers of the city, may call a regular meeting for the transaction of such business as shall not conflict with the Constitution or By-Laws.

ARTICLE 12.—Notices.

All notices, not otherwise provided for by the Society, for its meetings, shall be made by the President (if the Society is not holding meetings at least once in two weeks), in at least two daily newspapers of the city.

ARTICLE 13.—Bond of Treasurer.

The Board of Trustees may at any time require bond of the Treasurer, with security for double the amount of funds on hand in the treasury.

ARTICLE 14.—Disentitled Members.

Any person not a resident of St. Louis or vicinity may become a member of this Society by indicating his desire in writing to the Secretary, who shall enroll his name. And a fee of one dollar per annum, as in other cases, shall entitle such member to a vote.

ARTICLE 15.—Rules of Debate.

1. No person at any one meeting shall be allowed to speak more than twice on any one question in debate, nor longer than ten minutes the first, and five minutes the last time, unless the Society, by vote or consent, waive the rule.

2. In all other cases in which the Society does not especially provide otherwise, business meetings and debates shall follow Cushing's Manual, but all rules of debate may be waived by vote of the Society, at any meeting, for that time.

ARTICLE 16.—Order of Business.

The following shall be the Order of Business of this Society, in the absence of any other order of business adopted for a meeting:—

1. President in the chair.
2. Calling roll of officers.
3. Reading minutes of previous meetings.
4. Receiving reports of Committees.
5. Bills and accounts.
6. Unfinished business.
7. New business.
8. Signing the Constitution by new members.
9. Return of Receipts by Secretary.
10. Adjournment.

ARTICLE 17.—Amendments.

These By-Laws may be amended by a majority vote, at any regular meeting of the Society: But at least one month's notice shall be first given that such amendment will be moved, and a copy of the proposition, at the time, deposited with the Secretary.

The above code of By-Laws, as amended, was read and adopted at a regular meeting of the members of "The First Free Religious Society of St. Louis, Missouri," held at Avenue Hall, on the 9th day of July, 1873.

L. S. McCoy, Secretary. HORACE FOX, President.

BARNES ON SIN.—The following extract from a letter from Dr. Barnes will be read with interest:—"The Rev. Albert Barnes, the well-known writer of 'Notes on the Gospels,' in a recent letter on theological problems, says: 'In the distress and anguish of my own spirit, I confess I see no light whatever. I see not one ray of light to disclose to me why sin came into the world, why the earth is strewn with the dead and dying, and why man must suffer to all eternity. When I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it, I am struck dumb; it is darkness to my soul and I cannot disguise it.'—New Orleans Picayune."

What a startling and bitter criticism is this from the pen of one who spent his life in the service of Jesus, and was a careful, intelligent student of the Scriptures! If these are the logical deductions of great and learned men, to what conclusions must the ignorant and foolish arrive?—Portland Monitor.

Of law, there can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; all things in heaven and earth do her homage—the very least as feeling her care, the greatest as not exempted from her power; all of them admire her as the mother of their peace and joy.—Richard Hooker.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHERS' NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending June 22d.—E. W. Fennell, $1; Perry & Martin, 30 cts.; Frank Ives, 30 cts.; F. W. Baker, 10 cts.; Fennell, A. Johnson, $1; H. Boyce, 10 cts.; Geo. M. Scott, $1; Cyrus Peters, $1; N. Jovanovich, $1; H. A. Muer, $2.50; H. H. Hatch, 50 cts.; P. Zimmerman, 50 cts.; Richmond, $1; J. W. Smith, $2; Wm. H. Hamlin, 7 cts.; J. F. Lockwood, $1.25; J. Peter & Co., $2.50; Henry Savage, 50 cts.; Benson & Sherman, 50 cts.; Fred J. Davis, $1; Henry Polkman, $1; Henry Rice, $1.25; Freeman Brown, 50 cts.; Dr. Fennell, $1; C. D. B. Mills, 10 cts.; C. F. Johnson, 10 cts.; George H. Holman, $1; Parker Pillsbury, $2.40; Charles Putnam, $2; N. F. Stuckbridge, $1; W. C. Childs, $1; M. Gladly, 50 cts.; J. T. Bickney, 25 cts.; George Lewis, $2.75; James Cameron, 50 cts.; J. L. Pratt, 50 cts.; Parker Pillsbury, $1; L. T. Womack, 50 cts.; James Abbot, 50 cts.; S. H. Austin, $1; J. L. Oliver, 50 cts.; Wm. Anderson, 10 cts.; E. Schumann, 50 cts.; J. T. Taylor, $2; Ira Porter, $2; W. H. Livingston, $3.00; H. L. Hall, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittance acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

RECEIVED.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LIBERAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION to Cincinnati, May 1st, 2nd, and 3rd, 1873. HORACE GREERLEY'S Letter of Acceptance. Address of the New York State Committee to their Fellow-Citizens. New York: BAKER and GOODWIN, Printers, Tribune Building, 1873. [With Compliments of the Golden Age.]

CANTON TRACTS. The Philadelphia Failure: A Review of GRANT'S Re-nomination. By THOMAS TILTON. Office of the Golden Age, Tribune Building, New York, 1873.

CATALOGUE AND CIRCULAR OF THE LE ROY ACADEMIC INSTITUTE (Le Roy, Genesee County, New York) for the Eighth School Year, 1871-1873. Buffalo: MARTIN TAYLOR, 1873.

THE MANCHESTER FRIEND. June, 1873. London: F. BOWEN KITTO, 8, Bishopsgate Street Without.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH AND JOURNAL OF PHYSICAL CULTURE. July 1873. New York: WOOD & HOLBROOK, 13 & 15 Laight Street, $3.00.

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE, for June. Chicago: MRS. M. CORA BLAND, Chicago, 325 West Madison St. $1.50.

OLD TESTAMENT GOSPEL.—MORAL AND RELIGIOUS ESSENTIALS.—THEOLOGY SIMPLIFIED.—THE TREE IS KNOWN BY ITS FRUIT.—A KEY TO UNLOCK THE MYSTERIES OF ORTHODOXY.—By SAMUEL KNESE. New York: SMITH & SON, 15 Spruce St., 1869.

own petty sem; they are ingloriously inconsistent to the logic of freedom. Whoever thinks everybody either a bigot, hypocrite, or fool, that does not believe just as he himself believes, betrays all the earmarks of the grossest illiberality; and he who measures the liberality of others by the degree of assent they yield to his own pet doctrines or denials, is a pigmy imitator of the Grand Inquisitor himself. What vanity is more ridiculous than that of setting oneself up as the imperial standard of enlightenment? Yet this vanity is a too frequent phenomenon among those who pass for liberals. Science alone is competent to decide the truth of conflicting opinions; and she has to use a micrometer to discover the stature of him who pertly volunteers to take the job off her hands.

Whether we are real or spurious liberals depends not on what we believe, but how we believe it, and how we hold our belief in the face of opposing beliefs. He is the truest liberal who is most deeply imbued with the spirit of liberty, and puts it most faithfully into his thinking, his conversation, and his daily walk among men.

MORE PETITIONS.

Within the past fortnight the following lists of signatures to the remonstrance against the Christian Amendment have been received:—

Mr. Jacob Miller, New Philadelphia, Ohio, sends one hundred and fourteen names (sixty-four of which were obtained by Mr. A. L. Cornet, Port Washington, Ohio); Mr. William Fletcher, Kalamazoo, Michigan, thirteen; Rev. Cella Burleigh, Brooklyn, Connecticut, thirty-two.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

The following editorial paragraph taken from the Liberal Christian, of which Rev. Dr. Bellows is editor-in-chief, is worthy of note:—

"Some time since we received a communication requesting our interpretation of certain phrases in a statement of faith about to be adopted in one of our churches. Without answering the questions of our correspondent in detail, we will say in general that we have seldom seen a statement of faith which was satisfactory to us, and that the statement in question, like all statements which exclude the modern idea of continuous and uninterrupted revelation between God and his children, and insist more upon the use of Biblical language and definitions than upon a clear and plain statement of actual belief, is vague and unsatisfactory, and does not, we venture to say, correctly embody the actual religious opinions even of those who adopt it. The old creeds are fast losing their hold upon the minds of thinking men and women, and it is useless to try to express our new views in antiquated language which, however admirable in itself, or sacred from association, only confuses and deceives. Our new wine must be put into new bottles, and the sooner we find the courage and honesty to do this, the better for the world and the truth. Creeds are good and indispensable, but they need constant airing and modification, and adaptation to the later revelations of God's spirit."

This is especially noteworthy as coming from the source it does. There was a time when Dr. Bellows was recognized as the leader of the conservative wing of the Unitarian denomination; when he not only favored a stricter organization of the body, but appeared to want some concentration on a general formula of belief. We do not understand now that he has in any essential particular changed his own theological opinions, though this paragraph, if it came from his pen, would indicate less stress laid upon the Scriptures than was formerly the case with him, and more on the doctrine of Divine immanence. But he evidently appreciates more than he once did the necessity that the Unitarian body should hold to the principle of mental freedom; and we think that he regards this principle as more trustworthy, as spiritually safer, than he was once inclined to do. When Mr. Hepworth was urging, two years ago, the adoption of a statement of faith by the Unitarian Conference, Dr. Bellows, who it had been expected might favor the matter, fought it with all his might. And latterly, especially as it seems to us since Mr. Hepworth took his departure for the Orthodox ranks, the Liberal Christian has shown in its editorial department a marked increase of hospitable and cordial feeling towards the rationalistic wing of Unitarianism. Not always consistent in the application of the principle of free thought, Dr. Bellows is yet sagacious enough to see that freedom in religious inquiry has been the strength of Unitarianism in the past and must be its hope in the future. He seems to see, too, that mental insight and real depth of spiritual experience are to be found quite as much on the left wing as on the right. Probably he would put up a fence somewhere,—say at the confession of Christ as the historically providential head of the Christian church; but any utterance of a greater liberality is to be welcomed, and an offer to shake hands, even across the fence, is to be reciprocated. If the grasp is strong and long enough, and the grasp of a true fraternity, the fence may be shaken down beneath it.

W. J. P.

RELIGION AND MORALITY.

III.

In two preceding articles on this subject I have endeavored to point out the facts, that, in all religious systems, the highest teaching has declared morality to be an essential part of religion, and that yet the religious sentiment has important and valuable characteristics which do not necessarily belong to the moral sentiment. Recurring to those articles, we may see now, I think, how it comes to pass that the religious sentiment, though needing the moral sentiment for its perfect development, may yet, since it includes so much more than the moral sentiment, be developed vigorously in some directions without it,—producing that painful incongruity, not infrequently witnessed, of a pious profession of faith, and an excited demonstration of religious emotion, combined with a weak moral sense and perhaps open transgression of the law of virtue. We may see, too, how under narrow and ignorant views of the universe and its powers, and of man's relation to them, the religious sentiment should have often developed into crude and superstitious beliefs and revolting practices.

But these false beliefs and practices and this one-sided development of the religious sentiment are not to be brought as an indictment against the religious sentiment itself, any more than that the human reason is to be condemned because of the erroneous opinions and false logic which it has often produced. The fault in both cases is the same,—unbalanced, imperfect development. These false and crude religious practices and beliefs gradually pass away under the influence of advancing knowledge and a better culture. But if we define the religious sentiment (following the definition of the last paper) as simply man's consciousness of his relations to the Life and Power of the Universe, it is difficult to conceive how that sentiment at its root is ever to pass away or become obsolete. Since man is not self-derived, self-existent, and self-containing, and so long as he is conscious of relations between his life and the universe of things external to him, how is it possible that the essence of the religious sentiment should not survive in him?

And may it not be justly maintained that it is the religious sentiment, or this outlook which man has from the finite limits of his nature into an infinite realm of being, that invests man with his greatest dignity? Is not the moral sentiment itself endowed with a grander beauty and a higher majesty when it is thus conceived as one of the vital ligaments by which human life is connected back with the primary sources of all life, and is commissioned to work out a purpose that is not of the finite self alone, nor of time, nor of the earth merely, but is eternal and extends through all worlds? The moral sentiment may, indeed, do its work, and do it well, without this consciousness of its high descent and destiny. A man may simply say, "This is duty and must be done,"—and that is noble. He may do the duty without a thought as to what duty means,—without ever inquiring into the nature of the pressure behind that little word ought which gives it its authoritative power. When he acts thus, he is simply moral. But when the consciousness comes, whether it shape itself into any formal belief or not, that through the sense of I ought the eternal purpose of the universe presses to accomplish its ends; when the man feels that he is acting as the instrument of an energy, is a link in an electric chain of life, of which the source and terminus are far beyond and above himself, then he is not only moral but religious. And in this action there seem to be some finer elements of mental and spiritual vitality than in the simply moral act. Perhaps we should not be far wrong to say that the moral sentiment developed by itself is the prose of duty. The religious sentiment invests the same duty in the garb of poetry. When conscience speaks alone, it simply says to me, plainly and bluntly, that I must be upright in thought and deed. Religion expresses the same purpose through the old Greek tragedian, Sophocles, when he wrote,—“O that my lot may lead me in the path of holy innocence of word and deed, the path which august laws ordain, which in the highest empyrean had their birth, of which heaven is the father alone, neither did the race of mortal men beget them, nor shall oblivion ever put them to sleep. The power of God is mighty in them and groweth not old.” To follow that blunt command of conscience with no sense but that I must follow, is morality; to follow, feeling that it voices to me the sublime law and purpose of the universe, is religion.

And since the religious sentiment is so closely allied with the ideal, imaginative and poetic side of human nature, it must be admitted that not all persons have in any large and developed measure the religious temperament: they are deficient in it just as they are deficient in the poetic temperament. Excellent men and women they may be in spite of this deficiency, interested in all good works and doing vigorous service for humanity. The merits of this class of people are not to be denied; nor are they to be made to feel that they are hopelessly lacking in some elements of vital human goodness, and must be cut off from fellowship with people who are religious. It is doubtless true that, other things being equal, the religious temperament gives a finer tone, a completer balance, finish and grace to character, than character can have without it. It will have to be conceded, I think, that the greatest characters in history have had this religiousness of nature. They may not, necessarily, have formulated their religion into any articles of belief, or been observant of religious ceremonies, but they have had that consciousness of relationship to the Infinite which constitutes the religious temperament. Yet if either must be wanting, it is better to have the moral temperament without the religious than the religious without the moral. The moral sentiment, even if it be not invested with the enthusiasm of religion, is a safer pledge for the stability and harmony of society than is religious feeling divested of the sense of moral obligation. The former may be incompleteness of human nature, but the latter is monstrosity.

And since morality is always a most essential part of religion, and in practical affairs of this life the most essential part, religious organizations, leaving all matters of speculative opinion to the free judgment of individuals, can be most consistently and securely based on the recognition of a common moral purpose and aim. Especially can religion not afford to repel, by any required formalities of belief or observance, the fellowship and practical help of the large class of people in whom the religious sentiment may be weak but the moral sentiment is strong and active. As Theodore Parker, at the funeral of an excellent man reputed an atheist, is said to have prayed,—“We thank thee, O Lord, that, though our friend doubted thy existence, he kept thy law,” so religion must cordially recognize the worth and aid of all persons who, whatever may be their mental doubts and denials in the realm of theology, strive to know and to keep the law of truth and righteousness.

W. J. P.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

After a six or seven weeks' silence, the result, as much as anything, of what in vegetation is called “winter-killed,” I have commenced a little campaigning here in Massachusetts; lecturing only on Sundays.

My first work was in Hudson, formerly Feltonville. The Liberal Society there is miscellaneously made up of extreme Materialists, radical Spiritualists and all the liberal shades between. I am sorry THE INDEX has not made more headway there, but its time will come.

My first lecture in Hudson was on the Sunday evening before last. The regular season had closed with the Society; but as my autumn engagements will not permit me to be there when it reopens, it was proposed to have me between whiles, one Sunday; so I went on the 10th instant.

My lecture was so well attended and approved, that it was arranged to have me a second Sunday evening. As I was engaged for the 23d at Leominster, the 30th was accepted; and so on Sunday evening next I am to give a second lecture there.

Which, by the way, will be my third; for Rev. Mr. Heywood, of the Unitarian Church and Society, has generously proposed that I occupy his pulpit in the morning of the same day,—a compliment not often paid me, and which Mr. Heywood would never wish me to earn by any compromise of my principles.

Of my success in Leominster, and of the prospects there for free religious thought and action, perhaps not much had better yet be said. Anti-slavery once had good footing there; but it was more the result of untiring personal effort and labor than any general diffusion or acceptance of the principles; a single family (not of the wealthiest) always leading the advance.

I gave two lectures in the town, last Sunday, to an audience numerically small; but, weighed, its moral and mental avoirdupois was anything but small. I was glad to see the Unitarian clergyman (temporarily supplying there) one of my most attentive listeners. I hope to continue favorable reports of my work.

P. F.

The Report of the First Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association has been unavoidably delayed, but will be issued to the stockholders as soon as possible.

"In a city of the blessed," says Plato [Jowett's translation, ii, 284], "licentiousness is an unholy thing which the rulers will forbid." Yes—but in that city the rulers will be the people's consciences.

"Do you not," said Thackeray, "as a boy, remember waking of bright summer mornings and finding your mother looking over you? Had not the gaze of her tender eyes stolen into your senses long before you woke, and cast over your slumbering spirit a sweet spell of peace, and love, and fresh-springing joy?"

The Christian Register wonders "how Brother Chadwick kept a straight face while firing his big shot into the poor little corpse of the still-born Theological Amendment. After Mr. Bergh has got the animals sufficiently protected, we hope he will do something to prevent Cruelty to Amendments." We hope so too, and predict that his first "something" will be the arrest of the Register for trying to bury the baby Amendment alive.

The Boston Banner of Light wishes to pick a quarrel with THE INDEX for reasons of its own which are quite transparent. We decline to indulge it in this wish. Out of the six columns of impertinence and misrepresentation which soil the last issues of the Banner without affecting THE INDEX, we shall notice only its charge that we are "attempting to persuade the world that these men [certain gentlemen specified by the Banner] and the long list of able men who agree with them are imbeciles and dupes, knaves and fools," &c., &c. It is enough to say shortly that we made no such charge against these men, or any men,—did not even mention their names or refer to them directly or indirectly; that the charge is a fabrication out of whole cloth; and that, by thus confounding what we actually said with what he prefers to represent us as saying, the editor of the Banner of Light has proved himself to be first and foremost of those who "cannot separate what they have actually seen, heard, or felt, from what they merely [and in this case falsely] infer."

A recent lecture by Prof. E. Whipple, of Clyde, Ohio, for a long report of which in the Louisville Courier-Journal we are indebted to the courtesy of the lecturer, contains these statements on the antiquity of man:—

"Under the supervision of Mr. Leonard Horner, over seventy borings were executed in the Valley of the Nile in the year 1853, most of which penetrated sixty feet in depth. At all depths between one foot and sixty, human relics were met with. The rate of deposit is estimated at six inches in a century, from which data it is proved that man existed in that famous valley twelve thousand years ago. Lyell says the more probable rate of deposit is three inches in a century, which would prove man's occupancy of the valley twenty-four thousand years."

The following extract from the same lecture is pitifully put:—

"In appropriating barbarism it is not necessary to become barbarian. The darky had in his mind a similar truth when called to account for stealing his master's chickens. Said he,—'Nigger belong to massa, chicken belong to massa, nigger eat chicken, massa have less chicken but more nigger.' Now civilization belongs to God; barbarism belongs to God; we absorb barbarism; God has less barbarism but more genuine humanity."

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

RHYMES OF THE TIMES AND OTHER CRIMES, published at New York by the author, Dr. C. Bruchhausen, is a miscellaneous collection of poems written in the odd moments of professional life. They are somewhat amusingly un-English in idiom and phrase, and make little pretension to imagery; but there is something quite agreeable in the spirit of the pieces. The Doctor has broad and true sympathies, whether in politics, reform, or religion, and expresses them with genuine German frankness. The story of "The Last of the Witches" is pleasantly told.

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS; OR, FORTY YEARS' RECOLLECTIONS OF P. T. BARNUM (Warren Johnson & Co., Buffalo) is a unique book. The Dealer of showmen takes the public by the button-hole, and "makes a clean breast of it." He tells all about his innumerable devices for making a fortune out of popular credulity and curiosity, and with all the precision of a professor of physics explains the construction and practical working of the great siphon with which he has skillfully transferred the contents of the public purse into his own. If we had been consulted as to the choice of a title for this most singular autobiography, we should probably have suggested—"The Dying Confession of the Great American Gynaeceus; or, Humbug Reduced to a Science." In the preface, Mr. Barnum refers to previous autobiographical memoirs as having been published "for the purpose, principally, of advancing my interests as proprietor of the American Museum," and the same overpowering frankness pervades the whole book. "All autobiographies," he says, "are necessarily egotistical. If my pages are as plentifully sprinkled with 'I's' as was the chief ornament of Hood's peacock, 'who thought he had the eyes of Europe on his tail,' I can only say that the 'I's' are essential to the story I have told." Beginning with Joice Heth, continuing with Signor Vivalda, the Baby Show, the Hoboken Free Grand Buffalo Hunt, the Woolly Horse, the What-is-it, &c., and winding up with "the biggest show on earth" which the venerable proprietor advertises this season for the purpose of astonishing the millions and spiriting away their half-dollars, Mr. Barnum has certainly put out a book which has no rival but Joe Miller. As for criticism of its morality, we are quite unequal to the occasion. War and the great showman are outside of all moral rules.—Price $1.50; sold by the American News Company, New York.

ANCIENT YORK AND LONDON GRAND LODGES—A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY IN ENGLAND FROM 1587 to 1813, by Leon Hyneman, Philadelphia, will be chiefly interesting to Freemasons. We do not doubt that Freemasonry is useful, like the Christian Church, in fostering material charity and a fraternal spirit among its own members; but the essential unreason of resting these duties upon artificial ties rather than upon natural ones must bear its inevitable fruit of sectarianism. Mr. Hyneman evidently holds very liberal opinions, and deprecates the tendency now manifested by many Freemasons to pervert Freemasonry to the service of sectarian Christian creeds; but to an outsider the fraternity itself appears to be a community of theists who refuse to admit atheists to the alleged privileges of their order because of their atheism. What is this but sectarianism—the essence of which is to condition fellowship on uniformity of belief? Mr. Hyneman feels this difficulty, and would evade it by suggesting that there are no real atheists (p. 139); that "the materialists do not believe in a God as represented to them, but they believe there is an intelligent power behind, moving the machinery of the universe and unfolding material phenomena" (p. 140). On the contrary, it is precisely this that the materialist does not believe: he is no materialist if he does believe it. The case stands thus: if there are no atheists, the requirement of a profession of belief in one God, as a condition of membership, is superfluous; but if there are atheists, the refusal to admit them because of simple unbelief is a gross offence against freedom and fellowship. This is the way the matter looks to an outsider; and it is only an evasion of the difficulty to say that there are no atheists, or that the required profession of theism means nothing, or that the word God may be interpreted theistically and atheistically at the same time according to the pleasure of the individual. Every organization based upon a profession of belief rather than on a purpose to effect some practical object falls into the same vice as that which makes the Church hostile to all free thought and unsectarian fellowship. This is the truth, wound whom it may; and it is the truth which will in time overthrow Freemasonry as surely as the Church, unless it can unlearn its ancient dread of innovation and adapt itself to the demands of the future for absolute freedom of fellowship and of thought.

THREE BOOKS OF SONG, by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co., 1872. "Tales of a Wayside Inn," "Judas Maccabaeus," and "A Bandful of Translations," compose the "Three Books." The fame of Mr. Longfellow as a poet is so thoroughly established that every new publication of his is assented to beforehand of an eager and appreciative reception. The present volume will neither increase nor decrease it. Some of these poems, as the "Legend Beautiful" and the "Baron of St. Castine," are in his best vein. "Judas Maccabaeus" will scarcely be judged a successful effort, if we consider the magnitude of the opportunity given by the subject for the production of a magnificent tragedy, which demands the very elements in which the genius of Longfellow is most deficient. Although this drama is not without grace and a degree of energy, it fatally fails in the chief necessities of dramatic art—action and powerful characterization. It was a mistake to attempt a drama at all. Plainness, purity, and an indescribable charm, rather than power or fire, are the chief attractions of Longfellow's muse; and they have won for him a wide and deserved popularity. Yet we do not consider him in the highest sense an American poet. His subjects, for instance, are very largely taken from non-American sources; and the spirit of his poetry has been also in large measure imbibed from foreign books rather than American life or thought—books that bear little relation to the spirit of the age. As a consequence of this predilection for the foreign and the past, the name of Mr. Longfellow will probably be less closely associated with American poetry in the future than has been the case hitherto. Bryant, Whittier, Lowell, breathe a tone that finds a deeper echo in the heart of this people; and even they are but precursors of the great poets destined to be born in this new world. Neither in literature, art, science, nor philosophy has America yet more than dropped meagre hints of her coming greatness. When the whole atmosphere of the time has changed,—when infant genius shall draw in at every breath the inspirations of a freedom that has become universal and complete,—then will it appear how potent is liberty to produce a grander breed of artists of all kinds than the world has yet known. A certain feebleness characterizes all the poetry of this age, even in its most famous representatives. No poet of the nineteenth century has attained to the stature of Dante, or willattain. The soil and the climate of this transitional epoch are not fit to give him nurture. The great poet of Christianity will know no rival until the great poet of Free Religion arrives; and arrive he will. But he has not arrived yet. Lessing, with his wonderful "Nathan the Wise," was the Huss or Wycliffe of the dawning Reformation of poetry; but until the age of protest has passed by, and the universal religion of Man has entered on its long and undisputed supremacy, the Dante of Free Religion—the Titanic constructive genius that shall clothe the philosophy of freedom with a sublime imagery comparable to that with which the Florentine clothed the philosophy of Christianity—must tarry still in the limbo of the unborn. His hour is not yet come. The religion of Hellas gave birth to Homer; the religion of Christendom gave birth to Dante; the religion of the World will yet give birth to a greater than either. Meanwhile it is well to enjoy and cherish the poets of our own day, who reflect the incertitude of conviction and intensity of feeling inseparable from such an era, and who must all yield the palm for delicate tenderness and subdued pathos to Longfellow.—Price $2.00. For sale by Bailey & Eager, Toledo.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

USE AND WORSHIP OF BOOKS.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

Few persons know how complete a fraud the Orthodox word perpetuates in using the title "Holy Bible," or even "The Bible." In all Christendom there is not a respectable scholar who does not know that no author of any one of the parts of the Bible ever had anything to do with making these numerous parts into one book, arranged throughout as a text book, and furnished with a single title. According to Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, which is good Orthodox authority, even the separate parts of our Bible were not dignified as books, by the application of the Greek word Biblion, until more than four hundred years after the time of Christ, and then the collection was called, not TO BIBLION, THE BOOK, but TA BIBLIA, THE BOOKS; and this use of a plural name lasted for eight hundred years, and was not changed until, in the thirteenth century, even the scholars of the day were so ignorant as to take the plural for the singular. Dr. Smith's Dictionary speaks of "the transformation of the word from a plural into a singular noun in all the modern languages of Europe," as "originating probably in the solecisms of the Latin of the thirteenth century," that is, in the mistake by which Biblia, books, was taken to be singular instead of plural. Thus by a mere blunder of ignorance in an age of extreme ignorance, THE BOOKS were first spoken of, about five hundred years since, as THE BOOK. If the Bible revisionists dared to be perfectly honest, they would drop the singular term, THE BIBLE, and restore the truthful title, THE BOOKS. There are sixty-six bibles, according to the only honest use of this word. But more honest still would be a disuse of this word. Dr. Smith's Dictionary says that its use is "not to be traced further back than the fifth century." It was then applied to give dignity to compositions which would naturally bear the simple name of writings. THE HEBREW WRITINGS and THE CHRISTIAN WRITINGS will be the designation of the two parts of what is now called THE BIBLE, just as soon as scholarship ventures to be perfectly honest. If Orthodoxy cannot hold its own by honesty in this matter, it ought not to hold its own. Will such journals as the Independent and the Christian Union take notice of the statement of facts just made, and concede that their Bible must stand or fall, not as one Book, but as two collections of Writings, never joined together by God? The claim would be criminally false which should set up that ignorant Latin monks in the thirteenth century were inspired to make a blunder, or that in the fifth century writings which fill from one to three pages, or from three to seven, of a small volume, were divinely designated as books, in any sense now proper to the term book. It may be possible to take these sixty-six writings and separately prove the divine character of each, but no honest scholar can pretend that he finds any evidence that other than human hands joined these writings together, under the form and title of one Book. So also the arrangement of these writings into chapters and verses, which adapts the collection to uniform use as a book of texts, is of late date, and absolutely without the least sign of divine intervention. It took place, Dr. Smith's Dictionary relates, between twelve and fifteen hundred years after Christ. In its true, original state, therefore, the so-called Bible is not one book, nor a collection of books, but a collection of writings, not prepared for use in a continuous text-book, but left just as other writings have been left, each to stand or fall on its own merits. To work up and to fix up any other view is to commit a pious fraud. And as Dean Stanley said of the history of the creed which is called Arianism, that it is "gangrened with imposture," so must it be said of the history of the Orthodox view of the Hebrew and Christian Writings, that it is "gangrened with imposture."

It is one of the commonplaces of Orthodoxy that the heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; yet what Orthodox thinker or scholar scrutinizes the working of his own mind in the light of this great and most evident truth? The essence of delusion, and of desperate departure from God, is in putting the human for the divine, either inwardly, self-will for divine principle, or outwardly, some human work or image for the image and power of God. In any high view of religion God must be represented by the greatest and profoundest possible conception of law and influence, over and within us, or of spirit and providence. To bring God down into a human writing, or into a human person, as a deposit made once for all, is totally contrary to an adequate conception of eternal providence and infinite spirit, the law and order, the life and power of Deity in the universe. Man has always done this, and made his best man or the best writings divine, because of the desperate deceitfulness of his thoughts on the subject, which are always cheating him with the conceit that God has especially come to him, in the writings and the man which are most to him. The Jewish mind was exceptionally egotistic in religion, and so especially prone to this desperate delusion; and Christians adopt the Jewish thought, though they disown the mind which bore it. In the tradition that Hebrew and Christian writings expressly represent God, we have one of the most deceitful and most desperate of human errors; the evident fact being that nothing human, much less these leaflets and booklets of human story and sermon and song and epistle, can represent, in any but the most imperfect fashion, the infinite and perfect working of divine intelligence. If the candid religious inquirer will only consider what these writings really are, and what for infinite and inexpressible perfection the divine mind must be, he will see that there could not be a greater mistake than to imagine the latter reflected in the former, except in the very broken way in which all things do more or less reflect the thoughts of God. It will thus appear to be a religious duty to use the Hebrew and Christian Writings precisely as any other, without any worship of them, doing the best we can to find evident truth in them, just as anywhere else, and reserving all worship for the Invisible, Unincarnate and Incommunicable Being of Deity.

CAN THE SCIENTISTS RECIPROCATE?

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—You are aware that some of your readers have made the complaint against your paper that, whilst it is unsurpassed as to the power and success with which it is dispelling to the four winds of heaven the whole system of religious falsehood and fraud which has so long abused the world, it seems to be slow, if indeed it be not powerless in discovering and proposing something which, founded in truth, shall fill the void that must and will soon be felt. Some mysterious finger has written in our hearts that we stand in real and important relation with a future world and with the dear ones that have left us; but the writing is obscure, and the particulars of the relationship are withheld. To know is here one of the wants of man—his great want, his greatest want. It is the sleepless disturber of the heart. It is not the property of any particular race of men, or of the particular mental constitution of any one man or woman. It is confined to no particular age or place. It is an ever-living, ever-disturbing want of all humanity, from the cradle to the grave.

Man has other wants, real and pressing; but there is a power that readily supplies them all. He has still other wants, fanciful and transitory. He wants a fashionable house, a chromo picture, a moss rose-bush, a blue neck-tie, or a Dolly Varden hat; even these are supplied, and abundantly. But the great, the transcendent want appears to be wholly unthought of, wholly unprovided for, if we rely on Free Religion, or on Science as manipulated at present by scientists.

Two things present themselves for our acceptance as being, each within itself and independently of the other, the true and full supply of this want, namely, faith, demanded of the people by a self-constituted body of men called the Church, and actual knowledge, asserted by Spiritualists to be within the reasonable reach of every human being. Faith cannot supply this want; this is the verdict of millions. It can no more supply it than the prepared dinner which a dream of the night sets before a hungry man can satisfy his hunger, a thing which you are brilliantly and successfully laboring to prove to a now listening world.

But Spiritualism—all hail, beautiful and bountiful daughter of Love! Spiritualism! If this prove true, the want is supplied, the mystery is solved, the anomaly is removed, the light has come, and the wearied heart of man can now take rest. Ah, poor man, not yet! Not yet! Wait awhile. Indeed you must wait until Spiritualism shall have been endorse-ed by the scientists of our day as a body. And this won't happen till they, as a body, investigate it; and they won't investigate it till they are willing to do it; and they won't be willing till everybody else is convinced of its truth, and without their aid. Is this a finality?

I have been reading THE INDEX, No. 129, as you will probably infer, and am now trying, under some self-restraint, to express feelings that came up struggling for vent whilst reading your leading selected article, and your own editorial, "Spiritualism and Science." As to the first—that from the pen of Professor John Tyndall—I hope you will permit me to say that, as I view things, no language can be too severe for its condemnation. Its proper place is not the first page of THE INDEX, but rather among the sensation columns of the New York Sun. Of course I feel that I could justify these remarks; but the self-complaisance of the writer, his refined contempt for others, and the placid beauty of his rhetorical sophistries are such as to baffle my powers, used within any limits which I could hope to have accorded me in your paper.

It is with feelings a good deal altered and somewhat mitigated, but by no means pleasurable, that I turn to your own remarks. You begin by saying some good things, and saying them handsomely; but you soon betray a spirit of unfair hostility, and what is more painful to the feelings of your Spiritualist readers, a spirit of mingled pity and contempt for their philosophy. Indeed, Mr. Abbot, I fear that you sometimes keep bad company. I fear that you and the scientist are, at present a little too much tête à tête. To the contrast which you draw between comfort and truth I fully agree; but I think that Spiritualists can distinguish as clearly as others between the short-lived, wretched comfort associated with falsehood, and the pure, tranquil and permanent comfort which is the inseparable companion of truth. Now, according to my observation, this last is precisely the sort of comfort which Spiritualists enjoy in a remarkable degree. The truth is, you do not know Spiritualism, else you would not speak of its seeking mere comfort and requiring faith. The word "faith" is often carelessly used even by Spiritualists; but faith, in its theological sense, is just what Spiritualism asks from no man. It asks for inquiry, for investigation, and invites rigid but honest criticism. But you say that, in a way ruinous to its claims to be founded in truth, it refuses to submit to crucial tests devised by men of science. I have some reason to believe (see the article from the Banner of Light) that in some cases it has submitted to such tests, and come forth victorious. But suppose it refuses in all cases, can the scientist discover no cause for the refusal but cowardice?

When homoeopathy first appeared, did it go begging to the Doctors and ask to be submitted to their theoretical standards? No. It invited them to submit it to practical trial on its own conditions. What did the learned Doctors do? They pronounced it a humbug and cheat. Homoeopathy appealed to the people; a fierce contest ensued, with the result that the "humbug and cheat" is firmly established in the world, and the cherished system of medicine among the intelligent classes in every country of the globe, while the scientific method is tottering to its grave!

It was my intention, when sitting down to write this article, to quote a few of your sentences and make some remarks on each; but either because it would involve too great a trespass on your columns, or because I feel my want of ability, I must let the thing pass into other and better hands. A few homely words on science, and I close.

Science is defined to be "knowledge reduced to system." Very well, then, knowledge, the great essential of science, existed before its arrangement into system took place. Then it was not in accordance with systematic rules that knowledge was first acquired, since they then had no existence. But if knowledge, the essence of science, could be gained at one period of the world's history, gained without the use of systematic rules, it could be gained at another period. I need follow this no further, since Spiritualism can have the essence of science for its foundation and support, though it should refuse to submit to the arbitrary test of system.

When a hungry world asked for bread, the church gave it a painted stone. Free Religion is now engaged in taking away the stone, and giving, as yet, nothing in its stead but a keener appetite and a more capacious stomach. Here the heavenly messenger, Spiritualism, comes in, and it comes with a banquet more than sufficient to satisfy every existing and every possible want of man; especially does it come with an answer to the dark question which has so long disturbed his heart—the question of his destiny. Spiritualists, those who know this to be true, feel that they can do without the scientists and their crucibles. Can the scientists, from their point of view and on their ground, reciprocate?

J. T. BLAKENEY.

DUNKIRK, N. Y., June 17, 1873.

[Free Religion does not and cannot profess to tell men what to believe. It says:—"Find out for yourselves, without regard to ecclesiastical or other hindrances to inquiry." If men find out that Spiritualism is true, it will be because they have obeyed this mandate of Free Religion; if they find out that Materialism is true, or that any other phase of belief is true, it will be for the same reason.

It is not we that say that, before being accepted, Spiritualism must be "endorsed by the scientists of our day as a body." This, on the contrary, is practically said by those Spiritualists who insist that "the scientists of our day as a body" shall endorse it. The whole point of our article was to defend scientific men against this unjust demand. Scientific men, as such, cannot without absurdity be called upon to "endorse" anything except on scientific grounds. If one appeals to law, he must abide by the law; if he appeals to science, he must abide by science. Lawyers and scientists both make their mistakes, of course; but law and science can neither be coaxed nor driven into decisions of any sort outside of their proper jurisdiction.

We regret that our good friend Dr. Blakeney so entirely misapprehends the drift and spirit of our article. If he will take the trouble to read it again, he cannot but perceive the injustice of his first impressions as expressed above.—Ed.

THE BOSTON LIBRARY OPEN AT LAST.

Boston, June 10, 1873.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—In 1864, when a member of the Board of Aldermen, I introduced an order that the Public Library should be kept open on Sundays from 10 o'clock A. M. to 10 o'clock P. M. My efforts in 1864 failed; but, remaining two years thereafter, I year by year followed up the subject and finally carried it through the City Council. But the Mayor, Mr. Lincoln, a Unitarian, vetoed the order. After my retirement from the Board, our mutual friend, Chas. W. Slack, editor of the Commonwealth, being elected Alderman, renewed the order; and, the matter being referred to a joint Committee of which he was chairman, it was after a number of hearings and considerable delay referred to the City Solicitor for his legal opinion, who decided that "according to the rulings of our courts it would not be work of necessity or charity to employ people in the Public Library on Sunday." In other words, it would not be doing God's work to impart knowledge on Sunday. I have much respect for Judge Healy, the City Solicitor. He was not individually opposed to the library being open on Sunday; his legal opinion was asked, and he gave it as he understood the statute laws of the Commonwealth. Hence were my efforts in 1869 in the Legislature for the repeal of our musty unconstitutional Sunday laws. My speech before the House of Representatives, I presume, you have in your possession. The speech went through its third edition, costing me about six hundred dollars; and as now I have quite frequent calls for it, to meet the demands I shall be obliged to print the fourth edition.

It is my pleasure to inform you that our present City Government have voted that the Public Library shall be open to all on Sunday.

As Boston was the first to propose the opening of the people's library and Art Galleries also (for I proposed both), I have lived in hopes that we might be first to lead other cities; but as others have gone before us, my friend Slack says—"Father Nash, to you belongs the credit, and, when the library doors swing open on Sunday, the Jubilee."

Very respectfully yours,

NATH. C. NASH.

P. S. The labor reform movement is working much mischief in the way of business, but it is a moral earthquake proceeding from the progress of science and art. God intended the steam engine to do away with the major part of manual labor, and to give the universal brain of mankind pre-eminence over matter. When the hours of labor are rightly arranged according to natural law, all days will be regarded alike, and the seven days of the week will be rightly proportioned to manual labor and the culture of the mind. Lectures on all the sciences will be delivered in Boston and other cities and towns throughout our vast country; then Protestantism will have reached its full triumph. This subject is a vast one. I have only added this postscript that you may follow it out in your valued and progressive journal. N. C. N.

"BEARDING THE LION IN HIS DEN."—A middle-aged man arose in the noonday prayer meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms yesterday, and said that he had a word of testimony to offer respecting Christianity. He had travelled much in foreign lands and distant countries, and he had found that, wherever Christianity came as an established institution, it brought with it, invariably, certain vices and crimes which had not been known before, and on the whole, so far as he had been able to learn, the influence of the popular style of Christianity had been everywhere and always demoralizing! The reason he would not attempt to give, but such were the facts.—Boston Daily Herald.

SHORT OF MEAT.—A minister going to dine after sermon with one of his deacons, came upon the hired boy of his host, digging at a woodchuck's hole. The parson, who was unknown to the boy, checked his rein, and accosted him with—

"Well, my son, what are you doing there?"

"Digging out a woodchuck, sir," said the boy.

"Why, but don't you know that it is very wicked? And besides, you won't get him if you dig for him on Sunday."

"Git 'im!" said the boy, "thunder, I've got to git 'im; the minister's coming to our house to dinner, and we ain't got any meat!"—Chr. Union.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASES FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. By CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species." says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents. (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no abler, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatharian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 83, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

or

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address, S. H. MORSE,
128-14

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,

ARCHITECTS,

74 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO,
[180-181]

THE

LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE

Presents a higher and more progressive type of literature and more sensible views of life and its needs than any other literary publication in this country.

The ADVENT HERALD, of Boston, says of it:—"At last we have a Ladies' Magazine we can cordially recommend to our readers. It is a sensible Woman's Magazine."

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS JULY FIRST.

Those who subscribe before August get Six Numbers Free. THE LADIES' OWN is a Progressive, Literary, Household and Fashion Monthly of 48 pages, printed on book paper and beautifully illustrated. Terms $1.50 a year.

AGENTS WANTED.—Large Cash Commissions Paid. Samples 10 cts. M. CORA BLAND, [180-183] Editor and Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

UNCOMMON AND VALUABLE BOOKS!

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

"Originals of the Bible."—AN INQUIRY INTO THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGINALS OF KING JAMES' BIBLE: Where were they written? Where were they written? Who wrote them? And how have they been preserved and handed down? (Only a limited number printed.) In large 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"In conclusion, the author gives an excellent summary of Man's Nature,—Pathological, Intellectual, Physiological, Chemical,—as the most reliable standard by which we can measure or weigh the credibility of history and of revelation."

Why and What are I?—THE CONFESSIONS OF AN INQUIRER.—I. Heart Experience; or, the Education of the Emotions. By JAMES JACKSON JARVIS. (Published in Boston, and afterward suppressed.) In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The Inquirer" is full of revolutionary ideas. He tells what he heard and what he did before and since his birth, and very truthfully and powerfully portrays his experience and emotions."

Hobbes' (THOMAS) Works.—English and Latin. Now first collected and edited by Sir Wm. Molesworth. Portrait, etc. London: 1830. Complete set, 16 vols. 8vo, cloth, $30.00.

"One of the greatest and most original thinkers in the English language."

Gospel Paganism: OR, REASON'S REVOLT AGAINST THE REVEALED. With reprint of a Letter to (London) Social Science Association, 1869. By GEORGE RANKIN. London: 1864. In 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Fouquier (CHARLES)—The Life of. By CHARLES PALLARIN, M.D. With an Appendix. Translated by FRANCIS GEORGE SHAW. Portrait. In 12mo, paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth, $1.00.

"Contains a very comprehensive view of Fouquier's writings."

Bhagvat-Geeta (The): OR, DIALOGUES OF KRESHNA AND ARJUN. In Eighteen Lectures, with Notes. Translated from the original, in the Sanskrit, or Ancient Language of the Brahmins, by CHARLES WILKINS. (Only a very limited edition printed.) In royal 8vo, boards, $2.50.

"The antiquity of the original of the Bhagvat-Geeta, and the veneration in which it hath been held for so many ages by a very considerable portion of the human race, must render it one of the greatest curiosities in the literary world."

Law (The) of Nations. Affecting Commerce During War: with a Review of the Jurisdiction, Practice and Proceedings of Prize Courts. By FRANCIS H. COTTON, LL.B. In large 8vo, law sheep, $1.00.

Life of Thomas Paine—Mover of the Declaration of Independence, Secretary of Foreign Affairs under the First American Congress, Member of the National Convention of France, Author, etc., etc. (By CALVIN BLANCHARD.) With Portrait. In 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.

Principia: OR, NATURE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.—Theory of Universal Electro-Magnetism Simplified. Demonstrating the Existence and Operation of Repulsive Force, co-extensively with Gravitation. By L. L. CHAPMAN. In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Wonderfully comprehensive and bold."

Hobbes (DR. C. W.) The Mysteries of Astrology and the Wonders of Magic. With numerous Illustrations and Portrait. Boston: 1869. In 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

"Contains an account of Geomancy, Chiromancy, Physiognomy, etc."

Bible Exposed (The). By ERASMUS. A critical and curious book by a modern writer. In large 8vo, cloth, $1.75; paper covers, $1.25.

"In Appendix, the author gives his own ideas concerning Natural Religion, and endeavors to show that he is not anxious to overthrow all religions."

Materialism of the Present Day.—A Critique of Dr. Baechner's System. By PAUL JANET. Translated from the French by GUSTAVE MASON. In 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Advice to a Mother on the Management of her Offspring. By PIERRE HENRI CHAVASSE. A good treatise on Infancy, Childhood and Youth. In 16mo, cloth, 50 cts.

Moore's (HANNAH) Works. Containing "Celebs in Search of a Wife," "Tales, Stories and Allegories." In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"Hannah Moore's works have established her name as a great moral writer."

Candide. By VOLTAIRE. "The spiciest, whitest and most exciting book in the French language." Fully translated into English. In 16mo, cloth, 85 cts.

"* * * Contains 'Apostrophe Americaine,' 'Perfect Happiness,' and 'Amours of Famous Men and Women,' in Appendix."

Gil Blas: THE ADVENTURES OF GIL BLAS OF SANTILLANE. Translated from the French of LE SAGE, by SMOLLETT. Illustrated with twenty Steel Engravings by ROBERT SMIRKE. In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $3.00.

"The popularity of 'Gil Blas,' which equals that of any of the most famous productions, may afford a lesson to the writers of fiction who are ambitious that their works should live."

Rural Rambles: OR, SOME CHAPTERS ON FLOWERS, BIRDS AND INSECTS. By A LADY. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The author of 'Rural Rambles,' like the insect and the bird gathering honey for the hive and the twig for the nest, has passed from treatise to authority, ever seeking to throw around her subject the charms of association and poetry."

Poetic Album (The). Consisting of Choice Selections from the POESIES OF ALFRED TENNYSON, MRS. BROWNING AND ALEX. SMITH. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The selections have been made with consummate skill and strict fidelity. To winnow the wheat from the chaff has been the main object of the accomplished compiler."

Writing Reader (The). Comprising, in the different Handwritings of the present day, [very excellent] selections from Standard Authors, with Specimens of French, German, Spanish and Italian Commercial Penmanship, designed for the use of Schools and Families. By T. GILBERT and F. PHASE. In royal 8vo, half roan, $1.00.

Any of the above will be carefully sent by mail, on receipt of price; or by Express, if so ordered, payable on delivery (C. O. D.) Address

DION THOMAS, Bookseller,
141 Fulton Street, New York City.
[180-186c0w]

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT,

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. PROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOU, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 83, Toledo, Ohio.

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich. [181c0w]

AGENTS WANTED FOR "JESUS." By Charles F. Deems, D.D. His Divinity established and Rationalism routed. The most popular and rapidly-selling religious work ever issued. For Circulars, address O. S. PUBLISHING CO., N. Y., Cincinnati, Chicago or St. Louis. 117-139.

New Tracts!

intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 20

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 40

Either Series, 50 Cents: Both, $1.00.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,

[85-86] 19 PINCHET ST., BOSTON.

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy.

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents. Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $5.00. Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $5.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,
110-161c0w. Box 2268, St. Louis, Mo.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John S. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 125 in eight days, and other 225 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[195-151.]

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $2.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

Digitized by Google

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JULY 13, 1872.

WHOLE No. 133.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARNOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS BROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLGREN, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. RATTSON, Business Agent.

[FOR THE WORK.]

A Plea for Materialism.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BEFORE THE FREE CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY OF SALEM, OHIO, SUNDAY, JUNE 17, 1872.

"Anybody who is acquainted with the history of science will admit that its progress has in all cases been, and now more than ever is, the extension of the province of what we call matter and causation, and the concomitant gradual banishment from the region of human thought of what we call spirit and spontaneity." HUXLEY.

In all reasonings something has to be taken for granted. It is impossible, as Aristotle says, that every truth should admit of proof; otherwise proof would extend ad infinitum. The materialist assumes his own existence and the reality of an external world. The idealist assumes the existence of the ego, but denies or doubts the independent existence of the non-ego. He accepts the testimony of consciousness as to the former, but is dissatisfied with the evidence of the senses respecting the reality of the latter. The universe, he holds, is subjective, not objective—lies inside, not outside, of the mind. "All the choir of heaven, the furniture of earth, all those bodies which compose the mighty frame of the world," says Schelling, "have not any subsistence without a mind." "Thought and its object are one," said the old Eleatic philosophers. The fundamental tenet of the Vedanti school, according to Sir William Jones, was that matter has no essence independent of mental perception,—that existence and perceptibility are convertible terms. Many of the acutest philosophers of the past hundred years were idealists; and Turgot says that he who has never rejected the absolute existence of matter has no talent for metaphysical reasoning. It is unquestionably true that, in most of the ontological controversies that have occurred, ultra scepticism has had the best of the argument. Mackintosh says of Reid, the opponent of idealism:—"He bawled out, 'We must believe in an external world,' but added in a whisper, 'We can give no reason for our belief.'"

It is evident that the existence of an external world does not admit of proof, and cannot be made more clear by logic. It needs no proof, no logic; for it is below our reason, and is the most indubitable and indisputable of all our knowledge. Whenever the realist concedes that we can reasonably doubt the reality of an outer world, there is no escape from the most extreme scepticism. We grant that the mind does not perceive external things themselves; that observation and experience fail to furnish data on which to base investigations respecting their ultimate nature; that we can think and speak of the world only as it appears to us; that we have no means of ascertaining how much or how little objects correspond with the impressions we receive; yet by no mental effort can we divest ourselves of a real, absolute world, independent of the mind that thinks and philosophizes concerning its phenomena—that would still exist if consciousness and the power of perception were forever destroyed. All the reasonings of the idealist are powerless to diminish our confidence in the reality of objects—objects independent of the thinking faculty. As Hume says of Berkeley's arguments—if they admit of no answer, they produce no conviction. The world will always believe with Byron that—

"When Berkeley said there was no matter,
It was no matter what he said."

We can prove our own existence just as little as we can prove an external world. If it be not accepted as a primary truth, it cannot be maintained at all. Descartes' proposition—"Cogito, ergo sum"—is frequently repeated as though it were the quintessence of logic; but my selfhood implies an existence which precedes all thinking, and, if it be not taken for granted, how can we maintain that anything thinks, or that anything save the mere thought exists? Hume was logical and consistent in going so far in his sceptical inquiries as to question the reality of everything save the mere impressions or sentiments. Commence with doubting your own existence and the existence of an external world, and Hume's conclusion is unavoidable. And, having arrived at the conclusion that our impressions and thoughts alone are absolutely real, it seems to me not very difficult to go a little farther, and question whether even our thoughts are not of doubtful reality, and hold with Pyrrho that everything is equally certain and equally uncertain.

Doubt is undeniably the beginning of wisdom and the handmaid of progress; but, carried to excess, it is liable to injure the cause of philosophy by leading the mind into ridiculous absurdities, and furnishing the enemies of free inquiry and the friends of antiquated error with arguments against the authority of human reason and the utility of untrammelled investigation. Contact with the world and the occupations of common life, as Hume justly remarks, are the only remedy for excessive scepticism—that scepticism that calls for proof that a real world exists, and that everything is not merely imaginary.

There is one substance, and only one, of which by its qualities we can take cognizance; this we call matter. Material things only act on the sensuous organs so as to produce ideas. If we analyze our ideas, we find them, however compounded, dependent upon the existence of objects around us. We can have no conception of anything the constituent elements of which do not exist. The mind cannot create ideas. It can combine, transpose, augment or diminish the simple ideas of sensible objects, and thereby form conceptions of ideal objects which correspond with no existing reality. We can imagine monsters, such as mermaids, centaurs, and sphinxes, and inanimate objects for which we should search in vain for corresponding realities; yet, the moment we analyze these conceptions, we find they are constructions and alterations of our fancy, founded on material existences. In like manner we can combine ideas of the beautiful and desirable things of this world, and imagine heaven; or think of a misty or aerial being with form and features like our own, and call it spirit. In every case we shall find the complex made up of simple ideas, and the latter invariably copies of impressions made on the senses by surrounding objects.

I am aware it is sometimes said we can have ideas of beauty, goodness, love, etc., as well as of material objects. But here we are deceived by the use of abstract words, which, although they are used to express qualities, always convey to the mind ideas of objective realities. Properly speaking, we can have no idea of a quality. A strong man, a beautiful woman, a courageous soldier, we can easily imagine; but the qualities of strength, beauty and courage are not cogitable as independent realities, for the very good reason that they have no such existence. Whenever we use the terms, we necessarily think of certain objects with reference to the qualities named. Max Müller correctly observes:—"As far as language is concerned, an abstract word is nothing but an adjective raised into a substantive; but, in thought, the conception of a quality as a subject is a matter of extreme difficulty, and in strict logical parlance impossible. If we say, 'I love virtue,' we seldom connect any definite notion with virtue. Virtue is not a being, however unsubstantial; it is nothing that could produce an expressible impression on our mind. The word virtue is only a short-hand expression; and when men said for the first time, 'I love virtue,' what they meant by it originally was, 'I love all things that become an honest man, that are manly or virtuous.'" (Chips from a German Workshop, vol. II, p. 54.)

When it is said we have as much proof of the existence of mind as we have of the reality of matter, the statement does not admit of question, unless by the term mind is meant an entity, an independent existence, a something that does not require the conception of anything else as antecedent to it. It cannot be maintained reasonably that we have any a-priori proof that the mind is something independently of itself. As Dugald Stewart says:—"We are conscious of sensation, thought, desire, volition, but are not conscious of the existence of the mind itself." That the mental operations are not dependent on a material basis, that intelligence is not a product of material organization, or that there is an immaterial or spiritual substance, not cognizable to the senses, which is the true basis of our thought and emotions, the spiritualist has no right to assume; for even if true, the propositions are not self-evident, and cannot, therefore, be taken for granted, like the existence of an external world.

Correctly speaking, then, matter is the only substance of which we have any proof, since it is the only substance with whose phenomena we have any acquaintance. If it be said we have no right to assume that all phenomena, including those of a mental nature, are necessarily dependent on a material substance, our reply is that, since we know of no substance except matter, and since we are insufficiently acquainted with its powers and capabilities to warrant us in saying that it is not capable of producing the results which we observe, we have no reason to believe in any other substance than matter.

Matter is eternal. "From nothing, nothing can come." This ancient maxim the most captious will not dispute. Something exists. Something has existed from eternity. We have no acquaintance with, no proof of, anything in the universe save matter. In the absence of proof, we are indisposed to believe that anything exists or has existed to which matter owes its origin. If matter has not existed from eternity, it was created. If created, some Being or Power must have created it. To create is to act. To act is to apply force. An application of force presupposes an object to apply it to. But if creative force were applied to some object, there was no creation, but simply formation from previously existing material. Whence this material? It could no more have come from nothing than the matter we see around us. As there can be no creation without force, and no application of force without something to apply it to, it follows that material of some kind has existed from eternity. However changed or transformed, this material must have remained essentially the same in its nature. We cannot resist the conviction that the matter which exists now has in some condition always existed.

Chemistry demonstrates that matter is indestructible,—that at least by no power known to us can a particle be destroyed. To whatever condition reduced, the quantity remains the same, admitting neither of addition nor diminution. Since we have never known a particle of matter to be annihilated, and know of no power that can destroy it, it is reasonable to believe that it will always exist in the future. But if it will never cease to exist, it is natural to believe it never began to exist. If the theologian can rightly infer that God will exist forever because he never began to be, the materialist can logically infer that matter has always existed in the past, because of its indestructibility and consequent endless existence in the future. If in thought we divide eternity, it matters not whether we look backward or forward, so far as this argument is concerned; for in the one case there is no beginning, while in the other there is no end.

The notion that matter once had no existence is an assumption suggested by no analogy and admitting of no proof. As Sir William Hamilton has shown, we are utterly unable to realize in thought the possibility of the complement of existence being either increased or diminished; and when it is said God created the world out of nothing, we construe this in thought by supposing he evolved existence out of himself. And "in imagining the universe to be annihilated by its author, we can only imagine this as the retraction of an outward energy into power." Neither creation nor annihilation, then, is thinkable, much less probable.

The supposition that matter owes its origin to a Being who existed alone in a state of "masterly inactivity" through a past eternity, everlastingly thinking about everything before there was anything or anybody save himself to think about, is so absurd that many theologians have rejected the theory of an actual creation, and substituted therefor the more reasonable view that matter is eternal, and that God is somehow connected with it, and immanent in its eternal forces and relations. As Carlyle says in his article on Diderot:—"The whole current hypothesis of the universe being a machine, and then of an architect who constructed it sitting, and then of an architect and guiding it and seeing it go, may turn out an inanity not much longer tolerable; with which result we shall, in the quietest manner possible, reconcile ourselves."

As matter is indefinite in duration, so is it, we have reason to believe, unlimited in extension. We are compelled by no mental necessity to think all space filled with matter; but modern science indicates that such is the fact. The telescope discovers stars so distant that their light requires millions of years to reach us. Science does not favor the supposition that these stars are the limit of the universe, but on the contrary that beyond them are other worlds, and so on ad infinitum. Were the universe limited in extent, the law of gravitation, it seems to us, would attract all matter to a common centre, and render impossible the existence of numerous worlds revolving in space.

As matter is eternal, so is force. Much of the reasoning of theologians is founded on the assumption that matter is of itself inactive and inert, incapable of motion unless stirred by the potent touch of Jehovah. They seem to think that force must have been communicated to matter. Most of them are accustomed to speak of force as though it were a separate, independent existence. But it is certainly childish to regard force as an entity existing independently of a material basis. We cannot think of force per se any more than we can think of strength or beauty per se. It is clearly a word which describes the state or condition of substance. We cannot conceive of matter without force, for to do so we must think of matter without properties, and, as a writer forcibly observes, "a thing without properties is a nonentity, neither rationally cogitable nor empirically existing in Nature."

Modern science has demonstrated that what is true of matter is equally and necessarily true of force. It is neither increased nor lessened,—neither comes from nor passes into nothing. It is transmuted, but never created nor extinguished. As every form in the material world is from the great store-house of matter, to which sooner or later it returns to enter other combinations and to assume other phases, so every motion in the universe comes from the great reservoir of force, to which this quantity is at length returned, to re-appear in other places and in other modes,—the sum total of force, like that of matter, remaining unchangeably and eternally the same. The schoolboy is now familiar with illustrations of the convertibility and persistence of force, such, for instance, as the conversion of heat into mechanical power in steam, and the re-conversion of mechanical force by friction into heat. Chemical affinity can be converted into light and heat, heat into electricity and magnetism, magnetism into mechanical force, and mechanical force into light and heat. According to Tyndall, if our globe were to strike the sun, the amount of heat which would be derived from the arrested motion of the earth would be sufficient to cover the loss of solar heat for nearly seven years.

What was once called "vital force" is no longer regarded as entirely different from the forces of the inorganic world. "In the eye of science," says Tyndall, "the animal body is just as much the product of molecular force as the stalk and ear of corn, or as the crystal of salt and sugar." (Address on Scientific Materialism.) Animal heat is derived from the food that is taken into the stomach, just as directly as the motion of the steam-engine is from the coal that is put into the furnace. The power derived from the combustion of coal and that derived from the exercise of the muscles come from the same source. Just as the bodies of plants and animals are composed of the elements which form the rocks, the water and the clouds, so, according to modern science, are the forces of all organized forms identical with those of inorganic matter, the difference consisting only in the simplicity or complexity of their combinations. In tracing out vital phenomena, says the distinguished scientist just quoted, "the most advanced philosophers of the present day declare that they ultimately arrive at a single source of power, from which all vital energy is derived; and the disquieting circumstance is that the source is not the direct fiat of a supernatural agent, but a reservoir of what, if we do not accept the creed of Zoroaster, must be regarded as inorganic force. In short it is considered as proved that all the energy which we derive from plants and animals is drawn from the sun." (Fragments of Science, p. 413.)

From the established fact that force, like matter, is indestructible, and all its forms are related and admit of natural conversion, what Buchner says is full of meaning, that—"The cycle of matter ideas as a necessary correlate with the cycle of force, and teaches that nothing is generated anew, that nothing disappears, and that the secret of Nature lies in an eternal and immanent cycle in which cause and effect are without beginning or end." (Force and Matter, p. 23.)

Force, we believe, is the soul of the universe. To it all phenomena are ascribable. The same force that forms worlds and impels them through the fields of space, that howls in the tempest and sighs in the zephyr, that roars in the torrent and murmurs in the brook, that rushes wildly over the Falls of Niagara and descends gently in the dewdrop that glistens in a morning sun, that bursts from the bosom of the earth in fiery eruptions, that crystallizes particles of carbon in the diamond, that forms the tree, and shows its capabilities in the beauty and fragrance of the rose,—this same force, we believe, gives sensation to the worm, faithfulness to the dog, fierceness to the tiger, cunning to the fox, conscientiousness to man, wisdom to the sage, devotion to the martyr, modesty to the maiden, and love of happiness to all the conscious forms of Nature. The thrill of love, the pleasures of hope, and the satisfaction of purpose achieved, are all, we believe, derived from the forces of the material world.

Many who have outgrown the old theology yet regard mental action as something higher than a manifestation of this force of which we have spoken; but of the various forms of force, we must certainly regard thought as one. Thought is an abstract word, like others I have mentioned, and implies the existence of something that thinks. We perceive, we think, we know. The sum total of our perceptions, thoughts, and knowledge, constitutes our mind or intelligence. The real question between the materialist and the non-materialist is not whether thought or intelligence has an existence per se, but whether material substance, organized as we see it in living beings, produces the operations of thought and gives rise to what we call intelligence, or whether the substratum of the thinking faculty consists in something that is essentially distinct from matter, or something which does not depend for its existence on a physical organization. This is a subject on which I am not disposed to dogmatize; but the materialist, when charged, as he often is in petulance, with deifying matter, and failing to rise to the sublime conception of a soul that animates and looks out through the frail tabernacle which it inhabits, can with propriety and modesty reply that he knows nothing about any substance save matter; and since he has no reason for believing that matter is inadequate to the production of the results observable about him, he is not disposed to imagine that some unknown existence produces any of these results. True, we cannot understand how thought can result from molecular motion in the brain; but our feeble and limited conceptions of Nature's capabilities must not be taken as the measure of her powers. Besides, were it possible to imagine any substance different from matter, we should be at a great loss to understand how it could produce consciousness and thought as we are to conceive how they can result from material organization.

What reason have we for believing that thought is different from the forces of the mineral and vegetable world, except in its complexity? In an egg are no elements that are not found in the earth, the water, and the air. But this egg, which has no sensation, subjected to a natural influence, is developed into a chick, which possesses sensation, consciousness and thought. Unless it be maintained that some principle or quality is added to the egg supernaturally, I do not see how it can be questioned that the forces in the egg, with the aid of external heat, are converted into sensation, consciousness, and thought. And if the mental action of the chicken is produced by the conversion into a peculiar form of the forces existing in the unconscious egg, I do not see how we can avoid the conclusion that thought in the higher animals, including man, is a manifestation of the same force in greater complexity of combination. To the theologians who strip matter of the very attributes and qualities which give it dignity and make it an object of adulation, who divest it of all its beauty and glory in order to give them to an imaginary Being, and who are accustomed to regard it as something essentially degraded, and to speak of it with contempt,—to such an individual it must indeed seem incredible that intelligence should result from the forces of Nature. But from the standpoint of the materialist, intelligence, although it presents to the mind a problem that does not seem to admit of solution, can reasonably be regarded as the result of material causes.

"Supposing a planet carved from the sun," says Tyndall, "and yet spinning round an axis, and revolving around the sun at a distance from him equal to that of our earth, would one of the consequences of its refrigeration be the development of organic forms? I lean to the affirmative. Structural forces are certainly in the mass, whether or not these forces reach to the extent of forming an animal or a plant. In an amorphous drop of water lie latent all the marvels of crystalline force; and who will set limits to the possible play of molecules on a cooling planet? If these statements startle, it is because matter has been defined and maligned by philosophers and theologians who were equally unaware that it is, at bottom, essentially mystical and transcendental." (Fragments of Science, p. 415.)

It does seem absurd at first thought that all the beautiful and complex organic forms on the earth should be the result of natural force; and to magnify this apparent absurdity, the advocates of special creation point to the higher organizations, assume that they must have come suddenly into existence, and ask the Naturalist to explain how they could have originated except by the direct agency of a Deity. Any hesitation in replying to the inquiry, and any explanation that is not complete,—which admits that we lack information necessary to enable us to form a theory entirely free from difficulties—are equally construed into proof that the old supernatural hypothesis must be true. The theologian imagines that, when he has said God created plants and animals, he has given a full and satisfactory explanation; when the fact is, he has simply clothed his ignorance with a word. The materialist prefers frankly to admit his ignorance rather than give it a name, and deify it. He sees that law reigns throughout Nature now, and he is not disposed to believe there was ever a time when the arbitrary action of a supernatural being was in the place of the uniformity of operation now observable. He has seen science lay siege to and undermine and blow up so many of the strongholds of supernaturalism, that he has got in the way of looking for the same successful results wherever he sees the theologians entrenching themselves.

Could it be shown that all animal and vegetable forms as we now see them jumped suddenly into existence, theology would have in them a very strong argument for an Intelligent Deity; but instead of being true, it is almost as good as demonstrated, not only that the earliest forms were the most simple, but that they form the starting point from which the later and more complex structures pointed to by the theologian have been gradually developed. In the scale of life there is such nice gradation that the Naturalist cannot tell even where vegetable life ends and animal life begins. The two kingdoms run insensibly into each other, and form what Huxley aptly terms "a biological No-Man's Land." Herbert Spencer, in his reply to Martineau on Evolution, first published in the Science Monthly, says:—"If the sudden folding of a sensitive plant's leaf when touched, or the spreading out of the stamens in a cistus flower when you brush them, is to be considered a vital action of a purely physical kind, then so, too, must be considered the equally slow retraction of a polyp's tentacles. And yet, from this simple motion of an animal having no nervous system, we may pass by insensible stages, through ever-complicating forms of action, with their accompanying signs of feeling and intelligence, until we reach the highest. Even apart from the evidence derived from the ascending grades of animals up from zoophytes, as they are significantly named, it needs only to observe the evolution of a single animal to see how baseless is the assumption that there exists any break or chasm between the life that shows no mind and the life that shows mind."

It is evident to me that the manifold forms of life and beauty, viewed in the light furnished by modern science, and regarded as the result of countless modifications during innumerable ages, afford no such evidence of a conscious, intelligent God as theologians would have us believe.

The theory of Mr. Darwin attempts to explain by natural causes how the species of the globe have been developed from one or more simple germs or forms of life; and biological science promises to show that these germs or simplest forms of life have originated under natural law from inorganic matter. Some of the more astute defenders of and apologists for the popular theology, evidently foreseeing the result of continued scientific investigation, are preparing the public mind for the acceptance of the theory of evolution and development in a way that will not destroy faith in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. St. George Mivart has already told us that the theory of Mr. Darwin, and even the evolution of life from inorganic matter, is "consistent with the most strict Orthodox theology."

I think we are justified in rejecting the hypothesis which ascribes plants and animals, life and intelligence, to other than natural causes. Those who, like Professor Owen, believe in evolution under natural law and yet speak of a "purposeful development," we must ask to state, if it is so evident, what the purpose is, and to explain the innumerable abortive efforts that Nature has made. We should like to have them reconcile with their view the existence of dangerous animals and disgusting creatures, such as the tape-worm and the parasites that infest the human body; the insects that destroy our crops and rob us of the fruits of our industry; rudimentary organs, malformations, idiosyncrasy, congenital disease, and a thousand other evils or apparently purposeless objects that exist in Nature.

The laws of Nature are eternal. Theology is especially anxious now, since so many phenomena are being explained in accordance with law that in former times were ascribed to supernatural power, to make it appear that the laws of Nature must have been made, instituted, or impressed on matter. But if matter and force are eternal, these laws are also eternal; for they are but the modes in which matter acts—in which force manifests itself. We observe certain modes of action or sequences of motion. For instance, a body heavier than the atmosphere, unsupported, falls to the ground. Here we see matter acting in a certain manner, which by observation we have learned is uniform; and we call this uniform mode of action the law of gravitation. It could not have been "impressed on matter;" it could not have been "made," or "instituted;" for it is the necessary consequence of the existence of matter, and, as Moleschott says, "a stringent expression of necessity."

Formation and dissolution, progression and retrogression, are the order of Nature. Substance is eternal; its forms appear and disappear. Every object we see bears evidence of a beginning and indications of its final destruction. The globe itself had a commencement, and modern science leaves no room for doubt that it will in course of time cease to exist. "As surely," writes Sir Wm. Thompson, "as the weights of a clock run down to their lowest position, from which they can never rise again, unless fresh energy is communicated to them from some source not yet exhausted, so surely must planet after planet creep in age by age towards the sun." In view of these facts, is not absolute progress impossible? Unquestionably the condition of this world, viewed from a human standpoint, has been improving for millions of years, from the time it assumed an individual existence among the worlds of the universe. For ages nothing could subsist on it. At length fishes and aquatic plants appeared. A continent became formed and clothed with forests that absorbed the carbonic acid necessary to plants, but harmful to animals. Deprived of this noxious gas, the atmosphere became fitted for respiration of animals, since which time higher and more complete forms of animal life have succeeded those lower in the scale of existence. The earth may become still more beautiful.

Tul; higher types of animal and vegetable life may appear; and the fabled Eden of the past may be almost realized in the "good time coming" of the future. But as surely as progress commenced, it must terminate and give way to retrogression. Progress implies a beginning of the combinations which have undergone improvement, of the particular movement which has resulted in advancement. Progress during an infinite past is an evident absurdity; for it supposes that continual improvement through infinite duration—duration without beginning—is insufficient for the attainment of a definite end which is yet attainable, or for reaching a certain goal which can yet be reached in time. The supposition of permanent progress involves the necessity of the interpolation of a supernatural Being at some time in the past; for if at some time matter has not received a new quality, why should progressive action have commenced, an action which had never before characterized the world of matter? But to assume absolute progress in order to prove the existence of a Deity is not allowable. If the progress has been going on forever, why has not the perfect condition been reached, since the time has been beginningless? Büchner, alluding to a period when all animated beings will be plunged into night and death, asks:—"What are, in the presence of such facts, the pompous phrases of a philosophy about designs which become accomplished in the creation of man; the incarnation of God in history; the history of humanity as the subjective veiling of the absolute; the eternity of conscience, liberty and will? What are the life and efforts of man, and all humanity, compared with the eternal, inexorable, irresistible, half-accidental, half-necessary march of Nature? The momentary play of an ephemeron, hovering over the sea of eternity and infinity." [Force and Matter, p. 105.]

While we think the doctrine of absolute progress and the argument for a Deity founded thereon untenable, yet we believe in real progress within certain limits, and recognize not only the fact that the world and man are advancing, but the utility of such a view in the encouragement and hope with which it inspires the philanthropist.

It may be asked—why not suppose an Intelligence, an Intelligence that is an infinite enlargement of the Intelligence of man, co-existent and co-eternal with matter and some way intimately connected with it? We reply that what we call Intelligence implies finiteness, limitation, personality and form. Think of almost any faculty of the mind, and it is evident that it is incompatible with an Infinite Intelligence:—reason, the faculty by which we compare objects or thoughts and deduce conclusions; memory, by which the knowledge of things at times absent is brought to mind; imagination and ideality, which require their objects to be in the realm of the unseen; calculation and design, which suppose the necessity of cogitating, doubting, deciding, and using intermediate agencies to accomplish certain results; hope, which is made up of uncertainty and desire; benevolence, which implies sympathy with the object of its efforts, and therefore feelings in common with the party needing aid; all these faculties, and others that might be named, can be conceived as existing only in a person confined to locality, limited in time, finite in knowledge, and subject to infirmities. A God without reason, without memory, without imagination, without calculation or design, without hope, without benevolence, is a God without Intelligence, as we understand the word. Shall we say there is a great Intelligence, and yet that it possesses none of the characteristics of the only kind of Intelligence of which we know anything?

Further, we always find intelligence associated with material organization. Its character and strength, if they do not depend upon, are at least invariably indicated by the kind and quality of the physical structure. The development of the mind corresponds with its growth, and its decline corresponds with the decay of the brain and nervous system. The dissolution of the body, in the case of every animal from the worm up to man, is accompanied by the disappearance of mental phenomena. If, as we have attempted to show, there is reason to believe that thought is a form of force, the mind must lose its identity at death, and the forces of the body, including that which we call mental, must return to the great reservoir of force to reappear in other modes. Since intelligence implies an individual form of force, it is necessarily transitory and cannot therefore be the attribute of an eternal Being or Power.

Intelligence implies personality; personality requires, to use the language of Paley, "a centre in which perceptions unite and from which volitions flow." To say there can be intelligence without such a personality is to deny that intelligence is necessarily individual in its character. But that intelligence implies individuality is evident from the most superficial consideration of its nature. Since intelligence implies individuality, individuality limitation, limitation form, and form formation, it follows again that every intelligence (whether it depends on matter or some other supposed substance) must have a beginning and an end, and cannot therefore be an attribute of an existing Deity.

Here we discover the very slight difference between the Theist and the Atheist, when both fully understand their own and each other's position.

Hume, one of the acutest thinkers that ever lived, shows, in his "Dialogue on Religion," the merely nominal difference between these two systems, when each is reduced to its simplest form. The Atheist admits that there is some analogy, however remote, between the operations of Nature and the processes of the human mind, and therefore between the principle which maintains order in the universe, if I may so express myself, and the principle which concatenates and regulates the thoughts of man. The theist, on the other hand, must admit that between the human mind and what he terms the Divine Mind there is a difference inconceivably great, so great that hardly anything can be inferred respecting the latter simply from our knowledge of the former. Now what is the difference between the position of him who believes in a Power which is unlike any intelligent Being that we have ever seen, or can conceive of, and that can be expressed only by the words Unknown and Unknowable, and which governs the universe by an immanent necessity, and the position of him who admits that the decay of organic matter, the germination of a seed, and the formation of worlds, involve the necessity of operations bearing some analogy to the molecular action in the human brain?

But to conclude. As materialists, we recognize the existence of ourselves and an external world, the eternity of matter, the eternity of force, the existence of mind as a manifestation of force, the evolution of life from inorganic matter and the development of complex from the simplest forms of life, the eternal existence of law as uniform sequences of motion; we believe in progress within certain limits, but not in unending progress. Thus it will be seen that our position is not wholly one of negation, as the representatives of theology are accustomed to say.

We do not believe in a personal or intelligent God, of whose exaltation we have no satisfactory proof; but we acknowledge Nature, whose operations we behold. We think it is useless to search for the "Author of Nature," but we believe that all can profitably study the Order of Nature. We do not believe in creation, but we do believe in development. We do not look to an unseen Being for help, but we recognize Science, to use an expression of Holyoake, "as the Providence of man." We do not profess to love a Being we know nothing about, but we love our families, our friends, and our race. We do not worship what to us is a phantom, but we freely render homage to genius and worth in humanity. We never thank an unknown Something for our misfortunes, but we teach philosophical resignation to the decrees of Nature, when they cannot be averted or avoided. We do not "look for life where life may never be," but we enjoy existence here and try to make the most of it. For theology we would substitute anthropology; for religion, practical morality; for prayer, self-reliance; for piety, intellectual culture; for churches, temples of science; for love of God, love of man and a tender regard for everything that feels in common with us the consciousness of existence.

A DREAM OF NO GOD.—He dreamed that he was in the parish church, and that he saw the dead leave their graves and gather about him. "One which had just been buried in the church lay still upon its pillow, and its breast heaved not, while upon its smiling countenance lay a happy dream; but upon the entrance of one of the living, he awoke and smiled no more. A lofty, noble form, having the expression of a never-ending sorrow, now sank down upon the altar, and all the dead exclaimed, 'Christ, is there no God?' And he answered, 'There is none! I traversed the worlds. I ascended into the suns, and flew with the milky ways through the wildernesses of the heavens, but there is no God! I descended as far as Being throws its shadow, and gazed down into the abyss, and cried aloud, 'Father, where art Thou?' but I heard nothing but the eternal storm which no one rules; and when I looked up to the immeasurable void for the divine eye, it glared upon me from an empty, bottomless socket, and eternity lay brooding upon chaos.' Then there arose and came into the temple the dead children who had awakened in the churchyard; and they cast themselves before the lofty form on the altar, and said, 'Jesus, have we no Father?' And he answered with streaming eyes, 'We are all orphans, I and you; we are without a Father!' And as I fell down and gazed into the gleaming fabric of worlds, I beheld the raised rings of the giant serpent of eternity, and she enfolded the universe doubly. Then she wound herself in a thousand folds around Nature, and crushed the worlds together; and all became narrow, dark, and fearful, and a bell-hammer, stretched out to infinity, was about to strike the last hour of time, and split the universe asunder, when I awoke. My soul wept for joy that it could again worship God; and the joy and the tears and the belief in Him were the prayer. And when I arose, the sun gleamed deeply behind the full purple ears of corn, and peacefully threw the reflection of its evening blushes on the little moon, which was rising in the east without an aurora. And between the heaven and the earth a glad, fleeting world stretched out its short wings, and lived, like myself, in the presence of the Infinite Father; and from all Nature round me flowed sweet peaceful tones as from evening bells."—Jean Paul Richter.

"Seek not to isolate yourselves; imprison not your soul in sterile contemplation, in solitary prayer, in pretending to a grace which no faith not realized in works can enable you to deserve. You can only save yourself by saving others. God asks not—What have you done for your soul? but, what have you done for the brother souls I gave you? Think of these. Leave your own to God and his law. Labor unweariedly for others' good. Such is the holiest prayer."—Mazzini.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

A MORNING IN SPRING.

Once, talking with a friend, I said:
 "Fair is the world about us spread,
 Of tree and flower, rock, hill and valley,
 But never 'God' to me it said.

"And though for many years I sought
To find Him there, as I was taught,
Ne'er yet this dear dumb Babel, Nature,
In me a sense of God hath wrought.

"Henceforth I'll seek the Soul Divine
In human nature; eyes that shine
With love or mirth—some human feeling—
Sound deeper depths than star-dropt line."

Did Nature, listening out of doors,
Hear this my challenge on her shores,
A child's weak voice beside the ocean,
A wanderer's over pathless moors?

How'er it was, there came a morn
Soon after, like a thought new-born,
Ineffable, an April-morning,
With light as from new star-worlds shorn.

Up-glancing from the street's dull line,
I saw two tree-tops, elm and pine,
 Waving their boughs in that pure glory,
Like palmers bending before a shrine.

And with my soul I seemed to hear,
As 'twere a bell-tone full and clear,
"God!" uttered from the soul of Nature,
And knew at last that He was here.

Henceforth I'll seek the One Divine
In every pure sky-looking shrine,
Whether a human heart or Nature's:
The Bible has given the countersign.

MARY R. WHITL-BANK.

DEACON DODD.

Deacon Dodd uoid once feelingly said,
About his Betsey, long since dead,
"If ever an angel loved a man,
That angel, er, was Betsey Ann;
If I happened to scold her, she was so meek,
(Which the deacon did seven times a week),
"She'd cap her apron up to her eye,
And never say nothing, but only cry."
But, besides, perhaps he'd like to be told,
That Deacon Dodd, like other men,
Waded a year, and married a girl;
But he married a saint in a satinate scold.
And now 'tis the deacon's turn to be meek,
As he gets well rapped from week to week,
But rather than "up on his head," he'd burst-
He wishes the second was with the first;
But he's a deacon, and he's got his limb,
No doubt she'll live to say of him,
"If ever a saint the footstool trod,
That man—that saint—was Deacon Dodd."

LOCAL NOTICES

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE

Casa Rostra, for the week ending July 6th.—Alfred C. Mitterton, $1; A. M. Fayrer, $1; W. Wharton, 10 c.; E. Thorne, $2; J. H. F. Maguire, $1; John C. Remondini, $2; B. Marvin, 25 c.; H. N. Cook, $1; J. A. Tran, $1; P. Kibell, $2; Henry Fisher, 50 c.; S. R. Carey, $1.01; L. H. Smith, 50 c.; Parker Lindsey, 50 c.; Theodore C. Gammeter, $1.00; George W. Smith, 50 c.; J. H. Williams, 50 c.; Preston Day, $1; A. Buchanan, $1; Irvor D. Lum, $1; Rev. P. Frothingham, $2; C. F. Ames, 50 c.; R. H. Miles, 50 c.; J. T. Bennett, 25 c.; A. A. Seal, 50 c.; T. M. Lamb, $1; Joseph Major, $2; W. W. Wright, $1; A. Heymann, $10; J. J. Miller, 50 c.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons may on not use their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after mailing, will please notify us.

RECEIVED.

TEN STRONGS (SOCIAL, FINANCIAL, AND POLITICAL) OF PATRICK W. NASHY, EDITORIAL MASTER OF THE "CHURCH BY STEAMERS INNOVATION" (in the Valley Forge), Winger's Correspondent of the "Church by the New Dispensation," saint's test, New Jersey; "Performer of Bible Policy in the Southern Military and Classical Institution," and state Postmaster (under A. Johnson) at Confederate S. Woods, "witness in the State of Kentucky." Embracing his trials and troubles, Ups and Downs, Rejoicings and Wallings; likewise his Views of Men and Things; together with the Lectures, "Cursed be Cannaan," The Strongest of the People, and the Woman "Lionel," London, 1860. Each of the four of St. John, New York, Introduction by the Hon. CHARLES SUMNER. Illustrated by THOMAS NAST. Sold only by subscription. HUNTER, J. J., MACDONALD AND COMPANY, 1872.

FORTY-SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE AMERICAN UNITARIAN
 ASSOCIATION; with the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, and the Treasurer's Statement for the year ending April 30, 1872. Boston: AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSO-CIATION. 1872.

WHY I WAS EXCOMMUNICATED from the First Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis, Minn. By H. BARBARD. 1872.
OLD AND NEW. Special Number for "Commencement." Ju-

THE WESTERN, A Review of Education, Science, Literature and Art. Conducted by THOMAS DAVIDSON. St. Louis: E.
F. ROBERT & Co. $2.00.

MENSCHENTUM. Blätter für freies sittliches Leben. Redakteur Fritz Schütz. 1. Juli 1972. Philadelphia. $1.00.

THE RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW, July, 1872. Rev. JOHN H. MORRISON, D. D., Editor. Boston: L. C. ROBERTS. $5.00.

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR May and June, 1872. Washington: GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL $100,000

SHARES EACH, $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE JOURNAL, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on all shares on or before the 1st of January, 1879. All future assessments are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is therefore the duty of the Directors of the Association to solicit contributions from the public, and the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED	elsewhere.	Five	Hundred	Shares,	$50,000
THOMAS MURFORD,	New Harmony,	Ind.,	One	Share,	100
D. A. FAY, Jr.,	Brooklyn,	N. Y.,	"	"	100
Mrs L. E. BLOUNT,	Evansville,	Ind.,	"	"	100
—, —, —,	Defiance,	Ohio,	"	"	100
J. T. BRADY,	Bryan,	Ohio,	"	"	100
—, —, —,	Sabetha,	Kan.,	"	"	100
MAT PRADOT,	Northampton,	Mass.,	"	"	100
H. HETTMANN,	Cincinnati,	Ohio,	"	"	100
C. FOLSON,	Toledo,	Ohio,	"	"	100
S. C. EASTMAN,	Zanesfield,	Ohio,	"	"	100
J. O. EASTMAN,	Palmyra,	Mo.,	"	"	100
A. FOLSON,	Indianapolis,	Ind.,	"	"	100
W. F. HEILKE,	Boston,	Mass.,	"	"	200
ELIAS GALT,	Dayton,	Ohio,	"	"	200
RUEL COLB,	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	"	One	"	100
CHARLES NARR,	Susp'n Bridge, N. Y.,	"	"	"	100
—, —, —,	Worcester,	Mass.,	Two	"	200
S. F. WOODARD,	Livonia,	N. Y.,	One	"	100
H. A. MILLA,	Osborn,	Ohio,	Two	"	200
J. W. BARTLEY,	Mt. Carroll,	Ill.,	One	"	100
CHARLES ROOS,	Dover,	N. H.,	"	"	100
Mrs E. S. MILLER,	Taylor's Falls,	Minn.,	"	"	100
JAS. R. STONE,	Genova,	N. Y.,	"	"	100
D. K. JENES,	Cincinnati,	Ohio,	"	"	100
A. TAPP,	—, —, —,	"	Five	"	500
B. L. WILDER,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
FRED H. CLARK,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
G. K. WASHINGTON,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
I. T. SUTTON,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
WALT. F. ADAMS,	Pittsburgh,	Pa.,	"	"	100
Mrs C. E. NOURSE,	Cincinnati,	Ohio,	Two	"	200
JAC. FISCHER,	Shreveport,	La.,	One	"	100
G. B. HOLTMAN,	Pittsburgh,	Pa.,	"	"	100
L. VON BUCHHEIM,	Dover,	N. Y.,	Five	"	500
W. B. BOGDANSKI,	Brooklyn,	N. Y.,	One	"	100
W. P. CHAMBERS,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
TITUS L. BROWN,	Binghamton,	N. Y.,	"	"	100
A. MCD. YOUNG,	Milwaukee,	Wis.,	"	"	100
G. W. PECKHAM,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
C. T. HAWLEY,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
W. A. BECKER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
Mrs. G. D. NORMAN,	—, —, —,	"	Five	"	500
ROBT. C. SPENCER,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
C. M. LAWLER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
E. R. LELAND,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
WM. BLACKMORE,	Painesville,	Ohio,	"	"	100
E. H. RAINET,	Boston,	Mass.,	"	"	100
L. B. BUCHHEIM,	New York,	N. Y.,	Five	"	500
Mrs. J. G. KINLEY,	Richmond,	Ind.,	One	"	100
J. R. WEIST,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
JAMES SWELSER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
JOHN H. POFF,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
THOMAS DAVIS,	Indianapolis,	"	"	"	100
ALAN MCGRAW,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
BERNARD LIEBER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
CLARKSON VONNEUT,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
FRED. CHRISTMAN,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
HENRY SCHMULL,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
—, —, —,	New Bedford,	Mass.,	"	"	100
M. H. DOOLITTLE,	Washington,	D. C.,	"	"	100
M. S. BRACH,	Lawrence,	Kan.,	"	"	100
L. S. BARN,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
C. ROBINSON,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
HENRY STARO,	St. Louis,	Mo.,	"	"	100
J. C. ROCKETT,	—, —, —,	"	Two	"	200
JACOB SPUNKEL,	St. Joseph,	Mo.,	One	"	100
R. P. HALLOWELL,	Boston,	Mass.,	Five	"	500
ELIUS V. ROUSE,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
J. A. WITTE,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
E. B. DUDMAN,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
JOHN F. MILLS,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
C. J. HAYNES,	—, —, —,	"	Three	"	300
O. —, —, —,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
GEORGE W. PARK,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
FREDERICK J. SCH,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
J. W. WINKLEY,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
D. J. KING,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
Mrs R. BOWKER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
"A Friend,"	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
Mrs B. E. STEVENSON,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
M. LUCE,	—, —, —,	"	Two	"	200
HENRY N. STONE,	—, —, —,	"	One	"	100
W. W. GRANT,	Des Moines,	Iowa,	"	"	100
Mrs. F. W. HARTMAN,	New York, N. Y.,	"	"	"	100
A. WEBNER,	New York,	"	"	"	100
W. E. BOONKAK,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
J. LENAUA,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
R. G. WHITE,	Buffalo,	"	"	"	100
J. F. DIERCKSON,	New York,	"	Two	"	200
W. B. PIERCE,	—, —, —,	"	Two	"	200
JOS. T. WHITE,	—, —, —,	"	Five	"	500
L. T. IVES,	Detroit,	Mich.,	Two	"	200
E. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit,	Mich.,	Five	"	500
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphia,	Pa.,	One	"	100
Mrs. LOUETTA MOTY,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
WILLIAM BOCKELIN,	Barlington,	Iowa,	"	"	100
E. G. CHITTENDEN,	Milwaukee,	Wis.,	One	"	100
Mrs. FRED. SIMS,	Keokuk,	Iowa,	"	"	100
E. B. WOLOCOFF,	Milwaukee,	Wis.,	"	"	100
C. D. KENDRICK,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
THOS. HOOVER,	—, —, —,	"	"	"	100
Mrs. MARY C. DAVIS,	—, —, —,	"	Two	"	200
EDWARD FRUHLING,	Chicago,	Ill.,	Five	"	500
S. H. PEARCE,	Boston,	Mass.,	One	"	100
H. L. TAYLOR,	Cincinnati,	Ohio,	Two	"	200
J. L. HALL,	Chicago,	Ill.,	One	"	100
A. REYKANN,	Wheeling,	Pa.,	One	"	100
W. H. OYINGTON,	Chicago,	Ill.,	Five,	"	500

In consequence of an editorial note at the end of Prof. Newman's essay "On Truth and Historical Truthfulness," in THE INDEX, No. 180, Mr. H. S. Stebbins, of Toledo, has received a large number of orders for "The English Life of Jesus," by Thomas Scott, Esq., of England. At his request we state that the supply of copies in New York has been exhausted, and no more can be furnished for five or six weeks; but that he will fill all such orders as soon as he receives a new supply.

The Index.

JULY 18, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio."

DISTANT MUTTERINGS.

A movement has been begun which, as explained in the annexed preamble and platform, deserves a great deal more attention than it is likely to receive from the short-sighted public. These documents show that a political party has already been formed, with platform and candidates seriously put before the country, whose first and leading principle is that "ours is a Christian and not a heathen government, and that this FACT SHOULD BE RECOGNIZED IN ITS ORGANIC LAW." Of course we do not expect this party to assume any visible importance this year or next year, so far as actual influence on current events is concerned: but it is the small, angry red spot on the body politic marking the commencement of an ulcer—how dangerous a one no man can tell. We quote from the Chicago Tribune:—

The Committee appointed by the Anti-Secret Society Convention, recently held in Oberlin, Ohio, to draft a platform, met in this city yesterday. Their action confirmed the nomination of Charles Francis Adams for President, and, in place of Gen. C. H. Howard, who declined the nomination, substituted J. L. Barlow, of New York, for Vice President. The platform adopted was as follows:—

PREAMBLE

"Cheerfully accepting the ideas and doctrines of the platform before the public as in the main sound and American, we are concerned to notice that they all alike omit and ignore the fundamental doctrine of the platform of 1776, on which our Republic was built and launched—we mean the Declaration of American Independence. The framers of that instrument declare that 'God and Nature' entitle nations to be nations: that men are endowed with liberty 'by their Creator'; they appeal 'to the Supreme Judge of the world,' and place their 'firm reliance on the protection of (His) Divine Providence.' And we need not remind the American people that Abraham Lincoln, leaving his home in Springfield to assume the direction of the Government and the war, planted himself on the same platform when he requested his neighbors to remember him in their prayers to Almighty God. Yet in contempt of such a truth and such precedents, if the platforms on which we are asked to re-officer and place the administration of the American Republic for the next four years contain either the word God, or one idea of religion or morality even, we have failed to discover it, unless a general allusion to honesty, such as thieves profess, or to temperance, which relies on secrecy, be moral principles. If the platforms were made for French Atheists, they would not require the alteration of a single word! This gives us concern, because we not only know in theory, but see in fact, on the face and in the history of this globe, that liberty without God is but the liberty of cattle; and Government based on false religions, priestcraft and superstition is absolute despotism.

"We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotisms of Jesuitism, of priestcraft, and of the Lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that Civil Government, though ordained of God, is 'founded in Nature, not in Grace,' and, therefore, unregenerate men have equal civil rights with saints; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins, and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare.

"We further most firmly believe that a Government without God has none but lynch-power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, or to imprison a thief; and, while we consider Government without God as mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere awindling impositions and cheats."

PLATFORM

"We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen Government, and that this fact should be recognized in its organic law.

"3. That the prohibition of the importation and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the Temperance question.

"4. That charters of Masonic lodges, granted by our Federal and State Legislatures, must be withdrawn and their oaths suppressed; and

"5. That all secret lodges, orders or clans affecting the independence of our Government, and practically claiming that their principles and rules are more sacred and binding than the laws of the land, are more reasonable, dangerous, and destructive of our liberties, Legislatures and Courts.

"We hold also to the following condensed collation and synopsis of the various platforms now before the American people, viz:—

"1. The civil equality of men secured by our amended Constitution.

"2. Peace and arbitration of differences with nations

"3. Reciprocal free trade with nations, modified by a discriminating revenue tariff, until our national debt is paid.

"4. No repudiation; maintenance of the public credit.

"5. Protection and justice to Indians.

8. Protection to loyal citizens, whether at home or abroad, and amnesty to rebels when they cease to be such.

"7. Abolition of the franking privilege and reduction of postage, and election of Postmasters by the people.

"8. Discouragement of land and other monopolies.

"9. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States."

United States." D. EDWARDS, Chairman.
O. F. LOWERY, Secretary.

In their exultation over the rapid growth of free thought, especially in the cities and other centres of intellectual activity, some liberals lose all perception of the great oceanic law stated by Lieut. Maury, that "every current in the sea has its counter-current,"—that "wherever one current is found carrying off water from this or that part of the sea, to the same part must some other current convey an equal volume of water, or else the first would in the course of time cease for the want of water to supply it." This hydrodynamic law holds good of the tossing sea of human thought. The Gulf Stream of liberalism has its Arctic Current of fanaticism; the tendency of science to foster larger freedom of mind co-exists with a strong counter-tendency of theology to narrow its already existing bounds.

It is not wise to turn a blind eye to the reactionary forces still powerful in the Christian Church, or to despise them because they have in this country slumbered so long. During the past forty years the political struggle between Free and Slave Labor absorbed the best energies of the American mind: no people fights two great battles at the same time. But now the less visible struggle between Free and Slave Thought begins to make itself apparent. Insignificant, nay, ridiculous as this new party appears in comparison with the two great parties at present recognized in American politics, only the hopelessly superficial observer will fail to see in it the gravest feature of the impending political campaign. This "corporal's guard" of fanatics is the nucleus of a movement of which we used the following language more than two years ago (printed in the "Report of the Third Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association," and subsequently in THE INDEX for Dec. 17, 1870):—

"I refer to the attempts, laughed at thus far by the country, to get the Church established by law through a theological amendment to the Constitution. The project seems ridiculous enough, yet it is the drowning man's clutch at a straw. When such men as Dr. Cheever and Professor Taylor Lewis virtually advocate the absurd scheme in the New York Independent, the significance of the movement becomes more than trivial; and the late Pittsburgh Convention, though empty as a bubble, is a bubble that shows the drift of the current. What but conscious weakness and alarm could prompt such a violation of Puritan principles? Is it not plainly a retrogression to Catholic ground? And what could cause this retreat to the Church-and-State theory of Rome, except the fear produced by the formidable spread of free thought? Nothing short of deadly peril to the Church would ever reconcile American Christians to it. Yet we shall hear more, and not less, of this wild, despotic project. This instinct of self-preservation is strong in all organized bodies; and, reason being on the side of free thought, Christianity must rely on law. . . . I am no alarmist. I hate all wars even in self defence. I admire the spirit which rejoices in the 'sympathy of religions,' and would fain ignore their antagonisms. But I see an irrepressible conflict between the Christian Church and the modern world which has got to be fought out here in America. The question of the life or death of the Christian Church will yet shake this continent to its foundations. It will get into politics—nay, is already getting into politics. The Bible-in-schools controversy versy and the agitation of the theological amendment to the Constitution are but a hint of what is yet to come. I wish I could feel sure that this great conflict would be settled peacefully at the polls; but I do not feel sure of it. The moneyed institutions of the Christian Church are vast, its social influence is enormous, its alumbering power for evil is beyond all estimate. Representing nobody in this Association but myself,—nay, uttering what I know seems to most of them and to you to be the wild extravagance of theories pushed to absurd extremes,—I do nevertheless avow my own conviction that American civilization and the American government have a domestic enemy in the Christian Church to be compared only to the great slave power of the South. What the Anti Slavery Society did to the South, this Association is doing to the Church—awakening and exasperating an enemy whose hand may yet be raised against the nation's life. Those who are disposed to alight the warning will do well to remember the incredulity of the North down to the very outbreak of the war. The great question of political slavery has been gloriously settled; the still greater question of spiritual slavery is looming up before us. What may lie between the present hour and the hour of final settlement, I can but dimly discern by the light of ideas; but sure I am, that freedom shall yet win her crowning triumph over the Christian Church, to be remembered with the same profound thankfulness with which we now remember the fall of the Slave Confederacy."

P. S.—Since the above was in type, the Philadelphia Christian Statesman (organ of the advocates of the Christian Amendment) has brought additional information concerning the movement referred to. It says that—"The National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, held its anniversary this year at Oberlin, on the 21st, 22d, and 23d days of May last. Two hundred and thirty-five delegates and others enrolled their names as members of the Convention. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Dr. R. B. Taylor, of Summerfield, Ohio; the Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, Syracuse, New York; the Rev. J. W. Bain, of New-castle, Pa.; and Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D.D., of Allegheny." After adjournment, the Convention resolved itself into a mass meeting, and nominated Hon. Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, for President, and Gen. Charles H. Howard, of Illinois, for Vice President, of the United States. A statement in the Chicago Evening Post that Mr. Adams is a Freemason has been contradicted by his son. A committee was appointed by the same Convention to frame and publish a platform; and this committee, having met at Chicago on the 28th of June, issued the preamble and platform above published. Although ostensibly a movement for the suppression of secret societies, it is evidently in fact a movement for the Christianization of the United States Constitution. The following letter, in the same issue of the Christian Statesman from which we have taken the facts here stated, throws great light on the wily tactics by which it is hoped to secure the Christian Amendment:—

SUGGESTION.

Allow a friend of the Religious Amendment cause to offer the following suggestion:

It will be very difficult to get this nation through all the forms of an Amendment to the Constitution, supplying the lack we so much deplore. Let us move for a Convention to revise the Constitution, which can be secured if the voice of the Christian portion of the nation only be found to be for it. It ought to be revised to get out of it those clauses which so shamefully recognize the past existence of slavery and the slave-trade, and also to regulate commerce that a quarantine can be maintained against the importation and manufacture of alcoholic poisons; and by such Convention the first work done might be to insert such a preamble as we desire. I hope, as one of the committee, that the National Anti-Masonic movement may place this matter in its platform.

W. B. ORVIS.

Liberals—when you hear the proposal made to revise the United States Constitution, remember this letter!

The leading article of this issue of THE INDEX is "A Plea for Materialism," by Mr. B. F. Underwood, one of the ablest lecturers and debaters of the school of free thought to which he belongs. It is a fresh, powerful, manly, and earnest paper, well worthy of the best attention of all who desire to understand and do justice to modern materialism; and we are persuaded that every truth-lover will recognize a kindred spirit in its author—all the more because he writes in so calm and considerate a style. While we have personally arrived at different conclusions, and believe that the true tendencies of modern science (which we accept equally and unreservedly as the supreme appeal) are in a different direction, it is with no forced or feigned welcome that we extend the hospitalities of THE INDEX to Mr. Underwood as we have frequently done before to others of the same phase of belief. There is a great deal in his lecture with which we heartily sympathize; and if we differ from its main position, we do so as an individual and independent thinker, admitting the equal right of all forms of earnest thought to a fair presentation in the columns of THE INDEX. The professions of our first Prospectus have, we trust, been as honorably fulfilled as they were seriously meant.

In the same spirit we would invite special attention to the letter of Mrs. Andrews, which touchingly utters a bereaved mother's faith in the doctrines of Spiritualism. For such sincere testimony as hers we have no sentiment but that of the profoundest respect; and we publish it with the utmost willingness.

Is it strange that two such papers as the above should find place in the same journal? There will be no strangeness in it, when the world has learned how little it really knows, and how many colored rays it takes to make the one white light of truth.

A STRANGE OBJECTION.

An amiable critic of the recent Free Religious Convention in Boston, while paying an excessive tribute of praise to the courage, frankness, talent, brilliancy, and genial disposition of the leaders of the movement, amused himself and the public of his readers by contrasting the numbers and calibre of the workmen with the magnitude of their undertaking. Sketching with vivid pen the power and wealth and reputation of the Christendom that now is, the grandeur of its organizations, the depth of its traditions, the solidity of its tenure, the antiquity and dominion of its beliefs, the enormous bulk and weight of its constituency, and the manifoldness of its sources of influence, he asks how long it is likely to be before the select company of the "Free Religionists" will effect their revolution, or bring about any considerable change in the actual order of things. The tone of his remarks, which is that of mild sarcasm, implies that the apparent hopelessness of the undertaking reflects upon its character, condemns its purpose, and convicts its authors of folly.

This reasoning is weak, in any event, as it would tell against every good thing that has been undertaken for the benefit of mankind; but in the mouth of a professed Christian and an ardent disciple of Jesus, it is singular indeed. The religion he accepts has for nearly two thousand years been proposing to convert the world, pagan and civilized, to Christ, without the most attenuated shadow of a prospect of ever converging thoroughly a single race; and still it persists in avowing its purpose, and pretends to think it is on the eve of its fulfilment, though the hope from day to day looks more visionary and fantastical. And as for Jesus, he was a supreme enthusiast; he predicted that the kingdom of heaven would come in the lifetime of those about him, that angels would descend in chariots of cloud, and sweep the Roman Empire away, and that he should return himself and establish the new order of things. They that construe his language figuratively, in order to escape from its wildness, and suppose the kingdom to have been the reign of truth and love in the heart, must still admit that he indulged in the most extravagant anticipations; for this coming is at least as far off as the other—there are no signs of it yet. By what title does one who calls this fine enthusiast Lord and Master, and still believes in the triumph of his faith, cast a slur on men who set about a task of infinitely less magnitude, and with advantages of every kind on their side which he had not?

The story gives no evidence whatever that he enjoyed the privilege of supernatural help; and of natural aids the "Free Religionist" has more than he had. On his side is modern science, physical, mental, political, social, moral: on his side is the scientific method in all its applications; philosophy is on his side; discovery and knowledge of the world are on his side; erudition is on his side; literature is on his side; enterprise, the spirit of liberty, the impulse of progress are on his side; the temper of the people is on his side. Nearly everything that Jesus had to contend against he finds ready to work with him, and the obstacles which he has to contend against have lost something of their formidableness, and have lost more of their character. The task of the "Free Religionist" is arduous enough, and it will certainly not be accomplished in the lifetime of men now on the earth. But chimerical it is not, unless the whole task of the age be chimerical; foolish it is not, unless all the anticipations of the century be foolish. It is not his task, but the task of the generation with which he is only one of many workers. If evidence were required that the undertaking he proposes is less discouraging than many think, it may be found in the courteous way in which the writer we have in mind speaks of it and of the men who conduct it. When sectarian papers speak respectfully of the avowed enemies of sectarianism, the first blush of the new dawn is apparent. O. B. F.

"THE NAME AND THE THING."

Under the above title, the Golden Age of May 25th offers some criticisms of a contribution which appeared in No. 124 of THE INDEX, entitled "What's in a Name?" The editor says:—"In a question of words we have no interest whatever. Call the rose by any other name, and so long as the essential properties are preserved, we shall not object. But we have a suspicion that those who make war upon a name are anxious to get rid of something it stands for and represents, and would be equally opposed to any new term which should gather into itself all the significance and suggestions of the old. It is not the name merely, but also some essential element of the thing, that is antagonized."

In a question of words merely, neither have we any interest whatever. But when words embody and become the vehicle of thought, we have an interest in words. We doubt if the rose is quite as sweet when called by another name. There is an aroma in the word. This word "Christian" has, indeed, a sweet odor, but it is a bitter-sweet, and it is this fact that we would have others recognize and acknowledge. If the editor of the Golden Age calls us a "Christian," we suppose he intends to compliment us, and we should not feel insulted. He uses the word in the sweet sense, and so we accept it as he intended it,—just as we once thanked a well-meaning Mormon who christened a moral lecture of ours a "good Mormon sermon." At such times, of course, we mentally close our nostrils against offensive odors—courtesy silence criticism.

But, after all, the odor is offensive, and no rose-watering will sweeten it. The word "Christian," as a matter of fact, is used by all Catholics and by most Protestants as designating, not simply one who is moral, but one who "believes in Christ" and accepts him as Lord and Master, Savior and Redeemer of the world. The Golden Age cannot force this doctrinal element from the word. Mr. Abbot and those who agree with him do not wish to do it. They accept facts as they are. They take the word as the past has made it, without trying to tinker it up to fit modern thought. If we oppose the name, it is because it stands for ideas which we oppose. The doctrine of the spiritual authority and kingship of Jesus we believe to be an "essential element" of the Christian religion, and that whatever else a man must be to be a "Christian," he must believe in Jesus as in some sense the Messiah prophesied in Jewish Scriptures, must obey him as Ruler, follow him as Lord and Leader, and trust in him as Redeemer and Savior of his soul. You may believe the Beatitudes, and believe and practise the ethics of Christianity; but unless you believe in Jesus as Messiah, Leader, Lord and Savior, in our opinion you lack the "one thing needful" to entitle you to call yourself a Christian. This is what we do not believe concerning Jesus, and therefore we do not call ourselves Christian. We try, however, to be something as good and more rational.

The Golden Age says: "From the fact that names and things grow together and become attached, if not assimilated, each to the other, so that it is as impossible ever to effect a complete detachment as to get the honey out of the hive, or oil out of the cask, or precious odor out of the woods which have held it, we shrink from attempting to transfer the contents of this word to another, lest some essential portion should spill by the way." We assent to every word of this statement. We shrink from all attempts to convey the honey of Christianity from the hive where the ages have stored it up. We say:—"There is as pure honey there as can be found anywhere; but we can see a good deal of old wax, motus' eggs, and some dead drones in it, which take away our appetite and admiration. Leave it all in the old hive. Let us get the honey from new hives. Let us put the new wine into new bottles." Does the Golden Age suppose there is only one bee-hive in the world, and that the one that Jesus left us? Or that there is only one word as sweet as "Christian," or ever can be? Such an idea implies that mankind for eighteen hundred years have been nothing but drones, feeding on the honey which the busy-working apostles hived long ago. There is no need that we attempt to "transfer the contents of the word Christian to another word." That is what we protest against; and those who are attempting it do "spill it by the way." The human soul puts into words all the honey there is in them; and are we to suppose the human soul died with Jesus or is limited to Judaea? The honey-and-hive-making power is not dead nor dying, and we make new words for our new thoughts, and as new and sweet, broad and deep, as our best thoughts. We can coin words as well as the Antiochians.

Better even have a nameless religion than a name that misnames and misleads. The growing thought can wait. When the shell hardens, the nut stops enlarging. If we have but one name, it must be able, like the Arabian tent in the fable, to expand with the expanding wants. The mystic AUM (OM) of the ancient Hindus, that stood for their highest God and his infinite attributes, was name enough to lift up the Hindu soul God-ward. "Christian," certainly, is a word not large enough; and if "Radical" or "Free Religionist" is still too small, put on a Sixteenth Amendment. They tell us that the word "religion" ought to be as objectionable as "Christian," because it is as indefinite and confusing. It might be, did we not prefix that word "Free." That stamps a pretty clear meaning upon the coin. Any one who cares to know about our views and principles will be led in the right direction and find what he seeks, generally, by the index of those names. If he cannot read or reason, it is not the fault of the names. If he can suggest a more excellent word, we will use it—or more excellent way, we will walk in it.

W. H. S.

EXPLORING PALESTINE AND EXPLORING LONDON.

The impudence of London radicals is getting to be intolerable. No set of respectable and pious people who gather comfortably together to discuss some nice little project of their own, can be sure that this huge, roaring metropolis will not send some huge, roaring representative of it to throw a bomb-shell among them. The Royal Institution, for instance, is an eminently quiet and respectable place, even aristocratic, and it never had a more aristocratic assembly than met there a few evenings ago, on occasion of the annual meeting of the Association for the exploration of Palestine. The bland and deeply religious Archbishop of York never looked more genial and happy than when he took the chair on this occasion; and the faces of other eminent prelates and personages, though clouded momentarily by allusions made in the secretary's report to the demise of Sir Roderick Murchison and Dr. N. McLeod, brightened again as the same functionary proceeded to state that their receipts during the year had amounted to the snug sum of £2,359 9s 8d, and that their financial position was "satisfactory." A half-dozen eminent personages were declared to be digging away at Ramleh and Jerusalem, with good hope that something new would turn up there which would be for the edification of Christians throughout the world. His Grace of York made the neatest of speeches, in which he stated that, during the five years in which the Association had existed, nearly twenty thousand pounds had been devoted to its object of making discoveries in Palestine, and that this country, which had already the pride and honor of having done more than any other to circulate the Bible, would no doubt add to that honor the services it was making in exploring the land of the Bible. Viscount Osington moved a resolution to the effect that the meeting pledged itself to carry on the exploration of Palestine, and the resolution was seconded and supported by Mr. Macgregor, a converted descendant of Rob Roy, and Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., the old enemy of the North and supporter of slavery, who grinds out his words distressingly even when he is happy, as he always is when he is directly or indirectly administering pious pokes into the ribs of the Jews or other pagans. It is rumored that, whenever Mr. B. Hope hears that the missionaries have burnt a Chinese or other village because they will not listen to the Gospel, he sends to the Church Missionary Society another thousand pounds. He has indeed established of himself a little missionary breeding-school at Canterbury.

But when Hope was through, and all was felicitous in the meeting I am describing, there arose a singular-looking fellow,—one in whose face was blended the characteristics of laborer and thinker,—whose brow was all clouded and the lightning already beginning to dartle about his eyes. "Mr. Chairman," he thunders out,—and at these words the assembly grows pale. Who can this be who says plain "Mr. Chairman," as if he were in a workman's club, instead of saying "My Lord!" and bowing low to His Grace the Archbishop of the second See in age and power in Great Britain. "Who is it?" "Name!" So cry a dozen voices at once. The Archbishop sweetly (he is about the next sweetest man in England to Earl Granville—Granville being next sweetest to Bishop Wilberforce, better known as Saponaceous Sam) says—"Will the gentleman be so—" "Mooney!" cries the man, who seemed at first to be hurling an epithet at His Grace, but added, to the general relief,—"My name is Thomas Mooney. I rise," quoth Mooney, "to move an amendment to the resolution before the meeting. I do so because this meeting is laboring under a gross delusion." Oh, but this was horrible! Just fancy an Archbishop laboring under a gross delusion, or any of their lordships present—not to speak of Mr. Beresford Hope—being connected with anything so vulgar as a gross delusion! All waited breathlessly for the next words of Mooney; nobody could faintly dream what he was driving at. "Instead of going all over the world," cries the orator, "to find ruins, it is the duty of every man here to be trying to relieve the ignorance, misery and destitution all around him in London." (Here there was a burst of laughter. Mooney was suspected of getting off a joke; but he was terribly serious, and the laughter of the aristocratic assembly only added to the tragical depth of his voice.) "After you have recovered Palestine, you will only have an elephant on your hands, and after having disturbed and alarmed the people of that region, and dug up Solomon's temple, you will not have added a whit to anybody's information on any subject of the slightest importance to mankind. I call upon you to consider that, beyond all other cities of the earth, London is the city of ruins. And I beg to move the following amendment:—That, while we acknowledge the importance, in a historical sense, of the exploration of Jewish ruins in Palestine, there appear to this meeting ruins of another kind—Christian ruins, abounding in the city of London, which more pressingly demand the exploration and attention of the thoughtful Christian,—ruins of humanity, enwrapped in squalor, poverty, ignorance, vice, crime, covering at least one-third of the entire population of London."

When Mooney had got through this, there was a perfect roar of laughter; but the laughter suddenly stopped, and the pious faces were flushed with anger. Mooney was about to speak further, but a din of voices interrupted him, and it was some minutes before the meeting grew calm, even though the disturber had taken his seat. Then His Grace, the Archbishop, with a very nervous look and voice, said:—"The amendment is not seconded; and if it were, I should rule 'it is not competent,' and refuse to put it to the meeting." This remark was a signal for cheers. "I deny," said His Grace, "I deny with the utmost powers of my voice, that this society has diminished or abated by one single shilling the efforts made by other philanthropic movements." Here followed loud cheers, and the original resolution was passed with only one dissenting voice.

Nevertheless that one voice comes from a region where there are many voices,—voices that daily curse every priest or prelate in England, who leave for their lips nothing but curses. It may be in a sophistical sense that the Palestine Exploration Society has not directly abated philanthropic endeavor at home; but it is certainly true that, if these church-besotted prelates and noblemen devoted one-half the effort they put forth in distant lands to the rescue of the wretched of London, the vice and despair around them would be sensibly diminished. If the twenty thousand pounds which this Association has devoted to digging about Jerusalem had been devoted to the exploration of Bethnal Green, there would have been revelations not so antiquarian, perhaps, as the Moabite Stone (the net result of their five years thus far), but startling enough to show the moral littleness of these pious idlers on large salaries, in whose interest these exploration movements are got up.

Notwithstanding the laughter and the cheers amid which Mr. Thomas Mooney was suppressed, the grand folk were exceedingly annoyed by the incident to which I have referred, and went off soon after with moody looks. They had witnessed one more isolated omen of the many they know to be just beneath the horizon, ready to overwhelm their sky at a not inconceivably distant period.

According to Emerson, most of our travelling is done by those who "carry ruins to ruins." He expects, especially, the scientific explorers, for Human Knowledge travels on their legs. The Society for exploring Palestine obtains money, and gets government aid, on the ground of science; but it is a great humbug. There are hundreds of places in which science is far more interested than in Palestine. The Society is made up of the clergy, who wish to impress on the people that every old stone they find or manufacture with an inscription on it is another confirmation of the divine authority of the Bible. Prof. Palmer, and one or two other men of science, are indeed concerned in the Association; but it is because it gives them advantages for other purposes—those of philological investigation in the East. The money mainly goes for the basest bibliography.

But why should Mooney protest against the devotion of twenty thousand pounds to the exploration of Palestine? What is the whole of Christianity but a diversion of human energies, "scholarship, wealth, power, from the heavy needs of to-day, and their devotion to the hunting of ancient Moabite stones and the exhumation of Syrian ruins—the carrying of our inward philosophic and theological ruins to the ruins of the worn-out creeds and decayed speculations of long-perished, semi-barbarous tribes?"

M. D. CONWAY.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

The weather is too hot to grumble. And yet I gave two lectures yesterday to at least respectable audiences, as well in number as character.

But I cannot get over my old anti-slavery habit of grumbling. My associates always scolded about it, and said I was too blue—painted and prophesied under the cloudiest skies, even down to the opening of the seals of rebellion and war.

And yet I never said the war would be the bloodiest on record,—engaging millions of fighting men, lasting four dreary years, and costing half a million lives (the President one of them) and thousands of millions of dollars in money; together with a national demoralization at which justice, reason and humanity may well stand appalled, and from which we cannot recover in a generation!

I never painted so black as all that. But history to-day reads thus; and I saw and felt too much of its foreshadowings to be a cheery prophet or gay and hilarious worker, and did not in those earlier days wonder that my fellow-laborers named me Jeremiah and called my utterances "Lamentations."

There is a little of the same spirit still inspiring me. I do rejoice greatly, however, in the success and prospects of THE INDEX. Be as charitable as truth and justice will allow towards the Spiritualists, for I assure you they have among them many of the best and bravest workers in the world, both men and women.

The Woman Suffrage movement has gone under a cloud. Only one paper, so far as I know, has even a name to live west of the Rocky Mountains; and that has sold out to Gen. Grant. Rather, perhaps, it is another "gift" added to the many he "has been prevailed upon" to accept before, if Democratic testimony, confirmed by Mr. Sumner's recent masterly speech in the Senate, be reliable; and most of it none now dispute.

Even eagle-eyed Miss Anthony seems to be dazed, if not crazed, by political sorceries now practised on all hands; talking about "splinters" in one party platform and "planks" in another, as though either party would not make its platform the altar of sacrifice for the Woman Cause, the moment it was presented there. I should say, trust them not.

The Free Religious movement, outside of THE INDEX, appears to me wanting in spirit, in purpose, in power. It may need money. It certainly does need missionaries. It needs a class of devoted, brave, cultivated men and women like the first Christian apostles; or like the early Abolitionists, who used to go on foot and sometimes on bare feet, but with head and heart so on fire with the divinity of their mission as to defy the elements, snow, rain, cold or heat, as well as dare every other opposition.

The chariot of the world's salvation does not yet go alone; is not yet hitched to a star. The popular religions never flourished as now. Political parties were never so corrupt and unscrupulous as now. Perhaps one fact explains the other.

HUDSON, MASS., July 1, 1872.

P. P.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errors.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S LECTURE.

SALEM, Ohio, June 20, 1872.

MR. EDITOR:—

I herewith forward the manuscript of Mr. Underwood's lecture, concerning which I wrote you sometime since, and with your permission would like to make a word of explanation. When Mr. Underwood was in Salem last April, he and I had a conversation respecting your able and interesting lecture upon the "God of Science." It seemed to us that you had misconceived, to some extent, the true position of the modern materialist. Mr. Underwood wondered if you would publish a lecture giving his conception of the materialism of the present time. I thought that I knew you well enough to say that you would. I wrote you concerning it, and your answer was what I had anticipated; I forwarded it to Mr. Underwood, and he prepared this lecture, which he delivered here last Sunday to an audience that filled Broad Gauge Hall and that gave its hearty endorsement to the lecture by a vote of thanks to Mr. Underwood without a dissenting voice.

I hope sometime to have the pleasure of making you personally acquainted with Mr. Underwood. He is a young man of fine ability, and he is one of the most efficient workers in the cause of free thought in the country. He has lectured in twenty-six States, and has in two years and a half held not less than fifty debates with various representatives of the Christian religion. In the great work of securing mental freedom for our country, he is to be a prominent man, and will, I doubt not, have occasion often to shake hands with you as a brother-worker.

With best wishes, I am faithfully yours,

CH. ELLIS.

EARNEST TESTIMONY TO SPIRITUALISM.

CASCADILLA PLACE, ITHACA, N. Y., June 27, 1872.

MR. F. E. ARBOT:

Dear Sir,—I do not propose to write a formal communication to THE INDEX, but prefer to address myself to you as to a friend, leaving you to use my letter as you see fit.

My husband, A. A. Andrews, of Springfield, had the pleasure of an introduction to and of some conversation with you; and my sister has once or twice sent you a few lines that have appeared in your able paper, which we always receive with a welcome. Her note written last fall, from Northampton, alluded to the terrible and fatal accident that took from us my youngest son, a boy of twelve years of age. He had always been rather delicate, and his active, fearless spirit led him into so many dangers that I had watched over him with increasing and anxious care, which he repaid by a tender and considerate devotion unusual in boys of his age.

I will not dwell upon the first maddening shock. I had lost infant children and other relatives before, and had borne the grief of bereavement as others bear it, hoping that somehow, and somewhere, we might meet again; but I never realized, until this agonizing blow revealed it to me, how insufficient was this baseless trust. I have always been sceptically inclined. While the weary heart sought rest in absolute faith, the mercilessly analytical mind would not let it find repose in peaceful conviction. Really to believe in immortality because others believed it, and taught accordingly, has always been simply impossible to me; and while I have regarded that intitutional perception which suffices for some as a gift, like genius, to be admired and craved, though unattainable by effort, I could not look upon faith based upon authority as rational or beautiful: and so, in the wild agony of this terrible bereavement, everything like a sufficing trust in Divine love or a future existence was swept away, and I was left helplessly desolate. This was my condition only a few months ago.

Now a light has illumined all those gloomy depths of mind and heart. In place of doubt and rebellion, I have assurance and resignation. Existence, with its racking trials, is no longer hopelessly dreary to me. A dreadful enigma impossible to solve; for the radiance of a better life is shed upon it, making it seem but the rough pathway to a joyous and beautiful home.

Had I space and time, I could perhaps make you more fully comprehend to what I owe this happy change; but I have had so much in the way of evidence to raise me from doubt to a belief which is to me like knowledge, that I shall only be able to detail to you a very few among the many proofs which I have needed and received. I should not have made this effort to show you something of the truth as I see it, but for some remarks upon Spiritualism lately made by you in THE INDEX, which seemed to justify reply; and although those remarks appeared to me not quite just, I trust, in this appeal, to that liberal spirit and that freedom from dogmatic assertion and prejudice which generally characterizes what you say, and which I believe to be honestly and earnestly your aim. In the fewest possible words, I will tell you of some of my experiences, and at the same time reply to a question as put in a late issue of your paper, namely,—"What phenomena occur?" In order to do this I must enter into particulars, as general statements in such a case amount to nothing.

I have had communications purporting to come from my spirit child, written upon a slate which was sometimes laid in full view, with a fragment of pencil beneath it, upon the top of a table (not always the same table, and not always at the house of the medium), and sometimes held by myself; which communications were not only signed with a full name (unknown to the medium) of my boy, but which contained phrases, allusions, and modes of expression so characteristic of him that, after many repetitions and ever-recurring tests, doubt became to me more difficult than belief. Many of these tests, trifling in themselves, were to me stronger evidences of identity than I can make a stranger fully understand or appreciate.

These manifestations took place in sittings with Dr. Slade, of New York; and on one occasion, after my return from that city to Springfield, my sister went on and spent a week at the house of this most remarkable medium. On leaving home, she took with her a handkerchief belonging to me, thinking that any article of mine might possibly, as she expressed it, serve as a magnet to draw my loving boy to her. This handkerchief was lying upon her lap during one of her sittings; and, while both her hands and those of the medium were together upon the table (no third person being present), it was thrown up, falling close to their hands, tied into a singular knot, and immediately the following words were written upon the slate:—"Dear Aunt, I knew it was Mother's. I was present when she gave it to you, thinking it would help me to come again; but I could have come just as easily without it." Now not one word had been said to any one of the handkerchief's being mine, and it was impossible that any one could have known it, or why it had been given or taken.

I have seen and felt, in broad daylight, a hand in shape and size like that of my son, playing with my dress, patting and caressing me, and taking out my watch by pulling upon the guard. This guard used to be his, and after these manifestations the following words were written:—"Dear Mother, always wear my guard; I love to see you have it."

On asking, in a daylight sitting,—"Can my little boy kiss my hand as he so often used to do?"—I felt, as distinctly as I ever felt his kisses when he was with us here, warm lips pressed over and over again upon the hand which rested on my knee.

I have had a spirit hand write a letter on paper placed upon my lap, when the room was sufficiently lighted by gas for me to see distinctly the long lead pencil held in the white fingers, and remaining in sight, directly under my eyes, until the writing was finished, when both hand and pencil disappeared; and in a moment afterwards the latter was thrown upon the table, close to our hands, from a point opposite to where the medium sat.

I have seen the faces of spirits within three feet of me, about whose identity I could no more mistake than I could fail to recognize members of my own family who are still in the material body. I have watched these faces condense and form from what seemed a luminous mist. I have seen them smile brightly and naturally upon me.

I have had one among them, in compliance with a suggestion from the impulse of the moment, turn away, showing me the back of the head, that I might recognize the naturally curling hair falling upon the neck as worn in life. I have watched the moving lips, and heard whispered messages of love and warning sent to absent friends.

I have had the hand so like my boy's lift itself at my request to my lips, that I might kiss it again and again; and this same warm, life-like hand afterwards patted me first on one cheek and then on the other, so that the little loving slaps would be distinctly heard as well as felt.

But I fear to weary your patience, while I have still so much to tell that selection is difficult. I will therefore only say that these are a few of those "phenomena" about which you ask, and by means of which I have received through the senses of sight, touch and hearing,—the same evidence which assures me of the presence of friends still on the earth, that the loved and seeming-lost are living, and loving, and near me still. And the evidence afforded my reason has been as strong as that through the bodily senses.

Who recognized "Mother's" handkerchief, and alluded to words spoken as it passed from my keeping to my sister's? Who wrote—"My guard?" What hand was that whose grasp was firm and strong, and which I saw many times, in broad daylight, as plainly as I see my own? Whose lips were pressed lovingly to my hand when no mortal being was present who could by any possibility have touched it? What power wrote, and what intelligence and memory dictated words, which I heard written, as the fragment of pencil moved over the slate, touched by no hand of flesh? What magic produced faces which the medium had never seen? Whose voice whispered words of warning, the need of which was only known to the parties concerned?

I have answered your question. Will you answer mine? Or if this be, in the nature of things, impossible to you as yet, will you at least think of what I have told you in simple words—without exaggeration or false coloring?

I love truth and hate deception as heartily as you can do. Will you not set preconceived ideas aside, and receive, as at least worthy of some respect and consideration, my testimony to facts such as not I alone, but thousands of reliable witnesses—among them men as cautious and once as sceptical as yourself—know to be genuine?

As for me, I was a Thomas, and demanded proof. Thank God, I have received it; and a peace I cannot express in words fills all the deep places of my soul. My darling child, for whom I mourned so hopelessly, is to me now as truly living as when I could see him daily by my side. No unnatural winged angel, playing upon a harp and singing psalms, but loving, joyous, impetuous, every mental and moral attribute unchanged—a boy, and my boy still. After a life of ceaseless doubt and distrust, I have found rest at last. I am content that, in this short stage of being, the will of the Creator should be done, through the laws that govern matter (dreadful as the brute force seems to us oftentimes) as well as through those scarcely more mysterious agencies by which he acts upon spirit. "If he thunder by law, the thunder is yet his voice;" and while I believe in no especial providence and no miracle, I do believe that, mediately always and according to fixed laws, but none the less surely and unceasingly, his wisdom and his love govern all things, and that in his hands all his children are forever safe from real and lasting harm. I see the death of the body but as a needful change, which none need dread save those who, shutting their eyes to the light of truth, devoting themselves only to selfish gratification, and refusing to use the reason God has given them, have cause to dread the future they make inevitable for themselves, either here or elsewhere. I believe that, after the grosser elements of being are cast off, we shall still be ourselves, and whatever (within the limits peculiar to individuals and to all finite beings as such) we make ourselves. Always learning, always doing, never needing nor asking an idle bliss, but devoting all the energies of the enfranchised soul to the attainment of even higher knowledge and the performance of ever nobler uses, being blest in the ceaseless development of every mental and moral faculty, and finding in endless progression the only freedom and the only joy that can satisfy a human soul. May the faith and hope that gladden my spirit find a way to other doubting minds and suffering hearts, and may the time soon come when friends of progress, like yourself, may conscientiously investigate and fearlessly proclaim those now unpopular truths, which, rational in themselves and founded upon evidence, will take the place of superstitious faith based upon miracle and authority, and leave no poor homeless soul out in the wintry cold and darkness of hopeless unbelief.

Yours very respectfully,

LOUISA ANDREWS.

FACTS FOR SPIRITUALISTS.

A gentleman was in communication with a spiritual medium. The medium was in the trance condition. Among other questions asked by the gentleman were many pertaining to the number, age, time of birth and death of different members of his family,—all of which were answered correctly as the gentleman believed.

One question was—"When did my son George die?" Answer—"May 1, 18—." Mr. T. (the gentleman referred to), much impressed with the result of his interview with the medium, went home and related the details to his wife and children. The son George referred to had been dead some thirty years, and there was no family record of the date of his death. Yet Mrs. T. was able to satisfy her husband that the date of George's death was "May 2, 18—." The next day Mr. T. returns to the medium and repeats the questions of the day before. Again all are answered correctly, the date of George's death being given as May 2, instead of May 1.

The following Sunday Mr. T. visited the graveyard where his son was buried. On the head-stone yet standing, the date of the son's death was engraved "May 3, 18—," thus correcting the second time his own impressions. Again he went to the medium. Again she answered all questions correctly, giving the date of George's death—"May 3."

Compare these facts with those given by "E. W." in THE INDEX, June 29; and the Spiritualism of reading through three thicknesses of paper, and of giving a description of a deceased person to a relative, is explained without calling on departed spirits.

The medium simply reflects the mind of the questioner.

J. E. P.

MILWAUKEE, July 1, 1872.

In a recent debate, a member of the California Legislature exclaimed:—"The honorable gentleman, from Calaveras county is undoubtedly a person of great abilities, a man of talent, a natural-born genius; but there is one thing which I defy him to do, and that is, to bite the bottom of a frying-pan without smutting his nose."

The rising generation "age" rapidly in Detroit. A mature specimen, eight years old, was hunting round the police station for a stray father the other night. "You see," he remarked, with blid exultation, "the gov'nor's a little wild yet, but he'll grow out of it."

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PARAPHRASE FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is a startling demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no sabler, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of figures, facts, and interesting extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR E. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at this Index Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 28, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

OF

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address S. H. MORSE,
128-11 25 BROADFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLEST,
ARCHITECTS,
78 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[180-181]

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religion movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word"); "Lecture on the Bible" by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism" by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 28, Toledo, Ohio.

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS
of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.
[181cow17]

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. K. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA K. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONE, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

Name	Address	Shares	Amount
D. R. LOCKE	Toledo, O.	Twenty	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER	"	Fifteen	1,500
C. CONE	"	"	1,000
EDWARD BISSELL	"	"	1,000
F. E. ABBOT	"	Forty	4,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY	"	Ten	1,000
GUIDO MAX	"	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON	"	"	1,000
E. P. BARNETT	"	"	1,000
H. E. HOWE	"	Three	300
W. C. FISK	"	"	300
V. M. HITCHCOCK	"	"	300
V. E. KERN	"	"	300
ALANSON WOOD	"	"	300
WILLIAM KRAUSE	"	Five	500
J. Q. HOLWAY	"	One	100
JOS. E. MARR	"	"	100
C. AUGHARD	"	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS	New York, N. Y.	Thirty	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON	Newport, R. I.	Two	200
ALEX. COCHRAN	Franklin, Pa.	Five	500
GEO. ROADLEY	Cincinnati, O.	Two	200
MISS A. HALL	Northampton, Mass.	One	100
G. N. JENNINGS	Tonica, Ill.	"	100
J. SEDGWICK	Falmesville, O.	"	100
CHARL. POST	Monroe, Mich.	Three	300
HERBY MILLER	Sacramento, Cal.	Five	500
L. R. SUNDERLAND	Quincy, Mass.	One	100
J. L. WHITING	Boston, " "	"	100
LOUIS BRISTOL	Croydon, N. H.	"	100
J. E. SUTTON	Olaiba, Kan.	"	100
SAM. T. TURNER	"	"	100
J. M. HADLEY	"	"	100
W. H. SPENCER	"	"	100
JON. F. BARRETT	"	"	100
E. W. WELLS	"	"	100
FRANK PRATHER	La Grange, Ind.	"	100
E. F. DRUMMOND	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
J. T. DICKINSON	Wellsville, Kan.	One	100
W. J. POTTER	New York, N. Y.	One	100
G. C. GLATTE	Middlefield, O.	Fourteen	1,400
W. C. GANNETT	New Bedford, Mass.	Three	300
MISS M. C. PARKINS	Kendallville, Ind.	"	100
MISS S. EMERSON	Boston, Mass.	One	100
MISS E. EMERSON	Dover, N. H.	"	100
W. H. DOWNES	Birmingham, Ct.	"	100
B. B. SMITH	Lansing, Mich.	"	100
R. B. SMITH	Warren, Pa.	"	100
W. C. RUMEL	Ithaca, N. Y.	"	100
WM. CLARKE	Toledo, O.	Three	300
C. L. SMITH	"	One	100
J. N. LYMAN	Cincinnati, " "	Twenty	2,000
L. G. FELCH	Monroe Centre, Mass.	One	100
A. FOLSON	Boston, Conn.	Three	300
L. O. BASS	Colebrook, Conn.	One	100
S. E. BOWALL	Boston, Mass.	Five	500
ELIAB WRIGHT	"	"	100
E. B. WARD	Detroit, Mich.	Twenty	2,000
A. D. WILK	Dayton, O.	One	100
S. S. BOWEN	Keokuk, Iowa	"	100
WM. JONES	Peekskill, N. Y.	"	100
S. H. DAVIS	Oakalocosa, N. H.	"	100
J. H. YOUNG	"	"	100
JOS. HAYES	"	"	100
G. P. FOLSON	"	"	100
"A FRIEND"	"	"	100
MISS H. E. PARKINS	"	"	100
WILLIAM GREEN	Boston, Mass.	Two	200
"A FRIEND"	Orange, N. J.	One	100
D. B. STEPHAN	Lowell, Mass.	"	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTIAN	Brattleboro, Vt.	"	100
C. W. PARCOT	New York, N. Y.	"	100
EDW. M. DAVIS	Kelley's Island, O.	Two	200
Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT	Philadelphia, Pa.	One	100
MISS M. A. WRIGHT	Jersey City, N. J.	"	100
A. S. BROWN	Worcester, Mass.	"	100
EDWIS BROWN	"	"	100
R. P. HALLOWELL	Boston, " "	Five	500
BENJ. RODMAN	New Bedford, " "	Three	300
H. B. CLARKE	"	"	100
FRANK J. SCOTT	Toledo, O.	Six	600
M. L. HOLBROOK	Honiton, Me.	Ten	1,000
W. H. BOUGHTON	New York, N. Y.	One	100
HERBY H. RICHARDSON	"	"	100
E. G. BURNETT	"	Two	200
J. E. FOLLETT	Webster, Mass.	"	100
JOS. WARBASSE	Winona, Minn.	One	100
T. M. LANE	Newton, N. J.	"	100
W. H. DYKE	Franklin, Pa.	"	100
W. H. SPALDING	Mass., " "	"	100
LOUIS BELMONT	Prairie du Chien, Wis.	"	100
LEWIS KUTZ	Duluth, Minn.	"	100
SAM'L WARBASSE	Philadelphia, Pa.	Two	200
W. L. KATHE	Augusta, Kan.	One	100
W. E. HERRICK	La Fayette, N. J.	"	100
C. H. HARRIS	Amesbury, Mass.	"	100
MISS I. THOMSON	Boston, " "	Two	200
BENJ. HALLOWELL	Dover, N. H.	One	100
MISS M. R. VAN RENSSLAER	Sandy Spring, Md.	"	100
B. B. STONE	N. Y. City, " "	"	100
WM. ROTCH	Warren, Penn.	"	100
J. WINTAKER	Fall River, Mass.	Two	200
S. B. ROYCE	New Bedford, Mass.	Five	500
MRS. R. D. FRANCIS	Kerhonkson, N. Y.	One	100
CHAS. BRIDGES	Boston Highland, Mass.	Two	200
G. H. BRIDGES	New York, N. Y.	One	100
J. T. CLARKSON	Salem, Mass.	"	100
C. W. NEWTON	Amesbury, Mass.	Two	200
HENRY KIESE	Casleton, Ill.	One	100
OTTO KLEMM	Toledo, O.	Two	200
H. G. NEUBERT	"	One	100
A. RUMKEL	"	Two	200
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.	Detroit, Mich.	Thirty	3,000
T. K. PECK	Co. Toledo, O.	Thirty	3,000
"	Westminster, Ct.	Two	200

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 28 Vosey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 28, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 20

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 40

Either Series, 50 Cents; Both, $1.00.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[28-33] 19 PICKFORD ST., BOSTON.

CHAPTERS

FROM

THE BIBLE OF THE AGES.

Edited and Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS.

FOURTEEN CHAPTERS.

Selected from Hindu Vedas, Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Egyptian Divine Pymander, Talmuda, Bible, Philo Judaeus, Plato, Pythagoras, Marcus Aurelius, Epictetus, Al Koran, Scandinavian Eddas, Swedenborg, Luther, Novels, Remon, Tyndal, Max Muller, Temple, Elias Hicks, Channing, Garrison, Lucrilia Mott, Higginson, Bushnell, Parker, Davis, Emma Hardinge, Beecher, Tuttle, Abbot, Frothingham, and others. Teachings and inspiration from many centuries and peoples.

"Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it."

The Detroit Post says:—"It is a readable book, and destined to be much read. Whether or not we accept the name chosen by the compiler, it will be found full of some of the highest, noblest thoughts, inspiring men to a better life, that have been uttered since literature existed."

The Detroit Tribune says:—"It has an introduction and an appendix from Mr. Stebbins' pen. It makes a very handsome volume, and in its arrangement and preparation gives ample evidence of the research and laborious study involved in the well executed task of its compilation."

400 pages; Price $2. Enclose that sum and it will be mailed Postage Paid to any address.

G. B. STEBBINS, Detroit, Michigan.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT.

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1300 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 708 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[136-151.]

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $3.50 and 75 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JULY 20, 1872.

WHOLE No. 134.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS PROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLGREN, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, ROY. CHARLES VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATHSON, Business Agent.

Positivism in Theology.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[From "The Christian Examiner" for March, 1866.]

Positivism, properly speaking, is the name of that great reform in scientific method which has been gradually working itself out during the last three hundred years, and which, like the infant Hercules, is struggling even in its cradle the serpents of superstition and ignorance. It gives unmistakable signs of extending to every department of human thought, and achieving a radical revolution even in the treatment of the most recondite problems of philosophy and theology. It is so irresistible in its influence, because it is an all-pervasive spirit and method, rather than a system of definite results: It is anterior and superior to all systems, because these are, so to speak, merely its successive avatars or incarnations. Utterly regardless of consequences, and quite insensible to hope and fear, it devotes itself solely to the discovery of truth: fanciful hypothesis, impatient guess-work, dogmatic assumption, christianism of every name and nature, it sternly rules out of court, and proceeds calmly to weigh evidence, sift testimony, and pronounce judgment according to fixed and universal principles. Whoever disputes the validity of its decisions, only betrays his own misunderstanding of its claim to credence; for, in every province of human knowledge, the Positive method is absolutely supreme. Whether it bears the name of Science, Philosophy, Rationalism, Naturalism, Positivism, or any other name, it must dominate in all investigations after truth as such; and to its supremacy are to be attributed whatever stable results have been gained by human thought, study and search.

But, although for ages the Positive method has been regnant in special departments of knowledge, and in some of these has caused most marvellous growth, it has neither extended itself to all of them, nor attempted to colligate them in a high organic unity. Material Nature is now wholly studied according to the Positive method, man only partially, and God scarcely at all. Yet to those who consider this method as the only possible organon of real science or knowledge, it is clear that it must ultimately be extended to every subject concerning which we may hope to possess real knowledge. How we know God, and what we know of him, are questions which depend, like all other questions, upon the antecedent inquiries, What are the facts or data? and what do the facts or data teach? These inquiries indicate the spirit and tendency of Positivism, properly so called; and whoever attempts to solve all problems of human thought without exception, according to this method, is truly a Positivist. His solutions may be erroneous, but he works by the right rule.

The first attempted application of this method to human knowledge as a whole, with the design of attaining a genuinely scientific unification of all its branches, was made, we believe, by Auguste Comte, in his great "Cours de Philosophie Positive." Had his mind not been warped by prejudices easily to be accounted for, this work would have been greatly enhanced in value; as it is, it is very crude and incomplete. His arbitrary rejection of all the mental sciences, and attempted substitution in their place of Sociology, which in fact greatly depends upon them, together with his quite unphilosophic contempt for metaphysics and theology, deprive his philosophy of the encyclopedic character he essayed to give it. Whole orders of phenomena and facts, and those most vitally interesting and important to the human race, were here overlooked, and there contemptuously ignored. Nevertheless, his work is of masterly genius, and is exerting a subtle and growing influence upon the times, unequalled since the days of Kant. According to Comte himself, Positivism originated with the earliest dawn of real science; but first took definite shape as a scientific method in the hands of Bacon, Descartes, and Galileo. He laid no claim whatever to the discovery of this method, and hence never claimed to be the founder of Positivism; yet Positivism and Comteism are confounded by many, who fail to observe that the latter is a very imperfect embodiment of the former. Comte holds that our study of Nature "is restricted to the analysis of phenomena in order to discover their laws—that is, their constant relations of succession or similitude; and can have nothing to do with their nature or their cause, first or final, or the mode of their production." [The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte, translated by Miss Martineau. American edition, p. 200.] But the scientific study of Nature cannot in any way be arbitrarily restricted. It is surely unscientific in the extreme to determine beforehand what the phenomena shall reveal: the mind must be swept clean of all pet theories and preconceptions before it is fitted to enter upon any investigation in the genuine spirit of science. If Positivism is to refuse any conclusion whatever, which is legitimately deducible from admitted phenomena, she is false to the law of her own being, and becomes the mere slave of a priori prejudice. It may very possibly turn out, and we believe will turn out, that phenomena reveal something besides their own laws or uniformities, inasmuch as these very laws suggest certain necessary implications of great importance.

Further, "Nature" should not be confined to the narrow sense in which Comte uses the word: it must include all that is or can be presented to experience, whether internally or externally. The issue between materialism and spiritualism cannot be thus peremptorily shut out. If the patient study of Nature, in its true and wide sense, shall make reasonably certain the existence of the immaterial, then this result will be incorporated into the great body of Positive truths. Comteism is guilty of many inconsistencies, of which Positivism is innocent. For instance, Comte inveighs against the "metaphysical" vice of treating mere abstractions, such as "chemical affinity" or "vital principle," as if they were real causes or active entities; yet he and his disciples not infrequently speak of "natural laws" in terms properly applicable to real agents alone.* The boasted triumphs of Positivism dwindle to a mere catalogue of special relations observed at particular times, unless by interweaving ideas of absolute causation she can build up that grand conception of an inviolable constancy in Nature, existing beyond the limits of observation and experiment. But the belief in "invariable law" springs from a source ignored by Comte.

Comteism is further inconsistent with itself in sometimes regarding the organism as subordinated to the environment, and sometimes regarding the environment as subordinated to the organism; or, in other words, in alternately accepting and rejecting the freedom of the will:—

"Our prevision disproves the notion that phenomena proceed from a supernatural will, which is the same thing as calling them variable; and our ability to modify them shows that the powers under which they proceed are subordinated to our own."† [p. 198, Martineau's Trans.]

* A striking example of this semi-hypostatization of natural laws occurs in Mr. John Stuart Mill's recent work on "The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte," p. 33. "Those laws [of organization and life] determine what living beings are possible, and maintain the existence and determine the phenomena of those which actually exist; but they would be equally capable of maintaining in existence plants and animals very different from these." This is merely careless writing; but it shows how even Comteists must employ the language of real causation.

† Comte everywhere assumes that will is necessarily variable, and that the admission of invariability in natural laws is tantamount to denying their origination in a Will. But the only rational theistic conception is that of an infinite Will directed by Infinite Wisdom, from which directly proceeds the conception of absolute invariability of law. This misapprehension is one root of Comte's hatred of all theistic interpretations of Nature.

"Placed in a given system of exterior circumstances, a definite organism must always act in a necessarily determinate manner; and, inversely, the same action could not be precisely produced by really distinct organisms." [p. 307.]

From these illustrations, which might be multiplied, it is evident that Comteism and Positivism are not synonymous, and that the former is only an imperfect embodiment of the latter. The essence of Positivism is the principle that all human knowledge must be built on the broad basis of experience, according to laws which experience itself reveals, but cannot originate; that facts, duly certified and comprehended, must yield all knowledge that shall stand the test of scientific criticism; that these facts must, at the outset, be assumed to harmonize, and to conform to subtle, all-pervasive, all-comprehensive law. Comteism errs conspicuously in repudiating certain facts which ought to be admitted; namely, facts of the spiritual order, which are as real to experience as any physical facts. Hence its extrusion of the psychological sciences from the circle of science, and its supercilious abolition of theology, vitiate it completely as a truly encyclopedical organization of knowledge. But it will not do to sneer at Comteism; it is the first product of a vast philosophical movement, too mighty for sneers to check. Our business as lovers of truth is to criticize it, note its deficiencies, appreciate its merits, recognize its limitations, and guide its onward course. It is not the last term in the progressional series, but almost the first. Comte has organized the idea of Law, applied it to the physical sciences, and very imperfectly to social science: to extend it into all departments of investigation, and to render it the guiding principle in inquiries hitherto exempted from its domain, is the task that awaits coming generations. When Positivism shall have supplied the missing links in Comteism and completed the chain, then it will have accomplished that last and sublimest achievement of the human mind, still, alas! in the remote future,—the enduring veneration of "Science and Religion."

The philosophy of Mr. Herbert Spencer is the second great effort to organize all human knowledge,—a nearer approximation than Comteism, in some respects, to a genuine Positivism. He has disclaimed all discipleship to Comte in a letter in the "New Englander" for January, 1864, and more distinctly in a pamphlet, published in the same year, and entitled, "The Classification of the Sciences." The popular instinct is correct, nevertheless, in giving him the name of Positivist. If not directly affiliated upon Comteism, his philosophy yet springs from the same root. The determination of the exact amount of his personal indebtedness to Comte is a question chiefly interesting to himself, although we think this may be greater than he himself is aware; but there can be no doubt that, as a vigorous and independent thinker, he is engaged in the same great work with Comte, and stands next in order to him. His central purpose, like Comte's, is the unification of all knowledge; and, although in the method of this unification he is not a Comteist, he is still, in the spirit of the attempt, a Positivist. The organization of knowledge, as all based on experience and colligated by law, so as to form one symmetrical and coherent whole, is the grand aim of Positivism; and from this point of view, Comte and Mr. Spencer are both Positivists. Comte is superior to Mr. Spencer in perceiving that all phenomena could not be formulated under a single principle;‡ Mr. Spencer is superior to Comte in perceiving that the data of Positivism are more extensive than Comte allowed them to be. Comte pushed Positivism into biology and sociology; Mr. Spencer, Mr. G. H. Lewes, and Mr. John Stuart Mill, have pushed it into psychology; and the philosophy of the future will push it into universal anthropology and theology. In fact, Mr. Spencer has already pushed it to the very verge of theology, in his doctrine of a vague consciousness of the Absolute, and in his attempted reconciliation of "Science and Religion." This is accounted for the otherwise inexplicable phenomenon of religionists appearing among Mr. Spencer's warmest admirers; for although irresistible logic, unperceived by them, deduces from his premises and statements such consequences as will sweep away all their cherished ideas, they yet feel that this application of Positivism to theology harmonizes with the prescient instincts of the age, and must ultimately secure a glorious triumph for the very ideas which Mr. Spencer's special form of Positivism remorselessly undermines. The conviction is daily spreading and deepening, that the future of theology depends wholly on the possibility of its coalescing with science, and on the ultimate abolition of all essential distinction between them. The Cosmos of matter and man is God's autobiography, the only Scripture his own hand has penned; and science, deciphering the scroll, becomes theology when it has spelt out the name of God.

‡ "Because it is proposed to consolidate the whole of our acquired knowledge into one body of homogeneous doctrine, it must not be supposed that we are going to study this vast variety as proceeding from a single principle, and as subjected to a single law. There is something so chimerical in attempting at universal explanation by a single law, that it may be as well to secure this work at once from any imputation of the kind, though its development will show how undeserved such an imputation would be. Our intellectual resources are too narrow, and the universe is too complex, to leave any hope that it will ever be within our power to carry scientific perfection to its last degree of simplicity." [Martineau's Translation, p. 37.]

The greatest merit of Mr. Spencer as a philosopher is his clear perception of the nature of philosophy, as the unification and verification of human knowledge. The first thing is to ascertain what is known,—that is, to separate real facts from fictitious ones; the second is to arrange these in their natural connection and interdependence, and thus reproduce in thought the absolute harmony of being. The Positive study of the universe must be the ground of true philosophy. The aims of Positivism and philosophy are identical,—out of infinite variety to educe unity; but this unity should be dynamical, not numerical,—the unity of mutual interpenetration and interaction, rather than the unity of barren, blank indifference. While Mr. Spencer proposes to himself the true end of speculation, the unification of knowledge, he mistakes the true means to accomplish this end, by seeking the reduction of all phenomena under a single abstract formula. Mere generalization is powerless to unify knowledge. Its unity must be found in the equipoise and dynamical correlation of being and thought, which are welded into one in the act of knowledge itself. But, although Mr. Spencer has mistaken the means of attaining his end, the very conception of this end makes him tower head and shoulders above his English and Scotch contemporaries. Awarding him all praise in this respect, and waiving at present further criticism of the nature of the means he adopts to secure the unification of knowledge, let us see how successfully he has employed it in the attempt to formulate all phenomena under the law of Evolution, which he claims to be an absolutely universal formula. He thus states it in full:—

"Combining these partial definitions, we get a complete definition, which may be most conveniently expressed thus:—Evolution is a change from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity, to a definite, coherent heterogeneity; through successive differentiations and integrations." [First Principles, p. 218.]

Now, as the terms "homogeneous" and "heterogeneous" both imply plurality of constituents which are like or unlike respectively, it is evident that this law of Evolution applies only to phenomena occurring in aggregations of parts. But, since the law is made to apply to all phenomena whatever without exception, it is also evident that Mr. Spencer regards all phenomena as consisting in the mere re-arrangement of parts in aggregates or masses. Nor does he shrink from this logical consequence of his theory:—

"The only obvious respect in which all kinds of Evolution are alike, is, that they are modes of change."

Note next, that the kind of change which constitutes Evolution is broadly distinguished from change of an equally general kind, in this, that it is change of internal relations instead of change of external relations. . . . Thus we narrow the field of inquiry by recognizing the change in which Evolution consists, as a change in the arrangement of parts: of course using the word 'parts' in its most extended sense, as signifying both ultimate units and masses of such units. . . . Thus, then, we reduce that which we have to investigate to its most abstract shape. Our task is to find the cause or causes of a certain order of change in the arrangement of parts." [Ibid., pp. 220, 221.]

This doctrine is also implied in Mr. Spencer's attempt to formulate all phenomena in "terms of Space, Time, Matter, Motion and Force." For Space and Time being made the conditions of all phenomena, and Force their universal cause, phenomena without exception must be simply Motions of Matter; that is, changes of position among material wholes and parts, masses and atoms. In order to prove, therefore, that the law of Evolution is really applicable to all phenomena, it must first be proved that all phenomena can be truly reduced to changes of position among atoms and masses. It is not enough to prove that all phenomena are accompanied by such changes (although even this is insusceptible of positive proof); but it is also necessary to prove that all phenomena consist in such changes, which is absolutely impossible. If two synchronous series of phenomena are taking place, it is neither philosophy nor common sense to assert that what is true of one series must necessarily be true of the other, until the nature of their connection is perfectly made known. For instance, two asynchronous series of phenomena take place in the life of every human being: the one physical, the other mental. Admitting that all changes in the physical organism are changes of position among its component atoms, according to a certain order, it does not follow that all changes in the formation of intellectual and moral character are also re-arrangement of atoms: these are changes quite as real as the former, yet only rash and presumptuous hypothesis will pronounce them to be mere atomic redistributions. The connection between these two orders of phenomena may be as close as you please, and it is undoubtedly very close; yet the want of parallelism between them is too great to suffer a true Positivism, at least in the present state of science, to fuse the two, or regard one as the efficient cause of the other. The phenomena of the organism begin with evolution, culminate in maturity, and end with dissolution; but the phenomena of character, in innumerable instances, proceed in glorious and uninterrupted evolution to the very end of life, even while the body is falling into decay, and often then with the greatest splendor. The culmination of complete and mellow ripeness still seems to be indefinitely distant in remote futurity. Who cannot recal signal instances of character becoming daily more and more beautiful, while the body wastes and withers away? Growth in character is a phenomenon as real, and as truly a fact for Positive study, as the phenomenon of physical growth; and the law of Evolution, if indeed applicable to all phenomena, must apply to this among the rest. Yet what dreary absurdity it would be to call growth in spiritual and mainly character a mere "re-arrangement of atoms!" We insist that genuine Positivism will overlook neither phenomenon; and, whatever may become of Mr. Spencer's law of Evolution, will eventually incorporate both in the data of Positive Science. His law is open to this fatal charge, that, professing to apply to all phenomena, it applies only to phenomena of re-arrangement of atoms.

Every mechanical philosophy, like Mr. Spencer's, touches only the surface of things, since mechanism is inapplicable except through dynamism. And, although Mr. Spencer has much to say about Force, he identifies Force with the Unknowable, and thus empties his philosophy of all dynamism that is intelligible. He borrows largely from a source which is shut to every consistent empiricist, in taking from Transcendentalism the idea of strict universality. When he universalizes all phenomena as Motions of Matter, and all causes as one omnipresent Force acting throughout Space and Time, he goes quite beyond his premises, and transcends the teachings of empiricism. Force must be either a personal God, an impersonal entity, or a property of Matter. Mr. Spencer denies that it is a personal God: he ought to treat it as a property of matter, whereas he seems to regard it as an impersonal entity. He predicates of it unity, omnipresence and causation,—attributes surely not predicable of a mere quality or property of matter. At the same time, he declares it to be utterly incomprehensible or unknowable: how he can reconcile this position with the predication of any attributes whatever, we leave to others to conjecture. We find an indistinctness and indeterminateness on all the fundamental points of philosophy which seriously detracts from the power of Mr. Spencer's speculations as a coherent system: they must become more pronounced before they can deeply impress the thought of the age.

If all phenomena can indeed be brought under a single law, it must be because at bottom all phenomena are alike in kind. Beneath all superficial variety there must be a hidden ground of oneness on which the law must rest. Hence the law which is to formulate equally well all phenomena of mind and matter, must penetrate beneath their apparent diversity, and root itself in a real, aboriginal unity. In other words, it must reject dualism in every form, and start from the premise of pure monism. With this necessary condition Mr. Spencer is forced to comply; and we find him, therefore, rejecting the issue between Materialism and Spiritualism as a mere logomachy:—

"Perceiving, as he will, that the Materialist and Spiritualist controversy is a mere war of words, in which the disputants are equally absurd,—each thinking he understands that which it is impossible for any man to understand,—he will perceive how utterly groundless is the fear referred to. Being fully convinced that, whatever nomenclature is used, the ultimate mystery must remain the same, he will be as ready to formulate all phenomena in terms of Matter, Motion, and Force, as in any other terms; and will rather indeed anticipate that only in a doctrine which recognizes the Unknown Cause as co-extensive with all orders of phenomena, can there be a consistent Religion or a consistent Science." [First Principles, p. 223. Compare p. 502.]

By this contemptuous and somewhat flippant dismissal of a great question which has always exercised, and will always exercise, the profoundest thought of mankind, Mr. Spencer seeks to propitiate the minds of his readers, and predispose them to the acceptance of his great Law. Recognizing the phenomenal diversity of Matter and Mind, and at the same time scouting the idea of their ontological diversity, to the inquiry why their ontological diversity must be denied, he has no sound answer to make. There is as great an assumption of knowledge in saying that there is no difference at bottom between Matter and Mind, as there is in saying that a radical difference exists. Positivism demands a valid reason for either assertion. But Mr. Spencer has here fallen hopelessly into a vicious circle. On the one hand, all phenomena can be formulated under a single law, because the Materialist and Spiritualist controversy is absurd; on the other hand, the Materialist and Spiritualist controversy is absurd because all phenomena can be formulated under a single law. He can neither surrender the indifference of matter and mind, which would be to surrender his Law of Evolution, nor yet give a respectable reason for it, which would imply a knowledge of what is professedly unknowable. Hence we find this postulate of monism very gingerly referred to, as rather a self-evident truth, than prominently discussed and stoutly defended as the very corner-stone of his philosophy. We must therefore look behind Mr. Spencer's own explicit statements, to understand the true spirit of his system.

There are but three forms of monism possible,—Idealism, Materialism, and Identity. The first reduces all phenomena to Mind, the second to Matter, and the third to a single Substance or substratum of which mind and matter are merely diverse manifestations. Every monistic philosophy which is artistically beautiful and coherent (and without these characteristics no philosophy can be true, for nothing is more beautiful or coherent than truth) must rest on one of these three bases, exclusively and consistently. Now, to a superficial reader, there is in the "First Principles" an appearance of great rigor, both in method and form; but to one who looks deeper this appearance is dispelled. The one simple law of Evolution is applied to all phenomena, and developed from a vast mass of scientific facts with great precision and ability; it is overlaid with illustrations, and from its very wealth in this respect the volume becomes monotonous reading. But Mr. Spencer's attitude towards monism is vacillating and irresolute. There are some passages from which, taken by themselves, Idealism would be logically inferable; although there can be no doubt that his system, as a whole, is opposed to Idealism. His professions of impartiality in the controversy between Materialism and Spiritualism more than justify the expectation of a precise, definite, and unwavering adhesion to Identity. But, notwithstanding his protests and disclaimers, we do not hesitate to pronounce his system, in its spirit and necessary implications, to be unqualifiedly a materialistic one. Very likely Mr. Spencer himself may be unaware of its tendency; if so, he is not the first philosopher who has mistaken the legitimate ultimatum of his own principles. Neither do we say this in the spirit of censure, or even of depreciation: we desire the truth alone; and if this be materialism, or atheism, or any other ism, may it spread far and wide, and beat down all opposition! The day will surely come when free thought, if honest thought, will command the respect of mankind. No odium can attach, among educated men, to any opinions honorably and fearlessly maintained. We state simply a naked fact, as we believe, when we say that, if Mr. Spencer's philosophy is true, materialism is true.

That this is no random charge is easily made evident. His philosophy is avowedly an attempt to formulate all phenomena in terms of Space, Time, Matter, Motion, and Force. Now see what this implies. Space and Time must be set aside as merely the conditions of phenomena, and Force as their universal cause, reducing "all phenomena" to Matter and Motion alone. That is, every phenomenon in the universe is only motion in matter. Of what value, then, is Mr. Spencer's defence of his reasoning, that "their implications are no more materialistic than they are spiritualistic, and no more spiritualistic than they are materialistic?" [First Principles, p. 502.] By his own confession, there are no phenomena but those of Motion in Matter; with what face, then, can he write thus?—

"Before proceeding to interpret the detailed phenomena of Life and Mind and Society, in terms of Matter, Motion and Force, the reader must be reminded in what sense the interpretations are to be accepted. . . . And, notwithstanding all evidence to the contrary, there will probably have arisen in not a few minds the conviction that the solutions which have been given, along with those to be derived from them, are essentially materialistic. Let none persist in these misconceptions." [Ibid., p. 501.]

If it be said that under Force Mr. Spencer includes what is commonly meant by Spirit, it must be remembered that he refuses to admit this understanding of it as legitimate. Force, according to him, is the absolutely unknowable Cause of phenomena; but, because it is unknowable, we are distinctly warned not to call it personal, conscious, or intelligent. It cannot be God in any sense which Theism holds dear; and it cannot include the human soul, since all phenomena of life and thought and feeling are merely phenomena of motion in matter, which must cease with the disintegration of the organism. Since all phenomena without exception are mere manifestations of one omnipresent Force, there can be no permanent, or even transient, individuality, in any significant sense of the word. Hence to formulate all phenomena in terms of Space, Time, Matter, Motion, and Force, is absolutely to exclude from the universe all real or spiritual personality, whether human or superhuman; and, consciously or unconsciously, Mr. Spencer conducts to a most rigid and thorough-going Materialism. Of all monists, Spinoza alone has held the balance even, and been strictly impartial between Materialism and Spiritualism.

But Mr. Spencer's pretence of impartiality is singularly baseless, in view of his reduction of all phenomena of "Life, Mind, and Society," to mere motions of matter. Spinozism and Dualism are alone impartial, but Mr. Spencer espouses neither. There is a remarkable passage in the preface to his "Psychology," which seems to hint at certain esoteric doctrines impolitic to make public:—

"It may be well further to say that originally had intended to add a fifth division, which should include sundry deductions and speculations that could not properly be embodied in the other divisions. But, before being compelled to do so, I had decided that, as this fifth division was not strictly necessary, and as certain of the suggestions contained in it might prejudice some against the doctrines developed in the others, it would be better to withhold it,—at any rate for the present."

Has Mr. Spencer refrained from developing consequences which he perceives to follow from his principles, for fear lest they might prevent the acceptance of the principles themselves? We could not regard such a course as either very manly or very wise. A bold and conscientious thinker plainly states the legitimate results of his principles, never desiring to smuggle them into the public mind; and all the more because they might offend public prejudice, for then he would be sure he had gained no proselytes under false pretences, but had said the very worst at the outset. We are utterly unwilling to attribute any such timid and disingenuous course to Mr. Spencer, and prefer to fall back on the conclusion that he is so thoroughly English in the structure of his mind, that he is blind to the evident bearings of his own theory, and with genuine insular inconsistency stoutly maintains doctrines whose logical consequences he as stoutly disowns. We are glad to be able to efface the somewhat painful impression produced by the above-quoted extract from the preface to the "Psychology," by the following most noble and high-minded words from the "First Principles":—

"Not as adventitious, therefore, will the wise man regard the faith that is in him. The highest truth he sees he will fearlessly utter,—knowing that, let what may come of it, he is thus playing his right part in the world; knowing that if he can effect the change he aims at, well; if not, well also; though not so well." [p. 123.]

Whether, therefore, Mr. Spencer is aware of it or not, we believe that his philosophy is radically and irretrievably materialistic. Such an inference is, as we have seen, directly deducible from the attempt to formulate all phenomena in terms of Space, Time, Matter, Motion, and Force; and also from the necessary implications of the formula he presents. But it follows quite as logically from the theory of Empiricism, which he adopts and states very explicitly in his "Classification of the Sciences":—

"All knowledge is from experience, holds M. Comte; and this I also hold,—hold it, indeed, in a wider sense than M. Comte: since, not only do I believe that all the ideas acquired by individuals, and consequently all the ideas transmitted by past generations, are thus derived; but I also contend that the very faculties by which they are acquired are the products of accumulated and organized experiences received by ancestral races of beings." [p. 31.]

In other words, the soul, with all its magnificent powers, is a mere fascicle of impressions from without, accumulated, organized, and hereditarily transmitted; there is nothing in the mind which is not derived ultimately from its material surroundings. We purposely say material surroundings; for if Empiricism admits any formative nucleus or germ whatever not evolved out of matter, even in the primordial organism which heads the series of biological evolutions, then it commits suicide by postulating an immaterial principle at the start, co-ordinate with the material organism, and is convicted of stealing the premises of its antagonist.

[To be continued.]

YEARLY MEETING OF THE SUBSCRIBERS TO THE "VOYSEY ESTABLISHMENT FUND."

[From the Manchester (England) Friend, for June, 1872.]

The First Half-Yearly Meeting of the Committee of the "Voysey Establishment Fund" was held at St. George's Hall, London, on the 30th of last month. Reports were presented and read from the Secretary and Treasurer, by which it appeared that the total receipts amounted to over £1600, and the total expenses, since the commencement of the public services in October, 1871, to over £1000, leaving a balance in hand of about £540. But the current receipts from the reserved seats, and from the weekly collections, do not equal the current expenditures; therefore the importance was obvious of strong efforts still being used to obtain subscriptions to the general fund. The number of regular attenders of the congregation steadily increases, and this was looked upon as an encouraging sign, evidencing a continued growth of interest in the movement.

Reference was made to the death of the President of the Association, the late Bishop Hinds; and the meeting was informed that Dr. Colenso had been invited to accept that position, but no reply had yet been received from Natal.

An interesting letter was read from Frances Power Cobbe. She specially referred to the desirability of a periodical being established in connection with the movement, and alluded to the Manchester Friend as an example of what such a periodical ought to be.

After the formal business had been disposed of, two subjects of importance engaged the attention of the meeting. First, the desirability of obtaining a building for the sole use of the Association; and a resolution was unanimously adopted, expressive of a desire that a building fund, of which a small beginning exists, should be promoted. At the same time, some speakers were strongly of opinion that, for the present, at least, St. George's Hall was the best place for the services to be held.

The other subject excited great interest, and was discussed with great animation. Dr. Turle, the Treasurer, than whom no one has devoted a greater amount of time and thought to the movement, as well as given it much pecuniary assistance, proposed a resolution that it would be well for the Association to adopt a definite name. He supported his view in a very able address, the chief point of which was that the idea of pure monotheism, which he considered distinctive of the movement, should be embodied in a name which could be adopted by all monotheists of all nations, and that thus a bond of union would be formed. Several gentlemen warmly supported Dr. Turle. But several others spoke ably and with strong feelings, against any course of the kind being taken. They feared the adoption of a name would tend towards sectarianism, and objected to it on principle; and also that as a matter of practice it would be impossible to make a satisfactory selection from the great number of names that would be proposed; and that the subject would be an "apple of discord" thrown among the hitherto harmonious action of the Committee. Mr. Voysey himself felt strongly opposed to the adoption of a distinctive name. It was ultimately put to vote, and Dr. Turle's motion was lost by a large majority.

The meeting was attended by about sixty or seventy ladies and gentlemen. Many interesting remarks were made, especially from some who for years had been vainly seeking for religious fellowship and association, and had derived comfort, satisfaction and spiritual benefit from the services at St. George's Hall. [This information has been sent to us by a Member of the Committee who was present at the Meeting.—Ed. M. F.]

THOMAS CARLYLE ON A FUTURE LIFE.

A Glasgow paper gives to the public an interesting letter (never before published) written many years ago by Thomas Carlyle, in reply to an inquiry put before him by a young lady who had given her mind much to the moral problem involved in the question of a future state:—

THE GRANGE, Alesford, Sept. 27, 1848.

My Dear Madam,—The question which perplexes you is one that no man can answer. You may console yourself by reflecting, that it is by its nature insoluble to human creatures,—that what human creatures have to do with such a question is to get it well put to rest, suppressed if not answered; so that their life and its duties may be attended to without impediment from it. Such questions in this our earthly existence are many. "There are two things," says the German philosopher, "that strike me dumb—the starry firmament (palpably infinite) and the sense of right and wrong in man." Whoever follows out the "dumb" thought will come upon the origin of our conception of heaven and hell—of an infinitude of merited happiness and an infinitude of merited woe—and have much to reflect upon under an aspect considerably changed. Consequences good and evil, blessed and accursed, it is very clear do follow from all our actions here below, and prolong and propagate and spread themselves into the infinite, or beyond our calculation and conception; but whether the notion of reward and penalty be not, on the whole, rather a human one transferred to that immense divine fact, has been doubtful to many. Add to this consideration, which the best philosophy teaches us, that the very consequences (not to speak of the penalties at all) of evil actions die away, and become abolished long before eternity ends; that it is only the consequences of good actions that are eternal; for these are in harmony with the laws of this universe, and add themselves to it, and coöperate with it forever; while all that is in disharmony with it must necessarily be without continuance and soon fall dead—as perhaps you have heard in the sound of a Scottish Psalm amid the mountains, the true notes alone support one another, and the psalm which was discordant enough near at hand, is perfect melody when heard from afar. On the whole, I must account it but a morbid, weak imagination that shudders over this wondrous divine universe as a place of despair to any creature, and contrariwise, a most degraded human sense, sunk down to the region of the brutal (however common it be), that in any case remains blind to the infinite difference there ever is between right and wrong for a human creature, or God's laws and the devil's laws.

Yours very truly,

THOMAS CARLYLE.

The Chicago Journal calls attention to the fact that the cholera, which for several months has been raging at St. Petersburg, is gradually spreading over Central Europe, and says:—

"The cholera, which now prevails in eastern Europe, originated again, no doubt, in the usual way—among the pilgrims who gather by the hundreds and thousands to Mecca, where they live round the tomb of their prophet like the beasts whose flesh they are forbidden to eat. There they wallow in their filth, for no change of clothes is at these times permitted by their religion. When disease breaks out, it therefore not only rapidly spreads among them, but is disseminated far and near, and the more especially as their faith enjoins them to preserve the clothes of their dead as sacred relics. The cholera is therefore the legitimate offspring of filth and superstition. Like a destroying angel, the disease rages in the cities of the Orient, where the practice of cleaning the streets is unknown, and where the dogs fight in the gutters over rotten carcases. In eastern Europe it also commits great havoc in all those places where the population is the most dirty. Indeed, so great a foe is cholera to cleanliness, that even in the cities which it afflicts, those quarters generally escape where there is least filth."

A Scotch minister had been preaching against covetousness and the love of money, and had frequently repeated how "the love of money was the root of all evil." Two old bodies walking home from church—one said, "An wassa the minister strung upo' the money?" "Nae doubt," said the other, rather hesitatingly; and added, "ay, but it's grand to hae the wee bit siller in your haund when ye gang an errand."

Voices from the People.

[EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.]

"P. P. had a splendid house yesterday. Quite a number of the Hickeys Friends, who are now here attending yearly meeting, went to hear him, notwithstanding their Society had a public meeting at the same hour. But they are only one step below what the Orthodox choose to call 'Broad-gaugers.' Abatement by proxy does not belong to their church, and they claim that every man must be his own Jesus Christ, if he expects to escape the penalties of sin, that is, learn to sin not at all. We do not have to wait for death to be launched into eternity, we are already there, and we know that there is a never changing law that rewards virtue and punishes vice. Virtue is our savior. There is no such thing as original sin. Little children are good and lovely and sweet, instead of little devils and sinners, and everybody knows it. That is the way our best thinkers among the Hickey speakers talk."

"Enclosed please find one dollar for fifteen copies of 'Voysey's Lecture on the Bible,' and sixteen cents for 'Truths from the Times.' I am a poor man, now over sixty years of age, and my growing infirmities admonish me that my stay in earth-life must be short, and, desiring to help others to escape the theological nets and traps, I will give away some of your tracts, and hope to be able to send for more. I am greatly interested and profited by reading THE INDEX. I also take the Independent, and your INDEX as compared with the Independent is as a diamond and a millstone."

"Please place my name on your list as a subscriber for one share to the Index Association on terms stated in INDEX. I am in sympathy with Free Religion, and wish you entire success in your able efforts to free humanity from bigotry and superstition. Your paper should be in every household in the land. I have some stock in an Orthodox church building which I will exchange 'even' for half the amount in your Association. If you have any bidders, please refer them."

"I will subscribe one share to THE INDEX Association. For one I cannot afford to lose THE INDEX and will do all I can for its support."

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending July 18th.—C. R. Wood, and, $7.50; David Wright, 75 cts.; J. Whipple, 50 cts.; J. Frank, 15 cts.; H. Klost, $3; J. Roemer, $3; J. Engelhardt, $2; C. Benner, $1; C. Braun, $3; J. Laalle, $3.40; G. Holzwarth, $3; George Meissner, $2; G. Marx, $3; O. Reidemester, $2; B. F. Underwood, $7; E. S. Pier, $3; Parker Pillsbury, $3; J. S. Kingsley, 50 cts.; W. P. Ewing, $2; C. S. Parker, $2; H. B. Kunyan, $1; T. E. Morris, 25 cts.; C. D. Fanning, $1.20; E. Dillon, $4; Alexander Risk, $1; Wm. Shepherdson, $1; Felix Haecht, $1; C. A. Lloyd, 50 cts.; James Williams, $1; A. A. Trowbridge, 50 cts.; Jos. E. Donet, 25 cts.; A. Brooks, $2.25; Arthur M. Kaapp, $2; George Thoms, $2; W. E. Stuart, 25 cts.; Dawson Smith, 60 cts.; E. M. Davis, 10 cts.; Merrill Peckham, 10 cts.; B. Nichols, 25 cts.; D. M. Cross, 15 cts.; Ahe Tronsing, $2; Charles Churchill, $2; George Allen, $2; George B. Newcomb, $2; H. C. Gratian, $1; James Emerson, 10 cts.; L. C. Whiting, 50 cts.; W. H. Wright, 15 cts.; C. C. Slocum, 10 cts.; Mrs. C. Stratton, 25 cts.; A. Huff, 50 cts.; H. D. Wheeler, 10 cts.; P. L. Porter, 50 cts.; C. B. Darrow, $3; H. C. Tillingshast, $3; H. L. Green, $1.50; Joseph Haye, $2.50; H. L. Green, $3; David Porter, 50 cts.; Jno. E. Haynes, 50 cts.; George A. Dennison, $2; J. M. Brown, 25 cts.; Nahum Stratton, $2; H. L. Green, $1.50; S. B. Emmons, $1; J. Harmou, $2; H. Solsbacher, $1; David Kilne, $1; Demetrius England, $2; H. L. Geesner, $1; Philip Cronbach, $1; Dr. Affeck, $2; J. L. Wyatt, 50 cts.; W. T. Campbell, $2.75; P. H. Seghmyer, $3; Sam. Thomas, $1; A. E. Cook, $2; T. Baker, $2; Dr. J. Scott, $2; Rev. J. W. McKeebe, $2; W. H. Lowe, 50 cts.; B. P. Kennedy, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and as other receipts unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

RECEIVED.

PANNIER: " . . . for thought." By ADELINA D. T. WHITNEY, Author of "Real Folks," "We Girls," etc. Boston: JAMES R. OSGOOD & Co., late Ticknor & Fields, and Fields, Osgood & Co. 1872. pp. 111.

BOSTON ILLUSTRATED. Boston: JAMES R. OSGOOD & Co. Price 50 cents.

THE CASE OF MR. GEORGE J. WALTERS.

SPEECH OF GERRIT SMITH to his Neighbors in Peterboro, N. Y., June 22d, 1872.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS. A Discourse by REV. NATHAN SAYER, JR., Pastor of the First Unitarian Congregational Society, Davenport, Iowa. Davenport: GLOBE STEAM PRINT, 1872.

THE CHURCH PROPAGATOR. By the Rev. T. P. KIRKMAN, M.A., F.R.S. Part I.—THE LIVING GOD. By the Rev. R. M. GELDART. Part II. CONTRIBUTIONS. Recorded by a Woman for Women. Part III.—All published by THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate, England.

THE VENTRAL: A Collection of Articles in Prose and Poetry, comprising a short essay on Origin and Destiny, given through the Mediumship of Mrs. M. J. WILCOXSON. Chicago: KENJOTO-PHYSIOLOGICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE, 1872.

THE REFORMER WHICH SHOULD PARADISE, and the Results which must Follow, the Equal Distribution of Wealth, etc. By DAVID E. CROSBY. Binghamton, N. Y. 1872.

THE RADICAL for June, 1872. Boston, Office of Publication, 35 Bromfield St. [Last issue.]

The Index.

SHABER EACH $100.

JULY 20, 1872.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio."

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio."

A WORD ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The following letter from the Principal of a New England Academy, received at this office under date of July 10, explains itself:—

"I am anxious to secure Vol. I. of THE INDEX. I am willing to pay $5.00 for a perfect bound copy, if I cannot procure it cheaper. Vol. II. of THE INDEX I received from you by express a short time since. I like it very much. I have already written you to put down my name for a bound volume for this year. Now if you have an opportunity to get Vol. I. and will do so, I will purchase it of you, and also reward you for trouble. Please let me hear from you, if you can do anything for me."

There are no more copies of Vol. I. for sale here. But if any one of our subscribers is willing to dispose of his at the above-offered price of $5.00, he has opportunity to do so by sending his address to us. We will transmit it to the writer of the above letter, and the arrangement can then be concluded by private correspondence between the parties concerned. Of course we shall accept no "reward" of any sort, and are only sorry we cannot furnish a copy from this office, which we should do at the old price of $2.50.

In one of our most popular "Geographies," designed for the use of schools and academies and issued by the well-known educational house of E. H. Butler & Co., Philadelphia, the following questions and answers occur:—

"Was there a time when but one language existed?"
 "Yes; the Bible tells us there was."
 "How did many languages spring from this one?"
 "When the Tower of Babel was built to defy God, he confused the speech of the builders, so that they could not understand each other."

In order more indelibly to impress this absurd superstition on the young mind, the text is accompanied by a picture of the aforesaid Tower, doubtless "taken by our Special Artist at the spot," and resembling nothing so much as a huge paper-collar box; and, as if to bring out in full relief the contrast of fiction with fact, the Tower of Babel stands side by side with a picture in the next column representing the Capitol at Washington.

Again:—
"How many kinds of religion are there?"
 "A great many; all of which are false but one."
"Which is the only true religion?"
 "Christianity, or the religion of Christ."
"In what does Christianity consist?"
 "In believing in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, and the Savior of the world."
"Where are the doctrines of Christianity found?"
 "In the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament."

It is apparent to any one who takes the trouble to look into the matter, that Orthodoxy has a tremendous grasp on our free school system. Not merely in the pertinacious retention of Bible-reading and other religious exercises, but still more in the jealous selection of teachers and text-books favoring its own doctrines, does this usurpation of Orthodoxy reveal itself. In a vast number of our public schools, especially in the country districts, it is impossible for any but an evangelical teacher to find employment; and it is so sure an introduction to the good graces of most school committees that publishers find it to their interest to send out school books stuffed with such puerilities as the foregoing. It is time for the liberal portion of the public to pay more heed to the nature of the doctrines surreptitiously introduced into their children's minds under pretence of teaching history, or geography, or other branches of knowledge. A rigorous surveillance should be exercised in these matters, that a permanent bias may not be given to children in the direction of false and foolish notions. It is very easy to instil into the minds of the young a superstition that shall be very hard to eradicate. If you want a good crop, you must sow good seed.

Never vote for any candidate for any educational position who will abuse it by conniving in this systematic delusion of the young. There is no use in evading this issue. When the public funds raised for educational uses only are methodically perverted to the service of religious falsehood and folly, it is necessary to vote against every candidate who suffers himself to be made the catapaw of a besotted church-party. If the free schools of this country are to last, they must be freed from the half-concealed but most mischievous domination of Evangelicalism. Take the Bible not only out of the school exercises, but also out of the school text-books.

We have been repeatedly questioned of late concerning "Sunday Schools." In THE INDEX, No. 8, there is an essay giving our ideas on this subject, and if our correspondents will refer to that number they will save us much labor. Nothing is more necessary than the right moral instruction of children, disconnected from all superstition; and liberal societies make a great mistake when, as they usually do, they treat the idea of a Sunday School as part and parcel of Orthodoxy. The reliance on moral or religious education is a confession that "nature" is more powerful than "grace;" and it cuts under the very roots of Orthodoxy to educate children to the independent use of their own intellectual and moral faculties. There ought to be no catechism used,—no text-book constructed on the question-and-answer plan, which deadens rather than develops the mind. Aim solely to make the child think, and Nature will do the rest. The chief difficulty always and everywhere is to find teachers who will take hold of this work in good earnest, and trust themselves without the crutch of a catechism of some sort. The Sunday School would be all the better for the introduction of some active games or other amusements. But a hall would be necessary for these, the church being unsuited in all respects to the real wants of radical societies. We more than suspect that the lack of vitality in so many such societies is owing to their reluctance to give up the church-idea. The Sunday School, at least, can never flourish, or be worth much, if it does not respect the demands of the child-nature, and combine moral instruction with frequent motion and healthful pleasure. If this is done, and the religious sentiments are called into activity by music and poetry, instead of dry doctrinal tuition, the Sunday School can be made immensely useful. But all dogmatism must be most carefully excluded from it. You cannot build up a fine moral character in the child by giving him bricks to eat. Keep clear of all catechisms, and rely upon conversation, story-telling, and informal friendly intercourse. In short, help the child to grow in right moral and religious directions, without making morality or religion a bore. Thus conducted, the Sunday School is the most radical of all institutions, and no radical society can long prosper which is too inert or indifferent to do its duty by the children.

"I want"—said Rev. George H. Hepworth, in a speech at the Congregational Re-union—"I want a church which shall be no respecter of persons, a church where the rustling silk and the noiseless calico can sit side by side and pray to the same God. I want a church where the homespun coat and the swallow tail shall stand side by side, and sing of their common wants, and supplicate a common mercy." What a touching duet! We particularly admire that warbling swallow-tail, the chief "want" of which, we should conjecture, would be something to warble with. Probably the melody is to be conceived as issuing from the depths of the back-pocket, in praise of the tailor that made it. Since Hood's "Song of the Shirt," no music has so powerfully affected our sensibilities as Mr. Hepworth's "Song of the Swallow-tail."

"A man of true honor thinks himself greater in being subject to his own word, than in being lord of a principality." This was said by Sir Philip Sidney, who had such right as few besides to pronounce the word honor. How rare a man is he who "sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not!"

Rev. Edward C. Towne wishes opportunities to speak anywhere in the neighborhood of New Haven, Connecticut, where he may be addressed. He will receive numerous invitations, if the "heathen" that sit in that great darkness can bear the light.

"Never any word spoken did so much good, as many locked up in silence," says Plutarch ["Morals," iv, 230.]

The success of the Index Association plan has, as we expected it would, stimulated others to imitate it. Even the "elect" are not ashamed to borrow an idea or two from the "reprobate" in the sphere of carnal affairs. The Philadelphia Christian Statesman, the organ of the Christianizers, has become a weekly instead of a fortnightly paper, and passed into the hands of the "Christian Statesman Association." The capital stock of the new Association is fixed at $20,000; the number of shares is 2,000, each share is $10, and only twenty per cent. of the amount subscribed is payable annually. About $4,000 are already subscribed.

Google

HEATHEN AND CHRISTIAN.

In the new, interesting, and important book on "The Dangerous Classes" of New York, in which he gives an account of the labors of the "Children's Aid Society," Mr. C. L. Brace writes a chapter entitled "Christ in Charity and Reform, and Condition of Neglected Children before Christianity." The chapter, which is quite inadequate and we believe far from just to the Romans, contains this sentence:—"Probably the first society or asylum in history for poor children was the foundation established by the Emperor Trajan (about A. D. 110) for destitute and abandoned children. The property thus established in perpetuity with real estate and money at interest (at five per cent.) was equivalent in value to $820,000, and supported some five thousand children of both sexes. Singularly enough there seems to have been only one illegitimate child to one hundred and fifty legitimate in these institutions." Trajan, it may be remarked for the instruction of those who may suspect from the date (A. D. 110) that the influence of Christianity was felt thus early in Rome—Trajan was a hearty Pagan. His persecution of the Christians was very mild: he knew and thought little about them; but he was not their friend, nor did he borrow from them either good or bad qualities. The disposition that furnished magnificent gladiatorial shows to the Roman populace in his new Coliseum was the disposition of a great soldier and a popular ruler; the appreciation of letters which induced him to found the Ulpian library showed a man of intellectual power; and the justice and humanity that characterized much of his civil administration betokened a man of large heart. The credit, therefore, of the charity that Mr. Brace records of him is due to himself alone.

The "Children's Aid Society" has been in existence about twenty years. The seat of its operations has been the Christian city of New York, the centre of power and wealth in America. In that space of time it has achieved great things. It has removed to homes and employment in the country above twenty-five thousand persons, mostly poor and homeless children; it has founded and still supports five lodging-houses for homeless and vagabond boys and girls, five free reading rooms for boys and young men, and twenty industrial schools for children too poor, ragged, and undisciplined for the public schools. The result of its labors is seen in a very marked decrease of crime, and a visible reduction in the amount of misery and guilt among the poor. That so much has been accomplished in so short a time is due to various causes; the extent of the country, the demand for labor in the West, the facilities of transportation, cheap fares on railroads, and the sensible methods which the experience of many years has prepared, and which ordinary judgment may avail itself of.

Taking all these favoring circumstances into account, and adding to them the force of prudential considerations which is prevailing in a city like New York, the achievement is not marvellous. Throwing in the power of religion, represented by three hundred and fifty churches, chapels, and synagogues, most of them "evangelical," many of them very rich, the result is small—too small to reduce to insignificance Trajan's great benefaction. Viewed in the light of a benevolence, and estimated by the sums of money given, the Pagan charity looks well by the side of the Christian. During the twenty years of its existence, the Treasurer of the Association has received a million of dollars, no more,—some of it obtained from the State, some from subscriptions, some from donations; some of it flowing in easily and freely, some of it procured by persistent begging privately and through the press. A million of dollars is not much for a wealthy Christian city to give in twenty years' time, to an institution of such obvious utility as well as such touching and tender humanity as this.

It may be said, indeed, that Trajan was an emperor and had only to decree what he would, while Mr. Brace and his fellow-workers were plain men without public position or private fortune; that Trajan took money from the general treasury, while Mr. Brace got his from the shallow pockets of citizens; that Trajan's act was the act of a kind-hearted individual, while the modern charity is the act of a community. Still, conceding the full force of these considerations, the fact remains that a Pagan emperor established a "Children's Aid Society" on the only principles known in his time or for ages afterwards, and appropriated to its endowment as much money as a Christian community bestows on the same class of unfortunates in twenty years.

We submit, therefore, that Mr. Webster was not justified in his assertion, made at the trial of the Girard will case, that previous to Christianity no care was taken of orphans; and that Mr. Brace goes quite too far when he declares that "the central figure in the world's charity is Christ."

O. B. F.

MODERN QUAKERISM.

The Society of Friends—or Quakers, as the Society is popularly called—appears, like all other sects in Christendom, to have its serenity disturbed by the spirit of modern agitation. This has always been a good Society for producing radicalism. I presume there are many readers of THE INDEX who have come to their present religious views through Quakerism, especially through Quakerism combined with the Anti-slavery reform. But this class of persons has usually quietly left the denomination, finding little opportunity for the expression of their views within it, so that for a number of years the Society, with the exception of a few localities, has kept the even tenor of its ancient way with little disturbance from the modern spirit of progress.

It may not be known to all INDEX readers, that, between forty and fifty years ago, the denomination in America passed through a very troublesome era of agitation, by which it was rent asunder into two bodies. This crisis came just after the separation of the Congregational churches of New England into Orthodox and Unitarian, and the questions involved were very similar. A large portion of the Quakers showed at this time that they held what are known as Unitarian views of the nature, and mission of Jesus, and of doctrines centring in him; the others—at that time, taking the country through, about an equal portion—approached nearer to the Trinitarian doctrine, although always refusing, as George Fox and the early Quakers did, to use the word Trinity. A complete separation of these two wings of the Society ensued, and since that day there have been practically two denominations of the Society of Friends, as distinct from each other in their ecclesiastical relations as are the Presbyterians and the Unitarians. They both claim the same name, the same traditions, the same ancient faith; both profess to adhere to the doctrine preached by Fox and Penn and Barclay, conform essentially to the same peculiarities of custom, and keep the same form of church administration: yet they have no ecclesiastical dealings with each other. One of these bodies is commonly known as "Orthodox Quakers," the other as "Hicksites,"—a name given to the liberal or Unitarian branch from Elias Hicks, who was one of the ablest and most prominent preachers of the Society and popularly recognized as the leader of that branch.

An impartial student of the history of the Society would probably say that, while George Fox and his coadjutors did not distinctly utter such views as were held by Elias Hicks and those who agreed with him—for the questions involved in the Hicksite separation were not in Fox's day the issue—yet the "Hicksite" branch comes more nearly in the line of logical succession from ancient Quakerism than does the "Orthodox." For if there is one doctrine more than another that distinguished ancient Quakerism and gave it prominence, if there is one doctrine more than another for which the Society of Friends stands in the history of religious development, it is the doctrine of the "Inner Light," or the immediate guidance of each individual soul by the Divine Spirit. This doctrine is the special contribution which the Society of Friends has made to the theology of Christendom. And it is a grand doctrine to have contributed to the progress of religious ideas in the seventeenth century. The ecclesiastical historian in the future will see in this doctrine the crowning glory of the Society. And those of us who, like the writer of this article, were born and bred in the Society, must be proud to have received such an inheritance from it. It is true that we shall find the doctrine somewhat crudely stated by some of the early Quakers, and still more crudely and sometimes fanatically, not to say fantastically, acted upon by them; but none the less was it rich in contents and a most valuable contribution to the religious ideas that have been prominently at work in Christendom in the last two centuries. It was the discovery and announcement by the religious sentiment of what afterwards appeared in the refined dress of the Transcendental philosophy, and of what Theodore Parker, still later, theologically proclaimed in his favorite doctrine of the Immanence of God in the human soul. And upon this doctrine Elias Hicks and his friends laid special emphasis.

As might have been supposed, the Hicksite branch of Quakerism, though it has come to have, after forty years of peace, its conservative wing, has naturally tended towards more openly avowed rationalism, and its edges have been ravelling out into that open though unorganized dissent from all systems of theology and institutions of religion which is now so rife in America. It has sent many recruits into the Unitarian denomination; some churches known as Unitarian are made up very largely of those who have come from this branch of Quakerism; and these are generally freer churches than those whose traditions are more strongly of the old Congregational order. Still, this Hicksite branch of the Society of Friends preserves its separate existence and vitality. Something may be judged of the freedom it allows by the fact that Lucretia Mott has always retained her membership in the body. She has suffered some ecclesiastical annoyance, and in some localities, perhaps, would hardly be fellowshiped even by Hicksite Quakers, because of her rationalistic and reformatory views; yet the body has never disowned her, and she still speaks as a regularly recognized preacher in their meetings. They have had and still have other prominent members and preachers who would agree with her views. This branch of the Society may be said to be advancing by natural steps in all questions of religion and social reform. There is resistance, but the spirit of progress appears to be getting the mastery.

But the "Orthodox" division of Quakerism seems to be in a state of much greater agitation. The old serenity in many quarters is giving place to feverish excitement. As might have been anticipated, the tendency in this division since the separation has been towards a more Trinitarian type of doctrine, though the word "Trinity" is still disavowed. But within a few years this tendency towards the so-called Evangelical sects has been greatly accelerated. The doctrine of the "Inner Light" is seldom preached in their meetings now; nor that cognate doctrine of ancient Quakerism, the seed of Divine grace given in every man's heart and capable of saving every man even though the Bible and the outward Christ were never heard of. Now the burden of their preaching is the doctrine of atonement by the blood of Christ; and it is preached in a very literal and outward way. At a meeting recently attended by the present writer one of their prominent preachers said in his discourse,—"There is nothing that can wash away sin, nothing that can cover it up, but blood; nothing that can save man but faith in the atoning blood of Christ." This is not the doctrine of Fox and Penn and Barclay. These "Orthodox" Friends, too, are now coming to subordinate the doctrine of the spirit to the "letter" of the Bible. This is the secret of Miss Smiley's recent adoption of water baptism. She has but gone a step further in the direction whither this branch of the Society generally is tending. The Methodist "revival" spirit has crept in largely among them. In some places they are holding meetings similar to the Orthodox and Methodist revival meetings, sometimes formally conducted by a "leader," opened with Scripture reading, and filled up with the prayer and talk usual at a conference meeting of a revivalist sect. Many of their ordinary meetings begin to partake largely of this character; and those who once attended them, loving their sacred silence, are likely, if they go now, to sadly miss it. One of the public sessions of their late Yearly Meeting at Newport was conducted by the two preachers who sat at the head of the meeting with nearly as much formality as was the neighboring Baptist or Unitarian service. The meeting was opened with the announcement of "silent prayer,"—as if that were not always the assumption in a Quaker meeting unless the silence should be broken! It closed with vocal prayer so announced as to be understood by the congregation to mark the close of the meeting; and the time between was so filled with closely following discourses from the two preachers that there was nowhere the smallest crevice of opportunity for any other of their many preachers present, even if "the spirit had moved them" to utterance—nor for that silence which is sometimes more eloquent than speech.

Such changes as these in Quakerism seem to be signs of retrogression rather than progress, even though they are accompanied by the more praiseworthy innovations of greater liberality in social matters, less of formalism in respect to dress, less of fear to mingle with other people in works of philanthropy and charity. Quakerism has had an honorable career and done an excellent work in religious history; and there are many who have felt constrained by their convictions to leave the denomination who yet honor it for what it has done for them, and would sincerely grieve to see it become, what "Orthodox" Quakerism is now drifting towards, a second form of Methodism.

W. J. P.

THE BENNETT CASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Sir,—

"A triumph—the Ritualists shouting are heard—
The late Privy Council's decision has been.
It leaves them free, truly, to say what's absurd,
But doesn't allow them to say what they meant!"

So sings our merry friend, Mr. Punch, on the judgment lately pronounced in the "Bennett case." This important judgment is the close of a long struggle between the Low Churchmen and High Churchmen on the question of sacramentalism, and in few words it establishes the right of the Ritualists to teach the Real Presence of Christ in the consecrated bread and wine. This doctrine is claimed by them to be identical with the Roman doctrine of Transubstantiation. The judgment, moreover, establishes the whole principle of the celebrated "Tract XC," and this endorses the immorality of non-natural interpretation.

Your readers, I dare say, are not better acquainted with the Thirty-Nine Articles than most people in England, so that, if they refer to Articles 25, 28 and 29, they will see how impossible it is to reconcile the plain literal sense of those words with Mr. Bennett's teaching. The most remarkable feature in the whole case is that, in the first edition of his book, Mr. Bennett said:—"I myself adore and teach the people to adore the consecrated elements, believing Christ to be in them—believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." This having been condemned as heresy, Mr. Bennett alters, in a later edition, to the following words:—"I myself adore and teach the people to adore Christ present in the sacrament under the form of bread and wine." In another passage Mr. Bennett substituted for the term "visible presence," "objective presence," and with complete success. What may not one do, if one is but an idolater and sticks to it?

Their lordships, not without doubts and divisions of opinion, have pronounced that these statements are legal. No wonder that Mr. Bennett could triumphantly say that he meant precisely the same thing in both the original and the altered essays; and how one can be legal and the other illegal I cannot discover. I have heard it said that the Dean of Arches, who condemned the former sentence, himself drew up the latter one. But I will not answer for the truth of this rumor.

More interest will be felt in how this judgment has been received. The evangelicals are of course disgusted and threaten to secede, which you may be quite sure they will never do, not in any numbers at all events. They will quiet each other down by the hope of another prosecution and the reversal of this sentence.

The Rock, on the other hand, urges "patience and prayer," and lays the blame of the mishap, as it well may, on Mr. Gladstone, who would think it a virtue to sell his own brother for "Church principles," and will sacrifice his own party for sacerdotalism if he ever gets a chance.

Certainly the choice of Privy Councillors in such appeals rests very much with him, and, as Sir John Coleridge observed, more often than not the Privy Council is a packed tribunal! Fancy the people of England calmly sitting down with this condition of things after their attention has been called to it by the Attorney (then Solicitor) General!

But now what do the Ritualists themselves say to it? Taking the Church Times as the organ of the extreme party—the English Church Union—we find, as we suspected, not the flourish of trumpets and the waving of flags over the victory, but a haughty tone of defiance and contempt. I believe they would have been better pleased and more strengthened by a condemnation than by an acquittal of their opinions. They say:—"We are perfectly ungrateful and thankless to the court for its acquittal of Mr. Bennett." They do not recognize his escape as due to his innocence, but to the pressure of their own party upon the judges. "It was necessary," say they, "that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, having long ago lost credit in the eyes of all intelligent and educated Englishmen, should fill up the measure of its errors, and earn the dislike and censure of the uneducated and unthinking, without in any degree reinstating itself in the esteem of its previous opponents. This it has contrived to effect with remarkable precision by its recent finding in the long pending case of Sheppard vs. Bennett." This will give you some idea of the rebellion cherished by these very men, to whom the judgment has just granted a royal charter. You will have observed that none of their accused ever appear before this Court of Privy Council. They treat its whole constitution with silent contempt and ignore its sentences until forced into obedience by the executive. Mr. Purchas is another instance. He has been condemned and suspended months ago, and yet he still goes on preaching and conjuring in his chapel at Brighton, as though he had never been even tried. If you care to know what outsiders think of it all, I will give you a brief extract from the Examiner, which says:—"In reading this judgment, so wise from a political, so hesitating from a judicial, and so contemptible from a religious point of view, the mind involuntarily recalls the vigor and trenchancy of the judgment against Mr. Voysey, and asks why the difference." In words too flattering to quote, the Examiner points out that the judicial committee were overawed by the numerical strength of Mr. Bennett's party; and that, whereas I was condemned because I made my meaning plain and used no evasion, Mr. Bennett got off by quibbling. "People will say, and justly, that Mr. Voysey was lost by his honesty and Mr. Bennett saved by his cleverness."

For my own part, I unfeignedly rejoice in the acquittal of Mr. Bennett, because, so long as these Ritualists are compelled to share the privileges and prestige of the Church with a lot of others who deny all their pretensions and denounce nearly all their dogmas, they can never raise the cry of "Church Unity" without being unmercifully laughed at. The whole thing is such an utter sham, so palpable, so transparent, that "Church principles" can only fall into contempt while the present state of comprehension lasts.

Verily, as the Examiner describes it, it is the "collapse of the Church."

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE,
DULWICH, S.E., June 29, 1872.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Last Sunday, having no lecture of my own, I attended the "public worship of God" at a Congregational church in the morning and a Methodist in the afternoon. Both ministers, I learned, hold three services every Sunday, and frequently assist at Sunday school during noon intermission. With the mercury soaring among the nineties in the shade, worship is certainly no child's play, whether for minister, congregation or Sunday school teachers and scholars. I think only dread of those torrid climes where brimstone is burned instead of anthracite to keep up "the smoke of their torment," perpetuates such frightful bondage among the people.

When every class of laborers is striking for less hours or more pay, why don't the ministers "strike?" That was my first question. But as the services proceeded, it seemed to me the strike should come from the congregations, rather than the ministers—from the pews more than the pulpits.

And yet the Congregational minister preached on freedom; from the text, "The truth shall make you free." But although he seemed to be master and overruler, and to be so regarded, I saw no sign on his part of intended emancipation, nor expectation of it on the side of the congregation. I believed the text; but if the text was true, the sermon was a lie. The doctrine inculcated was, that the Scriptures are the only revealed will of God; that they are all truth, and the whole of moral and religious truth, and nothing but the truth; and as such, we must believe and accept every word of them—so help us God!

Old Testament and New were enjoined and enforced. Indeed, the Old pre-eminently; for the preacher said, quite rhetorically as well as theologically, that we must believe in Eden, Sinai, and Calvary.

To which super-added, were to be three dismal services and a Sunday school on Sunday, on every Sunday; and last Sunday, the Sacramental supper was observed there besides, the mercury near ninety, Fahrenheit, some of the congregation climbing over hills four measured miles to get there (hills that you in Ohio would justly call mountains), and pouring out money like water to build churches and vestries and support ministers and missionaries and music and other appliances of worship and religion; all this on pain of everlasting burnings in fire that no mercury can measure nor aught but devils and immortal souls can endure. Such was really the preacher's idea of Christian liberty! This, too, was his "salvation without money and without price."

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," was the text, the point of departure. The Scriptures were the word of God, and the only moral and religious truth in the world, or that ever was, or ever would be in the world. And out of those Scriptures was deduced everything I have described, and more, and worse if possible; and that was Freedom!

I was pleased to see some of the older members of the congregation soundly sleeping; frequently nodding towards the preacher, as if in assent to the words uttered; although I knew very well that neither they nor he believed any such stupendous absurdities as the sermon contained or inculcated; and that to me was the pleasantest part of the whole performance.

The Methodist minister's text was:—"For we are laborers together with God." But as the sermon was merely a Methodist exhortation, such as you will almost always hear, and as these Notes are enough for your scanty and generally so richly-stored columns, I will not give more description. All day I thought,—verily idolatry is at our own doors. Let the true missionaries be greatly multiplied.

P. P.

PUTTING UP THE BARS.

We fear that our Methodist brethren, toward the close of their long Conference, begun, like less saintly assemblies, to be tired of deliberation, and to want to go home. It is on this hypothesis that we explain the adoption, "by acclamation," of the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That we will coöperate with every effort which is put forth to make our common schools more efficient and permanent.

Resolved, That it is our firm conviction that to divide the common school funds among religious denominations is wrong in principle, hostile to our institutions and to the cause of education; therefore

Resolved, That we resist all means which may be employed to exclude from our common schools the Bible, which is the charter of our liberties and the inspiration of our civilization.

What puzzles us in this declaration is the therefore. We concur heartily in the first two resolutions, and therefore we are willing to forego the formal reading of the Bible in the public schools, in order that these schools may not be accused of being the property of the religious denominations known as Protestants. Perhaps the Conference is opposed to "dividing" the school funds, because it is in favor of giving them all to the Protestants. Our position is, we venture to think, more conducive to the efficiency and permanency of the schools. We oppose the giving of money by the State (whether out of the school funds or out of any other funds) to support sectarian institutions of any kind: we wish to make the common schools the benefactors of all citizens; and we would rather "exclude the Bible" than exclude Catholics, Jews, and infidels, from their advantages. This is a logical, the other is a tyrannical, answer to the complaints of these classes of citizens. —Christian Union.

Mazzini was a fine scholar. His father, an eminent physician of Geneva, gave him a good University education, and saw him with pride take his diploma in law. It was a heavy affliction to him (the father) to the day of his death, that his son should have, while yet but little more than a boy, thrown up all the prospects of the career opening before him to devote himself to the cause of Italy. He was born about the year 1805—as I have reason to believe, and not in 1808 as the English papers state—and must have been about eighteen when his contributions in the Indicatore Genois began to attract so much attention that the government thought it necessary to suppress the paper. At that time he sat at the feet of Manzoni, and imbibed his romantic and revolutionary ideas; but he soon found that Manzoni was narrowed by his Catholicism, and so the disciple outsoared the master. Looking about for his master, he could find one only in the dead Dante. Dante's mantle fell on him and he wore it worthily to the end. Mazzini was, in religious opinion, a simple Theist, with an enthusiastic admiration for the life and character of Christ. He was personally the most reverent and, in a high sense, religious man I ever saw.—M. D. Conway, in Qtn. Com.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

A NOTEWORTHY FACT.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., July 8th, 1872.

I listened yesterday, in the Chapel of Yale College, to an elaborate sermon by President Porter, in defence of allegiance to Christ—the historical Christ of Orthodoxy. It was the occasion of a last sermon to the graduating class, when the preacher was expected to select a significant and important topic, and to exert his utmost ability. The discourse was ably conceived and ably written, and it was delivered with marked power. But it was a piece of rationalism and criticism, though in defence of Orthodox doctrine rather than in attack upon it, and was thus a complete concession to the rationalistic and critical method. And for twenty years this has been more and more the character of the great Orthodox sermons, an attempt to make the rationalistic method serve in defence of Christianity. They borrow the enemy's weapons to meet the enemy.

Ever since my student life began, I have seen Orthodox Christianity on the defensive; and now you are sure to get, on any great Orthodox occasion, an Orthodox effort to beat criticism and rationalism on their own ground. The result is in many instances what it was a long time ago with a thinking man in a Connecticut town, who was at once a man of remarkable soundness of judgment and an atheist. Some one asked him one day how it chanced that a man of his character and intelligence was an atheist, and he replied:—"I wasn't until Dr. Dwight came up here and preached a series of sermons to prove the existence of God, and I thought he didn't prove it." Nothing has been so prolific of doubt of Christianity as the defences of Christianity. A weak reasoner may go along very well in the honest and zealous application of bad doctrine to good uses, but let him desert the practical to rationalize a defence of his doctrine and he breaks down at once. This habit of standing on the defensive is a sign of decline, a token that the end draws near. No matter what the vigor and courage of the defence; no matter what the satisfaction which it excites; the undoubted fact is that, when a faith is forced to stand upon the defensive, and to come to the bar of reason, in that moment history calls the undertaker, and very soon another victim of progress is carried to its long home.

The only faiths which will stand are those which are based in the irrepressible instincts of man, and which it is natural to assert and urge, to declare and insist on, less from reasoning than from first principles of reason. The humane instinct, for example, requires only to be stated, explained, and enforced, not by arguments from without, but from the single reason, the deep self-evidence, which lies in the direct character of the sentiment itself. So the instinct of rectitude can be made the subject of direct confession and appeal, without logomachies of any kind, because it carries in itself the force with which conviction can be wrought. And out of these two instincts does there not spring what may be called the theistic instinct, an irrepressible thought of Infinite right and good, a Power exceeding all conception and a Presence passing all understanding, the dim consciousness of which has found broken utterance in our manifold confessions of God? Nay, more, is it not from a natural thought of divided and distinct operations of power that human philosophy of religion has placed an Infinite Father in the seat of external providence, and found in Infinite Reason the light at which all our reason is kindled, and in Infinite Spirit the inspiration of all that goes on in our souls? This threefold conception of the divine is simple and natural, and does not belong exclusively to Christianity, and in its pure form it may be preached on its own evidence, simply from the clearness with which it is conceived, and the energy with which it is believed.

But whatever may be the contents of a faith, the only strong preaching of it is that which makes it a matter of direct appeal on its own evidence to the good sense and feelings of average men. If a time comes when a faith is not so preached, nothing is surer than that that faith is losing its power. The elaborate defences of Orthodox Christianity, which occupy the foreground now in the Orthodox pulpit, are an advertisement that the day of its power is gone by, that it is now a mere tradition to be fought for, not an inspiration capable of making prophets, or at least confessors and preachers. And when nothing better than an apology can be offered to young men just entering the world, who need the practical power of religion far more than they do its correct theory, it must be assumed that the teachers of Orthodoxy are conscious that they have a weak cause,—a cause desperately in need of being saved. And such a thousand signs declare to be the case. It is not seen in one thing alone, nor on single occasions, but everywhere and in everything that Orthodox views of Christianity are sinking forever below the horizon of history.

"DEATH-BEDS."

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your issue of June 29th appears an article under the above heading, with comments by the editor.

"As to the influence of theological opinions in cheering dying beds," a physician's opportunity for observation is perhaps quite equal to that of any class of persons; and as a member of that class I desire to add my testimony.

I have stood by the death-bed of a great many persons—men stricken down by apoplexy, mangled by explosions, railroad collisions and falling buildings; have witnessed death from delirium tremens, continued fevers, consumption and cancer, and in the latter disease have seen them literally eaten alive by maggots; and I am prepared to state positively that the result of my own observation has been to convince me that, so far as the bed of death is concerned, mankind have in no way been benefited by "Christ Jesus and him crucified."

Whatever there may be of pain and suffering in the last illness, the act of death is not only painless, but has been often described as delightful. Whatever of pain and terror then accompany the last act, is made pain—made suffering—made such by fear that after all "faith is vain," sins are not "forgiven," and this falls at the door of theology. One old lady,—a real "mother in Israel," a church member for more than twenty years, a good and true woman every way,—died cursing me because I told her she could not get well. She "was not ready," "not prepared," must "make her peace," &c. &c.; and the dead face retained an expression of terror that none will forget who saw it. In another instance, one who had lived dissolutely and dishonestly, according to the judgment of his fellow men, was dying; all day the clergyman and the weeping wife and friends had been praying, not that he might live, but that he might be "saved." During his sane moments, he drove them away with curses; but when the purple line of death was upon him, when the poison of gangrene had entered his blood, and the brain was no longer nourished by a fluid which could give rise to intelligent thought or expression, he repeated automatically the words put into his mouth by the officious clergyman—"I love Jesus. I die happy."

I shall never forget the death of one old man. His disease was cancer of the stomach. He suffered very little pain, but wasted gradually away. For weeks he watched the progress of the "fell destroyer," counted his own pulse and held up his almost transparent hands to the light, to mark how the flesh wasted from the bones. He was a philosopher, and had never "professed religion," although his life had been marked by deeds of charity and words of love. He seemed to derive a new pleasure from watching the decay of his body, and studied with interest every phenomenon; and when last he closed his eyes, entirely conscious that the last moment had come, he said:—"I shall soon open them to new beauties on the other side."

This death argument on the part of Christian theology seems to be the "last ditch," and its defence there is utterly hopeless. It has added terror and the fear of an angry God and roaring devil to the last moments of many who had otherwise died peacefully; and for every "sling" of which it has robbed death, it has added a hundred. It is just as natural that we should die as that we should be born; and, of the two processes, I believe death to be the least painful.

CINCINNATI, Ohio.

NEW MILFORD RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

New Milford, Pa., has six hundred inhabitants, and supports a Religious Society, a Roman Catholic church and three orthodox Protestant churches. October 18, 1872, the Methodist minister was suspended for liberal teaching. On the following evening, in Phinney's Hall, a meeting composed of those who sympathized with the preacher, and, in general, endorsed his doctrine, was held; and, although the notice was short and informal, yet about one hundred and fifty were present. The intelligence and respectability of the village and vicinity were well represented, and all concurred in adopting measures by which religious truth could be taught in a rational way, and in keeping with the march of progress. The preacher offered his services for one year on the condition that he would not be confined within any creedal lines, and his offer was accepted. It was unanimously voted that a Town Hall be erected by a joint-stock company, each share to be ten dollars, and to entitle a shareholder to a vote. Next day two energetic citizens solicited subscriptions for stock to the amount of $3000, and the subscriptions have since increased, but we do not know the present amount. This Hall is now in course of erection, and will be rented by the Liberal Religionists, who constitute a majority of the stockholders. Before the following Sunday, Phinney's Hall was seated and an organ was provided. Sunday morning there was a large attendance, and the evening congregation could not all find accommodation in the Hall; and ever since we have had good average congregations, drawn from the town and from the neighborhood for miles around. We have been very successful financially, considering the newness of the movement, and the difficulty, as to money, which the Orthodox experience in sustaining themselves.

Though human reason has long ago extracted the teeth of the ferocious monster of Christian persecution, yet the hateful thing makes horrible grimaces.

We know this is the utmost it can do, and so we treat it with merited contempt.

The Methodists held a series of revivals during the winter months, and a few ignorant boys and girls and children were coerced or frightened to "go up to the altar." This was a poor return for the amount of labor and time expended; and the non-sensical conduct of this "revival season" tended to disgust the sober superstitious and to advance the cause of reason. Prior to this movement, New Milford had lazy Christians, and its churches were not on very friendly terms with one another, and Universalists were detested. Now every Christian is a missionary, the churches join hands to crush the "Infidels," and Universalists are esteemed "very good people." Undesignedly, and in every possible way, the bitter spirit of fanaticism has contributed to our success. A few copies of THE INDEX come here; and the spirit, culture, and fairness of this intellectual and heroic little sheet have won the respect of its subscribers. The Golden Age, the Boston Investigator, and the Banner of Light, are shedding blessings among the rugged hills of Northern Pennsylvania.

Our platform is the broadest. Materialists, Spiritualists, Free Religionists, Christians, extra-Christians, anti-Christians, Deists, Rationalists, meet together as brothers. We ask every man to think for himself and to be true to himself. We recognize the authority of no book; but we prize truth wherever found. We receive as useful no fact which reason and conscience cannot interpret. We believe that "the world is our country, and to do good our religion," and that "happiness is our being's end and aim," and that Human Reason, Human Conscience, and Human Love are the only Triune Deity whose worship will banish from earth ignorance, poverty and superstition, and usher in the universal reign of man's happiness.

J. S. THOMSON.

NEW MILFORD, Pa., June 5, 1872.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

FRIEND ABBOT:—

To be able clearly to understand what Natural Religion is, is of very great importance; hence the need of correct definitions. Among the excellent ones found in THE INDEX, I propose to put in mine. Religion is an active and powerful inherent element of the soul, over which it has great power, either for good or evil, according to its development in true wisdom. It is that inward force or voice which is ever persuading to what is believed to be a higher or more perfect life. From all devotees of creeds, it demands strict obedience to their requirements. To enlightened philosophers it says—perfect yourselves in all manliness. All of every grade of development it is ever urging on to what each believes to be right, and dissuading from all wrong. It puts its seal of approbation on every conscientious act, no matter how absurd or injurious practically it may be. Hence the great importance and necessity of having a rational and scientific idea of right and truth promulgated far and wide, so that this noble faculty of the soul may find a legitimate field of activity, and work in complete harmony with its own godlike nature.

EUGENE HUTCHINSON.

REEDS' FERRY, N. H., July 1, 1872.

THE EUCHARIST.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Eighteen hundred and forty-two years ago this very spring, we learn that a positive command was given to eat bread and drink wine in commemoration of an event then transacted in a small house in Jerusalem, by thirteen men, under the supervision of the son of a carpenter's wife.

This has been handed down through the Catholic Church and its thousand offshoots, as of vital importance to the children of men everywhere.

The very eloquent Father Burke remarks, in a recent harangue to the faithful, "that no heaven exists for man, only through our Lord Jesus Christ in the blessed Eucharist."

My mind is exceedingly troubled in the calculation concerning the percentage of saved souls among the almost countless millions of human beings who have passed over the river since the advent of this person, who "brought tidings of great joy which should be to all people."

Can any of your readers throw any light upon the poor sinner's condition who lived and died before the Eucharist was inaugurated?

I really think it would be a source of great consolation to ascertain in some manner the percentage of prizes in this Christian scheme, as my figures show the blanks to be numerous; that, if the facts were well known in the community, more decisive steps would be taken and more attention given to it.

My figures show that the Omnipotent Jehovah would only secure to his own glory about one person in a hundred millions. Must he not again be sorry for having made man?

J. E. H.

A boy and a fire-cracker set Portland on fire. A boy, a cow, and a kerosene lamp burned up Chicago. Boys are of some account yet. Portland forbade fire-crackers because of its fire. Chicago is set against kerosene. Why don't both abolish the boys? There's where the mischief all comes from.—Zion's Herald.

A young physician in Sedalia, Mo., who had waited patiently for nearly three years for a call, at last found the following cheerful order on his slate:—"Doctor, come to Jesus."

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, on REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents concepts of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no abler, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpret the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, and Answered from a Bible Standpoint, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL
FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.

Address, S. B. MORSE,
128-129
25 BROMFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STROPLET,
ARCHITECTS,
78 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO,
[180-181]

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address, THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents. Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $5.00. Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $5.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,
Box 3398, St. Louis, Mo.

110-161cow.

UNCOMMON AND VALUABLE BOOKS!

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

"Origins of the Bible."—AN INQUIRY INTO THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGINALS OF KING JAMES' BIBLE: When were they written? Where were they written? Who wrote them? And how have they been preserved and handed down? (Only a limited number printed.) In large 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"In conclusion, the author gives an excellent summary of Man's Nature,—Pathological, Intellectual, Physiological, Chemical,—as the most reliable standard by which we can measure or weigh the credibility of history and of revelation."

Why and What am I?—THE CONFESSIONS OF AN INQUIRER.—I. Heart Experience; or, the Education of the Emotions. By JAMES JACKSON JARVIS. (Published in Boston, and afterward suppressed.) In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The 'Inquirer' is full of revolutionary ideas. He tells what he heard and what he did before and since his birth, and very truthfully and powerfully portrays his experience and emotions."

Hobbes' (THOMAS) Works.—English and Latin. Now first collected and edited by Sir WM. MOLESWORTH. Portrait, etc. London: 1820. Complete set, 16 vols. 8vo, cloth, $20.00.

"One of the greatest and most original thinkers in the English language."

Gospel Paganism: OR, REASON'S REVOLT AGAINST THE REVEALED. With reprint of a Letter to (London) Social Science Association, 1868. By GEORGE RANKIN. London: 1864. In 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Fourier (CHARLES)—The Life of. By CHARLES PALLASIN, M.D. With an Appendix. Translated by FRANCIS GEORGE SHAW. Portrait. In 12mo, paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth, $1.00.

"Contains a very comprehensive view of Fourier's writings."

Bhagvat-Geeta (The): OR, DIALOGUES OF KRISHNA AND ARJUNA. In Eighteen Lectures, with Notes. Translated from the original, in the Sanskrit, or Ancient Language of the Brahmans, by CHARLES WILKINS. (Only a very limited edition printed.) In royal 8vo, boards, $2.50.

"The antiquity of the original of the Bhagvat-Geeta, and the veneration in which it hath been held for so many ages by a very considerable portion of the human race, must render it one of the greatest curiosities in the literary world."

Law (The) of Nations. Affecting Commerce During War: with a Review of the Jurisdiction, Practice and Proceedings of Prize Courts. By FRANCIS H. UPTON, LL.B. In large 8vo, law sheep, $1.00.

Life of Thomas Paine—Mover of the Declaration of Independence, Secretary of Foreign Affairs under the First American Congress, Member of the National Convention of France, Author, etc., etc. (By CALVIN BLANCHARD.) With Portraits. In 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.

Principles: OR, NATURE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.—Theory of Universal Magnetism, Simplified. Demonstrating the Existence and Operation of Repulsive Force, co-existent with Gravitation. By L. L. CHAPMAN. In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Wonderfully comprehensive and bold."

Roback (DR. C. W.) The Mysteries of Astrology and the Wonders of Magic. With numerous Illustrations and Portraits. Boston: 1839. In 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $3.00.

"Contains an account of Geomancy, Chiromancy, Physiognomy, etc."

Bible Exposed (The). By ERASMUS. A critical and curious book by a modern writer. In large 8vo, cloth, $1.75; paper covers, $1.25.

"In Appendix, the author gives his own ideas concerning Natural Religion, and endeavors to show that he is not anxious to overthrow all religions."

Materialism of the Present Day.—A Critique of Dr. Buchner's System. By PAUL JANET. Translated from the French by GUERAY MASSON. In 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Advice to a Mother on the Management of her Offspring, Childhood and Youth. In 16mo, cloth, 50 cts.

Moore's (HANNAH) Works. Containing "Clebs in Search of a Wife," "Tales, Stories and Allegories." In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

"Hannah Moore's works have established her name as a great moral writer."

Candide. By VOLTAIRE. "The spiciest, witliest and most exciting book in the French language." Fully translated into English. In 16mo, cloth, 85 cts.

". Contains 'Apostrophe Americana,' 'Perfect Happiness,' and 'Amours of Famous Men and Women,' in Appendix."

Gil Blas: THE ADVENTURES OF GIL BLAS OF SANTILLANE. Translated from the French of LE SAOE, by SMOLETT. Illustrated with twenty Steel Engravings by ROBERT SMIRKE. In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $5.00.

"The popularity of 'Gil Blas,' which equals that of any of the most famous productions, may afford a lesson to the writers of fiction who are ambitious that their works should live."

Rural Rambles: OR, SOME CHAPTERS ON FLOWERS, BIRDS AND INSECTS. By A LADY. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The author of 'Rural Rambles,' like the insect and the bird gathering honey for the hive and the twig for the nest, has passed from treatise to authority, ever seeking to throw around her subject the charms of association and poetry."

Poetic Album (The). Consisting of Choice Selections from the POEMS OF ALFRED TENNYSON, MISS BROWNING AND ALICE SMITH. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.20.

"The selections have been made with consummate skill and strict fidelity. To winnow the wheat from the chaff has been the main object of the accomplished compiler."

Writing Reader (The). Comprising, in the different Handwritings of the present day, (very excellent) selections from Standard Authors, with Specimens of French, German, Spanish and Italian Commercial Penmanship, designed for the use of Schools and Families. By T. GILBERT and F. PHAUS. In royal 8vo, half roan, $1.00.

Any of the above will be carefully sent by mail, on receipt of price; or by Express, if so ordered, payable on delivery (C. O. D.) Address

DION THOMAS, Bookseller,

141 Fulton Street, New York City.

[180-186cow]

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 25

SECOND SERIES.....No. 26 to No. 50

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[88-89] 19 PINCHBET ST., BOSTON.

The Pittsburgh Radical Society.

This Society meets every Sunday, at 10 1/2 A.M., in the Hall over the Third National Bank, corner Wood Street and Virgin Alley.

Its object is the free discussion of all subjects relating to mental or moral progress, with a view to ascertain "WHAT IS TRUTH?"

All views may be freely expressed, whether conflicting or not with tradition, popular opinion or prevailing religious teaching; and all such views may be as freely criticised,—the only limitation being that required by courtesy and order.

The exercises consist of an opening address, and a discussion upon the subject presented, by any persons present wishing to participate, up to time of adjournment. Opening speaker is allowed twenty minutes; all others five minutes each.

Society adjourns promptly at 1 1/4 past 12.

The co-operation of all who sympathize with this movement in favor of free discussion is desirable, and their attendance cordially requested. [188-194]

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 188 in eight days, another 233 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURN & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[186-151.]

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says: "I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word"); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, JULY 27, 1872.

WHOLE No. 135.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilised world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTUIVUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WRIGHT
HIGGINS, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHURCH, REV. CHARLES
VOTSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England),
REV. MORDECAI D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. HATSON, Business Agent.

Positivism in Theology.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[Concluded.]

To be consistent, Empiricism must utterly sink the soul in its material surroundings. The profoundest question of philosophy turns on the relation of Thought to Being, Mind to Matter, Subject to Object, or (in empiricist phrase) Organism to Environment. Is the Organism purely the product of the Environment? Then we have Empiricism, Sensationalism, Materialism, whose motto is that of Desutt-Tracy,—"Penser c'est sentir." Is the Environment the product of the Organism? Then we have Transcendentalism, Egoism, Idealism, whose motto is that of Berkeley,—"The esse of objects is percipi." Are the Organism and Environment both products of some underlying and active Unity? Then we have Identity or Pantheism, whose motto is the proposition of Spinoza,—"In rerum natura non nisi unam substantiam dari." Are the Organism and Environment given simply in the co-ordination and correlation of actual knowledge? Then we have Dualism, Natural Realism, Positivism, whose motto is that of Sir William Hamilton,—"The Ego and Non-Ego are both given in consciousness." Mr. Spencer makes his election in Empiricism, but shrinks from the acceptance of its necessary implications, and thereby forfeits his title to rank among the great leaders of philosophy. Teaching that every faculty of the mind is the effect of impressions made by the Environment upon the Organism, he should also teach that the mind is nothing distinct from the organism, and that the mind's faculties will perish at the disintegration of the organism; that, as fire is a mere phenomenon of chemical combination, ceasing with it, so life is a mere phenomenon of organic "re-arrangement of parts," and will cease when the Dissolution which is the converse and sequel of Evolution has become complete; and that the theory of a "soul" is as completely exploded as the theory of "philogiston."

But, even if he accepted these inevitable corollaries from the ground-principle of Empiricism, we should still object that Empiricism is thoroughly unscientific. Positivism, which is simply Science true to herself, finds two radically distinct orders of phenomena presented to her observation and study,—the one material, the other mental; and, in her present stage of development, she can neither reduce one to the other, nor yet trace their ontological connection. Any hypothesis as to their ontological dualism or monism is at present premature, or at best can serve only as a convenient supposition which may turn out either a reality or a fiction. The philosophic instinct favors, perhaps, the theory of monism; but, until this instinct shall be either inductively or deductively justified by verification, the question between monism and dualism must remain an open one. All fanciful guesses, however plausible, must be rigorously shut out from the sphere of science, and never elevated to the rank of positive results. The purely spiritual phenomena of thought and feeling are just as much data for positive science as the purely physical phenomena of respiration and digestion. Leave these facts, then, in their unperturbed integrity, and admit that the armies of science must march by parallel roads. There are two co-ordinate points of departure, matter and mind; and there are two co-ordinate termini to be reached in physical and spiritual laws, scientifically yet independently ascertained. No quarrel or mutual collision can occur so long as each corps d'armée adheres to its own legitimate route. If any higher synthesis shall become positively attainable by which mind and matter may be ontologically unified, well and good; until then, let us leave the question open. The basis of physical science is the immediate intuition or knowledge of matter; the basis of mental science is the immediate intuition or knowledge of mind. In either case, the basis is given as a datum of consciousness. From this double starting-point, science may advance in a double progress by parallel lines; and, so long as this independent parallelism is respected, no clashing is possible between physical and mental science. But, if physical science sneeringly objects that mental science proceeds on a sheer assumption of mind, the retort is crushing and cogent that physical science proceeds on the sheer assumption of matter. Who ever yet demonstrated the existence of either? Something must be given as a basis, a "pou so," as the condition of all science, whether physical or mental; and the problem of the connection between these two bases, if it cannot be positively solved, may be indefinitely postponed. But this is clear, that, starting from matter alone, science can never arrive at mind; and, starting from mind alone, can never arrive at matter. If science repudiates either basis, then scepticism or absolute nihilism definitively triumphs. Only by admitting what can neither be demonstrated without a begging of the question, nor doubted without a reductio ad absurdum of all intelligence,—namely, the natural veracity of the intuitive and cognitive powers,—is a truly positive science possible.

Hence, by the flippant dismissal of dualism as unworthy of a serious thought, Mr. Spencer only betrays his disqualification for the task he has assumed. We decline, therefore, to accept his philosophy as a true unification of the sciences, or a faithful exposition of genuine Positivism. It remains to examine his pretended reconciliation of "Science and Religion," and estimate its value.

The form in which he presents this problem shows how utterly he misconceives the issues involved. Science, properly interpreted, includes the whole body of human knowledge on all subjects whatever, in whatever mode attained. Hence, "Religion," so far as religious knowledge is concerned, is merely one department of Science; and reason, acting on given data, is the sole agent in its generation and development. Rationalism, or the application of reason to facts, is the universal method of Science. But Religion is a term more properly confined to the emotional and moral phenomena which reciprocally cause and are caused by the consciousness of our relations to God; while Theology is the term properly applicable to the intellectual apprehension of these relations. Hence Science and Religion cannot conflict, because they are not in the same category; while Science and Theology, being related as a whole and its part, cannot conflict, unless they adopt the incompatible methods of natural reason and supernatural authority. All knowledge or science must conform to scientific principles and methods, as a necessary condition of being real knowledge or science. Every opinion, as such, is the product of reason; and, even if swayed, biased, or perverted by prejudice, reason is not discarded, but only misapplied, and made to sanction falsehood rather than truth. There is no difference in kind between opinions concerning God and opinions concerning the physical universe; they are both subject to the laws of thought, that is, logic, and must conform to the general principles which regulate the investigation of all truth. The controversy between "Religion and Science" must continue until Religion [Theology] is merged in Science as a part in the whole.

Now, Mr. Spencer adopts the vulgar distinction between Religion and Science as co-ordinate departments of knowledge ("Every Religion is an a-priori theory of the Universe." First Principles, p. 43), and proceeds to argue that Religion is no department of knowledge at all. To reconcile the two, he quietly extinguishes Religion [Theology] altogether. He first stretches Science on his Procrustean bed, and lops off every member that is not the direct outgrowth of purely material data; reducing all phenomena of "Life, Mind, and Society," to mere motions of matter, he abolishes all Science but physical Science, which he pushes up into the very highest departments of biology. Having thus mutilated Science, he stretches "Religion" on the same couch, in order to leave it a lifeless corpse. That this is a strictly fair representation of his position, will appear from a glance at his very peculiar mode of "reconciliation." In order to find the hidden truth which underlies all forms of religious belief, he cancels everything which "Religion" adds to Science, and retains only those most abstract truths in which "Religion" and Science agree. If he were consistent, he would likewise cancel everything which Science adds to "Religion," retaining only the truth they hold in common. But, since the reality of a great "mystery" is the only truth in which they unite, this consistency would cost him too much, and expose the transparent worthlessness of this mode of reconciliation. Turning the tables reveals the fallacy. If Science, accepting this great "mystery" of the origination of the universe, can yet proceed to build up an edifice of real knowledge peculiar to itself, why may not "Religion" do the same? Why must "Religion" sacrifice all her peculiar results to Mr. Spencer's eclecticism, while Science is allowed to retain all of hers? Only one of two courses is open to him, if he aims at a genuine impartiality,—either to allow each to build up its own special results on this substratum of "mystery," or else to allow neither to do so. The method he actually pursues is therefore saved from obtrusive self-annihilation only by the astonishing inconsistency with which he applies it; for, if impartially applied, it would destroy Science as well as "Religion" (by which it must not be forgotten that he means Theology, or the intellectual theory of Religion). He sets aside the three theories of Theism, Atheism and Pantheism, as equally claiming to comprehend the incomprehensible, and will not suffer "Religion" to use either of them as means or helps in the discovery of truth. Yet, by his own showing, the ideas of Space, Time, Matter, Motion, and Force, which he allows Science to use in her own investigations, are precisely as incomprehensible as the idea of God. What sort of consistency or impartiality is this? And further, when we find him identifying the Unknowable with the scientific idea of Force, and predicating of It Unity, Omnipresence, and Causation, at the very same time that he denies our right to predicate of It any attributes at all—"And may we not therefore rightly refrain from assigning to it any attributes whatever, on the ground that such attributes, derived as they must be from our own natures, are not elevations, but degradations?" First Principles, p. 109.)—what shall we say of such surreptitious and ostensibly disavowed predilections? Surely the idea of One Omnipresent Cause is by no means identical with the absolutely Unknowable. If physical Science can legitimately make such predilections as these, theological Science can as legitimately add Infinity, Eternity, Self-Existence, and [Spirituality].

We conclude, therefore, that Mr. Spencer's philosophy is chiefly valuable as indicating the rapid spread of the true spirit of Positivism, and as foreshadowing the application of Positivist method to every branch of human thought and knowledge. But, like Comtism, it possesses little or no value as an exposition of Positivism in the highest departments of science. Its great influence among the more courageous thinkers of the times lies in the fact that it is an attempt, however imperfect, to approach the problems of Theology candidly and appreciatingly from the purely scientific standpoint. While we respect Mr. Spencer as a sincere and high-minded thinker of uncommon genius, we regard his philosophy as not sufficiently profound or coherent to entitle him to rank among the great leaders of human thought. He truly represents the spirit of Positivism in asserting the supremacy of its method throughout the whole field of knowledge; but he fatally misrepresents it in restricting this field to the narrow limits of Empiricism. The world is waiting for a creative and organizing intellect which shall integrate Empiricism and Transcendentalism in a deeper and wider synthesis than any yet attempted, and thus inaugurate the reign of a truly stable philosophy.

The great "religious" problem of our age, as of every age marked by intellectual activity, is this,—Shall Theism or Atheism finally prevail as the faith of the future? Every effort to narrow the question, or sink it in some side-issue, is necessarily abortive. While the sects of Christendom are quarrelling among themselves about some miserable triviality, the real battle-ground lies outside of them all. The hearts of men are anxiously pondering the momentous question,—Is there, or is there not, a God? If the inevitable and rapidly approaching triumph of Science is also to be the triumph of Materialism, then Christian sects are merely so many cattle fattening for the shambles,—Unitarianism among the rest. Whatever sect or denomination undertakes to force back the rising tide of Positivism will reenact the drama of Mrs. Partington and the Atlantic Ocean. Theism and Atheism are in the scales, and Science holds the balance. There is no alternative besides them, and the faith of coming ages is slowly and silently shaping itself in the stillness of many a musing soul. And what are Theism and Atheism?

The essence of Theism is the personality [spirituality] of God, and the absolute nature of all personality. These given, every other theistic doctrine follows. Theism differs from the old English Deism chiefly in this, that, while Deism rejected revelation and inspiration, Theism adopts and universalizes both; that is, instead of repudiating these sublime truths, or limiting them to special epochs or localities, it teaches that God everywhere and always reveals himself in universal Nature, and everywhere and always inspires each soul in proportion to its spiritual purity and fidelity. Atheism is properly whatever rejects or discredits this central principle of God's personality; and it exists in three main forms or phases. The first form, or Positive Atheism, is a blunt denial of God's existence, and is seldom met to-day among cultivated men. The second form, or Pantheism, is a much more widely spread phase of Atheism: we call it Atheism, not because it avows itself as such (for it has much to say about God), but because it denies the personality of God, which is the pivotal point of Theism. It contains the great truth that God is omnipresent and immanent throughout the universe; but it also contains the great error that God's immanence and omnipresence are incompatible with his personality. It is not a bold and outspoken Atheism; but rather a halting, inconsequent, half-way kind of Atheism,—attractive rather to a dreamy and poetic mysticism, than to severe and scientific thought. In calling Pantheism a form of Atheism, we intend no reproach of any kind, least of all do we desire to excite any odium theologicum: theology, like every other science, should be passionless, and, while affixing names to opinions according to their intrinsic nature, should scorn to greet the honest thought of any man with the hostility of bigotry or ill-will. If Atheism is the truth, by all means let us know it: truth is the only wholesome and innocent diet of the soul, and he who fears it is worse than an Atheist. The third form, or Negative Atheism, consists simply in ignoring God as not proved to exist, or, if existing, as utterly beyond the reach of human cognition. This is, perhaps, the most widely diffused of all the three forms, especially among scientific men, who sometimes reject with asperity the idea that the Unconditioned can exist as a Person, or come under the "limitations" of intelligence and will. Refraining alike from affirmation or negation as to the existence of a God, they turn theology out of doors, as the bastard offspring of priestcraft and popular superstition. Not a little of this ill-concealed contempt appears in Mr. Spencer's "First Principles" [see pp. 110-112]; and some who, like Sir William Hamilton and Mr. Mansel, would shake off with indignation and horror the imputation of Atheism, yet propound doctrines which make theology an excrescence that needs nothing so much as the surgeon's knife.

This, then, is the question that confronts every one who keeps abreast with the age,—Theism or Atheism? God or no God? And the answer to it, as we believe, depends on the answer to another question, underlying it and preceding it in the order of thought. We cannot better present this anterior question than in the words of one who himself, as we believe, wrongly answers it:—"The Bible or the Mathematics as the basis of what."

And so it must. We quietly accept the alternative, and without hesitation take our stand upon "the Mathematics." By this dilemma we understand Dr. Hedge to mean that the struggle between conservatism and radicalism is between the principles of infallible supernatural Authority and fallible natural Reason,—between Anti-Naturalism and Naturalism, which is a much more appropriate nomenclature than "Super-naturalism and Anti-Supernaturalism." By "the Mathematics" we understand him to mean, not necessarily demonstrative science, but science in general; for otherwise his dilemma would be a rhetorical extravagance, unworthy of one who aims to present the issue fairly. And that this is the true meaning of it, we think is conclusively shown by a subsequent passage:—

"My quarrel with the Anti-Supernaturalism of the present day is, that it satisfies no spiritual or intellectual want. It is neither one thing nor the other,—neither religion nor science; too self-willed for the one, not positive enough for the other."

Not only do we agree with Dr. Hedge in his presentation of the issue, which has been causelessly exclaimed against, but we also agree with him in his strictures upon "the Anti-Supernaturalism of the present day." But the remedy lies, not in a retreat to the leading-strings of Authority, but in a bold advance to the freedom of Positive Science. Naturalism must be more naturalistic, not less so. Let who will go back, [Theism] must go forward. It must suppress its lingering hankerings after the flesh-pots of Egypt, its timid back-glances towards the abandoned principle of authority. The "ark of the Lord" is in its hands, and retreat is treason. In the issue, then, between "the Bible and the Mathematics," we behold the conflict between Anti-Naturalism and Naturalism, Authority and Reason, Dogmatism and Positivism, Traditionalism and Science. Without temerity, without timidity, we cast in our lot with Science.*

But, lest we be misunderstood, a word of explanation is needed. We claim that the Bible itself, when regarded simply as part of universal literature, comes strictly and legitimately within the pale of Science, as part of the data from which it deduces its results. Cancel the Bible's pretensions to infallibility (or rather the pretensions made in its behalf by a senseless bibliolatry, for the Bible makes none), and spiritual Science or Theology finds in it her richest deposit of spiritual treasures, her most valuable thesaurus of religious experiences and ideas. Let Jesus stand in his native power and beauty, as simply the manliest, and therefore the divinest, of men, without the disfigurement of a supposed infallibility, and Theology finds in him the widest and deepest channel through which the Infinite God flows into finite souls. We refuse to be polarized by the superstitions we condemn into an attitude either hostile or apathetic toward Jesus himself. Our estimate of the world's debt to Jesus is not lessened, but heightened, by the application of naturalistic criticism to his life and words. It is on grounds of Positive Science that he is most entitled to the rational reverence of mankind; and we cannot but regret profoundly that disciples of Positive Science, in direct contravention of its true law and spirit, should ever suffer themselves to be betrayed into indifference or seeming irreverence towards him. The infirmities of her friends are the worst enemies of Truth.

Leaving, then, this question between Dogmatism and Positivism, Authority and Reason, as already foreclosed to all men thoroughly imbued with the advancing spirit of science; and believing that, by them at least, the decision in favor of the latter will never be reconsidered,—how will this decision affect that other and dependent question between Theism and Atheism? Shall Science, building on facts of universal human consciousness, establish a positive basis for Theism in the very constitution of human nature; or shall its great ideas, resting only on the rotten underpinning of arbitrary dogmas and doubtful traditions, come crashing to the ground? What the cultured classes believe to-day, the people will believe to-morrow; and the fate of Theism . . . depends on the answer to this question. The majority of independent thinkers, in this age of severe and sceptical inquiry, will neither accept these ideas on the dogmatic ground of a "supernatural interposition in human history," nor yet on the equally dogmatic ground of mere private and unverifiable "intuition." To approach such

* An attempt has recently been made to evade this plain issue by distinguishing between the Bible as an "authority" and as a "source of truth." But the question is simply as to infallibility. If the Bible is an infallible source of truth, it becomes necessarily an infallible authority; for, if infallible, its deliverances must not be gained or even doubted by reason, which is thus enslaved to it hand and foot. But if it is not an infallible source of truth, then it is not only a "source of truth," but also a "source of error," and reason must sift out the wheat from the chaff. The debate hinges on a single question,—Can the Bible, or any part of the Bible, as for example the reported sayings of Jesus, be taken as an infallible, exhaustive or final statement of truth, which reason has no right to challenge, all out, prune, or wholly set aside? We answer, No. Even in the words of Jesus, cited as they are with the Spirit of God, there are unmistakable traces of popular errors on certain points, which can be explained away only at the expense of his moral purity. The sayings of Jesus himself are only faint glimpses of the infinite and unutterable Truth. To identify his words with the Word of God, of which these are only translations into poor human speech, is to confound the interpretation with the thing interpreted, the imperfect picture with the faultless beauty of the original.

men with arguments based on historical traditions which they reject as irreconcilable with Positive Science, or with appeals to individual intuitions of which they are unconscious, is absolutely futile. The principle of supernatural authority excites their contempt; the allegation of exceptional experiences, not common to all, is heard with incredulity: nothing but rational conclusions based on indisputable facts, and drawn in perfect harmony with logical laws, will even command their serious attention. Scientific method must obtain in theology, if theology is to rank among real sciences. The only way to make science more religious is to make religion more scientific. Science puts her foot down slowly, but she never draws it back. She has taken the position that natural laws are unvarying, and from this she will never recede; the only form of Christianity with which she can coalesce is that form of Liberal Christianity which, from a different starting-point, has attained the same position. Science will retain every one of her hardy won truths, while Theology will show that they apply more widely than Science herself as yet dreams,—to religious phenomena and spiritual facts; and thus, by the final coalition of the two, both will be inconceivably strengthened.

But, as surely as Science is Science, she will sweep away every relic of the interpositional theology. Starting from the postulate of matter, physical science, if true to scientific methods, arrives only at material facts and laws, and never attains to a single religious truth. But, starting from the postulate of soul, theological science, if true to the same scientific methods, arrives at the great truths of Theism. The same reasoning from "organism to environment," which enables geology, from a few fossil bones of saurians, to reconstruct external Nature after an extinct pattern, enables theology, from the constitution of the soul, to infer the reality of an invisible spiritual Environment, and thus climb to the stupendous truth of a God. The same reasoning which enables physiology to argue from organ to function, and thus predict to a limited extent the future habits and destiny of the fœtus; enables theology, from the embryonic capacities of the soul, to foretell its perpetuation beyond the grave. In neither case is the argument demonstrative; room is still left for mistakes and doubts: yet the two processes are approximately correct, and equally worthy of rational confidence. Doubt will always be hereafter, as it has always been hitherto, possible and actual; a reasonable certainty is all that we have a right to expect, and this can only be attained from the starting-point of a universal Positivism.

It is the same hankering after infallible revelations, generated and fostered by the ancient pretensions of priestcraft, which prompts men to hunt for them here in historical traditions, and there in mystical intuitions. Neither history nor intuition ever yet revealed the formless God to the curious eye of consciousness; we truly feel and know him, yet not as an object of direct perception, whether physical or spiritual. He is the underlying Ground of Being, revealed alone in his works and ways, and personified by the soul through faith in the reality of its own divine nature. He is prophesied in the preachings and outcrochings of our noblest selves; but no man can say he has attained to an open vision of the Invisible One. Intellectuals rigorously and resolutely scientific have given up finally and forever this hope of infallible revelation, as an artificial product of superstition rather than a real want of the soul. Include in the general data of science those facts which have hitherto been neglected and shut out,—let the profound experiences of the soul, in its temptations, struggles, sorrows and sins, be summoned to bear witness to the workings of human consciousness,—and they will constitute as legitimate and positive a basis for theology as the facts of respiration, locomotion, digestion, circulation of the blood, and so forth, constitute for physiology. And if these, scientifically and profoundly studied, shall not warrant the conclusions of Theism, then our conviction is fixed that Atheism will triumph in the predestined triumph of Science. But we have no fear of the result. Physical and spiritual science will never conflict, because working in parallel lines; and the results of both, attained by exactly the same severe methods, will fall with perfect harmony into their appropriate places, as parts of one coherent, glorious and beautiful system of the universe. The results of theology will rest on precisely the same basis as the most assured facts of physical science. Thus, at last, shall an end be put to that unnatural combat between "Science and Religion" which is the product of ignorance alone.

Naturalism, Rationalism, Positivism,—these are all one, and signify real knowledge as contemplated from different points of view. Naturalism indicates the object of knowledge, or Nature taken in its widest sense as the total constitution of things, including the universe of Mind as well as of Matter. Rationalism indicates the method in which all knowledge is attained; namely, the application of Reason, intuitive and discursive, to universal Nature. Positivism indicates the system of results, or totality of real Science, which is the fruit of this application of Reason to Nature. The three are thus merely different aspects of the same reality. Nature includes all that is given us to know directly, and, from a high plane, becomes the Word of God, who manifests himself in Nature alone. The distinction between the Natural and the Supernatural, therefore, is the distinction between God and his creation. The Supernatural must be perpetually and universally manifested in Nature, if manifested at all; and thus the possibility of any transient or local "interposition" in Nature, as if the action of God in Nature were ever suspended, is altogether precluded. Naturalism, consequently, has an inconceivably deeper and vaster faith in the Supernatural than Anti-Naturalism. And yet, as seems to have been done by Mr. Sears, in his recent brilliant address, Naturalism is often construed as a denial of the Supernatural. The address fights a phantom of its own creation, and wins an easy victory over a non-existent antagonist. Its arguments do not reach a Naturalism which includes not only material Nature, but also Human Nature, with all its magnificent spiritual life and prophecy, and which finds them alike permeated and saturated with the immanent Spirit of God,—which beholds in Nature God's unending Word to man, and in history, alas! man's answer to God.

It is surprising that any student of opinions should be found to sneer at "system" and "logic." Logic, in its practical aspect, means the laws of correct thinking; and what is thought worth that is incorrect? Is a special miracle to be wrought in favor of Unitarianism, by which it shall be allowed to attain truth by thinking illogically? All thinking whatever, to be anything but worthless and false, must be rigidly logical; and, to be anything but fragmentary and imbecile, must be systematic. The pretence of attaining objective truth by flashes of intuition alone comes from indolence or charlatanism. Intuition gives only the crude material, the chaotic elements, of truth; reason combines and organizes these according to logical laws. Intuition and logic, or reason intuitive and reason discursive, are as indispensable in every cogitative act as the two feet in every act of walking. The distinction between "logicians" and "intuitionists" as two complementary orders of thinkers, the one burrowing in the mud, the other soaring in the pure ether, is one of those popular delusions which inexplicably re-appear among educated men. It is a distortion of the real distinction between what may be called microscopic and periscope minds. Microscopic intellects are mere analysts,—think deeply in a narrow compass, but take in no comprehensive relations, no grand sweeps of truth; periscope intellects are mere synthesists or generalizers,—think over large areas, but sink no shafts. Every truly great intellect combines the two tendencies, and unites broad survey with deep insight. To such an intellect, no apology is needed in behalf of "system;" the apology should be offered for the attempt to dispense with it. Truth is harmonious and organic in all its countless ramifications: theology, as the theory of religious truth, must be systematic in order to mirror it.

The secret of the weakness of Unitarianism, as a body of doctrines, is its utter disjointedness. Although conventions and denominational organization may give it ecclesiastical coherency and power, it must remain theologically a zero until scientifically methodized and systematized. It is nothing till it becomes an organized idea. To launch its loose planks on the stormy sea of human thought, is to embark on a heap of boards for a cruise around the world. Unitarianism is a woodpile, not a ship. Before the New York Convention, there was a reasonable ground to hope that the elements of Liberal Christianity, being, as it were, in solution and free to move, might arrange themselves naturally in symmetrical form, according to the laws of spiritual crystallography; but there is now greater danger that the ill-timed stirring of the liquid with the Convention's one dogma will result in the deposition of a hopelessly amorphous mass. The crying need of [Theism] is system. It is true, every system must be transitional,—the stepping-stone to a better; but every successive approximation to truth becomes less and less revolutionary with reference to its predecessor. The principles of a science, once ascertained, remain fixed and undisturbed: all changes are made for a more complete and thorough application of them.

We believe that [Theism] must be re-theologized on the basis of pure Positivism, as the absolute condition of its future growth. Nor do we believe that this radical change will lessen its spirituality, its power, or its beauty; but, on the contrary, these will be immeasurably enhanced. Nothing is taken from the loveliness of special truths by showing that all truths are bound together in one perfect and glorious whole. The poetry of [Theism] has scarcely begun to be revealed. From a lofty tower whose only outlook is through the narrow slit of a window here and there, how little of the beauty and sweetness of the landscape is unveiled! Scraps of meadow, fragments of forest, slices of mountains, sections of rivers,—these only fret the gazer with hints of concealed charms, and make him long for one soul-filling draught of Nature unobscured. Not till the broad sweep of hills and valleys, the majestic undulations of an unbroken horizon, and the boundless arch of blue above, blend into one magnificent scene, can his spirit breathe freely the inspiration of the hour. And so with Theism, which is the infinite multiplicity of Nature's broken gleams, made one forever in the wondrous Central Sun. In the world of ideas, system is power, beauty and life. It is time to cease our flings and cheap sarcasms about "system-builders," and remember that, as practical [Theism] or Religion is the evolution of concord out of spiritual discord by obedience to the one supreme law of love; so theoretical [Theism] or Theology is the evolution of concord out of intellectual discord by obedience to the one supreme law of reason. When our chaotic and fragmentary truths shall be marshalled into systematic unity, and with due co-ordination and subordination blended into one harmonious whole, their mutual relations luminously revealed, and their affiliated sequences genetically traced, the totality will be as much more majestic than the solitary elements, as a magnificent cathedral is more majestic than the isolated stones which compose its arches and spires; and Positivism must be our Michael Angelo.

VOLTAIRE AND CHRISTIANITY.

[From "VOLTAIRE. By John Morley. Appleton & Co. 1872." Pages 299-311.]

It cannot be too often repeated that the Christianity which Voltaire assailed was not that of the Sermon on the Mount; for there was not a man then alive more keenly sensible than he was of the generous humanity which is there enjoined with a force that so strangely touches the heart, nor one who was on the whole, in spite of constitutional infirmities and words which were far worse than his deeds, more ardent and persevering in its practice. Still less was he the enemy of a form of Christian profession which now fascinates many fine and subtle minds, and which, starting from the assumption that there are certain inborn cravings in the human heart, constant, profound, and inextinguishable, discerns in the long religious tradition an adequate proof that the mystic faith in the Incarnation, and the spiritual facts which pour like rays from that awful centre, are the highest satisfaction which a divine will has as yet been pleased to establish for all these yearnings of the race of men. This graceful development of belief, emancipated from dogma and reducing so many substantial bodies to pale shades, so many articles once held as solid realities to the strange tenuity of dreams, was not the Christianity of Voltaire's time, any more than it was that of the Holy Office. There was nothing resembling the present popularity of a treatment which gives generals so immense a preponderance over particulars, somewhat to the neglect of the old saying about the snare that lies hidden in generals, many persons being tolerably indifferent about the dogma so long as they can make sure of the fact. He attacked a definite theology, not a theosophy. We may, indeed, imagine the kind of questions which he would have asked of one pressing such a doctrine on his acceptance; how he would have sought the grounds for calling aspirations universal, which the numerical majority of the human race appear to have been without; and the grounds for making subjective yearnings the test and measure of the truth of definite objective records; how he would have prayed to be instructed of these cravings, whether they spring up spontaneously, or are the products of spiritual self-indulgence, and also of the precise manner in which they come to be satisfied and soothed by the momentary appearance of a human figure far off upon the earth; how he would have paused to consider the intelligibility of so overwhelming a wonder as the Incarnation having been wrought for the benefit of so infinitesimally small a fragment of mankind. We can imagine this and much else, but Voltaire would never have stirred a finger to attack a mysticism which is not aggressive, and can hardly be other than negatively hurtful.

If any one had maintained with Voltaire that the aspirations after a future life, the longing for some token that the Deity watches over his creatures and is moved by a tender solicitude for them, and the other spiritual desires alleged to be instinctive in men, constitute as trustworthy and firm a guide to truth as the logical reason, we may be sure that he would have forgiven what he must have considered an enervating abnegation of intelligence, for the sake of the humane, if not very actively improving, course of life to which this kind of pietism is wont to lead. He might perhaps have entertained a little contempt for them, but it would have been quiet contempt and unspoken. There is no case of Voltaire mocking at any set of men who lived good lives. He did not mock the English Quakers. He doubtless attacked many of the beliefs which good men hold sacred; but if good men take up their abode under the same roof which shelters the children of darkness and wrong, it is not the fault of Voltaire if they are hit by the smooth stones shot from his sling against their unworthy comrades. The object of his assault was that amalgam of metaphysical subtleties, degrading legends, false miracles and narrow, depraving conceptions of divine government, which made the starting-point and vantage-ground of those ecclesiastical oppressors, whom he habitually and justly designated the enemies of the human race. The evil and the good, the old purity and the superadded corruptions, were all so inextricably bound up in the Catholicism of the eighteenth century, that it was impossible to deal a blow to the one, without risk of harm to the other. The method was desperate, but then the enemy was a true Chimeras, a monster sown in black corruption, with whom in the breast of a humane man there could be no terms.

An English rector refused to baptize the child of a parishioner without the payment of the customary fee of two shillings. The parishioner refused to pay the fee, and the case was referred to a couple of ecclesiastical lawyers, who gave it as their opinion that the clergyman may possibly ask for the payment of the fee, but that he cannot collect it, and that a refusal to pay it gives him no excuse for refusing to perform the ceremony of baptism. The English Independent says of the decision:—

"It affords the rector a certain ground for hope. Let us for a moment suppose he is correct in the theory of his rights; what then? Why, simply this: A child cannot be saved unless it is baptized; it cannot be baptized unless the sum of two shillings is paid to the officiating clergyman; ergo, its salvation may be procured for this amount of money.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

SIXTY-FIVE:
JUNE 14.

"HIS CHILDREN SHALL RISE UP AND CALL HIM BLESSED."

In all the turmoil of life's race,
The press of toil, the cark of care,
The thought of thy dear, loving face
Comes like an inward gush of prayer,
That stills the din,
And quells the sin,
And lifts my soul to purer air.

My Mother—sweetest, holiest name!
I love it more than seraph's song;
First to my infant lips it came,
Last shall it leave my dying tongue!—
To thee I turn,
For thee I yearn,
With thee to seek the Best I long.

For all the best I find within,
The love of God and love of man,
The love of truth and hate of sin,
With thy dear teaching first began;
And now the road
Which thou hast showed,
Patient I tread as best I can.

Peace dwell within thy heart for aye—
A brighter Sun than glows above
Illumes it with the inward day
Of tranquil hope and happy love!
May blessings fill
Thy spirit still,
And slow the lengthening shadows move!

My Mother! Ill our eyes can read
The secret of our hidden fate;
But, not despoiled our human need,
'Tis Love alone that bids us wait.
Ah, Love is just;
We humbly trust
To find our dear ones at the Gate.

1872.

ANTHONY.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending July 20th.—H. Oppenheimer, $3; J. D. Brand, $2; Elmer & Phillips, $3; Isaac Bierman, $2; Daniel Field, $4; F. Andrusson, $2; Wm. A. Froudford, $2; T. E. Morris, $2; C. E. Robinson, $2; R. G. Horr, $2; A. W. Wright, $2; Dr. G. A. Lathrop, $2; Henry Melcher, $1; Dr. Mosbacher, $1; Wm. Barrie, $1; Dr. J. G. Malcom, $1; Joseph Woolhouse, $1; Judge S. M. Green, $1; Dr. John Rex, $1; Emerson Bentley, $2; D. Ballantine, $2; Marc Thane, $2; J. R. Hawley, $2; G. W. Topping, $2; R. E. Parker, $2; Fitch Purdy, $2; J. G. Dodge, $1; Marion Martin, $2; Eugene Hutchinson, $1; Louisa Andrews, $2; Moses Hayden, $2; J. P. Lindley, $2; J. B. Neale, $1; C. M. Weatherby, $1; Bond & Martin, $2; H. S. Mowry, $2; A. H. Manley, $2; Aberdeen Keith, $2; J. T. S. Smith, $4.00; Asa Horr, $2; Wm. Hutch, $2; A. Van Der Nulien, $1; B. G. Arnold, $2; G. W. L. Smith, $2; Fay Towley, $2; E. F. Underwood, $1.50; W. H. Burr, $2; Charles Darwin, $2; Roger Sherman, $2; J. S. Shaller, $1; C. A. Day, $2; Robert Smith, $2; Parker Pillsbury, $2; J. C. Delano, $2; S. W. Norris, $1; J. B. Byrre, $2; Aveson News Depot, $1.00; A. W. Bemis, $1.00; Parker Pillsbury, $1; F. R. Razo, $2; D. McCarthy, $1; G. Hilling, $2; Wm. J. Carlton, $2; Fred. R. Goodrich, $1; E. G. Barker, $2; Joe. Smith, $2; R. S. Olin, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—THE INDEX is payable in advance. Its friends should not be offended if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tags. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

acceptance of Orthodox opinions, and denies all liberty to vary from them? In short, could anything be clearer than that Protestantism, professing to be Christian and free at the same time, is a house divided against itself, and that Romanism, which professes to be Christian and scoffs through its infallible Pope at all regard for freedom, is the only Christianity which by any possibility could permanently exist?

The unpalatable truth is this, that England and France have drifted, and are daily drifting more and more, away from real Christianity; that in this they do but manifest the true nature of all Protestantism; and that the Protestant road leads straight as an arrow to the negation of all intelligible Christianity, that is, to Free Religion. Wince and squirm as it may, America has got to travel this road. It can never be coaxed or compelled to travel backwards to Rome; it will be driven by an irresistible destiny to travel forwards to Reason. That is the moral of it all. Let us be wise enough to comprehend it.

MORE PETITIONS.

Since our last acknowledgment, the following additional lists of signatures to the remonstrance against the Christian Amendment to the United States Constitution have been received:—

Mr. W. H. H. Brown sends one hundred and twelve names from Redfield, Iowa; Mr. P. W. Fuller, Columbia, South Carolina, forty-one; Mr. A. J. Grover, Earlville, Illinois, forty-five; Mr. John C. Baker, Mechanicsburgh, Ohio, seventy-one.

These lists carry the sum-total of names thus far acknowledged in THE INDEX above THIRTY-FOUR THOUSAND.

Mr. W. P. Wilson, a graduate of the Unitarian Theological School at Meadville, Pa., in the class of 1871, is about to travel in the West for his health and the interests of THE INDEX at the same time. He has preached with much acceptability in many places, and has had exceptional success in organizing radical Sunday Schools. But, finding the air even of Unitarian churches too close for his lungs, he prefers the platform of free religion, as the only one broad enough for live men in these days. We hope that the friends of THE INDEX in the West will improve the opportunity of hearing him speak, and give him aid, comfort, and co-operation in his enterprise. He is authorized to act as our agent in receiving subscriptions, and we commend him to the kindness of our friends with full confidence. His address for the present is Battle Creek, Michigan.

As will be seen on our last page, Miss C. E. Nourse, of Cincinnati, advertises the re-opening of her Family and Day School. We have heard but one opinion in Cincinnati as to the great excellence of this institution, and the rare educational qualifications of the noble lady who conducts it. There are special reasons, which we wish we were at liberty to state, why her school should be generously supported by the liberal public; and we know of none which better deserves such support. We make this note entirely without her knowledge; but we cannot say less, and would gladly say more.

The publishers of THE INDEX have provided for it an entire new supply of brevier type, in which most of the articles are set. The improvement in the general appearance of the paper cannot fail to be noticed.

No real friend of THE INDEX, surely, will consent to be long a "delinquent subscriber;" and no opponent (if any such should chance to find himself among its subscribers) will consent to be under obligation to the enemy. Please examine your mail-tags.

If "I. W." or "J. W." will send his or her real name, an answer will be returned. We cannot print anonymous communications.

There is no greater blessing than serenity. But it is impossible to him who is not at peace with his own conscience.

CANT.

"Cant" is the Latin cantus, a song; the English words, canticle, and chant, are from the same root. The choir in an Episcopal church is a canting choir; the priest intoning his litanies is a canter or cantor. The ceaseless, unvarying repetition of the same strains is wearisome; the singer, repetent or ejaculator, delivers the sounds or the words without feeling their significance or considering their sense; he mumbles them, drones them, grinds them out long after he has ceased to be moved by them, or even to believe in them. The canting priest takes snuff between the responses; the canting preacher brings no mind to the recitation of his creed; the canting sectarian hums and snuffles the formularies of his party without thinking or being able to think what they mean. Hence the association of cant with insincerity, hollowness, hypocrisy. Every old song suffers from this danger; the best and deepest songs suffer more than the light and frivolous ones; the songs of faith suffer most of all. Hence cant has a worse name in religion than elsewhere. In fact, religion has about monopolized the word, because religion drones more fearfully than philosophy, science, art, or literature. Religionists drone against each other; there is cant against cant; and this cant against cant, as I heard Mr. Spurgeon say in a sermon, "is the poorest cant that ever was canted."

Our friend—we should say, by courtesy, our contemporary—the Liberal Christian, has discovered a new kind of cant, the cant of the people whose burden is the new faith that is to come when Christianity shall have passed away. It is not true that this cant is worse than that of the Methodists and other "evangelicals," but it is "more noisy." Are we so deaf, then, that we have never heard it? Or is the noise in the high-strung, apprehensive ears that are sensitive overmuch to the whispers of dissent? Facts surely do not justify the assertion that the few voices which suggest the possibility of another faith than that professed by any part of Christendom, are strong enough to drown the sonorous and practised organs of Orthodoxy, genuine or spurious. We had not supposed that the moral power of conviction in those few persons was sufficiently recognized to make them dreaded, or that they had sung their song long enough to entitle it to the solemn name of chant, refrain, or burden. To call them canting implies that their song is a very old one—so old that it is sung idly, heedlessly, sleepily, without due appreciation of its meaning: an implication which the technical Christian should not be willing to make, even if it were true, and which is far from being true.

There are people who believe that Christianity is destined in time to pass away. Protestants think that Latin Christianity is doomed. Calvinistic and Lutheran Protestants think that Anglican Christianity holds its ground by a frail tenure. Unitarians boldly predict the decline of Calvinism and Lutheranism. Rationalists have the audacity to prophesy that Unitarian Christianity is not destined to an eternity of terrestrial existence; and thus they gently complete the series of prognostications commenced by the followers of Luther and Calvin, and continued by the disciples of Ware and Channing. The Protestant chant has degenerated into cant; so has the Unitarian; but the burden of the Rationalists is as yet new, comparatively new, at least, having found articulate voice within the generation among ourselves, and never having been taken up by an overwhelming or persistent chorus. It has been the lyric strain of a few, and of those few, it must at the least be said that they sing feelingly and earnestly; their chant is not a drone.

All before them who have prophesied that Christianity was destined to pass away, have ventured to suggest the new religion that was to take its place; naming the faith of Luther, or Calvin, or Wesley, of Campbell, George Fox, or Channing, as the probable successor of the faith preached in the name of Peter and Paul. The Rationalists have in this respect been more modest, confining themselves to general statements, casting out feelers, sketching very broad outlines, fearing to commit themselves to formulas that must be premature, and to definitions that must be enlarged and altered, and aiming simply at securing for the human mind scope for the exercise of its own faculties.

We submit, therefore, that the Liberal Christian has been too quick in its endeavors to classify the Rationalists in the comprehensive order of canters, where they do not at present belong, and we hope that the Rationalists will pardon us for declining in their name the honor of such noble companionship, to which neither the antiquity, the strength, nor the patient rehearsal of their song entitles them.

O. B. F.

A THEOLOGICAL MIRROR.

There is a newspaper in India, published under the auspices of the Brahmo Samaj, called the Indian Mirror. In looking over its columns and noting the subjects and tenor of its discussions, I have more than once been struck with the fact of the close resemblance between it and a reformatory religious newspaper in England or America. It seems to be combating essentially the same superstitions, the same theological crudities and absurdities, that are rife in Christendom; so that its name would be very appropriate even if it had been so called because it reflects, in representing the experiences of that pagan land, the religious thought and agitation of this side of the globe. If Christendom will look with unprejudiced eyes into the beliefs and practices of religions called heathen, it will often find its own theology faithfully mirrored there. The Roman Catholic missionaries, when they first came in contact with the Buddhist faith, were so startled with the likeness between its institutions and their own that they could only account for it on the theory that Satan had been there before them, transformed into an "angel of light," and that he had instituted these close and deceitful imitations of the instrumentalities of the true Church in order to lure the poor heathen, if possible, to a deeper doom. But the new light and scholarship of this age are showing that, since all religions are the product of human nature, they all have common elements, and every faith therefore is in some respects the mirror of every other.

The Christian doctrines, for instance, of the Atonement, of Mediatorship, of Incarnation—doctrines that have been held to be the exclusive property of Christianity, made so by special revelation—are now found almost word for word in other religions. The Aztecs believe that Deity, represented in the form of a faultless captive young man and publicly executed with great solemnity, had made atonement for their sins. The old worshippers along the Nile, centuries before the birth of Jesus and long before the time even of Hebrew Abraham, did homage to Osiris, whom they called the "Son" and "Incarnation" of the Supreme, and at whose birth on the earth a loud voice is said to have proclaimed miraculously from the heavens—"The Lord of the world is born!" He was believed to have lived a beneficent life among men,—was called the "Lord of Life," "Eternal Ruler," "Revealer of Truth,"—and finally died, was buried, descended into hell or the abode of the dead, and then ascended again to heaven, where it was believed he remained to receive prayers that were sent through his name, and, as "Judge of the dead," to dispense the rewards of immortal life. This old Egyptian "statement of faith" reads very much like portions of the Athanasian Creed; and perhaps the disputants in the Church of England about the authority of that famous writing will by and by reconcile their differences by both parties coming to believe in a higher antiquity for the creed than either has yet claimed. In Tibet to this day the Grand Lama, or present Emperor, is supposed to be the special Incarnation and Son of God. He is regarded as God's Viceroy on the earth; is believed to be endowed with miraculous powers; is called the "Immaculate," the "Active Creator and Governor of the world," the representative of "the Word that produced the world." This is not Christian, but heathen theology, though the words sound very familiar. Lamaism is in fact the pagan mirror in which the modern Roman Catholic doctrine of the Papacy may see itself faithfully reflected.

These illustrations might be continued almost indefinitely. But a special instance of a familiar Christian doctrine re-appearing under forms of belief which Christians condemn as pagan—the instance which suggested this article—has recently come to my attention. The Christian Weekly, of New York, has a correspondent in India who gives, in a late number of that paper, an account of a visit made by him to a service of the Brahmo Somaj. He does not criticize the service very much, except that the attendance was very small (in this fact also some Christian congregations may possibly see themselves), and that, while the prayer and the reading-lessons (there was no discourse) “abounded in praise and adoration for God’s manifold mercies,” no mention was made of “our Father’s crowning act of love, in sending his Son to suffer and die for sinners.” In short, these Brahmos appear, like some congregations in Christendom, only to have thanked God for that revelation of Him which had come through Nature and the human mind. But the correspondent closes his letter by repeating the old charge that some of the members of the Brahmo Somaj, though not acknowledging the mediocrity of Christ, make a mediator of their present great leader, Keshub Chunder Sen. He puts it thus:—“His disciples pray to him, sing hymns to him, prostrate themselves before him, and so on. At a public meeting of the Allahabad Somaj, one Babu said, ‘Brethren, if you wish to be saved, come to his feet and take shelter under them; there is no other way.’” Another is represented as praying to him—“Lord, I am a great sinner; how shall I approach the throne of holiness? Do, I beseech you, pray to your Father for me.” They call him “Merciful Lord,” “The Sinner’s Hope,” &c. Now, that there may be some among the more ignorant members of the Brahmo Somaj, just loosed and hardly yet loosed, perhaps, from the bondage of idolatry, who have these sentiments towards such a man as Chunder Sen, is probably not to be denied. The fact at any rate would not be strange. Yet it is evident from this very service which the correspondent reports, and from the published addresses of Chunder Sen and other leaders, that Brahmoism does not give any encouragement to this kind of worship of a human instrumentality. It expressly and continually condemns it.

But what is stranger is that this writer does not see in this disposition of some of Chunder Sen’s disciples to worship him, to make a mediator and incarnated deity of him—a disposition particularly Oriental in all ages—a repetition and illustration of the very way in which the worship of Jesus began and the doctrine of his mediatorship and deity originated. He is apparently greatly shocked that these simple Brahmos, not yet fully educated in their own faith, are trying to make a mediator of the man who has really been a new inspiration of life to them, and that they will not accept the “one mediator” in whom he believes. But if he will look a little longer and more carefully at this practice of man-worship in India, the first glimpse of which has so startled and shocked him, he will see in it the faithful mirror of his own doctrine of the mediatorship of “the man Christ Jesus,” and will learn perhaps a new lesson concerning the origin of Christianity. W. J. P.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

My pen or your types said West, in the July 13th “Notes,” when East was meant. The Woman Suffrage cause has but one newspaper East, not West, of the Rocky Mountains, and that one in Boston. West of the Mountains there are two, neither of which was a Grant organ, by gift or otherwise, when last I saw it.

The Woodhull & Claflin’s Weekly is for woman suffrage, good and strong, but not that exclusively; having other aims and objects which it holds equally important, and Presidential candidates of its own.

I have also lately heard of a Woman’s Journal in a Southern State—Tennessee, I think; and shall be glad to be assured of its existence and abundant success.

In the same paper I ventured a suggestion or two on what appears to me want of earnestness in the practical work of Free Religion. Some have said the Radical died of too much brain in proportion to other organs, important, if not equally important, to healthy and prolonged existence. I am certain the popular religious [publications] fail to produce any lasting good results through lack of proportional brain culture. I have lately looked over a good deal of the Sunday School literature,—Sunday School Question, Singing and Library books and newspapers. And although I long ago ceased to be surprised at anything, it did almost amaze me to see what trash it served up to young and old, under the name of “religious instruction,” and more especially in the Sunday Schools and Bible Classes.

The most learned and scientific men, even clergymen, have abandoned the old mythologies about a six days’ creation and a seventh day Sabbath; a Garden of Eden; a talking snake; a universal deluge, and a new descent and departure of the human race from Noah and Mount Ararat; with other fables alike absurd and monstrous.

But no corresponding changes are yet made in the matter or methods of religious teaching, either in the pulpits or Sunday Schools. Not much is taught; and a good deal of what is taught on these subjects is palpably untrue. And many ministers know it is untrue. And many scientific men, not clergymen, know it, and are alike silent. They know, and many ministers know, that lies are told and taught as religious truth.

In everything excepting religion, old systems and old opinions are abandoned as new discoveries prove them false. I did, however, meet a man last week who, though living within one hour of Boston, either by railroad or steamboat, and within less than a mile from a railroad track, never yet saw one, nor a train of cars! And yet, as I was told, he is both a healthy and a wealthy man, fond of fields and woods, and is much abroad. But such are his “pumpkin-headed” prejudices, that he will not recognize the existence of railroad nor steamboat except by carefully keeping out of their way.

Now I know no mortal use for such a being, except to illustrate the character and action of the churches, ministers, and scientific men, too, sometimes, in relation to new discoveries and improvements in science, as well as in morals and religion. And I hasten to appropriate him. They stub along in their ancient cow-paths on land, and paddle their old worm-eaten punts on the water, just as though steam had never been born to annihilate space and time, and bear the burdens and do the drudgeries of the world.

And so, as I intimated, the human race is not helped nor taught, as it should and might be, either by its science or religion. And to correct that evil, it seems to me, is a part of the practical work of Free Religion: just as important as to drill and grill on the hopeless problems of the Divine Existence, the Eternity of Matter, or the Mission, Origin or Authorship of Evil in the world. But I must stop in the middle of my story. P. P.

The Christian Register continues to make darkness visible in this fashion:—

“So far as any prospect of success is concerned, the Theological Amendment of the Constitution of the United States is dead, but there was an attempt to galvanize the corpse at the Tremont Temple, last Sunday evening. The list of names appended to the call is more remarkable for what it omits than for what it contains. Not to mention the absence of liberal Christians, the most influential Orthodox persons are not to be found. The Independent told the truth when it said that ‘the people who are engaged in this so-called reform, are an insignificant minority of the Christian church in this country. A few very respectable men have attached themselves to it; but nine-tenths of the members of the churches are either opposed or indifferent to the whole scheme.’”

The Register is like the boy who plants his apple seed in the forenoon and digs it up in the afternoon to find out why it is not an apple-tree. What could be more manifestly an “insignificant minority of the Christian Church in this country” than the Unitarian sect, which the Register dutifully sprinkles once a week with its gospel watering-pot?

Wilfulness is will guided by caprice. Firmness is will guided by reason.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errors.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

THE STURGIS RESOLUTIONS.

DETROIT, Mich., July 12, 1872.

F. E. ABBOT:

My Friend,—I send you the brief resolves passed at the Sturgis Yearly Meeting, in their Free Church.

For three days the house was full, and the last two days more than full, and the interest grew to the close of the ninth session, on Sunday evening, June 16th. Each speaker gave frank expression to his or her views; yet there was no controversy or carping criticism of different opinions; and the conference meetings called out many words of value and interest from the audience. You were expected, and many asked for you until it was learned that it was not possible for you to be present.

Resolved, That we would affirm and emphasize our testimonials of previous years in favor of practical reform, just and equal rights for woman, parity of physical habits, wise control of appetite and passion, and that spiritual culture so essential to character and attainment: that we accept the fact of spirit presence and intercourse as confirmation of the truth of immortality within us, as giving light through the “Gates Ajar,” to cheer and strengthen us in the daily work of our common life; that, while this is the expression of the views of the majority present at this meeting, it is not offered as limiting the freedom or impeaching the judgment of a minority, who may not agree with it in all particulars.

Resolved, That the liquor traffic of to-day is the parent evil of the land, and demands our first and best efforts; and that we look upon the enfranchisement of woman before the law as the hope of the temperance reform.

These resolves were heartily adopted, and the meeting carries weight from its character and numbers. Truly yours,
G. B. STEBBINS.

THE MATERIALIST’S ASSUMPTION.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—If in all reasoning something has to be taken for granted, as asserted by Mr. Underwood in THE INDEX of July 13, is it less reasonable to assume that matter acts by reason of an intelligent rather than by an unconscious, unintelligent force?

Mr. Underwood says the materialist assumes his own existence and the “reality of an external world.” Does he only thus assume? If he only assumes their existence, what other facts can be proved? Has he any better proof of the existence of matter than he has of the existence of mind or thought? Is not his knowledge of the existence of matter dependent on the existence of mind and its faculty of conscious perception and conception? If not, how otherwise does he know or even assume?

The truth is, sir, I think, that the materialist is as much in error in ignoring the absolute existence of an intelligent force or spirit (manifested not without nor independent of organization, truly) as is the theologian, in ignoring the eternal existence of matter. We know, if we know anything, that matter and force or spirit exist together; but the question of special importance is—Is force intelligent per se? Matter is not, certainly.

Again—Is thought matter? This will not be assumed, I presume; if not, are we not as well assured of its existence as of the existence of matter? Why say, then, “we have no acquaintance with, no proof of, anything in the universe save matter?” Truly ever,
K. N.

NOT “UNFAIR.”

HOLYOKE, MASS., July 10, 1872.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—A week or two since by accident I was looking over the Banner of Light, and happened upon an article copied from THE INDEX. The editorial comments upon the article seemed to convey the impression that the said article was unfair towards Spiritualism; but to me it seemed very fair. At any rate it coincided with my opinion so much, that I wished to see the paper from which it was copied, and I wrote to the editor of the Banner for your address. I shall be pleased to have you send me a copy, and possibly I might like to contribute occasionally to your paper. I have investigated the phenomena called “spiritual manifestations” for fifteen years. I have had to do with nearly all of the prominent mediums; and though I have seen much to interest and to astonish, I have not yet seen sufficient to convince me that those manifestations have a spiritual source—though I would give all I have, or ever expect to have, to be convinced of that fact. Yours,
Yours,

ATHEISTIC MASON.

CAIRO, ILL., June 18, 1872.

MR. EDITOR:—

Our Lodge, as well as many other lodges, has initiated men of known atheistic views. As many atheists have ideas of great controlling principles in the government of the universe which they are willing the superstitious or particular shall call God if they choose, and most of these members have no religion at all, it is plain that the God-idea is of little consequence in the institution. I know many good Masons who are atheists.

Yours truly,

A. MASON.

THE FOG CLEARED AWAY.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:

Perceiving in the free religious movement the most progressive phase of religion, it had my heartiest sympathies from its very commencement. Believing, however, that I was more "free," liberal, and advanced, than even the Free Religious Association itself, it received my best wishes, but join it I could not. There were some features in it, as I thought, so repugnant to my views that I could not well affiliate with it. Nearly all the diverse articles written by me which have appeared during the last two years in THE INDEX bear the mark of these antagonisms—this sympathy and discord, this agreement and difference.

First of all I disagreed with Free Religion in its form, in its name and character, believing it to be, though confessedly creedless, yet in reality an undefined and, perhaps, undefinable sect. I am, however, I might say instinctively opposed to all sectarian narrowness, illiberality and limitation. Hence I naturally feared its shackles.

Next, it was the word "Religious" in the designation of your Association that had an ugly, ominous look to me. Religion has for me no other definition than Superstition, Prejudice or Illusion. As abstract as the word "God," it is also as undefinable, as meaningless or all-meaning as that word. Nearly every individual delineates to himself some kind of a God; and the influences surrounding him and acting upon him from his cradle to his grave persuade him that this imagined subjective Being has an objective existence, and that to it he and the universe in which he lives owe their existence and preservation, and that therefore his gratitude and allegiance are due to it. From this illusory notion proceed the dreams of his relations and duties to God, and the worship of his omnipotence, wisdom and goodness, or, in other words, Religion.

Now, my dear friend, I being a Materialist or an "Infidel" if you please, you will easily perceive that there were too many and serious objections for me to join the Free Religious Association when it was what it thus appeared to be. It was, therefore, with no slight interest that I watched the result of your and Mr. Potter's proposition to the last Convention, to add the well-known amendments to your Constitution; and it gave me joy to see these amendments carried unanimously. The whole character of the Association was by them changed as by magic. Free Religion is now no longer a sect; no, it has not even the shadow of a sect. God or no God, Religion or no Religion, are now merely individual matters, which do not concern the Association. Its high aims are Progress, Liberalism, Freedom—an enlightened, a redeemed, a saved Humanity—a Universal Brotherhood to realize this noble aspiration—that, sir, is the work of the Association, that is what is meant by "Free Religion."

Now I understand it all! And as I understand it, I can appreciate it, can accept it, can affiliate with it, can help it, can engage in its grand work. Vive les Amendements!

Fraternally yours,

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., July 11, 1872.

[As one of the members of the Free Religious Association, we most cordially welcome Mr. Einstein to it, and believe that in this we speak for all our fellow-members. He makes no change of his opinions, nor do we ask it: he remains "a Materialist or an 'Infidel,'" and sacrifices nothing of his individual freedom to think, speak, or act. He simply joins the Association because it is a brotherhood that earnestly seeks to find the truth, whatever this may be, and to do its utmost for the increase of freedom, knowledge, progress, the highest happiness and the purest virtue of mankind. Such a brotherhood the Association has always been, and as such alone have we valued it; the recently adopted amendment to its Constitution only says plainly what it has always meant. But the practical utility of the new amendment is clearly apparent, when it is seen to remove even an imaginary obstacle to the universality of its fellowship. Now we understand each other; let us cheerfully and hopefully take up our common work with tenfold earnestness!—Ed.]

RELIGIOUS FEELING.

"Le Liberalisme ne sera réellement victorieux de son adversaire, que le jour où il sera autant et plus religieux que lui."—REVUE.

"The short of it is, that religion is in the heart, not in the dry mind."—F. W. NEWMAN.

The above sentiment of an eminent French writer of the present time may be rendered thus:—"The Free Religious movement will never be truly victorious, till the day comes when it shall be as religious as its adversary, and even more so." This idea seems to me worthy of being presented in the above form to the laborers in the cause of free religion. If any deep impression is to be made on the world by the movement they are urging forward, it cannot be effected by merely negative influences. Workmen in any department have got but a short way with their work, when they have merely found out "how not to do it." The great object is to attain positive results; actual growth in the things on which depends individual and general welfare. Now, light is good to promote growth, but heat is equally essential. The human understanding requires for its enlightenment the rays of truth; the emotional nature (which is quite as important a part of us) must be stirred and warmed by that which addresses the feelings. As Professor Newman tersely expresses it:—"The short of it is that Religion is in the heart, not in the dry mind."

What then are we to do about it—we who are wholly emancipated from belief in superstitious fables; who utterly reject the claims of authority and tradition to fetter our free thought; whose faith is circumscribed by the facts and principles which Science, full-orbed, furnishes to the mind? Shall we, having got clear of the old rubbish, proceed with the aid of modern science to construct a new Religion? Such an idea appears to me just about as rational as would be the attempt to construct a new heavens and a new earth, or a new species of man. We might as well try to institute a new sense or a new affection. It cannot be done. Let us rather stick by our nature, and trust the experiences that have rolled out of the heart of the ages, and are still stirring strong as ever in its profoundest depths.

It would seem a waste of time, space and energy, to offer proofs that "the religious faculty" (as Parker terms it) is an essential part of our being. If there are any minds that, after taking a comprehensive view of the world of humanity, looking backwards and around and within, are still indisposed to regard that as a settled question, I must offer one further argument. What but the existence of some powerful, primary intuition impressing the mind can explain the strangest of facts, that there should be at this day a vast majority of pure, noble and reflecting persons who receive, as truths, the absurd fables of Orthodox Christianity? Energy in a false direction proves inherent, essential power; as, for example, the terrible abuses of the hallowed, mutual love of man and woman show the existence and intense nature of the feeling. Happily, in both cases, we have better and holier evidences—the strongest of all evidences, that of experience.

And here we reach the point to which it is the chief object of this article to invite attention. It is the leading doctrine of Mr. Abbot's "Fifty Affirmations," and of the greater number of the luminous writers of THE INDEX, that all questions relating to the subject of religion must be brought to the tribunal of Science, whose verdict is final. Whatsoever doctrines may be offered to the judgment of mankind, come from what source they may, it is her high office to give a decision as to their truth or falsehood, from which there can be no appeal. Now, while we admit this lofty claim, in its utmost rigor, we are bound to remember one very important requirement which Science makes before rendering her decision in any case—namely: all the essential elements of the question must be brought before her tribunal. Else the verdict is partial and delusive,—is unscientific.

There ought to be some general agreement arrived at regarding the essential elements of religion. Avoiding all metaphysical subtleties, it may be regarded as a settled point that our mental constitution comprises two distinct classes of forces, the intellectual and the emotional, thought and feeling. The one is no more matter of fact than the other. Science must give the proper weight to the normal results of each class, or the conclusions arrived at by her researches cannot stand. For example, mathematics and physics are sciences in which all the elements are capable of being weighed or measured or enumerated. Sociology, politics, morals, and religion are sciences whereof the chief elements are the complex principles in human nature, involving a different class of facts, much more difficult to estimate, but equally real and more elevated.

In the case of religion, the elementary facts are both objective and subjective. Stonehenge, the dolmens and ancient temples, mediæval cathedrals and modern churches speak to the eye, revealing as plainly the workings of a religious element in our nature, as the trilobites and other fossils show the forces which have been at work in changing and forming the solid globe. "The Bibles of the Ages" testify to the same; and it would be a worthless history of the race that left out the operations of this potent energy.

The internal power of religion, as an individual experience, is a fact not less certain, and far more interesting and important. It is shown and felt in changing the whole condition of our being: bringing light to the mind, clearness and strength to all its faculties, awakening hope, love, and joy, "bringing beauty for ashes and the oil of joy for mourning." The deepest experience of the noblest souls responds to the sentiment of Trench's fine sonnet,—

"Oh, what a change within us one short hour Spent in His Presence will suffice to make!"

The power of religion on the mind is to be regarded, in the eye of Science, as a great leading fact, a fact the grandest and most important in the world. Still there have been and are persons of clear and powerful intellect and of pure life who say:—"It may all be very well for those who have felt the influences described; but we have no such experience; we have not enjoyed any such evidences." My reply is that there have existed quite as large a number of persons, both male and female, who never felt the passion of human love. May the conclusions formed by such abnormal beings, in regard to great practical questions concerning the relation of the sexes, be relied upon, when they leave out the very central fact upon which the question turns?

It is the province of Science to explore the law; Religion demands the Lawgiver, inscrutable though he be. She impresses the conviction that man is never so high as when looking reverently up to something higher. The religious instinct can never be satisfied with any "Worship of Humanity." The soul's relation to its Maker would exist none the less vividly were it alone with him in the universe. The solitary tenant of a desert island, the lonely prisoner in a dungeon, the martyr at the stake, the sufferer on the bed of affliction, the sorrow-burdened, bereaved one, craves something more than the belief that "infinite law and order doth seize and hold him."

It is equally unphilosophical and vain to disparage these normal cravings, as being the creatures of imagination and sentiment. Man has no creative power; the imagination has never created a primary idea or impulse, any more than chemistry has created a simple substance. And as relates to the value and influence of sentiment, they are truly and effectively set forth in these words of Herbert Spencer [Recent Discussions in Science, p. 125]:—

"Ideas do not govern and overthrow the world; the world is governed or overthrown by feelings, to which ideas serve only as guides."

W. H. F.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.—During one of the most tremendous snowstorms ever witnessed here last winter, writes our Newfoundland correspondent, a poor widow left her home in search of her only son, a boy of sixteen years of age, who had gone out in the morning wood-cutting, with several others. Unable to bear her anxieties, the poor mother rushed out into the blinding snow-drift, hoping to find her boy, and that her feeble arms might in some way help him homeward. After struggling on for several miles, she met the party, who were on their return. By this time she was utterly exhausted and unable to retrace her steps. What was to be done? She sank down in the snow, worn out with fatigue and hunger. The little party of boys were quite unable to bear her among them homeward, and to remain with her would have been certain death to all. It was agreed that they should cover her as well as possible, and return to the village for help. Her son, however, nobly refused to leave his mother, though to remain was in all probability certain death. When the lads gave the alarm in the village, a number of men at the peril of their lives went out to rescue the mother and her son. Their efforts to find them were for several days fruitless. They were finally found under a cliff, frozen to death and locked in one another's arms. "In death they were not divided," for theirs was a "love stronger than death." It would be difficult to find a more touching instance of self-sacrificing affection than this one, taken from the "short and simple annals of the poor."—Erech.

LAST CHANCE.—About thirty years ago a minister in Hatfield, Massachusetts, delivered some reproofs in the course of a sermon, which were construed into a personal attack by a regular church-going member of his congregation, and thenceforward that gentleman withheld his presence from the church and his friendship from the preacher. The latter, feeling that he had done no wrong, refrained from making advances, and thus for twenty-five years they wended their separate ways. But at last the skeleton hand of death knocked at the door of the parishioner, and he sent for the minister. The good man hastily obeyed the summons with a solemn delight, as his being thus called showed a mellowing of the heart of the dying man promising reconciliation both with Heaven and himself.

"You sent for me?" he said, as he approached the bed-side.

"Yes," answered the dying man, whose breath was now short and difficult,—"I have but a few—a few hours to live, and I sent—sent for you to say that—that this is your last—your last chance to apologize."—Investigator.

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, AUGUST 3, 1872.

WHOLE No. 136.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. FOSTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. B. D. OLMSTED, Rev. CHARLES VORRETT (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MARCUS D. CORWY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Romanism and Primitive Christianity.

BY PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In your paper entitled "Romanism the Natural Development of Christianity," you say that you "will be much gratified to learn my views on the real question at issue, and to publish them in THE INDEX." This incites me to write again; otherwise I might have thought, enough had been said by me.

Indeed, I am glad to correct some misapprehensions. With you, I dislike "side-issues" which do not aid to the decision of the main question. You have quite mistaken what I said about odium theologium, and I admit that I am to blame for it. I never imagined that you could suppose me to impute personal dislike, personal hatred; hence I expressed myself with popular vagueness. The idea of personal odium belongs to a past age: I spoke of dislike to tenets only. One who wishes that men should go to an opposite pole of opinion from him, rather than remain near to him while refusing to agree in his main doctrine, admits into himself what I understand by odium theologium. Enough of this.

Next, you drop out of a sentence of mine the word History, where I said there was danger lest you dogmatize concerning History, as other religionists have dogmatized. Confusion of History with Religion is my main imputation on Christians. When you introduce into what (I suppose) you mean for Religious utterances certain Historical criticisms on Christianity, I dread the same mistake. I do not, with you, understand by "dogmatize"—assert without reason, i. e., without an attempt to adduce "solid reasons." I understand—to erect into cardinal doctrine. Such a thing Christians do with miracles wrought by and on Jesus; which, if true, are facts of History. In support of their dogmas, they advance plenty of what they mean to be proof; so do Romanists in their "Dogmatic Theology;" still I repeat, History cannot be Religion.

Allow me also to take the opportunity of remarking that, in the close of the seventh paragraph of my letter to which you have replied, your printer has changed my phrase "approval of the Hierarchy" into "apparel of the Hierarchy," where I was speaking of the Holy Coat of Treves.

Now as to the main question, you mistake in saying—"Professor Newman evidently intends to suggest that the Messianic claim was" [not the original organism of Christianity, but] "a cancer in the body of Christianity." Nor have I imputed to you, personally, that you "have chosen to select the weak points of good and great men and logically develop these." I only gave an illustration of the principle, that to develop a man's doctrine logically might be a corruption and a great injustice, if imputed to him as his doctrine. You afterwards add:—"Perhaps Professor Newman will not dissent from me, when he perceives the real drift of my reasoning." I will rejoice,—perhaps Mr. Abbot will be confirmed in this judgment, when he reads the following passage from the last chapter of my "Phases of Faith," written probably as early as 1850, and repeated in every edition of the book:—

"The cause of all this [all this mental entanglement] is to be found in the claim of Messianism for Jesus. This gave a premium to crooked logic, in order to prove that the prophecies meant what they did not mean and could not mean. This perverted men's notions of right and wrong by imparting factitious value to a literary and historical proposition—Jesus is the Messiah, as though that were or could be religion. This gave a merit to credulity, and led pious men to extol it as a brave and noble deed, when any one overpowered the scruples of good sense, and scolded them down as the wisdom of this world which is hostile to God. This put the Christian Church into an essentially false position, by excluding from it in the first century all the men of most powerful and cultivated minds among the Greeks and Romans. This taught Christians to boast of the hostility of the wise and prudent, and in every controversy ensured that the party which had the merit of mortifying reason most signally should be victorious. Hence the downward career of the Church into base superstition was determined and inevitable from her very birth: nor was any improvement possible, until a reconciliation should be effected between Christianity and the cultivated reason which it had slighted and insulted." N. B.—To mortify reason signally, is not, to be logical, in any reasonable sense.

Again, permit me to quote a passage written by me in a tract called "James and Paul," and published in 1869 by my friend Mr. Thomas Scott, of Ramsgate, (p. 33):—"Those who painfully discern the inability of a corrupt multitude to be converted by the preaching of pure morality, or by the severe doctrine of an infinite, omnipresent, perfect, but ever-silent God, are apt to rejoice that a Gospel of love, remorse, gratitude and passion, like that of Paul, should rescue an elect remnant into a high-strung moral and mystical religion: and if Paul's doctrine or John's doctrine be TRUE, joy at its propagation is most just. But Truth, when vitiated, surely revenges itself upon us. When error is consecrated, truth becomes Heresy; and then, the deeper the fervor of the votary, the harder it is to be truthful or to be just towards opponents. A pernicious premium is given to whatever will prop up and glorify the False Creed; hence the forgeries called Pious Frauds have a splendid opportunity. Every mathematician knows that, with one falsehood in the basis, the more active and logical the mind, so much the more overshadowing is the fabric of error; and in an organized church, nothing can hinder the growth of Priestcraft and Ambition, if a creed has to be somehow maintained which intelligent discussion will undermine. Long before ambition brings forth its natural fruit,—injustice, cruelty, and winking at every vice,—inevitable discord follows the consecration of error, however plausible and amiable: and, as James insists, 'Where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work.' Born in a hurricane of dissonant doctrines, Christianity has never attained a show of unity but by violent ejection or slaughter of opponents. Anathema on Opinion, as we have seen, was in vain forbidden and deplored by the first Bishop of Jerusalem, himself an apostle. 'Earthly, animal and devilish wisdom' prevailed."

Hereby you will see that I agree with you in regarding the confession that Jesus was the Messiah as fundamental, as false, and as fatal to the religion. I am as fundamentally opposed to it as you, or any Jew. With you, I rest on the "genetic connection" [of events] "rather than on partial analyses or textual criticisms;" though we have to refer to textual criticism in order to ascertain what is meant by the Hebrew Messiah. If I were to say that Christianity is only at length understood in this century, I should merely mean that the nineteenth century has so improved literary criticism, as first to discover certain Christian forgeries perpetrated in the second century, which have deceived "the great intellects of Christian history" almost ever since; just as other forgeries, which Protestants stigmatized as Papal, imposed on the Christian world for many centuries. To me it is clear that Paul brought in a new Gospel, different from that of James, who held the doctrine of Jesus. I may be wrong, but I do not understand what absurdity you can find in such an opinion.

Wherein, then, lies our cardinal difference about this (strictly historical) matter? I believe, herein. You regard a natural development to be identical with a necessary development; I do not. You regard Romanism to be developed by a correct logic from the Messianic idea; I regard it to have been developed, not from the simple Messianic idea at all, but from the fourth gospel, and texts of Paul and of the Old Testament, and very largely by a whimsical and barbarous logic. In the controversy of the Protestant against the Catholic, I believe the Protestant to have immeasurably the advantage of logic, even when he accepts all the doctrines of the Reformation; you seem to me to think the contrary. I think it unprofitable to go farther into the details of your paper; but I must add that in the growth of the Papal system I ascribe immense effects to the decay of the huge Roman empire, with which public spirit, morals and intellect decayed. I believe that Christianity could do nothing but either die, or survive and sink into superstition: but the particular form of the superstition depended on external facts,—first, on the philosophies and traditions and legends then afloat,—secondly, on special forgeries,—thirdly, and in the case of the Papacy above all, on the break-up or senility of the temporal power. Every historical development must be a natural development. All that I deny is, that Romanism is a logical, that is, a just, reasonable development, from the primitive Christianity.

FRANCIS W. NEWMAN.

[The sentence to which Prof. Newman refers above, at the beginning of his third paragraph, was printed as follows in THE INDEX for May 4:—"I agree substantially, and in all that is properly religious; but I do not agree in all that is historical and critical, concerning which I think there is danger that you may dogmatize, as in the past other religionists have dogmatized." It will be perceived by our honored correspondent, on a second examination, that the words—"all that is historical and critical"—contain essentially what he thinks was "dropped out;" and that the insertion of the words "concerning History," which he supposes to have been omitted, would destroy both the sense and the construction of the entire sentence. As a matter of fact, a fresh comparison of the printed sentence with the original manuscript shows that there was no omission. We regret that the misprint "apparel" for "approval" should have occurred.

We will not venture to prolong a discussion which Prof. Newman considers "unprofitable;" but we must quite earnestly disclaim the imperitance of finding "absurdity" in any opinion entertained by one we so sincerely esteem—above all in the opinion that "Paul brought in a new gospel different from that of James, who held the doctrine of Jesus." In fact, this opinion is also our own, provided the "difference" referred to is not regarded as absolute. The simple, crude Messianic idea, as contained in the synoptic gospels and the epistle of James, was, as we conceive, matured by a simple process of growth into the Pauline doctrine of the pre-existent Son; later into the "Johannine" doctrine of the incarnate Logos; and later still into the Athanasian doctrine of the Triune God. The gospels of James and of Paul differed as the seed differs from the half-grown plant; for, although James does not directly argue to prove that "Jesus is the Christ," the belief that he is the Christ crops out perpetually, as in chapter V, verse 7:—"Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord,"—and again in verse 8:—"For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." If, then, Romanism is directly derived from the teachings of Paul and the fourth gospel, and these are the legitimate ripening of the Messianic teachings of Jesus, James and the synoptics, we do not see how it can be denied that Romanism is a logical derivative from primitive Christianity itself.

May we add one word more? The Protestant has indeed "immeasurably the advantage" in all respects over the Catholic, so long as he argues from the premises of natural reason or free thought; but the moment he argues from Christian premises, even those of primitive Christianity, he entangles himself in contradictions without end. The Catholic argues from the principle of authority, in the most logical form in which it can co-exist with thought at all; and although he cannot defend himself against bold and consistent rationalism, he can most vigorously and effectively defend himself against half-rationalistic, half-Christian Protestantism.

But we apologize for having pursued the subject so far, trusting that one who loves the truth like Prof. Newman will pardon something to one who also loves it.—E.R.]

THE POOR CHILDREN'S PICNIC.

[From the New York Times.]

So they halted patiently within the shadow of the great walls of the iron factories close to the pier. The little girls stood quietly, showing their delight only in their faces, but the boys were irrepressible. They were boiling in their skins with rapture, and performed perpetual fandangoes of the most frenzied description, illustrative of their feelings. There was a great contrast between their appearance and the trim show of the girls. Anxious mothers had toiled half the night to wash and iron the frocks, and had certainly spent a few quarters for ribbons and hats, so that their little girls might look as well as other little girls. But the boys were, for the most part, ragged little urchins, bare-headed, bare-footed, with indescribable shirts and pantaloons. If anybody looked at them, they immediately grinned a broad grin, and showed their tickets. Boys would suddenly recognize other boys: "Hello, Slimsey! Has yer got wun?" "Corse I have," would be the rejoinder, and then they would grab each other in a state of rejoicing that could only find vent in bodily exertion, and would wrestle until one or both would come to the ground. Many of these were from the Boys' Lodging-house, on Rivington street, and others were picked up in the streets by the reporters of the Times and by teachers working with the Children's Aid Society.

When the word was passed to the children to enter the barge, there was no pushing nor crowding, though the impatient boys clambered like cats up the timbers, and would not wait for the slower process by the gangway. In a very few minutes over eight hundred happy little ones were on board, nine-tenths ascending immediately to the upper tier. The band struck up a lively air, and the youngsters in their glee commenced capering about the deck in every direction, tumbling up against each other, falling down and picking themselves up again, as if a bruise were a matter of course and not to be thought of on so joyous an occasion. "Hey, Johnnie, ain't this prime?" shouted a ragged little news-vender in a blue shirt and canvas pants to his partner. "You bet, Shorty," was the succinct reply. Little girls came to their teachers with their eyes brimming with tears, and said repeatedly, "Oh Miss—, I am so happy!" It seemed as if their little hearts were bursting at the expanse of happiness opening before them. . . . The day was delightful. The sky was exquisitely blue, and golden clouds in grand and fantastic shapes relieved its splendor. Soft breezes, like kisses from heaven, played through the open timbers of the barge and fanned caressingly the excited little cheeks. Every object was a source of amusement and delight. When they came to Blackwell's Island, the place was recognized, and shouts testified to the fact. Immediately they all rushed over to that side, and began to cheer as they saw the convicts working stolidly at the stone works. Many of these looked up but made no sign; but there were others whose hearts had not been quite hardened by vice and crime, and who were touched by the sight of the children. They waved their hands and shouted "good luck," and it may be that the glow which animated their hearts then and warmed them with unselfish sympathy, shall be to them in the future a germ of better things, and a dawning of brighter days. As the barge passed the workhouse, the children sang a hymn full of shrill sweetness and tender, unconscious pathos, which brought moisture to the eyes of the adults who accompanied them. Then as the barge sailed proudly on and entered the open passages of the sound, the band struck up again a gliding waltz tune, and the children from German schools were seen revolving round the deck with the utmost animation.

They were in the height of their enjoyment when the tug gave a whistle of triumph and brought the barge alongside the pier at Oriental Park.

The sandwiches and cakes were now in requisition again, and each child was furnished with three sandwiches and some cake, and then allowed to land. Then what a scene of rejoicing ensued! The little girls rushed pell-mell into the grove, and, seating themselves under the maple and shading trees, began to chatter and munch with equal rapidity. Not so the boys. With whoops and yells and roars of ecstasy, they charged upon the beach, deposited their provisions on rocks, stripped off their rags, and in a trice were striking through the cool green waves with the most delightful abandon. Half an hour was allowed for rest and refreshments, and then the teachers led the way to the dancing stand, where the band had already stationed itself. Many of the children did not want to dance, but the German children seemed to think that picnics and dancing were synonymous terms. So they went at it with enthusiasm. But by far the greater number preferred the grove and the fragrance which the trees emitted. Here they enjoyed themselves according to their taste.

At half-past three o'clock the whistle of the steamer sounded, and, obedient to a degree, the girls left their games, the boys their clammering, and the bathers, with regret, deserted the cool water. As they entered in single file, every one received a glass of deliciously iced lemonade, which evidently went down good, if one may judge from the expression on the youngsters' faces. Half an hour afterward the barge started on its homeward way with every child on board, and all in the highest possible spirits. Then the ice-cream came into requisition, and a sauciful was administered to each. It was a funny sight to see them eating it, for some had never used spoons in their lives, being accustomed to lick it out of the cups of the Chinese venders with their tongues. They tried the spoons, however, at first, imitating very awkwardly the style of those around them, but finding that they were making but little progress, they tackled the saucers in the usual way. . . . In the midst of the joyous riot the boat arrived at its dock, and with sorrowful faces the children trooped out upon the pier. . . . As they disappeared in the distance, some wending their way down one avenue and some another, it was pleasant to reflect that a ray of real human love had penetrated their poor tenement homes, and that the result must be for the good both of those who received and those who gave. Children who have even once been face to face with lovely Nature will not forget her radiant form, and will, in many a little effort at cleanliness and many a striving after better things, show their appreciation.

"REFORM" IN THE CHURCH.

[From the New York Nation.]

We do not propose to discuss the facts of fraud and mismanagement in the Methodist Book Concern brought to light by Dr. Lanahan. They are pretty well understood by the public. The charges have been in the main sustained by the committee appointed to examine them, and the report of the committee has been unanimously adopted by the governing council of the Methodist church, lately sitting in Brooklyn. The conviction of the persons accused by Dr. Lanahan is, of course, his own vindication. We wish now to consider the great inconsistency between the action of the Conference on these charges and their treatment of Dr. Lanahan. The accusations may or may not have been true; but, if true, it was certainly their duty not only to continue him in office, but to express in some way their sense of the distinguished services he had rendered them. As the case stands, we see that it is a warning to rogues, but we see also that it is quite as much of a warning to reformers. There is no other man known to us who has stood quite in the position of Dr. Lanahan. He has made a most gallant and unselfish attack upon roguery, and has fought a bitter fight against great odds. It has been a thankless battle all along. The wicked city of New York tried Mayor Hall for failing to do what Dr. Lanahan did; the authorities of the Methodist church have tried Dr. Lanahan for doing what Mayor Hall failed to do. We have watched with some interest to see whether the one practical reformer of his day would "find virtue his own reward," or "look for his recompense hereafter," or would receive some tangible mark of approval and gratitude. We were doubtful of our power to punish knaves, but we did think we might praise and reward a public servant. The Conference has done itself credit by an investigation of the case which we presume to have been a thorough one, but it omitted to distinguish Dr. Lanahan in any way: he was not re-elected; his services, so far as we can see, were ignored.

Dr. Lanahan, it will be remembered, entered upon his office in June, 1868, and discovered the condition of the Concern during the first six months of his administration. In November, 1869, he laid the facts before the Book Committee of the Methodist church at their annual meeting. After investigation, the Book Committee decided that there had been "great mismanagement" and "serious losses." The Book Committee again met in January, 1870, and reversed its former decision, asserting that there had been no frauds, no mismanagement, no losses, proved. From this time on the man really upon trial was neither Porter nor Hoffman nor Goodenough, who were charged with malfeasance, but Dr. Lanahan. Goodenough sued him for slander, and Lanahan asked leave of Dr. Carlton to take the books into court. This was refused him, and he then proceeded to obtain them through his counsel. For this he was tried by the Book Committee, and removed from office, but was saved from ejection by the action of one of the bishops, who had the right of veto. The Church Journal, of which he was the junior publisher, was of course used in sustaining the opinions of the editor and senior publisher, and he was not permitted to present his own case in its columns. The Methodist clergy all over the country came to think Dr. Lanahan a disturber of the peace. In that opinion they assembled at Brooklyn; but so soon as he had opportunity to speak, they found his case so strong that they were obliged to weigh and consider it. The charges, as we have stated, were referred to a special committee, which sustained them, and the report of this committee was unanimously adopted by the Conference. A ballot for book agents was then held, and Dr. Lanahan was nominated, but withdrew his name. Had he consented to run, there was no possibility of his election. Dr. Carlton was an able business man, and for that reason was long retained in his position; yet the frauds which Dr. Lanahan had brought to light in the first six months of his administration had gone on under his eyes for years. The failure to censure him cannot be justified, but it may be easily explained; it is only another symptom of the uneducated virtue, the lax sense of duty, and the enervated justice of the community: "Oh! no, we won't censure him; it would make him unhappy."

The reasons assigned by members of the Conference for not re-electing Dr. Lanahan are worth study. They are that his charges have been extravagant and his general behavior "violent." He has been, it is said, "too violent for his own good;" his conduct has been "impolitic, to say the least," and so on. These phrases explain the spirit in which the whole investigation into these frauds has been carried on, and the nature of the difficulties with which Dr. Lanahan has had to contend. As we pointed out when we commented on this matter over a year ago, the feeling which his charges have excited in the body seems to have been not so much horror or disgust or anxiety to learn whether they were true, as grief and indignation over the "scandal" they were sure to cause; and Dr. Lanahan has evidently, from first to last, been judged not as an investigator, but as a stirrer-up of strife. In fact, it is impossible for anybody who has followed the history of the affair from the beginning to resist the conclusion that the ideal church of most of those who have taken part in these proceedings is not a church of unquestioned purity, but a church in which there is no dissension, and that they would rather bear with the thefts, frauds, false entries, and erasures in the Book Concern, than with the violence and uproar attendant on bringing them to light. We venture to say that nothing more discouraging has turned up in "politics" within the last five years, and this is saying a good deal. For it must be remembered that the Methodist church is the one Protestant denomination in this country and in England which can be said to retain any firm hold on what is called the masses. It is the only Protestant denomination which, in any country, enters into anything like real competition with the Church of Rome in bringing religion home to the common run of men as a rule of daily conduct. It is said to muster over 12,000,000 members, and it grows apace. The spirit by which such a body is animated is, in our day, of the last importance. It must, of course, have its vices, like all organizations made up of men, but it is rather disheartening to find that they are the very vices of the society which it is expected to reform.

The great vice of our time is not licentiousness, as was that of ancient Rome, or highway robbery, as that of the Middle Ages. It is simply cheating and stealing, and the necessary accompaniment of lying. The business world is acknowledged to be in a bad way in this particular field of iniquity; and if we are not mistaken, the weakness, base compliances, rascalities and frauds of business men are a favorite pulp topic at Christmas, Thanksgiving, and other great Christian feasts and anniversaries. One would, therefore, naturally expect that when the Church undertook to do business—that is, to buy and sell and manufacture commodities—it would do it in a way that would furnish business men with a model. The Catholic church has, of late years at least, been on this point purely itself. It gets money in some queer ways, but its accounts will bear examination. The quarters of the servant girls go where they were intended to go without sticking to anybody's palms. Doubtless rogues sometimes turn up among the administrators, but they disappear under swift and savage condemnation. There is a careful avoidance of scandal and a prodigious mystery about the machinery, but there is no tenderness for a thief. People thought they might expect the same spirit from the Methodists, but they have been disappointed. The Church went into business in the Book Concern, and achieved a prodigious success, but Satan got hold of the books, and falsified the entries, stole goods and sold them on his own account, pocketed commissions to which he was not entitled, and, in fact, reproduced on a small scale the very operations he was carrying on in the City Hall. When Dr. Lanahan got in, he found him out and collared him, and was trying to drag him to the police-station, but the old culprit was actually able to get the clergy and laity about him, persuade them not to examine his books or the contents of his bag, and to give his accuser into custody on a charge of brawling and disorderly conduct.

ADAM'S PENITENCE.

[From "Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets," by S. Baring-Gould, pp. 40-49.]

The story of Adam's penitence as told by Tabori is as follows:—

The moment that Adam fell out of Paradise and touched the ground on the mountains in the centre of Ceylon, he understood in all its magnitude the greatness of his loss and his sin. He remained stupefied with his face on the earth, and did not raise it, but allowed his tears to flow upon and soak into the soil. For a hundred years he remained in this position, and his tears formed a stream which rolled down the mountain, which still flows from Adam's Peak in the island of Ceylon, and gives their virtue to the healing plants and fragrant trees which there flourish, and are exported for medicinal purposes.

When a hundred years had elapsed, God had compassion on Adam, and sent Gabriel to him, who said, "God salutes thee, O Adam! and he bids me say to thee, Did I not create thee out of the earth by my will? Did I not give thee Paradise to be thine abode? Why these tears and sighs?"

Adam replied, "How shall I not weep, and how shall I abstain from sighing? Have I not lost the protection of God, and have I not disobeyed his will?"

Gabriel said, "Do not afflict thyself. Recite the words I shall teach thee, and God will grant thee repentance which he will accept, as it is written in the Koran, 'Adam learnt of his Lord words; and the Lord returned to him, for he is merciful and he returns.' Adam recited these words, and in the joy he felt at the prospect of finding mercy, he wept, and his joyous tears watered the earth, and from them sprang up the narcissus and the ox-eye.

Then said Adam to Gabriel, "What shall I now do?"

And Gabriel gave to Adam wheat-grains from out of Paradise, the fruit of the Forbidden Tree, and he bade him sow it, and he said, "This shall be thy food in future."

Afterwards Gabriel taught Adam to draw iron out of the rock, and to make instruments of husbandry. And all that Adam sowed sprang up in the self-same hour that it was sown, for the blessing of God was upon it. And Adam reaped and thrashed and winnowed. Then Gabriel bade him take two stones from the mountain, and he taught him with them to grind the corn; and when he had made flour, he said to the angel, "Shall I eat now?" But Gabriel answered, "Not so;" and he showed him how to build an oven of iron. It was from this oven that the water of the deluge at Kofa flowed. He taught him also to make dough and to bake.

But Adam was hungry, and he said, "Let me eat now," and the angel stayed him, and answered, "Tarry till the bread be cold and stale." But he would not, but ate. Therefore he suffered from pain in his belly. Next, Gabriel by the command of Allah brought out of Eden the ox and fruit; of these latter there were ten kinds whose exterior was edible, but whose insides were useless to eat, such as the apricot, the peach and the date. And there were three that could not be eaten anyhow. Then he brought ten more whose insides and outsides might be eaten, such as the grape, the fig and the apple. Said Gabriel to Adam, "Now these," and he sowed them. These are the trees that the angel brought out of Paradise.

Now Adam was all alone on the peak in the midst of Ceylon, and his head was in the first heaven. The sun burnt him so that all his hair fell off; and God, in compassion, bade Gabriel pass his wing over Adam's head, and Adam thereupon shrank to the height of sixty cubits. And then he could no longer hear the voices of the angels in heaven, and he was sore distressed.

"Then God said to him, I have made this world thy prison, but I send to thee out of heaven a house of rubies, in order that thou mayest enter in and walk round it, and therein find repose of thy heart."

Thereupon out of heaven descended "the visit-house," and it was placed where now stands the temple of Mecca. The black stone which is there was originally white and shining. It was placed in the ruby house. Whosoever looked in that direction from ten parasangs off, could see the light of that house shining like a fire up to heaven, and in the midst of that red light shone the white stone like a star.

Afterwards, Gabriel conducted Adam to that house that he might go in procession around it. All the places where his foot was planted became verdant oases, with rivers of water and many flowers and trees, but all the tract between was barren.

Gabriel taught Adam how to make the pilgrimage; and if any one now goes there without knowing the ceremonies, he needs a guide.

Then Adam met with Eve again, and they rejoiced together; and she went back with him to Ceylon. Now at that time there was in the world no other pair than Adam and Eve, and no other house than the mansion of rubies.

Now Eblis had made his prayer to Allah that he might be allowed to live till Israel should sound the last trumpet. And he asked this because those who are alive when that trumpet sounds shall not die any more, for Death will be brought in, in the shape of a sheep, and will be slaughtered; and when Death is slaughtered, no one will be able to die.

And God said, "I give thee the time till all creatures must die."

Then Eblis said, "Just as thou didst turn me out of the right way, so shall I pervert those whom thou hast made." Satan went to man and said to him, "God has driven me out of Paradise, never to return there, and he has taken from me the sovereignty of this world to give it to thee. Why should we not be friends and associate together, and I can advise thee about thy concerns?"

And Adam thought to himself, "I must be the companion of this one, but I will make use of him." So he suffered him to be his comrade.

The first act of treachery he did was this.

Every child Adam had by Eve died when born. Eve became pregnant for the fourth time, and Eblis said to Adam, "I believe this child will be good looking and will live."

"I am of the same opinion," answered Adam.

"If my prophecy turns out right," said the Evil One, "give the child to me."

"I will give it," said Adam.

Now the child when born was very fair to look upon, and Adam, though he repented of his rash promise, did not venture to break his word; so he gave the child to Eblis, that is to say, he named it Abd-el-Hareth, or Servant of Hareth, instead of Abd-Allah, servant of God. And after living two years it died.

Thus Satan became an associate in the affairs of men.

THE TWO CAMPS.

Referring to Prince Bismarck's warfare on the Jesuits, the Brooklyn Catholic Review of July 27 says:—

That it looks to the impartial observer very like persecution on religious grounds, we call Professor Beesly, the English positivist, to witness. He has been writing a letter to the Fortnightly Review on the Galway judgment, and we extract a suggestive paragraph:—

"It is a strange spectacle, this Catholic Church in its decrepitude, still strong, because it is the only Spiritual Power worth counting in Europe; so strong within its own domain that its enemies have no confidence that they can beat it there, but have recourse to violent repressions. The Galway judgment, the expulsion of the Jesuits from Germany, the shooting of Archbishop Darboy, all manifestations of modern Liberalism in its various hues, are so many confessions of moral defeat. The governments which aim blows at Catholicism with one hand, while they subsidize it with the other, that it may help them to keep down the discontented masses, make the plainest confessions of weakness. Yet the extreme wing of Liberalism, when it is not content with 'abolishing the budget ecclesiastique,' and the exemption of priests from military service, but avows its intention to prohibit them from taking any part in the instruction of youth—does it show any confidence in its own strength? The truth is that Mr. Justice Keogh and the English press, Prince Bismarck and the German Liberals, Felix Pyat and the Père Duchesne, are all in the same boat, pulling oars, indeed, of different length and sweep, but in very tolerable time."

It is not alone, however, the German Liberals, Prince Bismarck, the Communists, and our friends of the Sects, who would like to try their hands at a little persecution of the Church of God. How long is it since Professor Huxley, the positivist, warned a Maynooth professor that the contest between the Church and modern science would yet be fought out in the streets? And it is but very recently that the German scientist, Professor Virchow, was calling on the governments to attack the Roman Church in the interests of science. The devil is not over particular about his raw recruits—he would as lief have them smell of the laboratory as of the Presbyterian conventicles. And as for us, it is anything but disheartening to see the two camps get into fighting array. The Church was never more united, never more powerful, never more certain of the issue of the battle, nor filled with a more profound pity for her antagonists.

The Positivists of New York, more faithful to the religious system of Comte than its European representatives, have determined to observe the four great festivals of the year occurring at the equinoxes and solstices, which they claim are observed in some form or other in all previous religious beliefs. Their Easter celebration was held at a private residence, and culminated with the presentation to the hostess of a "wonderful bouquet," which was a floral attempt to represent the historic evolution of the human race. Green shrubs at the base represented the grossness of ancient Fetishism, and crowning all was the pure white of camellias, tuberoses and immortelles, which was explained as expressing, like the interblended rays of a prism producing white light, that all previous rays of religion are embodied in the pure light of scientific positivism.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

Cash Receipts for the week ending July 27th.—G. B. McClellan, $2; W. H. Deane, $2; Jno. Baker, $1; D. C. Spalding, $1; P. W. Crutland, $1; Dr. C. Bradley, $1; J. A. Walter, $1; Beckel House, $2; James Dadds, $2; J. F. Mayer, $2; Jno. Edmondson, $2; Geo. Dile, $2; H. S. Morey, $1; C. A. Gooden, $1; Samuel Davis, $1; Wm. H. Allen, $1; A. V. V. $1; F. W. Friedrich, $2; John M. Salm, $1; E. A. Walker, $1; S. L. Decker, $1; Butler House, $1; Jacob Troutman, $2; Jas. R. Campbell, $1; J. B. Cornell, $1; Dr. C. M. $1; Geo. R. Elliott, $2; Knoll Hill, $1; Aug. Baval, $1; Fred. Miller, $1; Chas. Hedenwick, $1; Chas. Reisman, $1; Dr. M. Bauer, $1; Louisville Hotel, $2; C. T. Pfaff, $1; B. Stranes, $2; Joseph Guntersheimer, $1; D. J. Davison, $1; D. V. Ball, $2; T. W. Palmer, $2; H. B. Brown, $2; H. Smith, $2; Fairchild Farran, $2; E. Maitland Waddell, $2; J. G. Malcolm, $2; Sumner Goodman, $2; D. McAllister, $2; H. G. H. Blake, $1; James McKendee, $2; Mrs. H. B. Beckwith, $2; C. L. Roberts, $1; Luther Sickerson, $1; A. B. Swain, $1; M. G. House, $2; Thomas Davis, $2; S. H. Emory, $2; Val. Ludwig, $2; J. C. Allen, $1; John Meisell, $2; Charles S. Owens, $2; J. S. Thompson, $2; Alfred H. Portridge, $2; A. A. Knight, $2; M. P. Hanchett, $2; Mrs. Oliver Wallace, $2; S. J. Putnam, $2; Gust. Zeebeck, $2; J. Jordan, $2; C. Thomas Yoncoski, $2; Delano Patrick, $2; Morris Einarson, $2; S. H. Handman, $2; S. Cramer, $2; Geo. W. Jones, $2; Milan Bouley, $2; Mrs. B. C. Harrison, $2; J. P. Harlow, $2; W. S. George, $2; S. H. Koper, $2; $1; H. Brohl, $1; C. B. Lusk, $2; Wm. Newman, $2; Geo. Thornton, $1; T. C. Sanders, $2; P. A. Bonham, $1; Wm. M. Chover, $1; Alex. A. Balle, $2; Nat. Burgess, $2; Robert A. McKenstry, $1.10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittance acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX, which are not sent down with it, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice. N. B.—If your INDEX is payable in advance, its friends should not be offended if the papers stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tags. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—If your INDEX mail-tag is not changed within three weeks after receiving your subscription, please notify us immediately. But do not write before the expiration of this time.

N. B.—In case of any error in your mail-tag, always state the post-office at which the paper is received, and also the issue just as it is now printed. Then state any desired corrections.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on New York. Cheques on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

RECEIVED.

SING SONG. A Nursery Rhyme Book. By CHRISTINA G. ROBERTS. With One Hundred and Twenty Illustrations by ARTHUR HUGHES. Engraved by the brothers DALZIEL. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1878.

THE PICTURE OF THE WAY. A Study on the Lives of Sterling and Maurice. By MORRIS D. CONWAY, Author of "The Barward Pilgrimage." Printed for the Author: 11, South Place, Finsbury.

FIVE SERMONS BY THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, B.A., on "The Influence of Dogma upon Religion," "The Ascension," "The Necessity of Destructive Teaching," "A Challenge:—What is Christianity?" "What is our Religion?" London: J. Low, Printer and Binder, 20 Gutter St., Chancery Lane.

A HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF AMES, Story County, Iowa, together with a brief Description of the Surrounding Country, and the Iowa State Agricultural College, located at Ames. By C. E. TURNER, Esq. Ames, Iowa: AMES INTELLIGENCER. 1871.

THE ALDINE FOR AUGUST. JAMES E. SUTTON & Co., 22 Liberty St., New York. $5.00 a year.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for August. J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Philadelphia. $4.00 a year.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH for August. New York: WOOD & HOLBROOK, 18 and 16 Light St. $3.00 a year.

THE SCHOOL LABORATORY OF PHYSICAL SCIENCES. Vol. II. No. 1. Iowa City, Iowa: GRIGGS, WATSON & DAY, Davenport. $1.00 a year.

STAKES EACH $100

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

2.6R.600

The Index.

AUGUST 3, 1872.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under its general purpose.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio."

EMANCIPATE SUNDAY!

A case of petty persecution for infraction of the Sunday law in Brookline, Massachusetts, which has already been briefly mentioned in these columns [THE INDEX for June 16, page 191], has led to the publication of a pamphlet by Mr. William I. Bowditch, a highly respected citizen of the place, containing a cool and dispassionate exposure of the disgrace thus cast upon the town and the State. From this pamphlet it appears, original documents being cited in evidence, that on Sunday, May 12, Mr. George J. Walther assisted his wife in transferring a passion-flower from a small pot into a large one; and that, having screwed a hook into a water-spout for the purpose, he was just about hanging up the vine, when a policeman, B. C. Clark, threatened to arrest him for a violation of the Sunday law if he did not stop. Mr. Walther stopped at once, expressing, however, an intention to test the matter after consultation with a lawyer. The policeman next day complained of him to a magistrate, obtained a warrant for his arrest, and obliged him to appear before Trial Justice C. H. Drew, who fined him $2.00 and costs, amounting to $3.95—the policeman's share being $1.60. From this judgment Mr. Walther appealed.

These irritating proceedings naturally excited the indignation of the fellow-citizens of the victim; and a petition signed by eighteen of the most influential of them was presented by Mr. Bowditch to the Selectmen of Brookline, together with a circumstantial statement by himself of the whole matter. These petitioners requested the town authorities to see that the fine and costs should be paid by the town itself, or to assess them upon the petitioners; to stay the proceedings where they were; and to forbid the police for the future to make any further voluntary complaints on account of infraction of the Sunday law. To this petition the Selectmen returned answer by the Town Clerk, a few days later, that they had "voted that it is inexpedient to take any action on the subject."

"Have, then, the people of this town," inquires Mr. Bowditch, "no right quietly to care for their flowers and plants on Sunday, without rendering themselves liable to arrest at the mere whim and pleasure of any police officer who may please to pass his Sunday in prying out minute and harmless causes of complaint for violation of an obsolete law? Is it important for us to tax ourselves so heavily to support a town police for the sake of imposing an odious yoke upon our own necks? We claim the right to be free from any such meddlesome interference from our own officers." He then proceeds to argue, and to prove conclusively from the State statutes, that the Selectmen have full legal power to forbid the police thus to make complaints for violations of the Sunday law, on penalty of immediate dismissal from their office; and he not unambiguously hints that the public sentiment of the community will yet compel them to adopt this course.

While, however, we fully and unreservedly sympathize with the resolution not to submit to such tyranny, none the less infamous for being petty, we respectfully dissent from the implied suggestion that the prohibitory action recommended to the Selectmen would be an adequate remedy for the evil.

In the first place, we might not ourself feel justified, were we one of the Selectmen, in instructing the town police to enforce some of the State laws, and systematically to neglect the enforcement of others. Such discretionary power is not lodged—at least ought not to be lodged—in the Selectmen's hands. It might be very dangerously abused; and although Mr. Bowditch proves incontrovertibly that the Selectmen might do as he suggests without technically violating the statutes of the State, still, on broader grounds, a conscientious Selectman might very properly decline to exercise the power of thus practically repealing a State law.

The real evil lies further back, in the Sunday law itself. The only radical reform must consist in the expunging of this law from the Statute Book. Until this is done, there can be no real security against the repetition of the vexatious and bigoted prosecution complained of. No law is really "obsolete" so long as it stands unrepealed; it is always liable to be revived by any party in power which may choose to make use of it. Dead-letter laws are mischievous in many ways—creating contempt of all law so long as they remain merely nominally in force, and becoming instruments of oppression if, as in this case, brought unexpectedly into operation. The only safe and wise course is to repeal every law which the advancing enlightenment of the age pronounces unworthy of itself.

With this belief, we respectfully but earnestly recommend to the protestants against this absurd and tyrannical prosecution, that they make it the ground of a vigorous movement in the next Legislature of Massachusetts for the immediate repeal of the Sunday law. It is this law which for ten years has defeated the beneficent measure of opening the Boston Public Library on Sunday; and it is a great mistake to treat it as in any sense a dead-letter. Let the liberals of Massachusetts improve the opportunity now before them to agitate effectively for the abolition of the Sunday statutes—at least to the extent of repealing all those provisions which are in fact based on the idea that Sunday is in some sense a specially "holy day." It is quite enough to make Sunday a "day of rest," a legal holiday, as a purely municipal regulation; whatever is more than this comes of superstition. We hope sincerely that the Massachusetts liberals will now prove that they possess the courage of their opinions, and will not rest content with any half-cure of the contemptible tyranny here attempted to be practised. Let them lay the axe at the root of the tree, and destroy for all time the arrogant pretence that one portion of the community have a right to prevent another portion from taking care of flowers, or playing croquet, or doing any other innocent and unoffensive act on their own premises on the first day of the week. The "conscience" which is hurt by seeing other people employ themselves on that day as they please, whether in work or in recreation, so long as they behave themselves quietly and peaceably, is a conscience that is incompatible with the first principles of civil freedom; and it is not a conscience that can be embodied in statute-law without most unjustifiable interference with individual rights. Whoever wants to worship in a church on Sunday, free from molestation or disturbance, should be scrupulously protected in that right; but on the same grounds whoever wants to work or to play should enjoy an equal liberty. Now is the time for a determined attempt to get rid of outgrown puritanical legislation on this subject in Massachusetts. Let the whole country see that the old Bay State understands her duty.

The large extra edition of THE INDEX, No. 133, containing Mr. Underwood's "Plea for Materialism," has been exhausted, and no more copies can be furnished. Those persons who have ordered this number within a few days will therefore understand the reason why they do not receive it. For the same reason five or six other numbers of this year's INDEX are also not to be had; and the only possible way to receive them will be to order the bound volume for 1872. We cannot break our reserved files to fill special orders.

If the reader has ever felt himself benefited by anything he has read in these columns, will he not discharge that little debt by helping to extend the same benefit to others? The way to do it is to renew promptly and take the trouble of sending the name of one new subscriber.

A DILEMMA.

A gentle contemporary, meditatively remarking on Mr. Horace Seaver's tribute to Free Religion, that it so closely resembled no religion at all that the honest Atheist need not take issue with it, or words to that effect, asks, in the tone of one propounding a deep conundrum:—"Is that better for Atheism, or worse for Free Religion?"

May it not be considered impious if we suggest that the alliance will be best for both? That atheism will be a gainer from association with even such a corrupting monster as Free Religion, is already conceded by the generous critic, and therefore need not be argued. To the absence of sympathy for the religious sentiment, atheism has owed its most unattractive features, its dryness, barrenness, hardness, lack of imagination, lack of tenderness. The atheism of the last century, French atheism, the atheism that preceded the Revolution, and crowned itself then a goddess, struck an attitude of defiance towards the church, its beliefs, forms, and symbols, ceremonies, officials and offices. It regarded religion as an ally of tyranny, and turned against it the weapons it employed against the despotic powers of the State. It put on everything the worst construction, imputed to everything the meanest motives, traced everything to the vilest source. Religion it spoke of as identical with superstition, and superstition of every kind was in its regard an invention of the priests, who aimed at enslaving the souls of mankind. Devoutness, in its view, was hypocrisy; piety was pretence; heaven was a pleasant illusion to gull fools; hell a dismal fiction to frighten them. The name of God excited in them dislike and contempt, for it was associated with prayers and sacrifices, confession to priests, subervency and ignorance. The atheist of the period was not only a disbeliever; he was a scorner.

How different his temper now! Let any one compare the atheism of d'Alembert with the atheism, so called, of a disciple of August Comte; the spirit of a man like d'Holbach with the spirit of a man like Huxley. The attitude of atheism towards religion is most remarkable. Atheism has ceased to be a profession with us. The man who disbelieves in God hesitates to own it; not from fear—there is nothing to be afraid of—but because he does not wish to be considered out of sympathy with those who cultivate sentiments of reverence, trust, aspiration and joy. He too has imagination; he is not defiant or hard-hearted; he admires the ardor he cannot explain, and feels the mystery he cannot reveal. If he cannot believe, he can feel; if he cannot be a disciple, he will not be an exile; if he cannot define God, he will not exclude gracious feelings from his own heart; he can be religious, though he will not call himself so; with the minimum of pious demonstration, he likes to consider himself one of the great brotherhood of the fellow-men who look upward and not downward with their reason. Few men are more cordially, unfeignedly devout than a few of those whom the ecclesiastical world brands with the charge of atheism; and they are so for the reason that there is an aspect of religion that turns graciously towards them.

Shall the alliance which proves so beneficial to atheism prove disastrous to religion? A moment's thought makes the contrary case evident. Bigotry digs the grave of religion; charity is its soul of life. The fatal mistake of religion has consisted and consists in its refusal to distinguish between creed and character, in its identification of hellishness and heresy. Mr. George Hepworth expressed the traditional feeling when he said in a sermon:—"The man who is an atheist will cheat and steal and kill." The sensible man of the world knows it to be otherwise and discredits the religion that asserts it. The man of sincere piety, though fearing it may be true, is prevented by brotherly love from saying it. Good men of every church make effort now to enlarge charity. The Romanist is forbidden to extend his spiritual kindness beyond the lines of his organization, but he will embrace as many as he can within them. The "Orthodox" Protestant is forbidden to extend his spiritual kindness to those who reject the essential points of the "evangelical" faith, but he makes many concessions of incidental dogmas that all the "brethren" may be one. The charity of the Unitarians is limited to those who believe in "Christianity," as they interpret it; and they think their kindness the largest because, though it embraces none beyond them, it includes all behind.

Now if charity is so excellent a thing, why should we not say, the more charity the more excellence? The Christian world commends Jesus because he suffered Judas to continue among his followers and even broke bread with him; and is it much to expect in a disciple of Jesus that he should sit down with men like George Holyoake and Horace Seaver?

The "Free Religionist" takes no credit to himself for showing fellowship with the atheist. He would simply take bitter shame to himself if he did not. He does so because he must; kindness, humanity, reason, logic, good sense, alike render it imperative. He does so for his own sake, not for the atheist's; to show that he is religious, not to make the atheist devout. He would express, confirm, and deepen his own charity. If he wished to convert atheism, he knows that charity alone will do it. But whether atheism be converted or not, he will be himself converted from narrowness, prejudice, assumption, arrogance, and contempt. It cannot hurt him to be rid of these; it cannot do anything but help and bless him to cultivate and keep a charity that respects neither names nor persons.

O. B. F.

FREE RELIGION IN FRANCE.

It appears that the French "Reformed Church" is troubled by the same heresies that afflict the church in this country. Is it not a most strange and lamentable fact that in proportion as a nation becomes enlightened it should be subject to this disease of independent thought and radical religion? Introduce the free school, and this distemper of free thought immediately breaks out, and rages most where school-houses are most numerous.

Robert Collyer laughs, good-naturedly of course, at the contagion of radicalism which is sweeping through the army of young men in this country. He counsels his conservative brethren to be patient and nurse the boys carefully and they will come out all right—it is only the "measles" of mental growth, the sign that they are passing through the "chicken-pox stage" of development. It reminds us that we have read how there was a young man by the name of Theodore Parker who had this kind of measles once. It is true he caught the disease about thirty years after he had cut his gum-teeth, and it is true that in his case the disease was of such a malignant type that the Unitarian Association dared not keep him in their hospital, but turned him out to pasture alone. Moreover, it is admitted that he never recovered from this disorder infantum, though he lived to be nearly fifty years old; and, strange to say, thousands came to him living, and tens of thousands have come to him since his body was laid in a foreign grave, expressly to breathe the breath of his spirit, and touch, as it were, the hem of his garments, not fearing the contagion, but with the express purpose of catching it,—which they did and thanked God for it. Still there is no doubt in the minds of some people that this life-long disease, if you please to call it a disease, was merely a kind of mental chicken-pox which all little children must have, but which is as transient as it is harmless. And Mr. Collyer encourages this idea and soothes the anxieties of conservative parents. But if it be merely a disorder of this sort, the theologians had better give it a new diagnosis; and to cure it, they must enlarge their old materia medica. Evidently this is what they are hoping to do in France.

The Synod of the Reformed Church met on the 6th of June, and, as in this country, they had their Orthodox party on the right and liberals on the left. M. Guizot, now in his eighty-second year, was the leader of the Orthodox party and the chief opponent of those who have been bringing into the Reformed Church the spirit of Renan and the German exegetes. Among the able liberals were Fontanis, Clamageran, and Coquerel, who lately visited this country.

The object of the Synod was the construction of some sort of a national credo. It was urged by the Conservatives that they must have some general Confession of Faith to embody and preserve their doctrines, and establish a permanent, visible State church. Like Mr. Hepworth and his sympathizers in the Unitarian denomination in this country, they thought that the church would dissolve into thin air, or, like a wild beast, run away, unless the mind should be caged or chained to some fixed creed. On the contrary, the French Radicals objected to a creed on the same ground that Frothingham, Higginson, Johnson and Bartol, objected years ago. M. Clamageran said, in the language of the correspondent, "that faith is and ought to remain individual. There has been no common credo at Geneva since 1725; none in France since the beginning of this century. The Confession of Faith and Discipline of Calvin adopted in 1559 in the first Synod, though very remarkable, gave to the French Reformation a stern and absolute character which has hampered its progress. The speaker showed by many examples that creeds do not contribute to preserve the purity of faith or of morals: men sign the articles of faith, and then forget them. It makes hypocrites of them. Whoever does not feel in exact accordance with the official faith of the church, it is said, may retire and make a new church; but these perpetual amputations will leave the church a body without any life. A Confession of Faith implies a real want of faith." M. Vaurigard, like a Dr. Belows, replies, "that the Orthodox party means to remain faithful to the Protestant principle of free interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. But before all, all the members of the church must admit the sacred authenticity of the Scriptures and the truth of the great supernatural facts which constitute the foundation of the Christian faith,—such as the resurrection of Christ." To this, Fontanis replied, as Mr. Higginson might have done: "Catholicism has one fundamental error; it substitutes the church for the individual conscience. In the Protestant world we are all priests by right. Let each man, said Luther, be his own Pope and his own Emperor. We do not excommunicate. Diversity among us is not only legal, it is a necessity. The religious city, like the state of Aristotle, is not composed of similar men, but of different men. Some say that with such principles there is no church possible. What is religion? Is it the doctrine, or the rite, or the act? No, it is the feeling which is expressed in the dogma and the rite and the act. The Christian religion is nothing else. You say that this is too vague, and that we must proclaim the true Biblical Christ. We know him not; for, as to his nature, we find in the New Testament various conceptions, from the simple humanity, from the Messiah, to the Alexandrine Logos; and as for his life, what is it to us if he made or did not make miracles? The Orthodox are themselves looking beneath the miracles for the moral lesson which they express. We can say of the miracles that the day they are discussed, they cease to exist." How much that sounds like Parker when he said that "miracles are only seen where they are already believed in!"

In listening to these French radicals we can easily imagine ourselves at a convention of the Free Religious Association in Boston. These Frenchmen have certainly caught the "measles" somewhere, though the disease may be of a milder type than afflicts us on this side of the Atlantic. Is the "time out of joint," or what ails us? Cannot the General Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association devise some relief, or must we continue to see our young people attacked and carried off by this contagious disease of radical "measles?" In some of the meetings of that Association we have noticed they have discussed the question—"How to meet the scepticism, or free religion of the day;" but we have not heard that a remedy has yet been discovered.

W. H. S.

The "man inside politics" runs after bubbles, and gets nothing but soap-suds. But he does not get enough to wash his hands.

The Christian Union has the following paragraph on the free picnic given to the poor children of New York, and paid for by subscriptions solicited by the New York Times:—

Never have we, under the stern interdict of space, mutilated a good thing with more reluctance than we cut into the description of the "Poor Children's Picnic,"—a mere specimen of which will be found, this week, in our department of "Public Opinion." The entire article may be found in the New York Times, of Sunday, the 14th. Would that everybody would read it; and if any can do so without tears, something must be out of order in their water-works—that's all.

We can tell the Times that its successful inauguration of this scheme for furnishing the young Arabs of the New York streets with rural recreation is the tallest feather in its cap. Not even its vigorous raid upon the municipal marauders can compete with it; for that was only partially successful, and had to do with hardened old sinners who are, in Falstaffian parlance, "past praying for." But this belongs to that far-reaching, beneficent policy which takes hold on the generation that is soon to constitute the population of this great city. And its effects are not to be measured by the fleeting pleasure which a little cake and lemonade and an hour or two of fun can impart to a swarm of ragged boys and girls. No one who has estimated the wondrous power of little things in forming the character of a child will deem it a visionary expectation that the memory of that golden hour will never fade from those little hearts, but be in many of them a starting-point for new associations, new hopes, and higher ideas of the nature of true happiness. If it were only through the assurance thus implanted in them that the wealthier classes care for them and seek their good, the influence of such an experience on their future lives would be immeasurable.

This style of working we believe to be the very essence of Christianity. Would there were more of it!

Amen to that! No matter what you call it, that "style of working" is the true style. If it only were the "essence of Christianity" to work in that style, how quickly would THE INDEX astonish its readers by "confessing the faith!" But while unable to shut its eyes quite so tightly as Mr. Beecher to the real "essence," it most heartily agrees with him in applauding the New York Times for its noble example "of good-will to man"—that is, to the poor little ragged boys and girls. THE INDEX would gladly add a leaf to the laurel-wreath so fairly and so purely won. And, judged by Mr. Beecher's rule, there is nothing very seriously out of order with THE INDEX water-works. We copy elsewhere the story as the Union quotes it.

Rev. Dr. Thompson, the distinguished Egyptologist of New York city, as reported in the Tribune, recently made some curious remarks in a lecture on Egyptian Philosophy. Referring to the god Serapis, he said:—

"This god was set up in the temple as the god of Alexandria, the one protecting deity, invented for a class of men who had agreed to disagree, to banish all religious differences and live as good neighbors together, each agreeing to allow the other to think as he pleased. Serapis was the symbol of the religious thought of the city, and suggests the shape which that philosophy took which afterward appeared there in opposition to Christianity. . . . But now, in the fourth century of the great city's existence, when the population numbers about 2,000,000, in this enormous, wealthy city there appears one day an unknown man, preaching an unheard-of story that God has come to earth; and he established a religion which by its very nature is intolerant, which declares war against all differences, which has a clear-cut, definite faith and creed, and says—there is one God and one Lord Jesus Christ, and there is no other name given among men whereby they can be saved; and this man plants that faith there and gathers a Christian church, distinct from Jews and idolaters, which grows and spreads, till it has a clergy and bishops, and comes to be a power in Alexandria."

"A religion which by its very nature is intolerant." When Dr. Thompson, a learned and wise and highly lauded Christian scholar, speaks thus of Christianity, all the churches cry—"Amen!" But when THE INDEX ventures to utter the very same truth, they indignantly pronounce it an "infidel slander!" No matter. We are content to leave the case in the Doctor's hands. If he had deliberately set out to prove the infinite superiority of the Egyptian Serapis over the Orthodox Christ, he could not have succeeded better. If freedom is better than intolerance, Paganism he concedes to be better than Christianity. Quod erat demonstrandum.

The Amherst (Mass.) Student, edited by students of Amherst college, walls bitterly over the decadence of religious societies among the undergraduates. They are two in number, the "Hitchcock Society of Inquiry" and the "Missionary Band." The latter is twelve years old, and has an average membership of less than five from each class. The former has been in existence over fifty years, but numbers only sixty members in all, of whom only a "ridiculously small" number attend the meetings. So disgusted are the students with the society, and so disgusted is the Student with their disgust, that, unless the lukewarm young Christians mend their ways, next year an "earnest and persistent" effort will be made to disband the society and dispose of its property under the hammer. This proposition we approve, and hope that the proceeds may be devoted to establishing a good Natural History Society, or some other equally sensible object. They will never miss the "Hitchcock, &c."

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICES.

BOSTON ILLUSTRATED. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.—This very neatly printed pamphlet of about one hundred and twenty pages was prepared by the publishers with special reference to the wants of the host of strangers drawn to the metropolis of New England by the recent Peace Jubilee. But it will have a permanent value for all who feel an interest in the "modern Athens." All the more important buildings are here represented; many excellent views of the chief scenes in the city and its suburbs are given; and a fine map is added in an accompanying "Supplement." The text is full and well written, containing a great deal of exceedingly interesting matter, historical as well as descriptive. Altogether, no better guide-book to any city has ever fallen under our notice, and it is almost as good as an actual visit to see the familiar sights of our birthplace so faithfully reproduced on paper. But the "march of improvement" has made havoc with some of them; and it must send a pang to the heart of every true Bostonian to learn that even the "Old South Church" is soon to be torn down—to be swallowed up by omnivorous Mammon. It would be no worse vandalism to demolish Bunker Hill Monument itself, to make room for a tall-candle factory. The plain granite Monument gives more light than a million candles, and so does the Old South steeple. Will not some enlightened spirit set on foot a movement to buy the historic old building as a museum of public relics? If not, we shall look next to see the battle-stained flag in the rotunda of the State-House sold for rags. The old "Hancock House" is gone, to the everlasting regret of all but savages; and if the "Old South" goes too, let Boston know that the shame of her greed and vulgarity cannot be covered up by fifty Colosseums.—Price 50 cents; sold by H. S. Stebbins, Toledo.

THE "SLING AND THE STONE." Vol. V., for the year 1871. By the Rev. Charles Voysey, London. Published by the Author, 1873.—As Mr. Voysey politely states in his preface, "nearly all that this volume contains" has been already published in THE INDEX, nine out of these eleven sermons having appeared in our columns, although the present volume was issued from the English press in advance of our publication of the last few. Readers of THE INDEX, therefore, will need no assistance of ours in estimating the value of these vigorous discourses. Their great charm, in our own judgment, lies in their intellectual lucidity and moral earnestness. Radicalism is often accused, and justly, of being too fine-spun for the average mind; it is too scholastic, too speculative, too dainty, to grapple with live questions in a live way, so that the ordinary man can seize its principles and imbibe its spirit. From this reproach Mr. Voysey may certainly claim exemption. He speaks straight to the point; he argues with great cogency, states with great clearness, and enforces with great power. His own intense rationalism is brought to bear directly upon his hearers' minds, without a shadow of equivocation or evasion or political ambiguity. To him it is a matter of no small moment that others shall see the truth and feel its beneficent influence; and he is utterly free from that tendency to play with his subject rhetorically, that apparent desire to divert the attention of the listener from the thought itself to the elegance or beauty of its attire, which always produces the effect (sometimes very unjustly) of more or less insincerity. We do not at all wonder, therefore, at the great popularity of his writings. Of all the Index Tracts, his "Lecture on the Bible" (included in the present volume) has been most in demand; and the reason is not to be found solely in the popular interest of his subject, but quite as much in the peculiarly bold, pointed, and manly style of his treatment of it. That the success of his movement in London should be so marked and promising as it is, seems the most natural thing in the world; for the minds of the majority even of so-called persons of education are in a very child-like state as regards religion, and Mr. Voysey, perfectly well comprehending this fact, has the happy art of adapting his manner to the occasion. Now and then a trace of undue self-consciousness is discernible; but nothing could be more striking than the prevailing tone of modesty and utter absorption in the truths proclaimed. For singleness of purpose, devotion to high principle, and both moral and intellectual courage, Mr. Voysey has no superior among the radicals of to-day; and, added to the strong and masculine character of his mind, these qualities mark him out as one whose public influence must constantly increase. We esteem it a piece of great good fortune that he is so thoroughly in sympathy with THE INDEX, and finds himself able to render it such valuable assistance.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—Roughly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

DRYNESS.

HOLYOKE, Mass., July 21, 1872.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Enclosed please find two dollars, as subscription for THE INDEX. I received the two numbers sent to me, and have looked them over; and will you excuse me if I say that to me they seem a little dry—more especially if the names at the head of your paper are taken into consideration? The question arises, is it the nature of materialism to be dry? Theodore Parker, I think, was a materialist; yet his sermons or writings were seldom dry.

I have long sought for a paper or magazine liberal in its views, but have not been very successful. For many years I have been in the habit of reading the Banner of Light, where I have found many good things; but that paper, while professing to be extremely liberal, and constantly finding fault with the illiberality of other publications, is undeniably the most illiberal and bigoted paper published in the States. The Golden Age suited me until its editor became ambitious to play the Warwick and be known as a king-maker, which ambition seems to change the character of his paper to that of a political organ. So I will now try THE INDEX.

Yours truly, JAMES EMERSON.

[A continued perusal of THE INDEX will show that it is no more committed to Materialism than to Spiritualism, but encourages the free discussion of all great questions of thought, recognizing science alone as having the right to pronounce the decisive word. Theodore Parker was very far from accepting Materialism; and so is THE INDEX, which seeks to discover that universal truth of which all human systems are but "broken lights."

Mr. Emerson's letter was accompanied by a long circular explaining the "tests of turbine water-wheels;" and we are afraid that our ignorance of the subject made it appear rather "dry." To one who has given his attention to the subject, however, it would doubtless be very interesting. May we suggest that the great issues discussed by THE INDEX will appear less "dry" to our correspondent, as he becomes more familiar with them?

In our opinion, the Golden Age is one of the most brilliantly able papers now published; and although it demurs at carrying out religious liberalism to its extreme logical results, we consider it in the main a powerful co-adjutor of THE INDEX, and heartily wish it success.—ED.]

PARKER PILLSBURY IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, July 16, 1872.

MR. EDITOR:—

To every one who desires to aid in promoting the cause of true liberalism, it becomes an important question as to the most efficient means of doing it.

The importance of supporting such organs of liberty as THE INDEX, and a few others that might be named, is evident.

None the less evident, however, as it seems to me, is the importance of sustaining liberal lecturers.

Who can over-estimate the usefulness of the lecturer who, actuated by a devotion to truth and making it his chief mission to awaken thought and encourage free inquiry, devotes himself or herself to the service of emancipating the mind from every form of mental tyranny—especially when the lecturer not only teaches liberalism, but practices it also? The teacher who lauds free thought, and yet at the same time withholds honest convictions, or attempts to screen them by the use of ambiguous phrases in order to flatter the preconceived opinions of his hearers, may be successful as a lecturer, but his success is at the expense of liberalism.

To promote true liberalism, the lecturer requires candor and a loathing of hypocrisy, as well as character and intelligence.

Rare indeed are the public speakers possessing these qualifications, liberalism has fortunately a few such exponents, and recently it became my pleasure to listen to one of them. I refer to that veteran in the cause of humanity, your co-worker Parker Pillsbury.

It having been announced that Mr. Pillsbury was to speak in Boston last Sunday, I found my way to the pleasant hall dedicated to the mem-ry of Theodore Parker, at the hour appointed. I was not the only one attracted, the attendance being quite large—larger than at any previous meeting during the summer, although the day was one of the warmest of this excessively warm season. However, under the refreshing influence of honest, straightforward utterances of truth, demonstrated by the clearest logic and well spiced with genuine wit and satire, the oppressive heat was soon apparently forgotten.

To appreciate the real worth of the lecture, one should have heard it delivered. The chief points discussed were the relative importance of belief, knowledge, and works, to mankind; and it was ably treated. The speaker showed no mercy to falsehood, hypocrisy, bigotry or superstition, though he spoke respectfully, even tenderly, of those who unfortunately were its slaves.

The expressions of approval from the audience, which occasionally so far overstepped the ordinary rules of decorum as to manifest itself in applause, even at the speaker's fitting rebuke of the chronic apathy of liberals as compared with the active zeal of their opponents, showed that the audience were pleased with utterances of truth, even when divested of flattery.

Although the discourse was quite long, the interest was maintained to the close; and great pleasure at having heard it was freely expressed by the hearers as they departed.

I understand that Mr. Pillsbury intends to continue in the lecture-field, and will accept calls to speak wherever he can be of service to the liberal cause.

Fortunate are they who can secure his services! R.

IS IT RIGHT TO READ?

Is it right to read in public libraries on the Christian Sunday? Such a question is singularly futile in the progressive era of the nineteenth century; yet it has been denied that it is right to read in public libraries on Sundays in Massachusetts. The simple demand to open them to the public on a portion of that day has been charged as a "pretext of irreligion and infidelity to un-Christianize the Commonwealth, stultify her history, and substitute Atheism as the basis of political, educational and civil institutions!" And all this nonsense because of the simple proposition that those whose occupations and pursuits exclude them from literary enjoyments on week days may be permitted to use an hour or two on Sundays, to feed and refresh their minds.

Where is the connection between reading and irreligion that such results are to be anticipated? I had supposed the reverse of this, and that such reading as is found in public libraries was a warm friend of religion and did much to promote its welfare. Since when has it become irreligious to promote intelligence among the poorer classes? To call a man an infidel or an atheist for desiring to elevate his fellow-man, to expand his mind and develop that reason which allies him with Deity, is not charitable, is not in good taste, and is not true. It is not a whit more profane to read in a public library on Sunday than on Monday, and it is shameful to keep poor, honest people in ignorance, and from the public libraries on the only day in the week when it is possible for them to enjoy the luxury of a book, or a paper!

Yet these Christians commit no violation of the Christian law while riding on Sunday for pleasure, or lounging at home deeply intent in the Day's Doings, or absorbed in a file of the many trashy story-papers which flood the land! But if a mechanic or laborer who has toiled all the week to support his wife and little ones, manifests a desire to have the public libraries open on Sunday, so as to strengthen his intellect with the wisdom garnered there which will fit and prepare him for the higher and nobler duties of life, advance him in his profession, &c., an outcry is raised against the proposal as "a pretext of infidelity to substitute Atheism in place of our blessed Christianity!"

Out upon such folly!

The truth is that Christianity fears the great tidal wave of free thought now sweeping over the world!

What the world needs to-day is, less work for Jesus and more for humanity. If Atheism is the great conqueror of "man's inhumanity to man," then let us welcome it with harp and cymbal and beating drums and flying banners. So far, Christianity has signally failed to better man collectively. If infidelity or atheism improves man's condition here,—makes him more humane, kind, more honest, more moral and charitable toward his fellow-man,—then is it better than Christianity, and to be sought after.

The Massachusetts library affair is a direct stab at free religion. The bigots who pushed the bill through the Massachusetts Legislature whereby Sunday reading is prohibited in public libraries, worked in the interest of the clergy, who are using every endeavor to stifle and crush free thought and reason in the masses.

The clergy are too late! The little stone has become a mountain, which in time will grind to powder all opposition. Christianity as a unit was once all-powerful. With fire and faggot and stake and sword and Inquisition and dungeon it defied the world and forced itself upon the people. Now, disintegrated, torn asunder, strewn over the land in hundreds of opposing sects, it is slowly but surely passing away. In a few centuries no vestige of it will remain. When the battle comes, it will be between Catholicism and Free Religion, or "infidels and atheists," as the mass of free thinkers are termed.

No sect hates free religionists with the venomous bitterness of the Catholics. While professing to side with the party who advocate the opening of the libraries on Sunday, as opposed to Protestantism, the priests will take good care that Catholics have nothing to do with public libraries. Let us possess our souls with patience and watch the logic of events. E. A. DAVIS.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

PRAYING FOR LIGHT.

PHILADELPHIA, March 31, 1872.

DEAR SIR:—

If you believe in God as an All-Wise and Omnipotent Being, have you in sincerity first asked him to give you light? Do you pray to him?

Yours very truly,

F. G. SCHULTZ.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.

[So long as we believed that asking influenced God, we asked faithfully, and for nothing so much as light. If he answers prayer, our faith in Free Religion is his answer to it. But if our faith in Free Religion is all a delusion, then he does not answer prayer, though it bursts from the deepest depths of the human soul. But we ask no more for light. There is light enough—infinitely light ever at hand. What is wanted is not light, but eyes. Let him who hungers for sight of the truth (and what else is the "beatific vision?") use faithfully the eye of Reason that God has given him, and he shall see indeed. Why stand with eyes close shut, asking for light? Open your eyes—behold—and rejoice!—Ed.]

WHAT MAKES THE CHRISTIAN?

MR. ABBOT:—Not long since I listened to a sermon the object of which was, as the preacher said, to show that a man could not be saved unless he was a Christian. This he went on to prove, but seemed to take it all the time for granted that each hearer knew what constituted a Christian, and of course knew whether he was one or not. This got me into a great difficulty, for I don't know yet what constitutes a Christian. It is true he proved (if his proof were reliable) that we must have faith in Christ; but as to what I must believe about Christ I was as much in the dark as ever. As I wished very much to be saved, (for the salvation he proposed was certainly of much importance), I kept asking myself all the time—"Art thou a Christian?" The preacher had said nothing by which I could decide the question, and I could get no satisfactory answer from myself. I then called to mind, as well as I could, what Christ is reported to have taught; and I remembered he had said that Our Heavenly Father is very good; that, if we ask bread and fish of our earthly parents, they won't give us stones and serpents, and that He is a great deal better than they are. I said to myself—"You believe that?" And I answered, "Yes." Then I remembered he had said—"You must do to others as you would they should do to you;" that you must "enter in at the strait gate" (which I understood to mean, "You must always do right"). Again, "You must beware of false prophets"—"By their fruits ye shall know me,"—"Every man shall be judged according to his works"—and many more wise sayings which upon careful examination of myself, I found I believed. This conclusion was comforting, for I thought perhaps all this belief about Christ might make me a Christian, and of course save me. But again I remembered Christ said—"He that doeth these sayings of mine is like the wise man who built on the rock." Then I said to myself—"How now? Art thou doing?" And I didn't feel quite so comfortable, yet I stuck to my faith. Just at this point I was aroused from my chain of thought by a loud vociferation from the preacher: "The Christian's faith is, Christ had a miraculous conception and was the eternal God, suffered and died on the cross to appease the wrath of his Father and satisfy his divine justice, that He might save all who believed in his Son." This startled me, and I exclaimed to myself—"How now? How now? You don't believe that; you know you don't; you never did; you know you can't. What! Christ born in violation of the seventh Commandment, and God the violator, then died on the cross, and that by this, His wrath was appeased and divine justice so satisfied that he could consistently save every vile wretch who believed the story?"—Mr. Abbot, I wish you would clear this subject up a little, for as it stands I am in a terrible predicament; or get some of your correspondents who know, to do it for you. Mr. Howard, I suspect, could do it.

E. L. CRANE.

COMPLIMENTARY.

MR. EDITOR:—

At the close of the nine months' course of Lectures in St. Louis, by Warren Chase, on Sunday, July 14, Mr. R. G. Hall offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That we recognize in Hon. Warren Chase one of the great benefactors of mankind, having been not only a political and religious leader, but a champion reformer in social life, and we tender to him our warmest and heartfelt thanks for his self-sacrificing efforts in holding up the banner of reform in St. Louis during the last two years. We cordially commend Mr. Chase as a true friend of the laboring classes and the poor in every effort for their improvement, and especially as the persecuted friend of the oppressed and down-trodden female portion of our race; and although we may differ from him in some opinions which he advocates, yet we esteem and recommend him as an honest, faithful and efficient worker in every cause that he engages in; and as he is one of our own citizens, we pledge ourselves to sustain him in his laudable efforts to make St. Louis a radiating centre of reform literature and free thought.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Banner of Light, Boston Investigator, Religio-Philosophical Journal, and INQUIRY, for publication. L. S. MOODY, Secretary. I. COOK, Chairman.

JAPANESE RELIGION.

[From the New York Commercial.]

We had a long talk with Nakshima, the Japanese Commissioner. He is a gentleman of superior intelligence, and don't look like a heathen at all.

First, we asked him about his religion.

"I am a heathen," he said, smiling. "I don't believe in religion, that is, in the forms of religion. My religion is to do good, to be honest."

"What do you think of our Christ?" we asked.

"Humbug—all humbug," he replied.

"What do you think of Mohammed?"

"Mohammed is a fraud, too, and so are all those middle men who say they are inspired. Confucius was a wise man, but no more inspired than Socrates. All these men, like Brahma, Buddha, Swedenborg, Brigham Young, Joe Smith, and, in fact, every man from Moses to Brigham Young, who has set himself up as inspired from God, is a humbug."

"What kind of religion do you believe in?"

"Well, though I am a heathen, I believe about as you do."

"How is that?" we asked, becoming interested.

"You believe in God—so do I, and so does every nation. We only differ in the Savior or Christ. Why, the Arabs believe in the same God, but take Mohammed as a savior; two hundred millions of people believe in Mohammed, and only fifty millions in Christ. It is always the same God all over the world. They may spell it differently, but it is the same God, with the same attributes, such as omnipresence, ubiquity, omniscience, infinity, potentiality, &c. In Greece, they call him Theos; in France, Dieu; in Germany, Gott; in China, Joss; in Asia, Brahma; in America, God. Many Japanese believe in the same God which you do, but receive Buddha as mediator in place of Christ. Buddha was a good man. He was modest, sincere, and self-sacrificing, but he was not God. He gave up a life of ease near the throne, to teach men to be good. He gave up immense wealth, and went with the poor. Your Christ made no such sacrifices. He was poor—a carpenter's son. He was killed because he preached heresies which the Jews didn't believe. He went a little too far, and lost his life, like Cranmer and Latimer, and as ten thousand foolish people do in India every day. Rosset lost his life in France, and John Brown here, for preaching what the people didn't believe. The day will come when you will almost worship John Brown, as the Swiss do William Tell. Dying for our faith signifies nothing. Why, sir, ten thousand people in India burn and kill themselves every year for their faith."

"But don't you think a savior is necessary?"

"No. God can do all the saving or destroying. When you bring a man to assist him, you destroy his greatness—his potentiality. These people that claim to be mediators are only religious brokers. God is too great to ask or permit any one to assist him. We have the same law of right and wrong which you have, and still we don't believe your Bible at all. God has given his law to us. The Koran, your Bible, the teachings of Swedenborg and Brigham Young, all differ, but the doctrines of the philosophers like Justinian, Socrates and Confucius, all agree. That is, they agree that God is great—and that he is too great to have any prophets."

"Don't you believe that Christ came into the world, to save it?"

"No, sir. He did not come into the world any more than you did. First he knew, he was here—a boy like all the Nazarene boys. His miraculous birth is the fancy of the legendary historians. He was put to death like John Brown, because he went round breaking Jewish laws. After he was killed, St. Paul and St. Peter established your church. They made a grand political centre and established the seven churches of Asia, none of which stand today. Ephesus and Antioch believe in Mohammed now. I know Mohammed was a humbug, and of the same knowledge I know all prophets to be humbug. You call me a heathen because I reject your church. I call you a heathen because you reject my Buddha. He was as great and pure as ever a man was. More than that, he gave up riches and station. He taught people to work, not to all become idle preachers. While I respect Buddha, I do not think he was inspired, and if he wasn't, then no man ever was."

That is what that heathen said, and he didn't think he was talking sacrilegiously. He did not think he had said anything rude, at least, no ruder than we are always saying of him.

INDEX TRACTS

UNCOMMON AND VALUABLE BOOKS!

AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of New York, E. I.
WILLIAM F. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD F. HALLIDAY, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of New York, E. I.
Wm. B. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $3.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 10

SECOND SERIES.....No. 11 to No. 20

Either Series, 50 Cents; Both, $1.00.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
19 PRINCE ST. BOSTON.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT.

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufacture, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 135 in eight days, another 928 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents.
Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent postpaid by mail for $2.00.
Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,
110-1615ow. Box 2295, St. Louis, Mo.

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word."); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

BOUND INDEX FOR 1871.—Complete files of THE INDEX for 1871, neatly bound with black morocco backs and marbled covers, will be mailed to any address on receipt of $3.50 and 72 cents postage, or sent by express if the postage is not prepaid by the purchaser. Only a limited number can be furnished.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no sinner, falser, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of every weakness, evilness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Myths, Fables, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of the most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies, Five Cents; Twelve copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

OF

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
Address S. H. MORSE,
128-17 25 BROADFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

J. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,
ARCHITECTS,
73 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[180-181]

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

It is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as such good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH
FAMILY AND DAY SCHOOL.

87 W. Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

MISS C. E. NOURSE will re-open her School for Young Ladies and Children Monday, Sept. 23. Her address during the summer will be No. 24 Berne St., Boston, and from Sept. 1 as above. [183-143.]

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS
of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.
[181ewit]

THE EXAMINER.—A limited number of Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 5 will be sent postpaid—the four numbers for 50 cents. Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 5 for 40 cents. Nos. 1 and 2 for 30 cents. No. 1 for 10 cents. What remain of full sets are reserved for binding. Elton's Herald says:—"The boldest heretic of the day." The Independent says:—"The most pronounced radical in the land." The Chicago Post says:—"Equal to the utterances of Theodore Parker." Address THE EXAMINER, Winnetka, Ill., where the numbers for sale remain. [186-17]

"Originals of the Bible."—AN INQUIRY INTO THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGINALS OF KING JAMES' BIBLE: When were they written? Where were they written? Who wrote them? And how have they been preserved and handed down? (Only a limited number printed.) In large 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"In conclusion, the author gives an excellent summary of Man's Nature.—Pathological, Intellectual, Physiological, Chemical,—as the most reliable standard by which we can measure or weigh the credibility of history and of revelation."

Why and What am I?—THE CONFESSIONS OF AN INQUIRER.—I. Heart Experience; or, the Education of the Emotions. By JAMES JACKSON JARVIS. (Published in Boston, and afterward suppressed.) In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The 'Inquirer' is full of revolutionary ideas. He tells what he heard and what he did before and since his birth, and very truthfully and powerfully portrays his experience and emotions."

Hobbes' (THOMAS) Works.—English and Latin. Now first collected and edited by Sir Wm. Molesworth. Portrait, etc. London: 1820. Complete set, 16 vols. 8vo, cloth, $30.00.

"One of the greatest and most original thinkers in the English language."

Gospel Paganism; OR, REASON'S REVOLT AGAINST THE REVEALED. With reprint of a Letter to (London) Social Science Association, 1858. By GEORGE RANKIN. London: 1864. In 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Fourier (CHARLES)—THE LIFE OF. By CHARLES PALLARIN, M.D. With an Appendix. Translated by FRANCIS GEORGE SHAW. Portrait. In 12mo, paper covers, 50 cts.; cloth, $1.00.

"Contains a very comprehensive view of Fourier's writings."

Bhagvat-Geeta (The); OR, DIALOGUES OF KRISHNA AND ARJUN. In Eighteen Lectures, with Notes. Translated from the original, in the Sanskrit, or Ancient Language of the Brahmans, by CHARLES WILKINS. (Only a very limited edition printed.) In royal 8vo, boards, $2.50.

"The antiquity of the original of the Bhagvat-Geeta, and the veneration in which it hath been held for so many ages by a very considerable portion of the human race, must render it one of the greatest curiosities in the literary world."

Law (The) of Nations. Affecting Commerce During War: with a Review of the Jurisdiction, Practice and Proceedings of Prize Courts. By FRANCIS H. UPTON, LL.B. In large 8vo, law sheep, $1.00.

Life of Thomas Paine—Mover of the Declaration of Independence, Secretary of Foreign Affairs under the First American Congress, Member of the National Convention of France, Author, etc., etc. (By CALVIN BLANCHARD.) With Portrait. In 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.

Principia: OR, NATURE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.—Theory of Universal Electro-Magnetism Simplified. Demonstrating the Existence and Operation of Repulsive Force, co-extensively with Gravitation. By L. L. CHAPMAN. In 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Wonderfully comprehensive and bold."

Hoback (DR. C. W.) The Mysteries of Astrology and the Wonders of Magic. With numerous Illustrations and Portrait. Boston: 1859. In 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

"Contains an account of Geomancy, Chiromancy, Physiognomy, etc."

Bible Exposed (The). By ERASMUS. A critical and cautious book by a modern writer. In large 8vo, cloth, $1.75; paper covers, $1.35.

"In Appendix, the author gives his own ideas concerning Natural Religion, and endeavors to show that he is not anxious to overthrow all religions."

Materialism of the Present Day.—A Critique of Dr. Baechner's System. By PAUL JANET. Translated from the French by GUYAVE MASSON. In 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

Advice to a Mother on the Management of her Offspring. By P. HENRI CHAYLASS. A good treatise on Infancy, Childhood and Youth. In 16mo, cloth, 50 cts.

Moore's (HANNAH) Works. Containing "Caleb in Search of his Wife," "Tales, Stories and Allegories." In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

"Hannah Moore's works have established her name as a great moral writer."

Candide. By VOLTAIRE. "The spiciest, wittiest and most amusing book in the French language." Fully translated into English. In 16mo, cloth, 85 cts.

"Contains 'Apostrophe Americana,' 'Perfect Happiness,' and 'Amours of Famous Men and Women.' In Appendix."

Gil Blas: THE ADVENTURES OF GIL BLAS OF SANTILLANA. Translated from the French of LE SAGE, by SMOLLETT. Illustrated with twenty Steel Engravings by ROBERT SMIRKE. In 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, $3.00.

"The popularity of 'Gil Blas,' which equals that of any of the most famous productions, may afford a lesson to the writers of fiction who are ambitious that their works should live."

Rural Rambles: OR, SOME CHAPTERS ON FLOWERS, BIRDS AND INSECTS. By A. LADY. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The author of 'Rural Rambles,' like the insect and the bird gathering honey for the hive and the twig for the nest, has passed from trill to authority, ever seeking to throw around her subject the charms of association and poetry."

Poetic Album (The). Consisting of Choice Selections from the POEMS OF ALFRED TENNYSON, MRS. BROWNING AND ALICE SMITH. Suitable for presentation. In square 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $1.50.

"The selections have been made with consummate skill and strict fidelity. To winnow the wheat from the chaff has been the main object of the accomplished compiler."

Writing Reader (The). Comprising, in the different Handwritings of the present day, [very excellent] selections from Standard Authors, with Specimens of French, German, Spanish and Italian Commercial Penmanship, designed for the use of Schools and Families. By T. GILBERT and F. PHASE. In royal 8vo, half roan, $1.00.

Any of the above will be carefully sent by mail, on receipt of price; or by Express, if so ordered, payable on delivery (C. O. D.) Address

DION THOMAS, Bookseller,

141 Fulton Street, New York City.
[180-186ow]

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, AUGUST 10, 1872.

WHOLE No. 137.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS, FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHEWET, REV. CHARLES VOTREY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MONTEUR D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
F. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

A Remarkable Discourse.

REPORTED BY M. D. CONWAY.

"One of our most remarkable men, sir!" This phrase, brought back from what we may now call Ancient America by Charles Dickens, one still hears repeated as a sort of proverb in England. I sometimes think there never was a bit of satire which once more accurately reported the differences between the two countries. If America had a "remarkable man," the world was pretty sure to hear of it in earlier times, from himself if from nobody else, while there were many powerful thinkers in England whose reputation was local. But now that the laugh is over, and the great men of the Pogram stamp have measurably subsided, there is more reason to fear that England and America will not recognize some of each other's most remarkable men than that these will be thrust too much upon a public attention which they do not merit. When lately Thomas Wentworth Higginson was in London, captivating the most intelligent circles by his fine manners and his great ability, more than one who was able to appreciate him inquired of me how it had been possible that a man of such powers should be without an English reputation. I could only say that we had grown chary of talking too loudly of our most remarkable men. On the other hand, Colonel Higginson himself, after listening with enthusiasm to an address from one of the most liberal and accomplished thinkers in this country, seemed to be at an utter loss to know how it was that, notwithstanding the careful attention he had always paid to English literature, he had not heard of the name or fame of this man. It then struck me as indeed a melancholy fact that two such men should not before have met in intellectual communion, however widely they might be apart in physical space; and I resolved that, at least, so far as the liberal thinkers who peruse the Radical are concerned, the man to whom Higginson alluded should not remain unknown.

At the same time I can well imagine that, if this paper should stray into the hands of some philological scholars of America—Professor Whitney, say, or Professor March, of Lafayette College, or Professor Child, of Cambridge—they will start when I say that the man I wish to introduce to the writers and readers of the Radical is no other than Alexander J. Ellis, Fellow of the Royal Society, and at this time President of the Philological Society of Great Britain. Many an ardent student of language will know that in the catalogue of the British Museum Library no less than forty works are placed under the name I have mentioned, and that these works represent some of the profoundest investigations of the present day. They will cast their eyes upon a huge volume—big with treasures—printed by the Philological, the Early English Text and the Chaucer Societies, entitled—"On Early English Pronunciation, with especial reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer, containing an investigation of the correspondence of writing with speech in England, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the Present Day, preceded by a Systematic Notation of all spoken sounds by means of the Ordinary Printing Types, including a re-arrangement of Prof. F. J. Child's Memoirs on the Language of Chaucer and Gower, and Reprints of the Rare Tracts by Salesburg on English, 1547, and Welsh, 1567, and by Harley on French, 1521. 8vo. By Alexander J. Ellis, F. R. S., F. S. A., &c."—a work of which the North American Review said, in 1870:—"He (Mr. Ellis) is the first who has really endeavored to collect everything that can throw light on the history of English pronunciation, and to treat the whole subject with scientific precision and thoroughness." But even American scholars who know Mr. Ellis by his and other works, and who know that, when the late President of the British Philological Society (Dr. Goldstücker) died, Mr. Ellis was at once chosen to fill his place, may not know him in the capacity in which others in London know and admire him.

It is as a religious teacher that I wish to speak of Alexander Ellis. Though trained for the ministry, he has chiefly worked in the direction already indicated; but he has always kept abreast of the philosophical and religious progress of the times, and preserved a connection with the great moral movements around him. An opportunity is offered me just now of laying before your readers an impressive statement of his, recently made. It was given as a discourse at South Place Chapel, to a large and profoundly interested audience,—given with an impressiveness of manner and an eloquence which prove that, while teaching the history of language and the laws of sound, Mr. Ellis has himself practically mastered the secrets of effective oratory.

First of all I will give the speaker's "Meditation,"—a religious utterance of the kind which for some years has been substituted for the "Prayer," which is no longer known in that Chapel:—

THE MEDITATION.

"Little children!" said the dying elder, "Little children! Love one another." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also."

The way to love God is through the heart of man! Not by metaphysical subtleties, where man turneth his eye inwards to see outwards, can he hope to reach God. Not by theological subtleties, where man vainly strives to fix in words what his mind has failed to grasp, can he hope to reach God.

Not by creeds and anathemas where the empty words of theology are crystallized into a charm or a curse, can man hope to reach God.

Not by fasting and penance, where man would gain purchase future bliss by present pain, and mount to heaven by trampling down earth, can he hope to reach God.

Not by fervent prayer, where man vainly beseeches God to modify eternal laws for temporary ends, can he hope to reach God.

Not by deep and persistent scientific research, where the head is awakened but the heart sleeps, can man hope to reach God.

The way to God is through the heart of man! By mixing with his fellow-men; by learning the wants of all; by working within his limited circle towards the general well-being; by identifying himself with his race; by feeling that he is above all, and through all, a man, manly, and is only as a man capable of effecting aught; by gathering into a focus those scattered beams of human sympathy which we know as love; by giving practical direction to vague aspirations for improvement; by living himself but as a part of others, and for others as for himself; by reaching the heart of his fellow-men, can man alone hope to reach God.

If man looks beyond the present life and indulges in dreams of a future eternity of well-being, let him not think of saving his own soul without his brother's, let him not expect to enter heaven by a password, let him not contemplate for a moment the revellers at the lightsome feast within, and the teeth-grashers in the darksome pit without. The heart of man rejects the contrast, and through the heart of man alone can man reach God.

Let not man seek to know the counsels of God. Man is of the earth, earthy; it is at once his badge and his star. What future may be in reserve for our race none can forecast. If those who have searched most widely are to be followed most readily, we have been evolved from very humble beginnings, and may have a much nobler hereafter. But the future depends on the present as the present on the past. No nobler hereafter is possible if the present fail in its part. That part is to develop present man; not to despise him as worthless, and fix all thought on the superhuman.

Here is our work, and through it our future. The heart of man is man's noblest organ on earth. Through the heart of man alone can he hope to reach God.

"Little children!" said the dying elder, "love one another!"

THE DISCOURSE.

The title of Mr. Ellis had been announced as "The Dyer's Hand." It had proved somewhat enigmatic to those who cannot imagine that texts can be taken from any other book than the Bible. But this teacher had found his theme suggested in one of Shakespeare's Sonnets. In his third Sonnet Shakespeare laments and excuses his "public manners" as due to the "public means" by which Fortune had provided, for his life, and exclaimed:—

"Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost, thence, my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand."

While walking recently through a street in Kensington, he said, he saw a man without his coat, and with shirt-sleeves rolled up, talking quietly to another man, in evident unconsciousness that his hands and arms were different from other men's. The green hand at a little distance seemed frightful, suggesting putridity, until, coming nearer, he perceived that the man stood at the door of a dye-house. He then recalled the lines of Shakespeare already quoted, and saw in the dyed hand, so unconscious of its inhuman color, a symbol of man's thought and feeling, "subdued to what they work in," the inherited environment, the geographical environment, the social environment, which color them so completely that they live in total unconsciousness of their own peculiarity, though they are acutely conscious of the different tinge imparted by a neighboring dye-vat. Nay, not dyed merely on the surface, but green-blooded to the heart's core, we persist in thinking green blood the only blood, and are shocked at the unnatural redness of another's. We may smile at the lady who made the remarkable discovery that wherever she went no one was in the right but herself; but the only difference between her and most of us is that she ventured to say so, while we think so in silence. Our inherited modes of thought, our current words, are all so dyed in one color, and every conception is so tinged, that probably no man really understands any other man when he speaks. Our first observations as children are directed to objects of sensation. It is only by storing up our hazy memories of individual impressions that we, in course of time, very clumsily and defectively group together the immediate results of sensation into aggregates which seem to us the same as those indicated by the words we hear from others. Subsequent knowledge, which in its full force is the lot of but few special observers, teaches us that every one of those individual sensations is altogether vague and wanting in precision; and that we cannot thoroughly depend even upon regaining the same sensations in ourselves,—rather we can almost depend on never regaining them. Sensations do not repeat themselves. As the position of a fixed star, whose position is of the utmost importance to astronomy, is different to the eyes of a host of observers, and that ultimately assigned it must be an average taken from them all, so the ordinary notions of the commonest external objects are averages drawn from many different observations, and to each the object will appear more in one light than another. When the Jehovist or Elohist spoke of God's eye, God's hand, of his being weary with the work of creation and having to rest on the seventh day, he had a real human image in his mind; to us these are mere metaphors, by which we vainly attempt to prefigure the unfigurable. But the metaphors, too, are dangerous, swaying the mind unconsciously to accept God as an exaggerated man. The dyer's hand finds its own color in what the dyer wantonly dares to term a hand. The finite raises its own mental state to gauge the Infinite!

The Infinite! How easy to say; how hard to conceive! From how many pulpits will the changes be rung on God's infinitude, in words that roll glibly from the tongue but have no root in the intellect! When shall we learn the lesson of the Titans, and know the fate of those who scale heaven by piling the Pelion of presumption on the Ossa of ignorance?

But while we may feel acutely the purely metaphorical application of terms implying human form to the unapproachable object of all thought, we are, however wise, apt to be led astray by human language where the terms do not imply bodily form but the best and least corporeal functions of humanity,—thought, will, love. Though we are speaking the highest thing that man may say of God when we declare 'He is Love,' let us never forget that such language is anthropomorphic in its origin, and must be held purely metaphorical in its application. If we seek to drive it home—to make God Love as we alone know love, we do not raise man to God but degrade God to man. What is the love we alone know? Turn to that glowing description of love by the noble Paul, that message to which every heart instinctively reverts which has once beaten at its sound, how utterly un-Godlike is every part! With what reality can we say that God, like love, suffereth long and is kind, rejoiceth in or with the truth, beareth all, believeth all, hopeth all, endureth all! Dependent man may do this. Let us know that it is only our own helplessness that leads us to say—God is love! These words are the faintest possible glimmer of that far off light which we hope we may forefeel, but certainly can never actually perceive. Let us beware of pushing home an analogy which has already led to the revolting conception of a Devil to account for what our human conception of love cannot contain. There is a universe around us compared with which our whole stellar system is insignificant; kingdoms of existence above and beneath us, which may swarm with a life, an intelligence, a love, unlike the earth's, indeed, but, if any twilight notion we can form of God be even remotely correct, as much bound up with God as our own puny selves, how inadequate may be our self-derived conception even expressed in its noblest formula: God is Love!

But the dyer's hand is still more apparent in another direction. Every lip is ready to speak of God's design; of God's will, purpose, intention, final cause, motive, his reasons for making things as they are,—every lip from the philosopher to the clown,—from Darwin, whom the necessities of language oblige to speak of the purpose, intention, use of certain organs, to the poet's "pampered goose," who finds man created to feed him. What is the human meaning of the word design? Originally, to mark out, to trace out, as the boundary of a city is traced by a plough; but in ancient Rome the word acquired the metaphorical meaning it now holds. A man designs a machine,—Paley's watch, for example,—what has he done? He has discovered the laws of geometry, properties of circles, the power exerted by a metal spring in uncoiling, &c.; he has discovered all this—invented nothing as yet. What he wants to do is to make the hand of his watch move round in a circle at a rate bearing an exact relation to the rate at which the earth revolves on its axis,—which revolution he has also discovered, not invented. Combining his discoveries, he, with imperfections due to his imperfect knowledge of the laws he employs, produces his watch. This is design. After all the watch-maker has but found materials and put them together according to certain laws of action he has discovered in them; that grand abstraction, Nature, does the rest. If we apply this to God, we see that some other God must have made the materials and their laws, and that the God we speak of merely puts them together! We make the great God a mere piecer of another God's goods! Shame on these natural theologians who would found our very reason for believing in the existence of God on such transparent fallacies, which must fall as ninepins before the first bowl of a cunning atheist! Yet even natural philosophers become entangled in such meshes. Professor Tyndall, in one of the lectures he is now delivering at the Royal Institution, on "Heat and Light," brought forward a notable instance of how presumptuous it is to try, like Phaethon, to guide the horses of the Sun. Water, liquid at ordinary temperature, when cooled to 40° Fahrenheit regularly contracts like the column of mercury in the thermometer. But increase the cold towards freezing, and while the mercury continues to contract, the water expands until, having become ice, it occupies much more space than when it was simple water. Hence, cooled down to 40°, water sinks to the bottom of any pond, because heavier than the warmer water; but after 40° it is lighter and floats on the top,—thereby presenting a pad against cold, keeping the water liquid below, and preventing the whole mass from becoming one mass of ice, to the destruction of all life within it. The importance of this property to the inhabitants of temperate and arctic regions, is manifest. No other liquid is known to possess the same properties. What so natural, then, as to say,—God in his providence designed this solitary exception from the universal law of contractility by cold, for the benefit of man. And men have said so, one after another. But first, the fact cannot affect man in regions where ice never forms; second, it existed when arctic and temperate regions bore tropical vegetation, and man did not exist on the earth at all; third, it is not the solitary exception, blameworthy presenting the same phenomenon. The whole argument then was from ignorance, and its present value is to show how illogical it is to infer from an isolated circumstance a general proposition of totally different character about a totally unknown relation.

The proof of design is now generally sought only in the organic world. Paley kicked his foot unconcernedly against the stone he found on the beach; for anything he knew, he says, it might have been there forever. Geology was then a practically unknown science, or he might have found epochs of history in the stone, and evidence of all manner of special creations for man's benefit. But Paley was no natural philosopher, only a half-learned theologian, who skimmed over all difficulties and produced a book which has done immense harm in leading Englishmen to anthropomorphic conceptions of God. But in older times, when organization was less understood, the problem turned on the subordination of the inorganic to the use of man. Copernican astronomy and geology have ousted the argument of design from inanimate objects, but organization remains its stronghold.

Who can regard the structure of the eye without being reminded of the object glass, the sensitized plate, &c., of the photographer? And as these are the results of design, what so natural as to jump to the conclusion that God adapted the eye to the laws of light? But if the eye was designed for sight, why should so many exquisite "contrivances" exist for defeating that object—why should this man be born blind—why should the Egyptian sun strike that man blind—why should the focal power of the lens be often—generally—so ill adapted to the position of the retina that no distinct image can be formed till man's knowledge of optics has taught him the effect of lenses of glass and how to grind them? The man is yet alive who first found what form of lens would remedy a not uncommon but hitherto unsuspected defect in his own eye. And what shall we say of the color-blind, who as railway porters, or as the look-out at sea, may destroy hundreds of lives in a moment by confusing green with red? Is there a single organ in the human body ordinarily so perfect that it needs no help from man? On what do the physicians and surgeons live? Was disease part of God's design for the doctors' benefit, or was it a punishment for the patients' sin? Aye, but "to give up Design is to throw everything into the power of Chance." Who is this grim goddess Chance, who can assume the reins of the world because one man differs from another in opinion? In ultimate resort all the best philosophy replies—Chance is the sum of those laws we have yet to learn. To say that the world is what it is, bating the laws we know, through the laws we know not, is surely nothing terrible, is the merest truism of modern science. But by all means avoid a name which conjures up a foul Python that it would need another Phoebus to destroy.

What, then, can we mean by God's "design"? Philosophy answers—solely the conditions of existence, that without which,—or that which changed,—things would not be what they are. Stated baldly thus, it seems a barren proposition. As long as we conceive that God meant every particular state to be what it is, it seems a sin to touch it. We have among us the sect of "Peculiar People" who decline to summon a physician in case of an illness; yet even they do not eat grains of wild wheat instead of artfully prepared bread. The first question of Truth is, are the conditions of existence improvable? As the Peculiar People,—and others not peculiar,—declare, we dare to correct God's handiwork! How deep the dye that would thus obliterate all that is true, beautiful and good! At the last eclipse expedition, as the astronomers were preparing to make those observations which tend to establish oneness amid the diversity of the universe, some ignorant natives lighted a fire to frighten off the dragon that was devouring the Sun, and the whole observations would have been modified by the smoke, had not some English officer bravely stamped out the fire. But we, here in England, need a brave officer like him to stamp out the flames which would thwart the only means we have of forefeeling that Being whom no epithet can describe, but which an ignorant crowd believes to be succumbing to the serpent Knowledge.

[FOR THE INDEX.] CONVENTIONAL CHRISTIANITY AND SELFISHNESS.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

Rev. J. T. Tucker, a contributor to the Independent, recently complained in that journal that the London Examiner, an able English literary journal, had unjustly charged that "the very kernel of conventional Christianity is selfishness," that it is "as dominant as it ever was," and that everywhere it preaches that "the whole duty of man resolves itself into this—to save his soul, to buy eternal happiness by a certain amount of service in this world." Mr. Tucker sums up the Examiner's charge by saying:—"This is its point: That the main drift of Christianity, as taught down to this time and at this time, is directly away from all true nobility of character and life, crushing all honest sense of duty, enslaving the mind to selfishness, hardening it against the persistently bad, and vitiating all right feeling toward God. . . . If his position is tenable at all, it covers this whole extent of condemnation. For in this the consenting voice of Christendom has never faltered, that to save the soul for this life and the next is the grand business of everybody who has a soul, according to our Lord's own text, which the Examiner has looked into and found rotten." Mr. Tucker reminds his readers also that "the Autocrat of the Atlantic once charged, that all of a Christian's anxiety is just to jump aboard of the life-boat himself, no matter who else sinks."

It should be observed that it is not denied in the above charge that those who thus use a selfish rule in their formal religion may be truly selfish in heart and life. It is very commonly the case that people are much better as men and women than they are as technical Christians. And this being observed, it is perfectly just to say that the idea upon which the approved and customary Christianity proceeds is one of pure selfishness—supreme regard for self.

There are but two rules in this matter, disregard of self out of regard for all souls, and disregard of all souls out of regard for self. If a man commences with concern for himself, he will not find it safe to put anybody before self. If he once gets rid of concern for self, he will think of everybody before he will of himself. The rule of ideal justice, holiness, goodness, whatever makes right character and right life, is to hope for and work for all souls. The rule of the Orthodox theory is to hope for and work for yourself. Not very long ago an editorial paragraph in the Independent said:—"Do not deny that men who trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for their own salvation, and who spend their lives in leading others into like precious faith, are evangelical Christians." "Trust for their own salvation" is the correct thing, though trust for others, and for all others before self, is the only humane and purely holy thing.

Archbishop Manning, one of the finest preachers now living, if he is a Catholic, puts it frankly in these words:—"The duty of every Christian is to labor first for the salvation of his own soul. The rational love of self is to be taken as the measure of the love of our neighbor." This is sound Orthodoxy. The last of the really great divines raised up by New England Orthodoxy was Nathaniel W. Taylor, here in New Haven, who died in 1858. None of the Puritan makers of systems have had a better sense of the demands of logic than he, and he always taught that regard for self is the first principle of all virtue, and that any other theory of virtue would consistently lead to the overthrow of Orthodoxy. If love of others is the first principle of virtue, then no man can be called to account whose love of others leads him to hope for and to believe in the salvation of all others.

The point at which the writer of this got out of Orthodoxy was in his conversion from love of self in religion to love of others without regard to self. And this conversion every Orthodox Christian needs to experience. The conviction of need that must be met in one's own soul ought to expand to a conviction of need that must be met in all souls. The allegiance to God which has set one upon seeking the kingdom of God in one's own heart, ought to expand to an allegiance sufficient to set each upon seeking to bring the kingdom of God in all hearts.

The truth is that average Christianity does not represent the spiritual and better part of man, but only represents the best side of his old Adam. Catholicism and Orthodoxy are an unregenerate Christianity, needing to be born again. The hearts which men have naturally are better than those which Orthodoxy commands them to get. You can take any company of Orthodox disciples, and any good child set in their midst or any one of them as they were before they put on Orthodoxy would represent religion better than they as Orthodox disciples represent it. And it is not only that the first principle of the Orthodoxy is bad, but putting it on does prevent the large and pure growth of the heart to no small degree, and does make selfishness of any rather decent sort seem not at all improper. If in religion you may turn your back on the mass of mankind, why not (the unconscious feeling will be) do so in common life? The charge cannot be denied that Orthodox Christianity favors selfishness.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

[From "The Bible: Is It the Word of God?" By Thomas Lamden Strange, late a Judge of the High Court of Madras. London: N. Trübner & Co. 1871." Pages 295-297, 301-303.]

PUNDIT.—The next event is the birth of Jesus. The subject is introduced in a conversation between an angel and Mary. He tells her that she is to have a son, and at this she expresses extreme wonderment, seeing that she "knew not a man." But as she was at the time affianced, or as good as married, to Joseph, this feeling of surprise is certainly out of place. The incident has the appearance of having been brought in just to allow of the promised conception of the Holy Ghost being introduced with effect.

With the miraculous birth of a being of human form, but divine origin, I am already familiar from Hindu fictions. The parentage of Jesus is derived from the Holy Ghost, the third person in the Christian Trinity. The angel speaks of the Holy Ghost to Mary as if already familiarly known to her, as he did also to Zacharias in respect of his promised son. On the other hand, you have mentioned disciples of John who had never heard that there was a Holy Ghost. When was the revelation of this person in the Trinity first made?

STUDENT.—His existence is nowhere spoken of previously to the occasions now in question.

PUNDIT.—And yet Mary takes it as a matter of course that she is to have a child by him! The fact we really have to deal with is that of a young person, accounted a virgin, being found by her husband already with child. As he was about to put her away for profligacy, it would seem she must have kept back from him the revelation made to her by the angel. Is it conceivable that she should run such risks? When her husband discovered for himself the condition she was in, he must of course have questioned her closely on the subject, and what could have been her answer? It must be presumed that then at least she must have told him of the apparition to her of the angel Gabriel, and of the consequent conception by the Holy Ghost; and it must be concluded that, if she made such a statement, he could not have accepted it, as till he got the assurance of his own dream his intention was to divorce her. And if he could not credit Mary's substantial declaration of what she had witnessed with her own senses, would a dream have sufficed to satisfy him of the chastity of his wife, and that the parent of her coming offspring was that mysterious personage the Holy Ghost, hitherto unheard of by any one?

STUDENT.—According to Matthew's narrative, Joseph, it is clear, knew nothing of the revelation made to Mary. It is stated, after speaking of his discovering the state of Mary and his design to put her away, that "while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream." Nor was a word said to him in this dream of the apparition to Mary. The silence of Mary is certainly not to be reconciled with the fact that she had received such a revelation; neither is it consistent with the divine method to suppose that such an announcement should have been made twice, and in independent form. It is commonly held by critics that there was but one such announcement, and that the two narratives are in conflict as to the circumstances under which it was made. Luke gives it as made to Mary, and Matthew as made to Joseph, neither speaking of the event told by the other.

PUNDIT.—And it is upon accounts so inconsistent and at variance that the fact of the divine generation of Jesus depends?

STUDENT.—Certainly there is nothing else to cite in proof of the divinity of his parentage, unless it be involved in the circumstances of his history and acts when on earth.

PUNDIT.—Jesus, it appears, was to occupy the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob, and yet never had that position.

STUDENT.—Assuredly he had not. The idea is a prediction remaining, in some way or other, to be fulfilled. Although Jesus gave out that his Kingdom was not of this world, he held out to his disciples that "in the regeneration" he would "sit on the throne of his glory," when they also were to sit "upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. xix, 28).

PUNDIT.—The only certainty then at present is that the prediction has not been accomplished. Jesus was to be the son of David, and that fact also is not made out.

STUDENT.—It is not. As on the father's side he came from the Holy Ghost, his connection with any human stock could only be through his mother; and here the alliance was with the tribe of Levi, not of Judah. It is through Joseph that the descent is sought to be maintained, but as he was not his father, Joseph affords no real link with David. Nor can the genealogies which would derive Joseph from David be depended on.

PUNDIT.—Is the derivation of Jesus from procreation by the Holy Ghost dwelt upon in other parts of these writings?

STUDENT.—The fact is never again adverted to. Matthew and Luke speak of it no more, and it is nowhere referred to by Mark or John. Consequently it is never imputed to Jesus that he himself asserted that particular manner of derivation, though he did at times claim a divine origin. Peter, James, and Jude were apostles, but they never mention the circumstance in their epistles; neither does Paul. Nor does it appear in the epistles and the Apocalypse which are ascribed to the apostle John.

PUNDIT.—That certainly is against the reality of the event. In what capacity was Jesus currently accepted as to his paternity?

STUDENT.—He commonly passed as of human extraction, "being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph" (Luke iii, 23). When his "gracious" utterance astonished the people, they said, "Is not this Joseph's son?" (Luke iv, 22). "Whence," they asked, "hath the man this wisdom, and these mighty works? Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? and his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things?" (Matt. xiii, 54-56; see also John i, 45; vi, 42).

PUNDIT.—His mother, Mary, at all events, could not have told his real parentage. How was it that she disclosed it not?

STUDENT.—That I cannot tell you. She had personally received the annunciation of the angel, and could witness in herself that Jesus had no human father. An angel had appeared to her on the night of the birth of Jesus, and had told her that this was the expected Christ, or Messiah. After which "a multitude of the heavenly host" had suddenly appeared, ushering in his advent with praises to God; and all this they had immediately gone and declared to Joseph and Mary, and also published it abroad. The wise men, who came with offerings to the infant, had been inspired to recognize him as the Christ. Herod, moreover, being satisfied of his pretensions to be the future King of the Jews, had exterminated the young children born at that time, so as to put an end to him also. That, nevertheless, Jesus should be currently accounted the son of Joseph, and that his mother should not have said a word to undeceive the people, and to advance her son's true pretensions, is no doubt marvellous in the extreme. But it is still more surprising that she herself retained no impression of his real character, but looked upon him apparently as an ordinary being.

Forty days after the birth of Jesus, he was taken to the temple for the fulfillment of certain rites there. On his being brought in, Simeon, an aged man, to whom it had been revealed by the Holy Ghost that he should not "see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ," at once recognized him as the hope of the world, "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of the people Israel." Anna, a prophetess, did the like. And notwithstanding the angelic assurances which they had each received that this infant had sprung from a divine stock, "Joseph and his mother," it is said, "marvelled at those things which were spoken of him." (Luke, ii, 31-33). On another occasion, when they went to the temple at the time that Jesus was twelve years of age, and had left the building, he remained behind and was found by them engaged in discussion with the doctors, or men of learning, with a degree of understanding that "astonished" all who heard him. Not recognizing his divine resources, Joseph and Mary were equally astonished with the rest. "And his mother," we are told, "said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? What ye not that I must be about my Father's business? And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them," we are informed, even after such an advertisement as this to his divine origin (ii, 41-50). On a third occasion, when Jesus was occupied in his ministry and engaged with a great multitude, "so that they could not so much as eat bread," his mother and his brethren concluded for some cause that he was "beside himself," and "went out to lay hold of him," utterly unconscious of his divinity and appointed work (Mark iii, 20, 31, 32).

PUNDIT.—There appears to me but one way of accounting for such violation of all probability, namely, that these stories are destitute of any foundation in reality. On one occasion, I observe Mary distinctly alludes to Joseph as the father. She says to Jesus, "Behold thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing."

LIBERTY AND TRUTH.

[By Rev. G. L. Walker, D. D. of New Haven, in the Beeton Congregationalist.]

An artist, sitting in his studio, and meditating on what sort of picture he will paint, is free to choose from out a hundred fancies of his brain. His picture may be grave or gay. It may be historical or imaginative. It may represent legend or prophecy. It may convey whatever lesson the painter pleases.

In a somewhat similar way it appears to be occasionally thought that the preacher of the Gospel is equally free to voluntarize the representation he makes of the religion of Christ. One would almost suppose, from language often used, that a preacher's function was rather to make a gospel than to represent a gospel; rather to arrange the terms of grace than to tell what terms God has arranged. And not unfrequently the degree of commendation bestowed upon a professed minister of Christianity is proportioned to what is called the "liberality" of his views. "He preaches," it is said, "a very liberal religion." "He is very liberal in his opinions."

A liberal religion! Liberal opinions! What "liberty" has he with religion more than with the ordering of the skies? The one as much as the other is within his control. Of one no more than the other has he any other privileges than to submit to the facts. What would be thought of the natural philosopher of whom it should be said—"He takes a liberal view of the law of gravitation," or of the mathematician, "He takes a liberal view of the operation of the Rule of Three," or of the chemist, "He is not bigoted concerning the composition of calomel?"

The language, though absurd, is not one whit less absurd when applied to the preacher of the Gospel. The duty laid on him is not to make a gospel, but to declare the Gospel. His business is not to arrange a plan of salvation; not to prescribe the duties of the Christian service; not to relax or constrain, remit or bind. His duty is simply to proclaim a method of salvation already arranged; to set forth duties already prescribed; to declare a system whose restraints or encouragements, whose penalties or rewards, antedate any human statement of them, and rest on the determination of God. And as far as possible he is to do this in its completeness. He is to slur nothing; hide nothing; exaggerate nothing. As he values his own soul and his hearers' souls, he is to remember that withholding of truth is not annihilation of truth; not to urge danger is not to make danger less. Refraining from declaring men's duties does not empty those duties of their solemn weight. The liberty, and the only liberty given him, is to discover from the Word of God what the present responsibilities and future destinies of men really are, and then to state the truth respecting them in as plain, as cogent, and as persuasive a manner as he is able. This is his duty, and it is a duty without choice.

LITTLE CARRIE'S SMART MINISTER.—Little four-year-old Carrie went with her aunt to church. The preacher was very earnest in his delivery, and she was much interested. "Mother," said she, when she came home, "I have heard such a smart minister! He stamped and pounded and made such a noise, and then he got so mad he shook his fist at the folks, and there wasn't anybody dared go up and fight him!"

A worthy Baptist of Boston, anxious to help a denominational school, agreed to leave it $100,000 at his death, if the institution would pay him the interest at six per cent. up to that event. The shrewdness of it lies in the fact that he could get his life insured for that amount for $4,000 or $5,000, leaving him a very comfortable income besides! That is, for an annual revenue of say $2,000 he would let any college insure his life for $100,000.—Seaside Oracle.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending August 3d.—T. B. Skinner, $1; Miss Mary Lapham, $1; Mrs. Frances W. Titus, $2; Allen Potter, $2; S. Rosenfeld, $1; Rev. Chas. Runk, 50 cts.; J. W. Wortman, 50 cts.; Marx Frank, $1; Jno. Saval, 50 cts.; Fred. Lukenheimer, 50 cts.; J. J. Pillsbury, $2; Cook & Rice, $3; G. W. Dauesmann, $2; O. P. Jacob, $2; Charles Ehrhart, 50 cts.; Peter Frick, $1; Adolph Franklin, $1; Dr. T. L. Davis, 50 cts.; Eugene Kappeler, $3; A. H. Doolley, 25 cts.; C. M. Kirzell, $1; Leo D. Birrona, $2; C. H. Leonard, $2; Dr. J. C. Parker, $2; W. L. Coffinbury, $2; C. Burchard, $2; Henry Spring, $1; Samuel Sears, $1; J. E. Messmore, $1; J. H. Peters, $2; Thos. Hoover, $10; Dr. Kalbenhefer, $2; J. W. Angell, $2; D. H. Sparks, $1; Wesley West, $2; Fred. Prince, $1; Fisk & Walter, $1; W. W. Webb, $1; Val. Water, $1; Thomas B. Graham, 50 cts.; Wm. Ellis, $2.12; John H. Lull, $10; Mrs. Mary Westphal, $10; S. S. Wemott, $2; D. B. Henderson, $10; Dr. M. B. Baldwin, $1; Andrew Seaman, $2; Dr. S. H. Gilbert, $2; J. S. Hooper, $2; Wm. H. Bump, $2; C. S. Hart, $2; John Lambert, $2; S. M. Leffmansville, $2; C. S. Hart, $2; Henry W. Holland, 10 cts.; Della Scarborough, 10 cts.; D. F. Schneider, $1.50; Chas. C. Hays, $1.50; James Emerson, $2; Nicholas Jovanovich, 50 cts.; F. E. Abbot, $50.00; Henry C. Badger, 10 cts.; John Stevens, 50 cts.; Israel Best, $1; J. S. Hittcock, $1; W. A. Morgan, 10 cts.; American News Co., $1.75; Thought Exchange, $2; T. H. Davis, 50 cts.; D. H. English, 50 cts.; Geo. Allen, $1.10; Wm. Hume, 10 cts.; Henry A. Griswold, 50 cts.; Samuel Willis, 50 cts.; Chas. A. Gould, $10; Theodore Hill, 50 cts.; J. P. Davis, $2; H. B. Barnard, $1; Silver City Lyceum, $2.50; U. B. Delaplaine, 50 cts.; M. J. Lower, 50 cts.; Warren Chase, $3.25; Cyrus Powers, $1; Parker Pillsbury, $3; —, $30.00.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are sent on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—THE INDEX is payable in advance. Its friends should not be offended if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tag. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—If your INDEX mail-tag is not changed within three weeks after renewing your subscription, please notify us immediately. But do not write before the expiration of that time.

N. B.—In case of any error in your mail-tag, always state the post-office at which the paper is received, and also the name just as it is now printed. Timely desired corrections.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on New York. Cheques on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the result.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

prize value, no man is better than the brutes; yet the wish to urge them by any other means than an appeal to the free intelligence of individuals, belittles the propagator and makes him a tyrant not to be endured. Practically, nothing perhaps is harder than to unite these two things, the love of liberty and the love of truth, in one strong, sweet, harmonious character; they do not necessarily clash, yet they are forces impelling in different directions, and human progress is the resultant of their composition alone. Liberty discovers truth, and truth crowns liberty; and he who loves them both with equal yet undivided ardor shows to the world how great and sublime a thing it is to be a genuine Man.

RECREATION.

This is the season for recreation. And nowhere is such a season more needed than in America. It may be questioned, however, whether it would not be better that recreation should be spread more through the whole year rather than crowded into a few weeks of summer. At present, Americans are apt to labor at their recreation. They bring to it the same nervous energy, the same hurry and push, which they bring to their business. Still, the change is beneficial. Man's nature demands diversion as well as necessitates labor. Some one, I believe, has defined man as a working animal. But he may also be called a playing animal. The working faculties, it is true, aim more directly at accomplishing the objects of human destiny. They are the levers set purposely for that end. But the playing faculties are an aid to the same achievement. They serve to ease, to refresh, to lessen the friction and smooth the movements of the working faculties. They lubricate the working machinery, and thus prevent wear and waste and disorder. What the little oil-glands are to every joint and lever and movement in the human body, that is the office of the faculty of humor in the machinery of the mind as it works out the tasks of life. Without it the mental machinery is liable to become impaired; it gets to creaking, motion become more difficult and more power is required, part runs against part unevenly, there is wabbling and waste, and finally the machinery wears out and stops before its time. Recreation, amusement, is therefore a necessary accompaniment and condition of successful labor.

It must of course be admitted that the faculty of humor differs greatly among races and nations. It seems to be largely a matter of blood, of temperament, of external surroundings. As a general rule, there is more playfulness of nature among a people living in a tropical climate than among a people who have to struggle for existence against the severe conditions of a higher latitude. It is an interesting fact, too, that the faculty for amusement seems to have developed as man has progressed in civilization. The primitive savage is not such a humorous being as his civilized descendants. Still, in spite of all differences of race, temperament, civilization and surroundings, the love of amusement, the faculty to provide enjoyment for the mere sake of enjoyment, asserts itself as an inherent demand of human nature; and it is a demand the legitimacy of which must be recognized in personal culture and in social organization.

If we ask for the philosophy of such a demand, ask why man should seek to do some things for no other satisfaction, and which have in themselves no other use, than simply the enjoyment of doing them, is there any better answer than that already stated,—namely, that through this capacity for amusement there comes refreshing and strengthening, not merely resting but recreation, exhilaration, and ultimate increase of power, to the other and higher faculties of our natures? What at first sight may seem a waste of force and time is therefore really saving. The expenditure returns in solid income. Nature, we may be sure, knows her own aim. She begins, as it were, the journey of life with story and laughter, that our muscles may not discover the length and tediousness of the way, and may be in better tune for the serious tasks that are expected of them.

Amusement stands to the grave business of life precisely as beauty in the outer world stands to mere use and service. Forms may be useful that have no comeliness nor grace; yet a higher art is reached when beauty mingles with use, as in all the grander and finer processes and forms of Nature it does. Looking at utility merely, or at utility in its lowest phase, we might say that it would be better for man—better in the sense of more convenient—if wood should grow in hewn timbers and boards ready for building his house or in sticks suitably shaped for his fire. But who for that object would lose the exquisite beauty of a living tree or the grand majesty of a forest? And even utility has higher aspects than any which can be measured by carpenter's rule or reckoned in arithmetical figures. Who can estimate all the material and mental needs of man which in subtle ways the vital processes of a growing tree supply to his organism? The very inspiration and expiration of its foliage affects the atmosphere he breathes, affects the fertility and products of the soil by which his organism is sustained and his brain is made the instrument of thought. So of the relation between the capacity for amusement and the capacity for work. A higher utility than we can see by a casual, external observation binds the two together. The relationship extends to the profoundest depths of character. It penetrates the finest work of man's intellect, and touches the secret springs of his virtue. Physical recreation is often moral regeneration. Nor is it too much to say that we have not learned the truest experiences of religion until we have discovered that service and satisfaction, worship and joyousness, are one; until we can say that we "will be glad in the Lord," and actually feel in our own being the gladness of communion between the superabounding life that flows through Nature and that pulsates in the mental and moral consciousness of humanity.

W. J. P.

FREE RELIGION AND POSITIVISM.

We are anxious that the free religious movement should not take decided color from any well-defined layers of opinion; particularly that it should not be associated too closely with Positivism, if Positivism in its so-called religious aspect be a well-defined stratum of opinion; and therefore we have been a little disturbed by the occasional intimation of alliance or sympathy between the two. Few people understand what Positivism precisely is; fewer yet understand, or pretend to understand, or find it possible even with considerable honest pains-taking to understand, what the "Religion of Humanity" as grounded on Positivism is or implies. The English Positivist who accepts the French apostle's church finds fault, we believe, with Comte's hierarchy, cultus, and symbolism, as patterned on the Roman Catholic system, which was the religion of France and the only kind of religious organization the Frenchman recognized. Being protestant, he was disposed to drop the hierarchical elements, and, while supporting worship, to make it simple, impressive and sentimental, the chief stress being laid on social organization. The American Positivist,—we speak of him and his opinions with great submission, not having succeeded in obtaining a clear account of his doctrines,—being at once protestant and republican, modifies the original conception of the "religion" still further. In his system the aristocratic features disappear and the religious peculiarity is reduced to a scarcely discernible point. On the last anniversary of Comte's birth-day, the little company of the faithful broke a crust in honor of their high priest, that being their chief sacrament or supper of communion; but they hold no religious services in the usual sense of the word; they do not meet for worship, they institute and meditate no culture of the sentiments or the imagination, but confine themselves to the discussion of social questions. They can hardly be called "religious," even in the largest acceptance of the phrase; at least this is the result of our inquiries and observations. Indeed it is not easy to understand why they should speak at all of the "Religion of Humanity." In Comte's scheme that expression stood for a thing, and a very solid and majestic thing, imposing and touching, fully furnished with dogma, ceremony, calendar and ritual. But in the new world all this glory fades away, and what remains save the symbolical breaking of the bread-crust, we know not.

There seem, however, to be points in which all the schools of the Positive philosophy agree; and they are points with which the "Free Religionists," so far as we know them, are not at all in sympathy. These are the total neglect of psychology and the total discouragement of the democratic idea. The "Free Religionists" are for the most part graduates from the school of Transcendentalism, the very opposite of Positivism; and those of them who have left that school and adopted that of modern psychology, as represented in its several aspects by men like Mill, Bain, and Spencer, still make great account of the contents of the mind. Whether they suppose the moral sentiments and ideas to have been originally implanted or gradually acquired, matters little; they accept them as facts, and study their meaning by studying the mind in which they are contained, or which they constitute. It does not occur to them to regard psychology as a branch of physiology, and therefore they cannot consistently call themselves Positivists. They are not; they are separated from Positivism of every degree by a wide and deep gulf; the religion of humanity they profess rests on wholly different foundations. The Positive philosophy offers little to the religious sentiment as technically understood; it transplants aspiration, reverence, wonder, worship, to a soil which, if not absolutely ungenial to them, cannot be said to produce them spontaneously; whereas the doctrine of Evolution, as stated by its best teachers, supplies the imagination with all it needs. Now the doctrines of Evolution and of Positivism are at deadly war. In this respect, therefore, Free Religion and Positivism are not friends, nor are they likely to be.

In their social attitude they are no more amicable. Positivism starts with a dogma. It assumes that the present condition of society is one of anarchy; and the anarchy, in its view, consists in the disorder resulting from the prevalence of democratic ideas which had thrown orders, ranks, and classes into confusion, have displaced the working people, unsettled the relations between the rich and the poor, the wise and the ignorant, the strong and the weak, the unsexed woman, and reduced to a noisome marsh the fruitful field of the world. The spirit of Positivism is aristocratic; its temper is high. In democratic, even in republican institutions it has no faith; the aspirations of men and women hitherto unprivileged and disfranchised after new opportunities, privileges and rights, it countenances as wild and demoralizing; the abolition of prescriptive authorities it countenances in form, but disapproves in essence; it abolishes the hierarchy of priests, but establishes a hierarchy of philosophers; it displaces a pope by a savant.

With all this the genius of Free Religion is in strongest opposition; the distinctions of orders, classes, and ranks are hateful to it; it exists, in fact, in order to do away with them; its spirit is humane, liberal, democratic; it will have no priest, no dogma, no fixed rule of organization; it demands as a first principle that persons and minds shall fall into natural relations according to the law of development. It will not anticipate results, or force conclusions, or arrest tendencies. Its purpose is to keep the way open, to prevent premature combination, to hold theories in distrust and doctrinaires at arm's length. When it speaks of the "Religion of Humanity," it means the religion that humanity is tending towards and trying to realize,—humanity's natural religion, not a manufactured system to which men must submit at the bidding of a "philosopher," but a spontaneous and full expression of the sentiments that are born of their experience, and the faiths that cheer their hearts. We may be very certain that all appearances of sympathy between the Positivist and the "Free Religionist" are illusory; the resemblance is superficial and nominal, the antagonism is deep and ineradicable. Romanism itself is not further off; for Romanism does not more absolutely reject the bond of liberty which joins together the friends of Free Religion than does the system to which August Comte has given his name. O. B. F.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

And last week the field was Cape Cod. I wonder whether you, Mr. Editor, ever saw it—an arm of Massachusetts bending round into the sea, starting from Plymouth Rock as from a shoulder—something like an arm, or like the largest claw of a huge lobster. I am now on Cape Ann, the opposite cape enclosing Massachusetts Bay: Cape Ann another arm, though amputated at the elbow, as the maps show.

Cape Cod was formerly a nursery of navigators. Sea captains grew there, numerous, and brave, too, as the old Norsemen. Once we had an anti-slavery convention there, held in a grove; and on Sunday, the third and last day, it was computed that seven hundred sea captains of all the various crafts, from Cunard and Collins steamers downward, were in the audience.

We broke up, as I remember, with a most frightful mob; but it was the crisis of the Southern slavery fever. And the convalescence commenced in that hour. And the cure was complete. On that spot, within a year, a "Liberty Hall" was erected; and from that hour the Cape was secure to the anti-slavery cause. An occasional spasm or wriggle of the serpent's tail told for a time how slowly such monsters die; but no harm ever came of it. Once or twice, a sea-captain engaged in Southern coast-trade attempted to carry back a fugitive slave, but it drew storms down from all the heavens about him, and peopled the sea with whales more dangerous than any Jewish Jonah ever saw.

But Cape Cod is no longer a garden of "The Tillers of the Sea." Its soil is various, literally speaking, from the sandy desert of Sahara to the fattest vineyards and gardens of Egypt. Almost surrounded by the sea, it has also many of the most beautiful little inland lakes or ponds of fresh water the world affords. I never saw any water more transparently clear or transcendently beautiful. Then there are others with a muddy bottom; and these produce myriads of pond lilies, matchless in beauty and fragrance.

Around these ponds are the cranberry meadows, the fruit of which is becoming the wealth, has indeed already become the fortune, of many enterprising cultivators, the cranberries of "The Cape" standing unrivalled in the markets of the world. Then there are farms and farmers, more miscellaneous in character, appearing all over the Cape, especially above its elbow, and seamen there are no longer, as formerly, a staple crop. Many young men have gone west: to the far west. Indeed, the captains of the largest lines of steamers between California and China and Japan emigrated from Cape Cod to the Pacific States, and there took to the sea again as naturally as ever.

But the people of Cape Cod have not forgotten their old lesson of liberty. I think in some parts the Spiritualists are carrying forward nobly the work and the warfare begun there thirty or forty years ago by the Abolitionists. Almost the first religious insurrection I ever heard of occurred there; and "Cape Cod Come-outers" was certainly among the very first reproachful epithets I ever heard applied to the most devoted friends of the slave, who left the pro-slavery churches for conscience's and the slave's sake.

Last Sunday I lectured, in the morning, in the Methodist meeting-house at East Dennis, and in the afternoon and evening at North Dennis. That the houses were open to me was not owing to Methodist liberality in either case, but to the generous aid which liberal religionists give to Methodism in which they have no faith and for which they have no respect. Without them, Methodism could not stand a day; and so once in a great while they are permitted to put a preacher of their own into the desk; the regular parson having all the year to reply to or pervert the sentiments annually, or semi-annually, thus promulgated: a bad economy, as seems to me, in disseminating liberal religious ideas.

There is among the enlightened liberals wealth enough, in the towns on the Cape above the elbow, to sustain constantly two or three such meetings as the Free Societies in Florence in this State, and Salem and Cincinnati in Ohio; and it seems to me it should be consecrated to just that purpose.

The Spiritualists, particularly in Harwich, are a working, earnest body, and their influence is felt far abroad in weakening the bonds of religious despotism and emancipating woman from intellectual, social, political and priestly proscription and tyranny. Why cannot the Free Religionists imitate their good example? P. P.

In our issue for July 20, a gentleman offered $5.00 for a bound copy of THE INDEX for 1870. Two or three responses have been received, for which we return our thanks. The first of these was promptly reported, and, as we presume it was accepted, the matter is now settled.

On our first pages will be found this week an interesting article by Mr. Conway, first sent to the Radical for publication, and very kindly forwarded by Mr. Morse to THE INDEX when that sterling magazine was obliged to discontinue. Mr. Morse has our hearty thanks for this act of good-will, and we doubt not that of our readers also.

We are continually in receipt of communications without signatures. No respectable journal will consent to publish articles of the authorship of which it is ignorant. Very rarely we deviate from this rule; but no one has a shadow of reason for offence when, as we almost invariably do, we take no notice of such communications.

Those who desire to obtain Mr. Underwood's "Plea for Materialism," of which we have no more copies for sale, will find it reprinted in the Boston Investigator for July 31. We take this opportunity of thanking its editor, Mr. Seaver, for his courtesy and honorableness in always giving due credit for whatever articles he republishes from THE INDEX. We notice this all the more because so many of our other exchanges are in the habit of borrowing without acknowledgment. It is our sincere wish that the Investigator may flourish increasingly, and that both its proprietor and its editor may be encouraged by a generous support from the friends of the liberal cause which they have so long and faithfully served.

We are exceedingly sorry to state that Mr. H. S. Stebbins, of Toledo, whose name is so familiar to the readers of THE INDEX, is obliged to relinquish his business, at least for the present. By sagacity, enterprise, and the strictest integrity, he has succeeded in building up a prosperous book and stationery trade of $75,000 a year; but he desires to dispose of it to some one who is looking for a good opening in this direction. A fire recently broke out in his premises, which was soon extinguished, the chief damage being done by the water; and the stock on hand is now selling off rapidly at reduced prices. This fire, however, occurring just after Mr. Stebbins's recovery from a serious illness, has imposed so much additional labor upon him that his health has become seriously impaired, and rest is absolutely needed; and we desire, if possible, to assist him in transferring his business into other hands, although with great regret that such a step is necessary. With this wish, we are authorized to state that he will dispose of the good-will and entire machinery of his trade to some one who will purchase simply the fixtures, consisting of safe and counters only, and about $1000 worth or less of uninjured staple stock saved from the fire. The advantages consist in stepping into a prosperous and growing business, with a freshly fitted store in one of the best locations in the city, and without the necessity of purchasing old or damaged stock. Whoever wishes to learn more of this matter will please correspond directly with Mr. Stebbins, 98 Summit street. We sincerely hope that some live man will improve this excellent opportunity, and carry on the business with the same energy and honorable dealing which have made Mr. Stebbins a universal favorite in this city.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.
N. B.—(Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

THEISM AND ATHEISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

In his lecture on "Materialism," recently published in THE INDEX, Mr. Underwood remarks that doubt carried to excess "is liable to injure the cause of philosophy by leading the mind into ridiculous absurdities, and furnishing the enemies of free inquiry and the friends of antiquated error with arguments against the authority of human reason and the utility of untrammelled investigation."

It seems to me that Mr. Underwood is needlessly adding these same "enemies of free inquiry" by accepting for himself and those who think with him the name "Atheist." I say needlessly, because it is simply impossible for any intelligent man who believes the evidence of his senses to be an atheist in the ordinary acceptation of the term. It is safe to say that every true rationalist, and indeed every man of common sense, believes in a Higher Power, that is, in a Power superior to himself. Why then incur unnecessary risk of being misrepresented and misunderstood by refusing to name that Power "God?" To be sure, the name "God" is generally understood to imply intelligence; and Mr. Underwood plainly tells us that he does not believe in an intelligent God. "What we call intelligence," he says, "implies finiteness, limitation, personality and form. . . . Shall we say there is a great Intelligence, and yet that it possesses none of the characteristics of the only kind of intelligence of which we know anything?" Still it cannot be denied that there is a fitness in the term. So far as we know, all laws and processes, together with their results, are due to intelligence. We should laugh at the idea of a beautiful work of art being produced by "force" alone, because mere force as we know it is not only insufficient for any such definite result, but is incapable of sustaining continuous motion of any kind. So when we see around us Nature's innumerable intricate and beautiful forms, we naturally, and I think justly, refer them to intelligence; because, if not that, it is something analogous to it, though infinitely superior, it must be confessed, to "any intelligence of which we know anything;" for we know of no intelligence that can comprehend, much less produce these forms.

It will be seen that I agree with Mr. Underwood that there cannot be much difference between intelligent atheism, so to speak, and simple theism. I think, however, that the latter name is far preferable, because, correctly or incorrectly, the former is generally associated in the popular mind with the belief that "everything comes by chance." And surely Mr. Underwood would not be willing to accept this as a fair abstract of his philosophy. C. E. M.

[Undoubtedly Mr. Underwood is as far as any one from believing that "everything comes by chance;" and this is not the sense in which any "Intelligent atheist" uses the word. We understand by modern "atheism" the belief that everything comes by law, and that this law is essentially unintelligent; while by modern (not Christian) "theism" we understand the belief that everything comes by law and that this law is essentially intelligent. In other words, the issue between theism and atheism turns on the question whether the "Higher Power" of which natural law is the manifestation is intelligent or unintelligent. This is no unreal issue; and we approve of the endeavor to use words with scientific exactitude, regardless of all considerations of policy or popular misapprehension. For this reason we honor Mr. Underwood for the courage and clear-headedness which lead him to state his thought in what he considers the most exact and uncompromising terms. This is precisely what we are doing with regard to the word "Christian;" and if we were inclined to the materialistic rather than to the monistic philosophy, we should hasten to take our stand at his side, casting to the winds all regard for expediency, and counting it an honor to endure the obloquy inseparable from unpopular opinions. In the meaning of the words above explained, however, Mr. Underwood is an atheist and we are a theist; while we are agreed that science must decide which of us is in the right. As lovers of liberty, we each most cordially concede to the other the right of unfettered thought and speech; and, as lovers of truth, we each exercise this right in advocating what we each believe to be the truth. Our correspondent, therefore, will see that, although we quite agree with him in regarding the "Higher Power" of the universe as intelligent, and as consequently to be properly designated by the name "God," we agree with Mr. Underwood as to the propriety of designating this "Higher Power" by some other name, when regarded as unintelligent. So long as theist and atheist are animated by mutual respect and good will, we believe that this precision in the use of words will conduce to the ultimate discovery of truth and the highest welfare of mankind.—Ed.]

MEDIUMISM.

MR. EDITOR:—

That is a very serious charge preferred against the Free Religious movement by Dr. J. T. Blakely in your issue of July 6th. This writer avers that Free Religion is utterly powerless in providing for the great, the transcendent want of humanity.

Had he said that Free Religion did not provide for man's factitious wants, the statement would be true. The Religion of Humanity teaches that what man most needs is the love of Virtue (Goodness, Justice, and Truth) for its own sake. In the love of virtue man's highest good consists, and the enjoyment of this goodness is the highest joy; and this joy is better than faith in any form of mediumism.

It is plainly manifest that this writer, when he objects to "faith" in Christianity as a power for supplying "the great want," knocks from under his own feet the foundation on which he wishes to have Mr. Abbot and all Free Religionists rely! The Church, says this writer, requires "faith," but Spiritualism is "knowledge" of man's future destiny!

Let us see. The motive power of Spiritualism is faith in certain mystical phenomena. The Bible is powerless without faith, and so are all the phenomena of modern mediumism. Dr. Blakely witnesses a variety of these phenomena, and it is to these he refers when he says—"the Spiritualist knows." And what does the Spiritualist know of man's condition after death, any more than the Methodist or any other Christian who sings:—

"We know, by faith we know!"

As to the mystic phenomena of mediumism, all men know who have witnessed them; but as to the inferences drawn from these phenomena, they are not knowledge. And these phenomena amount to nothing without "faith." The whole of them may be included in the term "mystic rap," which I have witnessed in all its phases, in my own family and elsewhere, for more than twenty-two years. But I can not say that their occurrence has given me any real knowledge of man's condition after death. And as to "faith," the Free Religious movement says:—"Believe what you find to be the truth." In this respect it is head and shoulders above Spiritualism, which declares that you must have "faith" that the physical and human mediumistic phenomena you witness are produced by some one who has departed this life; or, failing in this "faith," you cannot be a Spiritualist, nor can your "greatest want be met."

In this respect, therefore, Spiritualism is on a par with Christianity; for, both these being forms of mediumship, assumed between God or the dead and the living, they both create factitious wants, but such wants as can be satisfied only by "faith." Faith is necessary because mediumistic revelations cannot be authenticated. An invisibility cannot be cross-questioned, and hence is incompetent to testify in respect to its sex or personal identity. I repeat, faith in mystical phenomena is the motive power of modern Spiritualism. Nor can it be considered any credit to Christianity to relieve the human mind by faith from a needless fear which Christianity itself had previously created. And so it is in the case of Spiritualism. The mystic rap, which has never explained itself nor demonstrated either by whom or how it is made, purely by its mysteriousness creates a factitious want in the mind, the want to which Dr. Blakely refers, and a want that Spiritualism itself is "utterly powerless to satisfy" except by "faith." I do not suppose the time can be very near when Science will undertake to investigate mysticisms or matters of mere "faith," which cannot come within range of human knowledge. The organs of wonder once excited to excess, this rap demands "faith," without which it is nothing but a rap. Moreover, modern mediumism not only demands faith in this rap which is mystical, but it has monopolized all the nervous phenomena peculiar to religious "revivals," panics, mental epidemics, and pathetism. All these nervous phenomena, now occurring in mediumism, are attributed to departed spirits; and you must believe this or you cannot be a Spiritualist or perfectly happy! To have your "greatest want" satisfied, you must believe these nervous phenomena to be produced, not by laws and forces inhering in the human mind, but by remote personages from another world! And this is the kind of "faith" yielded to this modern form of mediumism, and without which that "aching void within" respecting man's condition after death can never be filled!

With the mystic rap I have been familiar from the beginning in 1848; and while I admit the hypothesis as to its origin by invisible intelligences, I do not build theories upon mystical phenomena. This rap evinces nothing beyond clairvoyance and force. It is odd, enigmatical, and irregular, while faith in its occurrence is the motive power of that movement the appropriate name of which is mediumism; but upon no form of mediumship can humanity be considered dependent for what it most needs.

In these remarks I have no fault to find with the mystic rap, any more than I have with the fall of a meteor from the sky. It is sporadic in its occurrence, as the earthquake is, while mediumism is a mental epidemic, as really so as a Methodist "revival" and the spasmodic phenomena of camp-meetings. Now is there any other connection except by "faith," which can be shown between sporadic phenomena and modern mediumism. But modern mediumship certainly has this advantage over Christianity; for, while the alleged miracles of the latter ceased nearly two thousand years ago, the miracles of the former are of daily occurrence. And it is, indeed, much to be regretted that but too often, when witnessing this rap, man forgets that he is himself the greatest miracle, and a greater cannot be found in any form of mysticism.

But in saying this I may add that modern mediumism deserves well of humanity. For, while it has been successfully fighting and showing up all the ancient forms of mediumship assumed between God and man, it has "fallen into line" with all the progressive tendencies of the age; and I fully approve of the liberal manner in which Mr. Abbot has treated the subject in the columns of this paper.

Modern mediumism owes its existence to human "faith," and it is a human movement, as really as Methodism or Christianity; and as it is humanitarian in its tendencies, the editor has never assailed it. On the contrary, in this aspect of the case, all the friends of the Free Religious movement bid it God-speed. They have thrown the arms of their fellowship wide open to all Spiritualists, and all are made welcome to its ranks, without regard to their "faith" respecting matters that appertain to alleged messages from another world.

LA ROY SUNDERLAND.

QUINCY, Mass., July 12, 1872.

MATERIALISTIC SPIRITUALISM.

MOHAWK, N. Y., July 17, 1872.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—My only apology for writing you is this: THE INDEX supplies just the mental pabulum adapted to my needs, and I take great pleasure in distributing copies thereof among those who have never seen it but are prepared to appreciate its contents. I have taken great interest in the discussion of the merits and demerits of Spiritualism in its columns, and am sincerely grateful for the candor and kindness exhibited; for I am perforce a Spiritualist, yet very sorry that its advocates are not with their facts upon your attitude of culture and development. Mr. B. F. Underwood's "Plea for Materialism" is precisely my philosophy; only my materialism is instructed by incontestable facts that this mortal body is but a chrysalis, and that a finer, more etherialized matter bears its motor, or is borne by it, through a less limited, more satisfactory sphere of existence, retaining its individual identity. Is it incredible that a spirit form too subtle for the general sight may escape from the grosser form, as the butterfly leaves its chrysalis, and thus complete the material existence of the human race—still subject to all the laws and principles that Mr. Underwood advances in his "Plea?" Prof. Tyndall's failures, as related in his "Science and Spirits" (vide INDEX of June 15), prove just as much as though a score of people were relating, to a man seeing for the first time, that the colorless atmosphere could be made to disclose the most brilliant tints and shades by a proper adjustment of clouds and sunshine; and he should insist that, whenever and wherever there were clouds and sunshine, the rainbow ought to appear, or their statement be falsified. Now I have witnessed in the presence of a girl of twelve years (a most unwilling psychic) the moving of a heavy piano to the middle of the room and back again without visible contact. And the claim made for itself, by tipping with no hands touching it, was, that it was acted upon by a friend of mine that no one present but myself knew, whom I then supposed to be living, but afterwards found had died at the time indicated by the piano. At the same time an entire failure of the phenomena ensued upon admitting certain others to the room, although the child was offered the most tempting rewards. I cannot tell just the requisite conditions for a brilliant view of the rainbow; neither can I tell why the psychic forces of some individuals are inimical to spirit control; yet I believe the "conditions" are equally absolute and equally subject to intelligible explanation, when the science of each is thoroughly mastered. It is to be regretted that, when once we, as Spiritualists, have witnessed phenomena that it is impossible to doubt, we are so enthusiastic as to believe too much, and demand too much of others. Especially should we never be betrayed into impatience and discourtesy. Yet it is not surprising that such should be the case, when the contempt and calumny that has rendered us over-sensitive is taken into consideration. I am glad the higher life has been proved to me, since it relieves me of the great fear that you, brother Abbot, might be cut short in the glorious work you are doing, and none found to take your place; for now should you die, I know your work would still be done.

Mrs. M. A. C.

DEACONS AND MAYORS.

BOSTON, June 21, 1872.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

As usual THE INDEX comes with its words of thought, and sharp, challenging sentences. Would I could do more! But now is not just the time to solicit subscribers; the autumn is better.

I had rather an amusing conversation with a deacon of one of the Unitarian churches here. He told me that "Theodore Parker did more harm than all the Christian ministers in the next five hundred years could do good"—a splendid tribute to our friend's ability! Let us see if we cannot help increase the "harm" in our small way.

I see by the morning papers that the Mayor has refused to sign the ordinance in favor of opening the Public Library on Sunday. The principal reason he gives is that a certain legal gentleman says it will be unlawful, and that, until the law is annulled by the Legislature, it would not be right. How about certain other laws in regard to swearing, riding, etc., on week days or Sundays? The law of man is set above the law of God, and above the desire for the uplifting of the race. Poor Boston! The chains still hang round its court house and city council, as they did in the days of slavery; but the spirit of freedom is not dead, and will yet conquer. Wishing you all success, I remain

Very truly yours,

FRANK S. BILLINGS.

A. J. DAVIS ON CHRISTIANITY.

I have just observed a sentence from A. J. Davis (Great Harmonia, Vol. III, p. 222) which I think you will agree with and perhaps publish. It shows what his sentiments were when twenty-four years of age; and he thus expressed them before the phrase "Free Religion" had been coined:—

"The laws of the land are superior to the jurisdictional methods of popular theology. Our best institutions and modes of government, our republicanism and general charity, are founded not on the infallible teaching of any religious chieftain, but upon good wholesome maxims, such as have been derived from the moral aphorisms of Confucius, Lycurgus, Jesus, and Dr. Franklin. The Christian system as a system has not improved the heart and the life of man. It is the best idol in the world for the weak and the morally debilitated to look up to and devoutly worship; but, considered as a system, it is absolutely detrimental to the progress and happiness of humanity."

It is evident to me that a mind that could thus see so clearly and comprehensively the moral and religious status of humanity was not then in the turmoil and dust of secular pursuits, but was in a high position, what Davis calls the superior condition, which is certainly "outside of Christianity."

A. E. G.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 17, 1872.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I am not willing to close this scrawl without telling you something about the good work in Zionsville, Ind.

I succeeded in getting THE INDEX into the hands of a few friends of the cause, and directing the attention of others to the "glad tidings" which the tracts contain; and by united efforts we managed to storm the "Citadel." The Methodist Church seems to sustain the greatest damage, for its members are laboring earnestly with their children, while the minister hugs THE INDEX into the pulpit, and devotes the principal part of his hour to pointing out the dangerous absurdities of its contents. These demonstrations, together with numerous discussions on the streets, are causing liberal investigation.

"The world moves."

Yours for truth, J. S. BYERS, M. D.

RITUALISM DEFINED.—Sydney Smith's definition of Puseyism, now Ritualism, is always good. Here it is:—

"A system of posture and imposture, of circumflexion and genuflexion, of bowings to the east and courtesies to the west, with any amount of man-millinery and other tom-fooleries."

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of The Index, and states the "proposable conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition).

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Sixty copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. PROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies, Five Cents; Twelve copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at The Index Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL
FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.
S. H. MORSE
128-14
25 Broomfield St., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,

ARCHITECTS,

78 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[130-181]

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX,
Toledo, Ohio.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH
FAMILY AND DAY SCHOOL.

87 W. Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

MRS. C. E. NOURSE will re-open her School for YOUNG LADIES and CHILDREN, Monday, Sept. 23. Her address during the summer will be No. 23 Derne St., Boston, and from Sept. 1 as above. [135-143.]

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word.") "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by O. B. Prothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. E. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New York, N. Y.
ASA K. BUTTS, Boston, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, Toledo, O.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, " "
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONE, " "
EDWARD HISSLELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

D. R. LOCKE,	Toledo,	O.,	Twenty Shares,	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER,	"	"	Fifteen	1,500
C. CONE,	"	"	"	1,500
EDWARD HISSLELL,	"	"	"	1,500
F. E. ABBOT,	"	"	Forty	4,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY,	"	"	Ten	1,000
GUIDO MARX,	"	"	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON,	"	"	"	1,000
E. C. GARNETT,	"	"	"	1,000
H. E. HOWE,	"	"	Three	300
W. C. FISK,	"	"	"	300
M. R. RITCHIE,	"	"	"	300
V. KEEN,	"	"	"	300
ALANSON WOOD,	"	"	"	300
WILLIAM KRAUS,	"	"	Five	500
J. G. HOLWAY,	"	"	One	100
JOS. E. MANN,	"	"	"	100
C. AUGARD,	"	"	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS,	New York,	N. Y.,	Thirty	3,000
T. W. HIGGINSON,	New Bedford,	B. I.,	Two	200
ALEX. COCHRAN,	Franklin,	Pa.,	Five	500
GEO. HOADLEY,	Cincinnati,	O.,	Two	200
MISS A. HALL,	Delaware,	"	One	100
G. N. JENNINGS,	Northampton, Mass.,	"	"	100
J. SUDGEMAN,	Tonica,	Ill.,	"	100
CARL POST,	Palmerville,	O.,	"	100
HENRY MILLER,	Monroe,	Mich.,	Three	300
L. R. SUNDERS,	Sacramento,	Cal.,	Five	500
L. W. WHITING,	Guincy,	Mass.,	One	100
LOUIS BURTON,	Boston,	"	"	100
J. E. SUTTON,	Croydon,	N. H.,	"	100
SAM. T. DUNN,	Olaiba,	Kan.,	"	100
J. M. HADLEY,	"	"	"	100
S. L. HILL,	Florence,	Mass.,	Two	200
W. H. SPENCER,	Haverhill,	"	Two	200
JOS. F. BRADSETT,	Boston,	"	"	200
S. W. WEA,	Ind.,	"	"	200
FRANK PRATHER,	Boston,	Mass.,	Five	500
E. F. DINGMORE,	Wellsville,	Kan.,	One	100
J. T. DICKINSON,	New York,	N. Y.,	Two	200
W. J. POTTER,	Middlefield,	Cal.,	Fourteen	1,400
G. C. GLATTE,	New Bedford, Mass.,	"	Three	300
W. C. GATTE,	Kendallville,	Ind.,	"	300
MISS M. C. PARKER,	Boston,	Mass.,	One	100
MRS. S. EMMERSON,	Dover,	N. H.,	"	100
W. H. DOWNS,	Birmingham, Ct.,	"	"	100
B. B. SMITH,	Lansing,	Mich.,	"	100
R. B. SMITH,	Warren,	Pa.,	"	100
W. C. RUSSELL,	Illas,	N. Y.,	"	100
W. CLARKE,	Toledo,	O.,	Three	300
C. L. SMITH,	"	"	One	100
J. N. LYMAN,	"	"	Twenty	2,000
L. G. FELLOH,	Cincinnati,	"	One	100
A. POLSON,	Monroe Centre,	"	"	100
L. O. BARR,	Boston,	Mass.,	Three	300
S. E. STEWELL,	Colebrook,	Conn.,	One	100
EDWIN WRIGHT,	Boston,	Mass.,	Five	500
E. B. WARD,	Detroit,	Mich.,	Twenty	2,000
A. D. WILK,	Dayton,	O.,	One	100
S. S. BOKER,	Keokuk,	Iowa,	"	100
WM. JONES,	Peekskill,	N. Y.,	"	100
S. H. DARR,	Oakaloosa,	Iowa,	"	100
J. H. YORK,	Dover,	N. H.,	"	100
JOS. HAYES,	"	"	"	100
G. P. POLSON,	"	"	"	100
"A FRIEND,"	"	"	"	100
MRS. H. E. PARKINS,	"	"	Two	200
O. WILLIAM GREEN,	Boston,	Mass.,	One	100
"A FRIEND,"	Orange,	N. J.,	"	100
D. B. STEINMAN,	Lowell,	Mass.,	"	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTIAN,	Stratford,	Conn.,	"	100
O. W. FARGOT,	Kelly's Island, O.,	"	Two	200
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	"	One	100
MRS. LUCRETIA MOTT,	"	"	"	100
MISS M. A. WRIGHT,	Jersey City, N. J.,	"	"	100
A. S. BROWN,	Worcester, Mass.,	"	"	100
EDWIN BROWN,	"	"	"	100
R. P. HOLLOWELL,	Boston,	"	"	100
BENJ. RODMAN,	New Bedford,	Mass.,	Five	500
H. B. CLARKE,	"	"	Three	300
FRANK J. SCOTT,	Toledo,	O.,	Six	600
M. L. HOLBROOK,	Houlton,	Me.,	One	100
W. H. BOUGHTON,	New York, N. Y.,	"	"	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON,	"	"	"	100
E. G. BURNETT,	Webster, Mass.,	"	Two	200
J. E. FOLLETT,	Winona, Minn.,	"	One	100
JOS. WARRICK,	Newton, N. J.,	"	"	100
T. M. LAMB,	Franklin, Pa.,	"	"	100
W. H. DYKE,	Worcester, Mass.,	"	"	100
W. H. SPALDING,	Prairie du Chien, Wis.,	"	"	100
LOUIS BILBOES,	Duluth, Minn.,	"	"	100
LEWIS KURTZ,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	"	Two	200
SAM'L WARRICK,	Augusta, Kan.,	"	One	100
W. L. RATH,	La Fayette, N. J.,	"	"	100
W. EMERSON,	Amesbury, Mass.,	"	"	100
C. H. HOBBS,	Boston, N. H.,	"	Two	200
MISS L. THOMSON,	Dover,	"	One	100
BENJ. HOLLOWELL,	Sandy Spring, Md.,	"	"	100
MRS. M. R. VAN RENSSELAER,	N. Y. City,	"	"	100
R. B. STONE,	Warren, Penn.,	"	"	100
WM. ROTCH,	Fall River, Mass.,	"	Two	200
MRS. A. J. WHITAKER,	New Bedford, Mass.,	"	Five	500
C. H. ROPER,	Kerhonkson, N. Y.,	"	One	100
MRS. E. D. FRANKLIN,	Boston Highlands, Mass.,	"	Two	200
SAS. BONALL,	Boston, N. Y.,	"	One	100
G. H. BRUGG,	Salem, O.,	"	"	100
J. T. CLARKSON,	Amesbury, Mass.,	"	Two	200
C. W. NEWTON,	Castleton, Ill.,	"	One	100
HENRY ELIOT,	Toledo, O.,	"	Two	200
OTTO KLEIN,	"	"	One	100
H. G. NEUBERT,	"	"	Two	200
A. BUREKI,	"	"	One	100
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.,	Detroit, Mich.,	"	Thirty	3,000
T. K. PEAR,	O. Toledo, O.,	"	Thirty	3,000
	Westminster, Ct.,	"	Two	200
				$50,000

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. PROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of New Bedford, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. BALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Bristol, England.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $2.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 88, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 10

SECOND SERIES.....No. 21 to No. 30

Either Series, 50 Cents; Both, 80 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIFFLE,
[28-28] 19 PINE STREET, BOSTON.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 20 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 300 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

Guns for the People.

Breach-Loading Double Guns, $40 to $500. Double-Barrel Shot-Guns $5 to $250. Single Guns, $3 to $20. Breach-loading and Repeating Rifles, $20 to $100. Revolvers $5 to $25. Pistols, 75c. to $5. SEND STAMP FOR PRICE-LIST TO GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, P. O. Box 177, Pittsburgh, Pa.

N. B.—Army Guns, Revolvers, etc., bought or traded for. [187-18700]

HALL'S

MAGIC SHADE FIXTURES.

An ingenious arrangement by which a Shade may be rolled down from the top, or raised from the bottom of the Window, or both, as may be desired; thus securing PERFECT VENTILATION, GOOD LIGHT, and at the same time COMPLETE PRIVACY in the room.

They are an admirable and cheap substitute for inside Blinds.

Are easily attached to Shades now in use. Are especially adapted for Office and Store Windows.

For sale by dealers in shades generally.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

CHICAGO CURTAIN FIXTURE COMPANY.

101 WEST LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

[18747]

THE EXAMINER.—A limited number of Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 will be sent postpaid—the four numbers for 60 cents. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 for 40 cents. Nos. 1 and 2 for 30 cents. No. 1 for 10 cents. What remains of full sets are reserved for binding. The Examiner says:—"The boldest heretic of today." The Independent says:—"The most pronounced radical in the land." The Chicago Post says:—"Equal to the utterances of Theodore Parker." Address THE EXAMINER, Winnetka, Ill., where the numbers for sale remain. [186-187]

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, AUGUST 17, 1872.

WHOLE No. 138.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS, BROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WENTWORTH HODGKINSON, WILLIAM J. PUTTER, RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOSSET (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

(For THE INDEX.)

Self-made Men and Society-made Men:

OR,

MEN WITH CONSCIENCE AND MEN WITHOUT.

A LECTURE BY PARKER PILLSBURY, DELIVERED IN TOLEDO, APRIL 2, 1872.

The human faculties are seen one by one in different persons to be susceptible of almost any degree of improvement. But no one person has ever yet been greatly distinguished in all directions.

Some seem born to mechanics; others to music, painting, sculpture, or the grosser arts. Some learn languages; others history or philosophy, and become proficient in what is called general literature—are literary men and women.

A very few are poets, though not many, because mere rhymes are not necessarily poetry, any more than the jingle of sleigh-bells is a symphony of Beethoven, or Mozart's Requiem.

Some seem born of the sea, navigators, as Christopher Columbus, Sebastian Cabot, and Captain Cook.

Then we have explorers on land, like Dr. Livingstone in Africa, the romance of whose adventures makes him seem almost a myth to his own day and generation.

The same sectarianism of genius pervades the whole domain of natural history and science. In the departments of the field, some grow grains, grasses, and the grosser products, while others delight only in fruits and flowers.

Botany also begins in these somewhere, extending not only from the "Cedar of Lebanon to the weeds by the wall," but to the lichens on the tallest mountain-tops and to the mosses in the deepest seas, whose bewildering beauties challenge the admiration of the world and defy all art to imitate them.

Then we have geologists and mineralogists, zoologists and ornithologists; and the entomologist also, frequently the most industrious, enthusiastic, and often fussiest of all, if not wisest of all, with his swarms of bees, beetles, bugs and butterflies.

"He from all realms together brings
Proboscis, antlers, legs and wings;
For the one alone he spends his pains;
His life consumes, his treasure drains;
And leaves his children, when he dies,
The richest legacy of flies!"

Some men have what the poet called "a microscopic eye," and go stark mad over the unseen wonders in earth, air and water—the animalcule in one single drop of which are found to be 500,000,000, or half the number of human population on this globe!

No wonder the boys and girls are debating in the lyceum, which is the greatest wonder, the telescope or microscope?

But the material or muscular development of men, and sometimes of women, is not less remarkable than the mental, though unfortunately in the same fragmentary manner.

The Jews had a Samson; the Greeks a Hercules; but we have real men, not fabulous, who are probably stronger than any that Judaea or Greece ever grew.

I have seen a man lift easily twelve hundred and sixty pounds, and a woman more than half that weight; though neither was large, and both were invalids when they entered the "Lifting Cure," as the institution is now called. But no farmer could afford to hire that strong man, nor farmer's wife the strong woman; because they knew nothing of ordinary domestic work. And so their great strength was practically as valueless as the bugs' legs and wings in the cabinet of the entomologist.

Some men are fleet to run and powerful to wrestle. These were important at the Olympic games, into which none could enter as combatant without a preparatory training which must continue ten months.

Men have been trained to run so as to outstrip the swiftest horse. None have finer, fleetest horses than the Turks; but a daring stranger once challenged the Sultan to put against him the swiftest horse in his empire. He told the emperor,—"I can run the best horse to death." The emperor was angry, and ordered the trial, telling the stranger,—"If you kill the horse, it is well; if not, you shall be killed on the field." He pursued the horse until he dropped down dead. So, instead of killing him, the emperor offered him a high post in his service.

There can be no doubt that the best opera-dancers might thus train themselves, both women and men, did they practise racing instead of dancing, so as to distance any animal in stable or pasture.

Perhaps the training of the prize-fighter, barbarous as is his business, is among the most interesting and instructive, too, of all human experiences. And would he continue his wise habits as to diet, exercise, bathing, sleeping, and all, and quit his fighting, one might fear he would never die and the world be rid of him. Or perhaps, should he so far experience religion as to abandon his brutal business, he need not die any more than other men.

We are accustomed to consider all such as distinguish themselves in any of the departments of knowledge, skill, or power, as prodigies—prodigies or wonders, just in proportion as in one particular department they excel everybody else. And yet, almost always, such are as far below the general average of men and women, when you take their whole character into account, as their one distinguishing quality seems to lift them above it.

Alexander Pope, describing Lord Bacon, said:

"If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shined,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind!"

Bacon had many parts; was great on almost all sides of him; but there was perhaps good ground for the cutting pasquinade of the poet.

How, then, about those who have only one distinguishing gift or accomplishment? They may not be "mean" after Bacon's sort. But no one attainment, in whatever perfection, can go very far to make a really great man or woman, unless in such degenerate or, rather, unripe times as these.

The most wonderful musical prodigy known to this generation was born a slave. But had Blind Tom been born with good sight, who believes he would ever have been permitted to grow the wonder he has become! As Nature has her revenges for the wrongs we do, so she is rich in recompenses for the wrongs we suffer. Tom was blind, and therefore nearly useless as a slave; as slave child, wholly so. He was left, therefore, to himself; and Nature taught him how to see with his ears, and he saw and still sees more, a thousand times, with his ears, than do most men, of whatever color and however born, with eyes and ears both. That is, he discerns more, takes in more, carries more, comprehends more of Nature and her work, than do thousands, millions, of men who have every sense in what is called perfection. For he does at least one thing well. He has cultivated the science of sound without a master, only a mistress—"dame Nature," sometimes called—and he can perform music in an almost superhuman manner. Two hundred years ago, in New England, he would have been hung as a wizard, and one hundred, perhaps, in Old England. Martin Luther would have had him hung for being blind. He said that "the crazed, the blind and the dumb were possessed with devils," and that "physicians who treated those ailments as arising from natural causes were fools and did not know the mighty power of the devil."

But Blind Tom can do one thing well. How many cannot do one thing well!

The Abolitionists used to be taunted as "men of one idea," by those generally, however, I think, to whom one good idea would have more than doubled their stock of knowledge. Nature teaches the best lessons in economy as well as expenditure. While she aids those who improve the qualities they have, she will revoke those which are unused or become useless.

The fishes in the pitch-dark lakes of the Mammoth Cave have no eyes. Eyes would be useless there. And yet they sprang from races that had eyes once. Themselves have spots, or scars, denoting where eyes once were. So also they are without color; like all vegetation which shoots forth in dark cellars where is sufficient warmth. Color, were it possible in the dark, would be but beauty wasted, thrown away.

As Nature is inexhaustible and bounteous in her resources, so she is equally wise in all her expenditure; wasting nothing, making nothing in vain. Most of us are born with at least one gift—talent, it is called in Scripture. It may be improved or wasted. Taken in time and under favorable conditions, it may make us eminent, though it do not make us great. Almost all our great men are great only on one side. But the poor world has to accept them, because they are her best.

But do you not see that the very fact that we so distinguish, even venerate, our fragmentary champions, is one of the most melancholy reflections which ever saddened the human soul!

A stupid fellow away down East laid a wager that he could walk more miles in less hours than was common—perhaps more than anybody had ever walked before, though probably not. New England, New York, the West, were all aroused. Betting ran wild and high. Politics were for the hour postponed. The press panted for breath and frothed at the mouth. Saints half forgot their prayers. Sinners waxed worse and worse, and the spirit of religious revival was grieved away.

The walking began at Portland, Maine, to terminate in Chicago. Every place was on tiptoe—ecstasies through which it led. Even real estate was ready to rise and stand uncovered while it passed. Telegraphs talked themselves hoarse telling the progress. The people ran down from the hills to the corners to see the foot-sore hero come. Wherever he took in beer and biscuit, there was a general holiday. In one instance, at least, the governor of a state and the best citizens of the Capital attended the pageant, and with a full band of music escorted it two miles out of the city when it departed.

The excitement continued until the foolish fellow broke down and failed in his undertaking.

I called him a "foolish fellow;" but what were they who went wild with excitement over his undertaking? Such tom-foolery had not been seen since the days of Sam Patch and his jumps down from high places.

But such are our heroes. Whoever can do one thing, no matter what that thing,—leap down Genesee Falls, walk a thousand miles in a thousand hours, fight hardest and longest in the prize ring, perform miraculous music like Blind Tom, pick up bugs and butterflies with the entomologist or rocks with the geologist, study birds with Audubon or beasts with Buffon or Cuvier, or hunt hemispheres with Sebastian Cabot and Christopher Columbus,—such have been the gaze of all gazers and gapers, if not the admired and worshipped of all the more worthy and devout, who of us knows how long?

To be sure, the fame of one class of these prodigies is less lasting than that of another. But the shorter in duration, the more brilliant while it lasts. Whatever excites most at the moment, is most prized. It may be mourning or music, a prize-ring fight, a walking match of a thousand miles in a thousand hours, or Sam Patch jumping down Genesee Falls. If it only excite, stir up the sensibilities, make saints and sinners forget themselves—neither class appearing to like or able to endure much self-contemplation and observation—if it only, like alcohol, intoxicate, even momentarily, almost the entire community is drowned in the debauch.

Like the fabled river that crazed all who drank it, never more to recover their reason, so these excitements madden all alike who approach them.

Now observe, it is not the thing done which so stirs the muddy blood of the multitude, but because so few can do it. It is scarcity of the article which gives the value. Were all rocks gold-nuggets, and all crystals Koh-i-noor diamonds, rich dirt would be worth more, pound for pound, than gold nuggets or Golconda diamonds. Could every man lift a ton, if we could walk a thousand miles in a thousand hours, or leap down a cataract a hundred feet and not break our necks, who would care? Or what would be the use? But because only one in a nation can, he is allowed to bite everybody else into a crazy madness of wonder and admiration! And governors of states, gentlemen and gentlewomen of cities, and town and country people, betting men and sporting men, the press, the pulpit—all catch the general plague.

But we have also prodigies in science, art, and literature as well. To me, these are a prophecy and promise of what will be one day universal, and no prodigy or wonder. We have all the same faculties as they, only needing development; and some day that will come.

The greatest wonder of all, to-day, would be, one who was Columbus and Copernicus, Audubon, Buffon, Washington, Humboldt, Michael Angelo, and Mozart, all in one; with woman so ennobled as to be her equal part in the product of such.

The fable of Minerva, born directly from the brain of Jupiter, reads beautifully in Grecian poem. But there must be first the Jupiter before the Minerva.

We cannot look for the noble woman without also a noble breed of men.

Probably millions are born, even in Christendom, without one previous thought, or desire, or preparation on the part of either parent, especially the father. And in the houses of multitudes of the most wealthy and cultivated, no guests are so unwelcome as those that should be the pride, the joy, the heavenly sunshine of every human home. In our largest cities, some of the very largest fortunes are known to be made by the deliberate murder of unborn innocents!

For every prodigy born there will be numbers of corresponding failures, as to one millionaire there will be a forest of underbrush poverty, men, women, children, all around.

No parents could desire any prodigy born to them, unless one that should be great on all or nearly all sides.

We are rapidly improving the breeds of all domesticated animals, and the varieties throughout the vegetable world. We know the way to do all that. Nor is it any infidelity, immodesty or immorality, to do that, nor to talk about it—all about it. Nature leads or points the way, and we follow, and observe her laws. When shall we act thus wisely in human production or generation? Never, I fear, while society is permitted to mould the mental and moral as well as the material structure of us, as at present. How truly does society beget the most of us in its own image and likeness! Literally is this more true than most of you suppose.

Not long since, I saw a child in New York, only a year old, whose little hands were almost constantly flying, when she was awake, with the exact motion of one dealing cards at a whist table. One moment she would be still and appear in deep thought. Then away her hands would fly, until the imagined pack was dealt around. Whose daughter was that? Whose image and likeness did she bear?

True, she had a natural father and mother. The father kept a drinking and gambling saloon, and the mother was partner or participator in the business almost to the day of the child's birth.

No wonder they sent the incipient gambler and probable drunkard, perhaps even something worse, away to be nursed. I did not hear that the father drank at all, nor that the mother was a vile woman; only that she assisted her husband at the bar and at the tables. So is society begotten and born.

Who is it that sings of—"the ruling passion strong in death?" It is strong, too, in birth. It is the whole atmosphere of society which impregnates and nourishes and influences the mothers of the generations. It is not half enough that the natural father and mother of the child are healthy in body, virtuous in soul and spirit. An old poet truly says:—

"More creatures wait on man Than he takes notice of."

and it is as true before his birth as ever afterward. Still, too much cannot be said or thought on the obligations of the natural parents to their offspring, from the moment when the relation is first proposed to themselves.

I hold confidently to the freedom of the human will, as a doctrine in metaphysics. But I also know that, long before the child takes possession of his freedom, as an intelligent being, his whole soul and constitution may be perverted, distorted, deformed, so as, after all, to grow a monster more than man, and die a devil in middle life.

I saw a boy four years old, the son of a delicate, pale, sensitive little mother and a drunken, brutal father. The child had all the appearance in movement, speech, and, most disgusting of all, in the dull, rolling, but glassy gaze of the eyes, of a man just staggering but not deadly drunk.

Imagine, if you can (I surely cannot tell you), what must have been the loathsome, sickening horror that mother felt, when, late at night, in such condition, her mated monster came from bar-room to bed-room and planted that perfect image of his besotted self to be harvested in due time in the poor semi-brute being I chanced to see a few years afterwards, but surely would not wish to see again.

But I suppose that sorrowing mother still looks upon—perhaps still loves him. And, though I know not that he ever tasted anything stronger than his mother's milk, he will have to go babbling, slaving and staggering down to his grave, life-long drunk on the midnight debauch of a besotted being whom the world and the dictionary call his father! Shall we talk of such men as made in the image of God? Then what is God? Or shall we say, and tell our children, that God made such? To kill a human being, who would dare? And yet to give a life, might be worse.

But there are spiritual and religious prodigies and monsters as well as material and mental. Such were many of the hermits and monks of the Middle Ages. And they were held, too, in the highest veneration by the people, as are our prodigies by the stupidity of the nineteenth century. Such, too, were the Stylites in the third and fourth centuries among the Christians. And such the Hindu Fakirs even to the present time, if missionary reports tell truly; some of them taking a position painful to the body and retaining it for years. Formerly it was held for many years, sometimes with both hands uplifted and so kept till their finger-nails grew down to the elbows in a most loathsome manner.

St. Simeon, a fourth and fifth century religious fanatic, who was called "Stylites" because he passed his life standing or kneeling on the top of a column, was revered almost as a god. He chose the tops of columns only because he was so far up towards heaven. He commenced with one only eighteen feet high. But as his religious fervor increased, he selected higher and higher, until at last he died, at nearly seventy years old, on the top of a column sixty feet high, and was taken down by the hands of bishops, conveyed to Antioch by an escort of six thousand soldiers; and buried with almost imperial honors!

Sam Patch, you remember, was worshipped thirty years ago by the gaping multitude, because he could leap and live from even higher pillars than that whereon at last St. Simeon died, after forty-seven years had been given to such religious madness, of no mortal, earthly use to himself, mankind, or God.

Such, it seems to me, is most of what passes for religion to-day, throughout Christendom. It is frenzy. It is spiritual fever. It is more than fanaticism. It does not require culture of body or mind, heart or spirit; it does not admit of it, even, among the people; is not required of the priests—generally is not found among them.

Among the people, culture is shield and protection against its attacks. Vaccinate with virtuous self-culture of mind and body, and such religious pestilence, such spiritual small-pox, will never harm you. Include your children in such precaution, and it shall be as the blood of the Paschal Lamb sprinkled on the door-posts of the tents of Israel. The destroying angel shall pass over you and commit his ravages only on the first-born of the darkened Egyptians.

You know as well as I that the popular religion prevails most where ignorance most abounds. I heard a man say that the better the Methodist, the worse the man, and that the more ignorant the man, the better the Methodist. If true, I know no reason for limiting the remark to the Methodists. The devoutest people I ever saw were the freedmen in South Carolina. They held the longest prayer-meetings, prayed and sung the loudest, danced the sacred dances with the most sweating intensity; and yet the best white men I saw there assured me they would go home from those very meetings as still as cold corpses, stealing anything on which they could lay their holy or unholy hands.

I attended some of their meetings. No preacher or exhorter knew one alphabet from another or one letter of any alphabet. And yet one held a hymn-book and pretended to read a hymn. As he proceeded, I observed that he did not read, but only recite, and from various hymns in many metres. Then the choir rose and sung without books, and without regard, as to time, tune or measure, to what was pretended to be read.

All the worship was equally wild and unmeaning.

But I have seen, and so have many of you, in the white churches of the North and the West, worship in which all sense was sacrificed to sound in the same way; and all truth and right to empty and worthless, if not loathsome or ridiculous performances, without a word spoken which was adapted to make a single man, woman or child wiser, better, healthier or happier, from beginning to end. All the dogmas and doctrines peculiar to the sects, about God, Word of God, Christ, Trinity, atonement, salvation, damnation, were assumed, not proved. Not half of the time do ministers themselves know that these, as held in common by nearly all evangelical sects, never were proved, never will be, and do not admit of proof. And so the religious babble of the North is really as senseless as that in the log tabernacles and temples of the poor freedmen in the pine woods of the South.

Out of such may grow religious monsters, pious prodigies, St. Simeon Stylites. But only to top of columns, like St. Simeon, can mind or manhood ever climb out of such mental and spiritual degradation and debasement.

Somewhere in this lecture I deplored the fact that we worship so foolishly the worthless prodigies which our corrupt society casts, like caruncles and goitre, to the surface in the shape of acrobats, walkers, jumpers, and prize-ring fighters. But how can we sufficiently lament the fact that the forms of religion I am now describing are increasing in number and power as never before, since the planting of the first English colonies in Jamestown and Plymouth? You need to read no religious journals to learn that. Your daily and weekly newspapers chronicle revivals and additions to churches, increase in number of churches, and the vast additional cost of meeting-houses as compared with former years; the constant inflow of endowments to sectarian religious institutions of every kind from the princely fortunes of decaying and departing wealthy men, and women, too. Many do not wait to die, before they endow and rear colleges and theological seminaries, baptizing them, of course, with becoming modesty, by their own names. And however profane, profligate, dishonest, ambitious, avaricious, or adulterous the donors may be, their names must never after be spoken, neither by the priest so favored nor their purblind discipleship but with the profoundest respect and veneration.

Many of the costliest cathedrals and churches in Europe were builded or begun, or sometimes enlarged or completed, by the most rapacious robbers and murderers who were ever suffered to prey upon man or woman-kind; the church agreeing to sing requiems, say prayers, and burn candles for so many years, sometimes, I think, for all time, that the blood and lust-stained souls of such wretches might pass quickly through purgatory, escape perdition altogether and rest ever after in the peace of paradise. Precisely the same principle already begins to rule under the fostering care and culture of a more than sixty thousand priesthood power in our American States. We are already at the mercy of the organized Protestant and Catholic religion of the land. Not only is the Bible a text-book in most of the academies and colleges as well as theological seminaries, but it is read and enforced, as well as explained, in far the larger part of the more common and primary schools. Not only the Bible is there but the sectarian religious tract is to be introduced. It has been in some instances already, and sent by the teacher to parents in the hands of their own children. And not only is the school thus to be subjugated to pulpit supremacy, but the press has already more than half surrendered.

And that is why, as I told you a moment ago, you can read all the most important religious intelligence in your secular newspapers, while the lectures, public discussions, and other proceedings of the more liberal bodies of the people, are as far as possible kept out of sight. A fact too important to be wholly overlooked. If in all this we do not see the need of a virtuous self-culture and development, high as heaven above that of the churches, Catholic or Protestant, or any single sect of either, then surely our eyes are to very little purpose.

Look at the general public conscience of the nation. As in war all was fair which brought victory, so in politics all is honorable which brings success. In war, "My country, right or wrong;" in peace, "My party, right or wrong!" Men in masses, in parties, multiply their power to do evil and think to divide the responsibility and do away the guilt; and thus individual conscience is chloroformed to sleep.

Our political parties to-day remind me of one of Humboldt's sketches of travels in the tropics. A company of ten were on horseback charging through a dark jungle in Guiana. Two black men were in advance, but suddenly one came galloping back, and calling to the company to come on and see a pile of serpents. As the party advanced, the pile appeared several feet high, resembling somewhat a stack of muskets with bayonets. One of the men said it was the way they heaped themselves up against attack from a terrible crocodile which sometimes devours them. At twenty paces the horses refused to advance nearer. On a sudden a tremulous agitation seemed to seize the whole frightful, living, coiling, twisting mass. Horrible hissing issued from it as from a thousand tongues. Thousands of serpents rolled spirally on each other, coiling and counter-coiling in most frightful manner. Out from the centre shot multitudes of horrid, bayonet-like heads, a dread array of flashing eyes and envenomed, forked tongues. Humboldt owns he was one of the first to fall back. But as he saw the formidable phalanx did not quit its post, but chose to fight it out on that line, he rode round about it and found that, though it might open no battle, it was all ready for a fight on every side alike, if attacked.

So men mass themselves in bodies, in parties; magnetizing each particular man as with the power of all, but presuming to hide personal responsibility under the damnable doctrine of organic sin. The whole serpent-coil poured its venom into the tooth which dealt the fatal stroke; but the body of that individual serpent was twisted down into the seamy mass and was so far secure!

And that is what is meant by organic sin. That is what is intended and all that can be perpetrated, when men frame iniquity into a law and injustice into a constitution. Some individual men wanted to strike their envenomed fangs into the black man's freedom. To do so they coiled the whole government and nation into a more hideous pyramid than ever was seen in all the dreary swamps and jungles of the torrid zones. Forthwith slavery was made legal and constitutional, with all its paraphernalia of horrors, cruelties and crimes. And under legal sanction and constitutional support and religious sanctification, that system went on and on, until—well, you do not need to be told how long; nor what thunderbolts, red with uncommon wrath, at last struck it down forever!

Nor can it be said that the government was more implicated in the guilt than was the church itself. While the government provided for and protected the African slave-trade, the church prayed for its prosperity with other commerce. When Virginia wanted the foreign traffic repealed, she having gone largely into the slave-breeding business, then Congress made the foreign trade piracy, punishable with death; but onward swept the domestic slave-trade between Virginia and the cotton and sugar-growing States, fraught in some respects with cruelties and abominations unknown even to the terrors of the middle passage. But the church rebuked no more the one than it had before the other. True, what before was lawful commerce, by which even New England made fabulous fortunes, now was piracy under act of Congress. But the home brokerage in blood and bones, bodies and souls of the children of those just brought from Africa, sold into the same interminable, hopeless bondage, was constitutional, lawful, Christian commerce, to be protected, prayed for as the other was before. And thus by act of Congress, virtue, piety, patriotism are but questions of ship and shore. At sea the trade was piracy, punishable by the halter. On land, for opposing it, John Brown was the pirate, and actually got hung. But no son of Adam nor of Belial was ever hung for the African slave-trade, though it went on in all its terrors, till slavery itself was really no more, and only one ever afterwards!

How Daniel Webster and Judge McLean denounced slavery! But in the very spirit of demons they could catch and return the runaway slave.

So the great American Missionary Board. Because slavery was legal, constitutional, they called its service only an "organic sin;" and though more loathsome than Astarte of Syria, more obscene than the Mylitta of Babylon, they bowed their reverend heads low in its temples at home, and sent their missionaries to rear its bloody altars in pagan lands, whereon to offer the human holocausts. In the late rebellion, our fiercest foes were the slave-holding Indians of those mission churches.

Thus by both government and religion has the public conscience become demoralized and debauched until, as in war all was fair which won victories, so now in peace all is right and righteous which preserves and prolongs the rule of a party; whatever party may be in power, in State or nation.

As I have intimated already, our religion requires no culture, no intellect; our politics no character, no integrity. Intelligent men make but uncertain saints; upright men the poorest politicians, or none at all.

The people do not vote, more than cards or dice play. The people are voted! They are waiting to-day in shuddering uncertainty as to whom their masters will set over them for their next President. Those masters will meet in convention are long to name him; and then woe to him who dares rebel against the nomination!

Perhaps you thought my figure, borrowed from Baron Humboldt, of the pyramid of serpents too terrific to be just. Those who have been already bitten do not think so, and they are many, and become more and more with every passing administration.

But not farther removed from the realm of conscience and the Higher Law are our politics than are our laws and rules of trade. Men are not ashamed to exult in their good bargains, no matter how they make them; provided their success in swindling does not bring them to the penitentiary. I hear small traders complain constantly that it is so hard to do an honest, honorable business, and live by it. My first lesson on leaving home and entering into business was that I must be a knave. My employer told me I must seem to trade on the customers' terms, but to make them my own in the weight and measure. I contracted with him at low wages. But, with his money constantly in my pocket, I might by the very lesson he gave me, have made them higher. Had I long remained with him, perhaps I might have done so. Why not?

I never hear of a dishonest clerk or salesman, detected in defrauding his employer and punished, without remembering my early temptation by him who, even for his own selfish interest, should have watched over my youthful morals as a guardian angel. Parents do not know how near to a pyramid of serpents they send their sons when they trust them, not in Washington, not in the New York custom house, but in the common marts of trade and commerce.

And then to see how cruelly unjust a man can become in driving bargains with the unfortunate. A man once shewed me through an extensive foundry property he had bought, as he himself said, for a song. I asked him how it happened? "O," he said, "the owner became involved; he owed money, times were dull, the property was mortgaged and was losing in value by coming to need repairs, and so it had to be sold at auction; there were few or no bidders, and so I got it at my own price." And he seemed as glad and innocent as though, in digging an honest well in his garden, he had found a mine of gold. I asked him, did you do as you would be done by in like misfortune? "As to that," he said, "in our business we don't do as we would be done by, but as we expect to be done by."

It seems to me that whoever trades on that principle should never boast of his bargains, as did he. The curse of both Christ and Confucius should rest on such morals and its successes, forever and ever.

But the popular religious teaching is just as false here as everywhere else. What are churches and priesthods worth that are only silent or open participants in all the popular vices and crimes? Nor are the churches doing any more for the future than they have done for the past. Capital, massed, monopolized, rules the nation, riding, grinding labor of both men and women to death.

It rules through the Republican party because that party is now in power. But it rules the party also, from the President upward or downward. It could and would rule through the Democratic party equally well. Capital massed moves the politicians; they move the people. The President is but the highest trump in the political pack, in gaming parlance. With forty thousand offices in his gift, he must be first secured; the game is then easily played. The President is seldom any more than a mediocrity man. In forty years, not one has rated higher than that. More than one or two have been far below that, morally and mentally, Whig and Democrat alike.

Combined capital has but to speak, and it is done. Not honest, industrious capital, in factories and foundries, mills and machine shops, in agriculture and legitimate trade and commerce. But capital coiled into huge rings here again just like Humboldt's ring or pyramid of serpents—railroad rings, land monopolies, government contract rings in army, navy, Indian contracts; every possible thing, making our national capital a damning disgrace to the civilization of the nineteenth century. A State election occurring anywhere east of the Rocky Mountains during a session of Congress is of more interest to that body than all the legitimate business of the nation entrusted to their hands. And members of both houses in large numbers leave their places, no matter how serious the moment, to mingle and act in election affairs, in which they have no more business, and wherein they have no more real right, than they would have in Canada or the South American republics or the kingdom of heaven. And you are more fortunate than are your fellow-citizens of most of the States, if you can by simply applying to your Congressmen procure their attention and services in the transaction of any affairs, however legitimate to their position as your elected servants, unless you approach them with bribe or bonus, as humiliating to your own manhood as it is dishonorable to theirs. Now does the popular religion see any of these things? Does the pulpit know them? Expose them? Rebuke them?

Capital knows how to control the keepers of the sacred as well as the secular keys. It tosses fat bones about in donations to churches, to theological and other sectarian seminaries, and even the barking of the dumb dogs of the pulpit is silenced, or turned angrily on those who do see and would gladly warn the people of their peril. A few sectarian churches so builded, and collegiate and theological institutions so endowed, have already half extinguished the fires of hell! Indeed they seem now only to be kept blazing for Free Religionists, Free Thinkers, Spiritualists and such other progressive souls as dare the power of the popular faiths, and defy the authority of the pulpit.

Some of you surrender our early struggles against the Southern slave power, and who were first and most fearless against it. To-day, the church and priesthood claim the credit and glory for the victory obtained at last over it. But the heroes of that sublime strife were not of the popular church, and still less of the pulpit. Most of such as were self-exiled, or excommunicated, for the sake of the slave and for their own greater freedom. Society-made-men as they were, they had to unmake and remake themselves. Born of institutions, they had to be born again. Created without conscience, by creeds and constitutions, customs and laws of society, they needed and had a new creation to fit them for their high calling. Then on one side, were the society-made men, respectable, popular, powerful, rich, and reputedly religious. Arrayed against them were the few self-made men and women, without name, fame, worldly wealth, honor or distinction—literally, as the predecessors of them eighteen hundred years ago, "the sect everywhere spoken against!" But they too, like those early heroes, had their commission and honorable discharge, not without persecution and blood.

Where shall we look to-day among the young men and women for those worthy to wear the mantle so many have cast off, as already they have ascended to their reward and rest? Who of you are training sons and daughters for work and warfare so divine? For let us ever remember, the redemption of the race is not yet secured. The age of the true hero is but just begun. Society begets most of us in its own image and likeness. And it is not without reason that Republicans tell you that, if the Democracy should once more obtain the governmental whip and rein, they would soon lash us back again to the horrors of the human auction-block, whipping-post and red-hot branding-iron of chattel slavery. Happy indeed, and almost miraculous, if we are saved by our present type of Republicanism from such a fate.

Society, trade, politics and the popular religion make most of us what we are; beget us in their own image and likeness. Marvel not, therefore, that I say unto you, "Ye must be born again." So were not only the early abolitionists, but the true saints and heroes in every age.

Protestantism charges that Catholicism keeps the people in ignorance. But so also does it. All knowledge, beyond the power of pulpit control, is always proscribed, no more by Catholic than by Protestant priesthods. The Bible in the schools is one grand brake on the wheels of the chariot of progress and salvation. No science, literature, philosophy, must be permitted to transcend its rude, barbarous, and often monstrous teachings. For thus saith our trine Divinity, Politics, Trade and Religion, the one in three and three in one, to us and to our children; and woes are ever to those who dare disobey the voice.

But that high behest is, must be, disregarded by all who would tread in the steps of the world's saviors and redeemers. A higher, holier moral and spiritual culture must be ours than the world accepts, or its church imparts, or our names cannot be registered either among martyrs or heroes, and salvation must come through other hands than ours.

To whoever or whatever, in church or state, sets any human enactment above the Higher Law of liberty, love and justice, we must say, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" and pronounce the words with a divine emphasis. So did the true and faithful in all the past. And so will the true, the faithful, the brave, in all time to come. And the sure years, faithful also to their trust, will register them in their scrolls immortal; in letters more enduring than the stars in the heavenly firmament, to shine on in beauty and glory, forever and ever.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending August 10th.—John H. Beldge, $4; James Philo, $1; Alan Greenwell, $4; C. A. Garley, $20; Henry Lantz, $1; F. E. Baker, 50 cts.; Dr. K. Kohler, $1; C. H. Lake, $1; Wm. Campbell, $2.25; L. M. Haines, 25 cts.; Dr. Jopping, 25 cts.; Ira Snodgrass, 25 cts.; James Monroe, $2; Juliet Porter, 10 cts.; Geo. Brown, $2.50; Henry Buxer, 50 cts.; Esther C. Wileman, $1; C. E. Serrill, $1; Peter Newcomer, 80 cts.; J. N. Osburn, 10 cts.; Sam. E. Rogers, 60 cts.; H. O. Higginson, 30 cts.; T. R. Davis, 25 cts.; Geo. Lynn, $1.50; A. F. Bailey, $1; Dr. S. Sexton, $2; John Steves, $1; Wm. C. Head, 50 cts.; Wm. Chestnut, $2.25; David Wright, 10 cts.; J. P. Whipple, $3.45; S. P. Libby, 60 cts.; Geo. Lewis, $2; E. S. Ridd, 50 cts.; J. T. Bailey, 25 cts.; Edward Wallis, $1; Eliza A. Babbitt, $1; J. D. Zimmerman, $1; D. S. Cadwallader, $1.25; W. E. Lukens, 50 cts.; L. B. Harrison, 40 cts.; E. S. Elder, $1; L. C. Childs, $2; R. Wilkin, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipts unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Tax (INDEX) is payable in advance. Its friends should not be offended if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tags. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—If your INDEX mail-tag is not changed within three weeks after renewing your subscription, please notify us immediately. But do not write before the expiration of that time.

N. B.—In case of any error to your mail-tag, always state the post-office at which the paper is received, and also the name just as it is now printed. Then state any desired corrections.

question of "wisdom and love" is wholly outside of this bare and simple matter of fact, which can only be determined by observation and experiment. This the Independent subsequently in effect admits, saying that "it may be said that this proposition only contemplates an investigation of the physical effects of prayer, and that these physical effects can without difficulty be noted and recorded." Exactly so. "But the answer is," continues the Independent, "that, if physical benefits come through prayer, they must come by a proper adjustment of the spiritual relations, etc., etc." The writer can hardly be so inept as to regard this as an "answer" to the objection he had just stated. The question is—do any "physical benefits" come through prayers for the sick? It is no "answer" to say that, if they come, they must come in this way, or that way, or some other way. Do they come at all? Meet that question manfully by an appeal to certified and classified human experience, without kicking up a dust about the how or the why.

Such is the manner in which one of the fairest propositions ever submitted to the Christian world has been met by some of the leading lights of modern Christianity. If they had anything of old-time faith in the efficacy of prayer, they would have picked up with solemn joy the glove of challenge cast at their feet, sure that the God of prayer would confound their enemies and give to his faithful ones an annihilating victory. But no—they now dodge, and evade, and excuse themselves. We do not accuse them of any deliberate hypocrisy—far from it; but the hurried, elusive and tortuous manner in which they reply to so plain and honest a proposition shows that THEY DARE NOT MEET THE TEST PROPOSED. Yes, gentlemen of the Spectator and Independent and Christian Weekly—you do not in your hearts believe that, if Prof. Tyndall's experiment were fairly tried, the death-rate in the favored ward would be at all diminished by the offered prayers. YOU HAVE YOURSELVES LOST FAITH IN THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER—at least for physical benefits; and you deceive yourselves by nervously covering even from your own eyes this scepticism of which you are uneasily half-conscious. You have not, with all your Orthodoxy, escaped the spirit of the age; and instead of rushing into the arena with the flush of assured victory on your brows, you halt, and turn pale, and strive to sink away. If your Bible is true, the "prayer of faith shall save the sick." Do you dare to test that promise under the watchful gaze of science? No! You dare not! And so you, one and all, strive to break the promise in its substance, while you save it to the ear. Even you, too, are catching something of that faith in everlasting and unchanging LAW which shuts the mouth of babyish petition, but nerves the mind and will with manly strength. Even you, too, are secretly ashamed of the superstitions that blurred the eyes of your ancestors, and turn your faces forward to the rising sun of knowledge. Trust that new and greening light, and no longer fear lest the dawn of universal intelligence may prove the beginning of spiritual darkness!

Plymouth Church announces that it is going to have a "Silver Wedding." A whole week in October is to be devoted to celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the settlement of Mr. Beecher, who, conjecturally, is the blushing bride, the Plymouth having gallantly captured her young affections, proposed, and been accepted. We find anew how dangerous it is to argue from the rest of mankind to the "Beecher family;" for we certainly thought that Mr. Beecher was of the masculine persuasion. It is true that the clerical profession generally makes women of men; but we supposed that Mr. Beecher was an exception to the rule. Being in some confusion of mind, however, as to who is who, we are probably safe in offering our congratulations to "Mr. and Mrs. Plymouth Church."

We are indebted to the National Committee of Liberal Republicans for a copy of a lithographic life-size portrait of Horace Greeley. The likeness is none the worse for being considerably idealized.

THE STUDY OF FASHION.

The landlord of the great hotel says that the rush of people to Europe has taken away many of his best patrons. But the hotel is crowded on this crowning week of the fashionable season, and with people who think themselves as good as the best. They are the élite of New York and Philadelphia, the richest and dressiest. Their selectness is undoubted. They rose indignant a few days ago, when a well known broker of Wall street, tainted with African blood, presented himself at the office and asked for a room. The clamor at his impudence was so loud that the landlord was driven to the well-worn diplomatic lie that his house was full,—and the dark-skinned broker was taught the old distinction between society and business. The German Jews who affect the springs as suggesting Schwabach and the Badens, are kept at arms' length by these figures of porcelain, and are driven to haunts of their own at the foot of the aristocratic hill on which the Pavilion stands. No doubt these are the people. You see that in the size of their trunks, the variety and richness of their costumes, and the monumental character of their head-dresses. They have come hither not to drink the water, nor yet to bathe in sulphur,—deferring those unsavory delights to a future period, and to more spacious lakes,—but to rest and recreate themselves after the fatigues of our arduous city life. They are here to amuse themselves.

Now amusement is of many kinds. There is rambling in the woods, walking over the hills, exploring the fields for flowers; there are pleasant games of skill or wit, reading of charming books, beneath the trees or on the piazza; there is music, instrumental and vocal; there is bright conversation, the merry tale, the play of pretty games, the dance. But entertainment like this these high-bred beings disdain. The village contains not even the tiniest, the most occasional book shop, and the trunks have all they can do to act as wardrobes; hence literature never intrudes. I have seen but one book, and that was in no fashionable hands. Of music there is none. Not once has the piano been finely touched; not once has a sweet or manly voice interpreted worthy music. An old lady, whose grandchildren play about the town, daily delights an audience by chirping the simple ballads of the last generation, reminding one of the days when ladies cultivated the art of song; but no young voice responds with the deeper notes of our own composers. I had almost forgotten that on Sunday evenings, when the customary chatter is considered improper, a large vocal company take their revenge on the prohibition by doing cruel execution on Orthodoxy, subjecting its choicest doctrines to the torture of the psalm tune, imploring the Savior to come to them and perform various humble offices in tones nicely calculated from their unearthliness to keep him away. Clearly he is not expected to accept such extraordinary invitations. The same voices the night before had put themselves in tune for singing hymns of praise by shouting towards midnight the old college chorus, "Come, landlord, fill the flowing bowl,"—and on lemonade! the landlord, a sensible man, having closed his bar long before that hour.

These felicitous people are very religious. The Episcopal chapel, a tasteful edifice of stone, built and furnished in the main by Unitarians, as a union chapel, but now surrendered, as usual, to the prayer-book and surplice, stands on a neighboring hill, overlooking the village and snubbing the plain wooden school-house on the opposite side of the street. To this chapel the elect repair in modest vestments, some on foot and some in carriages, talking of the last dance as they go and come. Not to attend chapel is a frightful thing. The depth of the Episcopacy marks the height of fashion.

The chief entertainment is dancing, and the only dance is the German, that unaccountable importation from foreign lands which gives the largest license to rudeness, exclusiveness and impudence, and leave the scantiest room for elegance. The German is always in place and season,—out of doors and in-doors, in the morning and at night, on the green and on the carpet; it is danced all over the region; they go five miles off to dance it; they repair to neighboring houses in order to get the sensation of another locality. When the dancing is done, the representatives of the future aristocracy amuse the ladies by playing leap-frog, while the ladies amuse the gentlemen by displaying their toilettes.

Such are the occupations and entertainments of the elect of the polite world at the most fashionable hotel, of the most fashionable watering place, at the most fashionable season. The contemplation of it is not exalting or agreeable. But let us be just; all is more tolerable than Puritanism might think. There is in external things taste and propriety. There is little noise, very little vulgarity, no coarseness. There is deficiency enough, but not much fault. The small secluded bar is not inordinately patronized; there is little wine drunk at table, perhaps because it is too costly and too bad. There is grace, amiability, cheerfulness, but there seems to be little beside. A painful impression of inanity is made by the life around. These fine people, with their jewelry and laces, and trailing silks and richly folding velvets, and exquisitely contrasted colors and low, softly modulated voices are barbarians, as Matthew Arnold calls the aristocracy of England, and not cultivated barbarians, either; sleek, not polished; tame, not gentle; with plenty of outward attractiveness, but a melancholy lack of intellectual acquirement. From the like of these our hope will never come. And if the like of these are to be the product of more generally diffused wealth and luxury, the outlook into the future is not brilliant. The reformer stands on the threshold of his work. That mankind has not got very far along we know; is it going further?—is the question. There are those who call ours an age of decadence. Life at a great watering place might lead one to think so. Let us hope more and more in the people; let us ply our radicalism; let us drill deep into the rock the old building stands on. The deliciousness of pure spring water cannot be appreciated by those that drink it all the time. If the radicals who fancy that their work is about done, that liberal ideas require no special support, that fine thoughts are common-place now, and the cause of truth will take care of itself, will spend a few days at Sharon or Saratoga, they will be cured of their notions, and will go home to work harder than ever for that law of perfect liberty which enables men to grapple freely with their spiritual foes.

O. B. F.

SPEAK OUT!

In speaking of the future state, Mr. Beecher once said:—"And I tell you truly that, if I were to be convinced to-morrow that this is all a fiction, that there is no existence beyond the grave, I would seal my lips with the seven seals of the Apocalypse which no man could break open, before I would whisper the guilty disclosure." We appreciate and commend that spirit of tender regard for others' feelings expressed in this language. The man must be heartless who is not pained by the pain he gives another. If he is sensitive and sympathetic, he will shrink from tearing away the veil of unwelcome truth from the eyes of men. It is often the most painful duty which falls to the preacher to speak the truth as he sees it. He is constantly tempted to keep the seal of silence upon it, or to cover it with his hand as he passes by, as the Lord is said to have covered the face of Moses that he might not see the full, clear countenance of Jehovah. But we believe it is the duty of the preacher to speak out, though he shall sometimes flesh the blade of his criticism in the breast of the most cherished and comforting faiths. Desperate diseases often require desperate remedies. After this confession of the Plymouth Church preacher, who can be certain that he is not keeping from his people any number of unpleasant truths? It is true, he does not appear to regard it unorthodox to "whisper the guilty disclosure" of errors in the creed of his fathers; but who can tell, if every seal were off his lips, what would be the free and honest language of his heart?

It is, of course, incumbent upon no man to make public his undigested thoughts and incipient doubts, nor is it his duty, standing on the house top, to trumpet his most positive convictions into the ear of an unwilling public; but would it not become the duty of any man who professes to be a public teacher, like Mr. Beecher, not merely to "whisper," but to proclaim in his pulpit any important truth of which he was thoroughly convinced? We think so, even were that conclusion a disbelief in a future life. It is our duty to respect the feelings of people, but it is our higher duty to respect the demands of truth. Love and loyalty to man is a noble quality of mind, but love of truth and eternal loyalty to it is, in our opinion, a nobler sentiment and the very last developed. If preachers are to keep the position of public teachers and retain or deserve the respect of the scientific world, they must be willing to look facts squarely in the face without blinking, and then to preach what they believe without fear or favor. If they take the ground that the toleration of amiable errors is better than the publication of unwelcome truths, that comforting delusions are preferable to facts which look hard and ugly-faced, or that the revealing of any truth about the future life may be a "guilty disclosure," then they have lost their hold on the brain of the nation, and will soon, we trust, lose their power over its heart. The saddest infidelity we ever see is this want of faith in the supreme value of truth as such, and this corresponding faith in and following after error as the friend and savior of man. What scepticism is more discouraging and lamentable than that which so frequently questions the veracity of preachers? Was this ever asked of a lecturer on science—"Does he believe what he teaches?" But how often is it asked concerning the preacher—"Does he really believe what he preaches?" People suspect that he does not preach just what he believes, but has convictions of which he does not wish to "whisper the guilty disclosure."

In order to win the confidence of people, the preacher must convince them that he does not wear any seal of secret, esoteric doctrines over his mouth,—that he dares to and does "speak out" like men of science. In respect to frankness of speech, preachers may learn a lesson of materialists. We are not ourselves convinced of the truth of the materialistic hypothesis. We require a good deal more than a hint to believe that mind can be caught in pincers or bottled up in alcohol or expressed in equivalents of bread and meat; but when any one is convinced of the truth of materialistic doctrines, like Mr. Underwood, we honor him for coming out manfully and publishing his conclusions with his reasons for them, as he has done. He tells us frankly that he believes "the mind must lose its identity at death, and the forces of the body, including that which we call mental, must return to the great reservoir of force to re-appear in other modes." Whether Mr. Underwood is right or wrong in his conclusions is not the question, but, believing as he does believe, is he not more faithful to duty, and has he not more faith in truth than Mr. Beecher, who would seal his lips and not "whisper the guilty disclosure?" As though it might be a "guilty" thing to disclose any truth to men!

The pulpit teaches the love of men, but it may learn the love of principles from science. It will conserve the old; but the spirit of fearless, impartial inquiry after the new it does not possess. It has its anodyne of consolation for the sorrowing, its crutches for the cripples, its porridge for the weak, its soothing syrup for the sick, all of which are good in their place; but there are some well people in the world who can stand alone, and are ready to hear the truth whatever it be; and they demand more courage, honesty, and plain speaking from the pulpit. They will not faint away if the preacher whisper some "disclosure" of truth which to reputable error may seem "guilty." Speak out your newest and freshest thought—they are ready for it. They do not ask: "What is pleasant to believe?" but—"What is true?" It was Epictetus, the Roman Stoic, who said—"When what thou wilt befalls not, then thou must will what befalleth."

W. H. S.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have just made a flying visit to New York. Almost everybody I met in conversation asked me—"Do you go for Grant or Greeley?" My invariable answer was—"For neither." As an abolitionist, I learned that, of two evils, I must choose neither.

Why should I vote for Greeley or Grant? As a woman-suffragist, I could never vote for Greeley. For war and military command, Grant might do. For President, I cannot see that he has or ever had one single qualification. As for any favor he or his party or platform have ever shown to woman's cause, or are likely to show it, I would give no more for it than Greeley's frown, or the Cincinnati platform's scorn and contempt. Let the parties nominate better candidates, if they want the votes of true and consistent men. I hate all such paltry stuff as the Philadelphia platform proffers. It is disgrace to the very name of reform and progress. It is good enough for party politics, but no party politics ever yet reformed anything, not even the parties themselves.

Some ask me—"Did not Republican party politics abolish slavery?" I answer, not a bit of it. Slavery was abolished as a military necessity, to save the nation—not the slaves.

But—"Did not the party give the colored man the ballot at the south?" Again, no! The emancipated slaves were marshalled into the Republican party, just as into the army, as a necessity—a political necessity this time—to save neither the country nor the colored men, but the Republican party.

And either party would give woman the ballot to save itself, as I believe, or would withhold it from her for the same reason.

Some ask me—"Would the people of color be as safe with Greeley for President as with Grant?" They are not safe now, surely—never will be safe till woman is emancipated and the nation is educated to a far higher moral standard than at present.

Neither Grant, Greeley, nor any other white man naturally loves a black man, any more than a white woman. But both Grant, Greeley and their parties hold woman a bond-slave; white woman! So they all would a black man and woman, were it politic to do so. Probably most of them love white women much more than they love black men, and, were all alike free, would sooner enslave black men and women, than white women. And so I do not believe the colored people are any better off with Grant than they would be with Greeley. I only speak my own opinion.

CONCORD, N. H.

P. F.

It is not our intention to make THE INDEX a political paper, much less a partisan one. We have no space for party politics. But we are unwilling to let it be supposed that this course is in the slightest degree suggested by a wish to evade the consequences of a plain avowal of our political convictions, or to conciliate the favor of all parties by opposing none. If the circulation of THE INDEX should be diminished by what we now say, diminished it must be. In all probability our own vote will be cast next November for General Grant,—without enthusiasm, and not at all by reason of any personal considerations with reference to either candidate. We were at first strongly inclined to look hopefully upon the Cincinnati movement; at present we expect to vote the Republican ticket. We neither intend to argue the matter, nor seek to influence our readers; but we make this statement because we have a constitutional repugnance to "sitting on the fence" any longer than is necessary, and because we do not choose that our silence shall be misinterpreted as either shrewd or cowardly policy.

In the United States there are 5,660,074 persons above the age of ten years who can neither read nor write. In the State of New York alone there are 241,152, and in Pennsylvania 222,858. In New England, even, there are 195,963. These figures are from the Report of the National Commissioners of Education for 1871, as quoted by Mr. D. E. Cronin in his manly and thoughtful pamphlet on the "Equal Distribution of Wealth." What a swarm of perils are hidden in these terrible facts! The liberties of the United States are not safe so long as this dense ignorance exists; and there is no remedy for it but "compulsory" or (better) universal education.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The printer will be careful to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to errata.
N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S BELIEFS.

BY REV. E. C. TOWNE.

The new life of Mr. Lincoln recently published reproduces Mr. Herndon's letter to THE INDEX in regard to the religious opinions of the illustrious martyr-president, and gives additional corroborative evidence. Some of the chief indications thus given in regard to Mr. Lincoln's positive beliefs, it may be well to bring into a single concise view. Technically, Mr. Lincoln was an "infidel;" but he was nevertheless a deeply religious believer, and might well be held a true Christian if it is admitted that to have the faith which works by love is to be a true Christian. The work just alluded to says that a great many "thought they discovered in his lowly origin, his kindly nature, his benevolent precepts, and the homely anecdotes in which he taught the people, strong points of resemblance between him and the divine son of Mary." It is certainly true that everybody who knew Mr. Lincoln at all knew him as one who ever did justice, loved mercy, and walked in humility before God. The following are the testimonies which are of most interest in regard to Mr. Lincoln's beliefs.

Mr. J. W. Keys says:—"In my intercourse with Mr. Lincoln I learned that he believed in a creator of all things who had neither beginning nor end, and, possessing all power and wisdom, established a principle in obedience to which worlds move and are upheld, and animal and vegetable life come into existence. A reason he gave for his belief was that, in view of the order and harmony of all nature which we behold, it would have been more miraculous to come about by chance than to have been created and arranged by some great thinking power."

Mr. Jesse W. Fell says:—"His religious views were eminently practical, and are summed up, as I think, in these two propositions: 'The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.' He fully believed in a superintending and overruling Providence that guides and controls the operations of the world, but maintained that law and order, and not their violation or suspension, are the appointed means by which this providence is exercised."

Judge Davis says:—"He had no faith in the [technical] Christian sense of the term,—had faith in laws, principles, causes and effects—philosophically."

Mr. W. H. Hannah says:—"Since 1856 Mr. Lincoln told me that he was a kind of Immortalist; that he never could bring himself to believe in eternal punishment."

Mr. W. H. Herndon says:—"Law was to Lincoln everything, and special interferences shams and delusions. . . . He believed that all things, both matter and mind, are governed by laws, universal, absolute, and eternal. . . . He believed in universal inspiration and miracles under law. . . . He held many of the Christian ideas in abhorrence, and among them there was this one, namely, that God would forgive the sinner for a violation of his laws. Lincoln maintained that God could not forgive; that punishment has to follow the sin; that Christianity was wrong in teaching forgiveness; that it tended to make man sin in the hope that God would excuse. Lincoln contended that the minister should teach that God has affixed punishment to sin, and that no repentance could bribe him to remit it. In one sense of the word Mr. Lincoln was a Universalist, and in another sense he was a Unitarian; but he was a Theist as we now understand that word: he was so fully, freely, unequivocally, boldly, and openly, when asked for his views. Mr. Lincoln was supposed by many people in this city to be an atheist; and some still believe it. I can put that supposition at rest forever. Mr. Lincoln wrote these words:—'I sincerely hope that father may yet recover his health; but, at all events, tell him to remember to call upon and to confide in our great and good and merciful Maker, who will not turn away from him in any extremity. He notes the fall of a sparrow, and numbers the hairs of our heads; and he will not forget the dying man who puts his trust in him. Say to him, that he will soon have a joyous meeting with many loved ones gone before, and where the rest of us, through the help of God, hope ere long to join them.' . . . Mr. Lincoln, in his moments of melancholy and terrible gloom, was living on the border-land between theism and atheism,—sometimes quite wholly dwelling in atheism. In his happier moments he would swing back to the isms, and dwell lovingly there."

In taking leave of his townsmen to set out for Washington, Mr. Lincoln said:—"To-day I leave you. I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon Washington. Unless the great God who assisted him shall be with and aid me, I must fail; but if the same omniscient mind and almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me, I shall not fail,—I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask that, with equal security and faith, you will invoke his wisdom and guidance for me."

To us it seems very evident that Mr. Lincoln had a nature singularly prone to spiritual flights, but wholly free from the fear which usually impels to those flights. Hence if depression obscured his vision he was not afraid to say so, and when love moved him to steady his thought and lift it upward and sweep the heaven of heavens, he saw as only prophetic souls can see that all is infinite order and infinite life, and that providence and inspiration must be perfect for every soul of man. That all things work together to help and save all was Mr. Lincoln's simple faith.

A UNIVERSAL RELIGION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

The Golden Age has lately discussed the question of a universal religion, that is,—Can there be a religion suited to all men? And it has maintained that Christianity, properly understood, is such a religion. By its logic, a part may be taken for the whole, or a whole for a part! Select all the best moral principles that Jesus taught, and we get the Christianity of the Golden Age, after leaving out the miraculous element and part of the historical! By a similar selection of the best moral principles of the Koran, we might call ourselves Mohammedans!

But is it true that there can ever be a religion suitable to, or accepted by, all men? In its ultimate analysis, religion is found to be that sentiment which arises from contemplating the relation in which man stands to his Creator; and bearing in mind that all knowledge and all belief are founded on relation, in order to get at the truth we have to analyze our ideas of man's nature and God's nature; and the relation between the two necessarily determines the nature of our religion.

Take the anthropomorphic idea of God which is at the bottom of all Orthodox notions or conceptions of the Deity, and we have a God possessing all the attributes of man with the addition of infinity. He is infinitely angry, infinitely benevolent, infinitely merciful, etc. Then take the Orthodox idea of man—a being possessing a mysterious free will, capable of doing anything he wills—creating his own motives to action, his own feelings and desires. Comparing these two conceptions, we are prepared to account for his religion.

Supposing the individual has veneration and benevolence largely developed, he attributes to his God infinite mercy and cannot believe in everlasting punishment; he prefers to be a Universalist. Supposing his destructiveness, self-esteem and veneration to be large, and benevolence small, he attributes to his God infinite dignity, who must have an infinite sacrifice to appease his infinite wrath; and he prefers to be a Presbyterian.

But let science banish this anthropomorphic idea of the Deity, and we have a Power manifested only through Nature's laws; which is not influenced by human motives, but is always uniform—unchangeable. Let science show that man has not this mysterious free will, but is always governed by motives he did not create; that, to solve the problem of character, we must ever bear in mind the three great factors, antenatal organization, social surroundings, and school education, (the two last might be called the environment, perhaps); let all men have in equal proportions these three factors, and we may have one universal religion, similar in kind and development. But as this seems clearly impossible under present social circumstances, it may be asked—Cannot we approximate nearer to it by giving true ideas of man's nature and of natural laws?

The idea of retaining the name "Christian," when it conveys so many different meanings, seems calculated to make confusion worse confounded. If we are willing to learn from scientific investigators, nothing will appear more necessary than to use precise terms, signifying so much and no more. This precision of language may appear as "dry as dust" to men gifted with a fine idealism, such as D. A. Wasson or O. B. Frothingham; but if truth is our object, the more we are free from the trammels of sentiment and feeling, the more likely we are to get it. Tyndall has truly said that sentiment placed in advance of intellect is sure to produce glamour and confusion. A late evidence of this may be seen in S. Johnson's essay on the "Interpretation of Nature." His sentiment is excited by the apparent materialism of Darwin, Spencer, and Huxley. Neither Darwin nor Spencer affirms that the "lower form originates the higher," or that the ape originated the man or the acorn the oak; but both attribute the great "formative" principle to the environment operating on the germ, or the "lower form." And the environment Spencer attributes to an unknown and unknowable power or Force, which we have as much reason for calling spiritual as material, since in their ultimate analysis we know nothing of either matter or mind.

But this scientific view of man's nature and natural laws is not often acquired by the multitude; and if it is essential to a rational religion, it may be asked—How are the "ignorant and the imbruted" to be reached? As your correspondent suggests, "soup, soap, and the spelling-book" are more likely to do good to such. It is a very common opinion that the educated should "condescend to men of low estate," and should support a system of religion for the good of such, no matter how absurd the doctrines taught may appear to his own mind. Some of the most liberal free thinkers may be found in Orthodox churches, thinking it their duty to support them for the good of the dear people. Society, they say, will soon be broken up, and anarchy reign supreme, unless such churches are supported.

This benevolent condescension, united with a desire for popularity and motives of policy, seems sufficient to hide from such their unwarranted deception and the moral injury they do themselves by being untrue to their own convictions.

But is it not a great mistake to suppose that the "imbruted" are governed or checked by the fear of future punishment in the next world, or an Orthodox hell? Are they not governed by the fear of the civil law and its punishment, rather than by a remote future punishment which they have so many chances of escaping by that convenient arrangement—a vicarious atonement? Respectfully,
J. E. S.
OLATHE, Kan.

THE EGYPTIAN MORAL CODE.

BY DYER D. LUM.

The study of ancient religions has brought to light the great fact that the fundamental principles of morality were well known long before the advent of Christ, and at the same time dispelled the moral darkness which, as we were taught in our childhood, enshrouded all the nations of antiquity. The study of comparative mythology has shown us that these older systems of faith were not entirely based on error, and that, although containing much that is repugnant to the more expanded intellect of this age, they are by no means justly described by the words—"heathenish darkness."

Believing that these vestiges of the spiritual history of man cannot fail to be of interest, permit me to adduce a few of the conceptions of our moral duties held by the priests of ancient Egypt.

In their theology it was taught that at death the soul was ushered into the presence of the god Osiris to be judged, and examined by forty-two "Assessors," or deities who represented each some special sin. Each of these august divinities claimed the soul, unless it could be shown that the life of the deceased had been free from the sin over which it had sway. Accordingly we find representations of souls denying the claims of these dread Assessors, answering to each separately. These answers will give us a correct idea of the moral conceptions of the period, and the sins to be avoided during life in order to secure happiness hereafter.

Among the sins now recognized as criminal, we find the following specifically denied:—

"I have not smitten men privily (murdered).
"I have not committed adultery.
"I have not stolen.
"I have not plundered.
"I have not waylaid any.
"I have not cheated any by false weights.
"I have not put forth my arm (in anger)."
It is refreshing to find that, long before the time of Abraham, men had learned to draw a distinction between stealing and plundering; and I infer therefrom that they believed in "civil service reform."

The following recognitions of moral obligations to our fellow-men are worthy of notice:—

"I have not afflicted any (caused sorrow).
"I have not corrupted hearts.
"I have not been exacting.
"I have not caused fear.
"I have not made the laborer to do more than his task.

"I have not calumniated the slave to his master.

"I have not robbed the dead.
"I have not reviled my parents.
"I have not defiled the River (Nile)."

The following specifications relate to the individual:—

"I have not been idle.
"I have not lied.
"I have not played the hypocrite.
"I have not blasphemed.
"I have not polluted myself.
"I have not taken my own life.
"I have not despised God in my heart.
"I have not been intoxicated.
"I have not indulged in vain boasting.
"I have not been scornful.
"I have not been bad-tempered.
"I have not listened (to scandal).
"I have not multiplied words.
"I have not been shiftless.
"I have not spared eating bread (or been miserly).
"I have not refused to hear words of truth.
"I have not committed any grievous sin."

Nine more remain, four relating to sacrifice and five being repetitions (as translated).

Strange words these to those who have been taught to look upon all the ancient nations as sunk in the grossest ignorance of moral obligations! They cause us to ask at what epoch of the world's history we may locate this code.

Egypt flourished for several thousand years; and we must not take the opinions of those living in the later period as identical with those of the earlier dynasties. But on this point we are happily free from all doubt. The "Funeral Ritual," though revised in the twenty-sixth dynasty, was of the highest antiquity. Says M. Lenormant:—"Some chapters are spoken of as composed under King Hesepti, of the first dynasty, and others as dating from the reign of Menkara (fourth dynasty), and very many chapters of the Ritual are found on monuments long anterior to the invasion of the Shepherds (2214 B. C.)."

The first dynasty of Egyptian Kings began with Menes and lasted 253 years, and is placed by the researches of the continental school of Egyptologists at 5004-4751 years before Christ! The fourth dynasty began 4235 B. C., the early reigns of which mark the culminating point in the primitive history of Egypt, art then attaining its most remarkable degree of perfection.

On the tombs of this ancient race we find inscribed many quotations from the "Ritual," breathing forth sentiments not unworthy our own day and generation. Souls are depicted calling upon their "Father Osiris," and each styling himself "his beloved son." On some we read such sentences as these:—

"He loved his father; he honored his mother; he loved his brethren; and never went from his home in bad temper. He never preferred the great man to the low one."

"I was a wise man, my soul loved God; I was a brother to the great man and a brother to the humble one, and never was a mischief-maker."

Does this sound egotistical? Not more so than the words so often found in our own cemeteries:—"I am the resurrection and the life." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In each of these cases the words are quotations from sacred history, and the sorrowing survivors of the Egyptian, as well as those of the Christian, selected the expressions out of tender regard to indicate what they esteemed the highest characteristic of a well-spent holy life. To the Egyptian, it was devotion to Humanity; to the Christian, implicit trust in Jesus. Such, at least, appears to be the lesson derived from the inscriptions on the tombs of these widely separated epochs, which may be accepted as breathing the spirit of the theological teaching of each.

Not all of the virtues of the Egyptians were merely of a negative character. They were taught that, in order to insure the approval of these judges, they must be able to say:—"I have given food to the hungry, drink to the thirsty, and clothes to the naked."

They tell us of God, "that He is the sole generator in heaven and on earth, and that He has not been begotten. . . . That He is the only living and true God, who was begotten by himself. . . . He who has existed from the beginning. . . . who has made all things, and was not himself made."

Sir J. G. Wilkinson (in Rawlinson's Herodotus) tells us that the fable of the god coming personally into his temple was contrary to the Egyptian belief in the nature of the gods:—"It was only a figurative expression." And on the character of these pagan priests, the same rigidly Orthodox writer says:—"It must, however, be admitted that they did not make a show of great sanctity, nor set themselves above the customs of society, in order to increase their power over it; they were good husbands and fathers, and they showed the highest regard for social duties. Mankind, too, had not then been enlightened by Christianity, and the Egyptian Hierarchy had the merit of having enjoined, practised, and ensured morality, and contributed greatly to the welfare of the people they so long governed."

Those days are long passed, and we live in an age of "Christian light." Were priests then upright and true, and the patterns as well as the preachers of morality, let us hasten to rejoice that we are permitted to live in the Christian dispensation, when our priestly exhorters are all blameless in thought, word and action; when none of the "chosen ones" ever defrauds the widow, seduces the innocent, or beguiles the unsuspecting; and when they, too, never "make a show of great sanctity, nor set themselves above the customs of society." For this great and blessed privilege, let us not be unduly puffed up nor altogether thankless.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

The eternal idea of justice makes no one just, that of truth makes no one true, that of beauty makes no one beautiful; so the eternal law of right makes no one righteous. All these standard ideas require a process or drill in the field of experience in order to become matured into character or to fashion character in the models they supply.—Brushnell.

The following bill was presented to the Board of Supervisors of Cedar county, Iowa, by an occasional dispenser of the gospel in that county:—

"To offering prayer at the grave of—, a pauper, $3.00."

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." It gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the degrading character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapter and verse in every instance; and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; 50 copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, condition, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution?" Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—"The Present Heaven," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single copies, Five Cents; Twelve copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, a pungent pamphlet by A. J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX Office. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, TOLEDO, OHIO.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL
FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to any address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.

Address S. M. MORSE,
188-19 25 BROOKFIELD ST., Boston, Mass.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,
ARCHITECTS,

78 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO.
[180-181]

The Journal of Speculative Philosophy,

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY IN ST. LOUIS, MO.

It is intended as a vehicle for such translations, commentaries, and original articles, as will best promote the interests of Speculative Philosophy in all its departments.

Terms of Subscription.

Two dollars per volume; single number, 50 cents. Vols. I. and II., bound in one volume in muslin, will be sent post-paid by mail for $3.00.

Vol. III., Vol. IV., and Vol. V. in muslin, $3.00 each.

All subscriptions (within the United States) should be addressed to the Editor,

WM. T. HARRIS,

110-15100w. Box 2383, St. Louis, Mo.

THE EXAMINER.—A limited number of Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 will be sent post-paid—the four numbers for 50 cents. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 for 40 cents. Nos. 4 and 5 for 30 cents. No. 1 for 10 cents. What remains of full sets are reserved for binding. Zion's Herald says:—"The boldest heretic of today." The Independent says:—"The most pronounced radical in the land." The Chicago Post says:—"Equal to the utterances of Theodore Parker." Address THE EXAMINER, Waukegan, Ill., where the numbers for sale remain. [185-187]

The series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent post-paid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word"); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. Bradford; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Vice President.
P. H. BATESON, Secretary.
A. E. MACOMBER, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON, Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
ASA K. BUTTS, New York, N. Y.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Toledo, O.
A. E. MACOMBER, " "
CALVIN CONN, " "
EDWARD BISSELL, " "
P. H. BATESON, " "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

	Toledo, O.	Twenty Shares, $2,000
D. R. LOCKE	"	1,500
A. E. MACOMBER	"	1,500
C. CONN	"	1,500
EDWARD BISSELL	"	1,500
P. E. ABBOT	"	400
H. L. HOLLOWAY	"	1,000
GUIDO MARK	"	1,000
P. H. BATESON	"	1,000
E. P. BASSETT	"	1,000
H. E. HOWE	"	300
W. C. FISKE	"	300
J. M. RITCHIE	"	300
V. KEEN	"	300
ALANSON WOOD	"	300
WILLIAM KRAUS	"	500
J. G. HOLZWARTH	"	100
J. O. E. MARK	"	100
C. AUGER	"	100
ASA K. BUTTS	New York, N. Y.	300
T. W. HIGGINSON	Newport, R. I.	200
ALEX. COCHRAN	Franklin, Pa.	200
GEO. ROADLY	Cincinnati, O.	200
MISS A. HALL	Danvers, Mass.	100
G. N. JENNINGS	Tonica, Ill.	100
J. SEDGWICK	Palmer, N. Y.	100
CARL POST	Monroe, Mich.	300
HENRY MILLER	Sacramento, Cal.	300
L. R. MUNDERLAND	Quincy, Mass.	100
J. L. WITTING	Boston, N. H.	100
LOUIS BRISTOL	Croydon, N. H.	100
J. E. BUTTON	Ola, Kan.	100
SAM T. DUNKER	"	100
J. M. HADLEY	"	100
S. L. HILL	Florence, Mass.	1,000
W. H. SPENCER	Haverhill, " "	200
JOHN F. BARNETT	Boston, " "	300
R. W. WELLS	La Grange, Ind.	300
FRANK PRATHER	Wellsville, Kan.	100
E. F. DINSMORE	New York, N. Y.	300
J. T. DICKINSON	Middlefield, Ct.	1,400
W. J. POTTER	New Bedford, Mass.	300
G. C. GLATTE	Kendallville, Ind.	300
W. C. GANNETT	Boston, Mass.	300
MRS. M. S. PERKINS	Dover, N. H.	100
MISS E. EMMERSON	"	100
W. H. DOWNES	Birmingham, Ct.	100
B. B. SMITH	Lansing, Mich.	100
R. B. SMITH	Warren, Pa.	100
W. C. RUSSELL	Ithaca, N. Y.	100
WM. CLARKE	Toledo, O.	300
O. L. SMITH	"	200
J. N. LYMAN	Cincinnati, O.	100
L. G. FRICH	Monroe Centre, " "	100
A. FOLSON	Boston, Mass.	300
L. O. BASS	Colebrook, Conn.	100
S. E. SEWALL	Boston, Mass.	500
ELIUS WRIGHT	Detroit, Mich.	200
E. B. WARD	Dayton, O.	100
A. D. WILT	Keokuk, Iowa	100
S. S. BOWEN	Peekskill, N. Y.	100
WM. JONES	Oskaloosa, Iowa	100
S. H. DANE	Dover, N. H.	100
J. H. YORK	"	100
JOS. HATTE	"	100
G. J. FOLSON	"	100
"A FRIEND"	"	100
Mrs. H. E. PERKINS	"	200
O.	Boston, Mass.	100
WILLIAM GREEN	Orange, N. J.	100
"A FRIEND"	Lowell, Mass.	100
D. B. STRIDMAN	Brattleboro, Vt.	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTIAN	New York, N. Y.	100
O. W. LARSON	Essex, N. Y.	200
EDW. M. DAVIS	Philadelphia, Pa.	100
Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT	"	100
MISS M. A. WRIGHT	Jersey City, N. J.	100
A. B. BROWN	Worcester, Mass.	100
EDWIN BROWN	"	100
R. P. HALLOWELL	Boston, " "	500
BENJ. RODMAN	New Bedford, " "	300
H. B. CLARKE	"	300
FRANK J. SCOTT	Toledo, O.	500
M. L. HOLBROOK	Honiton, N. Y.	1,000
W. H. BOUGHTON	"	100
HENRY H. RICHARDSON	"	100
E. G. SURETT	Webster, Mass.	200
J. E. FOLLETT	Winona, Minn.	100
JOS. WARRASSE	Newton, N. J.	100
T. M. LANE	Franklin, Pa.	100
W. H. DYKE	Worcester, Mass.	100
W. H. SPALDING	Prairie du Chien, Wis.	100
LOUIS BELLORE	Duluth, Minn.	100
LEWIS KURTZ	Philadelphia, Pa.	200
SAM. WARRASSE	Augusta, Kan.	100
L. W. RATHS	La Fayette, N. J.	100
W. EMMERSON	Amesbury, Mass.	100
C. H. HORACE	Boston, " "	100
MISS I. THOMSON	Dover, N. H.	200
BENJ. HALLOWELL	Sandy Spring, Md.	100
Mrs. M. H. VAN RENESSLAER	N. Y. City	100
R. B. STONE	Warren, Penn.	100
W. B. LORCH	Fall River, Mass.	200
Mrs. J. WHITAKER	New Bedford, " "	500
S. H. ROPEK	Kerbonkoon, N. Y.	100
Mrs. R. D. FRANCIS	Boston Highlands, Mass.	200
CHAS. BONSALE	Salem, N. Y.	100
G. H. BRIGGS	Amesbury, Mass.	200
C. W. CLARSON	"	300
H. E. NEWTON	Castleton, Ill.	100
HENRY KLEIN	Toledo, O.	200
OTTO KLEIN	"	100
H. G. NEUBERT	"	200
A. BUNNEY	"	100
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.	Detroit, Mich.	3,000
T. K. PACK	Co. Toledo, O.	3,000
	Westminster, Ct.	200

$50,000

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Weston super Mare, Eng.
Rev. MONDREU D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $4.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstition.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 10

SECOND SERIES.....No. 11 to No. 20

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. K. WHIPPLE,
[32-38] 19 PRICKNET ST., BOSTON.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1300 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufacture, and so on. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 135 in eight days, another 328 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

[195-191.]

SALESMEN WANTED.—I wish to employ as Commercial Travellers three young men of good character, industrious habits and fair address. Must be hearty radicals and glad to devote spare time to canvassing for THE INDEX. State particulars as to experience, references and expectations. Address A. K. BUTTS,
Care Lock Box 38,
Toledo, Ohio.

HALL'S

MAGIC SHADE FIXTURES!

An ingenious arrangement by which a Shade may be rolled down from the top, or raised from the bottom of the Window, or both, as may be desired; thus securing PERFECT VENTILATION, GOOD LIGHT, and at the same time COMPLETE PRIVACY in the room.

They are an admirable and cheap substitute for Inside Blinds. Are easily attached to Shades now in use. Are especially adapted for Office and Store Windows.

For sale by dealers in shades generally.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

CHICAGO CURTAIN FIXTURE COMPANY.

101 WEST LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
[18715]

ENGLISH AND FRENCH
FAMILY AND DAY SCHOOL.

87 W. Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

MISS C. E. NOURSE will re-open her SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, Monday, Sept. 28. Her address during the summer will be No. 38 DERN ST., Boston, and from Sept. 1 as above. [185-148.]

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS
of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.
[18100w]

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, AUGUST 24, 1872.

WHOLE No. 139.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLGREN, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHURCH, REV. CHARLES VOTER (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), REV. MONCURE D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

Pagan and Christian Idolatry.

THE SIXTH FREE LECTURE BY F. E. ABBOT IN THE CITY HALL, DOVER, N. H., JAN. 24, 1869.

"The old commandment, 'Thou shalt not make to thyself any image of God,' signifies to us, 'Thou shalt not make to thyself any image of God.' Every image is finite; the thought of God has in it the idea of infinity."
AUBERACH, On the Heights, p. 309.

"The other duties that give us blessings do not bestow any of them by coming manifestly before our sight; while He who orders and holds together the whole universe, in which are all things beautiful and good, and who preserves it always unimpeded, undisturbed and undecaying, obeying his will swifter than thought and without irregularity, is himself manifested only in the performance of his mighty works, and is invisible to us while he regulates them. The soul of man, moreover, which partakes of the divine nature if anything in man does, rules, it is evident, within, but is itself unseen."
SOCRATES, Xenophon's Memorabilia, iv, iii, 13.

"Animos enim per se ipse viventes non poterant mente complecti; formam figuramque querebant."
CICERO, Tusculan Disputations, i, xvi, 37.

If you take into your hand some small object—for instance, an apple—the first thing you observe about it is its form or shape; and this you perceive in two ways, by the sense of sight and the sense of touch. That is, you both see it and feel it to be round. Suppose, however, that your eyes were wholly blind, and the nerves of touch throughout your body wholly paralyzed and deprived of sensation; could you in that case discover the shape of the apple, or of anything else? Could you in any way learn the form of an object which you could neither feel nor see? The senses of taste, smell, and hearing give no information concerning form or shape; and it is plain that the only avenues by which such information can reach the mind are the two senses of sight and touch.

If, however, I should ask what is the shape of an apple, you could reply at once, although there is here no apple to be seen or touched. The very word, apple, calls up in your mind a mental representation of the object itself; and this you can conceive yourself as touching or seeing. This power of mentally repeating a past experience of the senses,—of creating in the mind a picture or image of actual forms,—is called imagination; and its function is to enable us to think about objects of sense, precisely as if they were before our eyes and hands. Without it we could remember nothing and know nothing; impressions made upon our senses would vanish like shadows passing over the surface of a lake. Say what we will about the soul, no well-informed person can doubt that sense and imagination are the basis of all human knowledge.

Form, therefore, or shape, is something which belongs to objects of sense; it is, in other words, an attribute of matter, which the senses can perceive and the imagination reproduce in the mind itself. There could neither be matter without shape, nor shape without matter. Try to conceive a form all alone by itself, without any thing whose form it is; the attempt is simply absurd. This, then, is clear,—matter and form, form and matter, are inseparable. Whether in Nature or in thought, the two must always go together, as closely connected as top and bottom, inside and outside, right and left. We cannot, therefore, perceive form or shape except by those faculties which deal directly with matter, namely, the senses; and we cannot think of it at all, except by that faculty which deals with mental pictures or images of matter, namely, the imagination. Let me emphasize this truth, that form cannot exist without matter and cannot be thought of without matter; for it is the great and all-important truth which idolatry of all kinds forgets. Not unless we really understand it, can we comprehend that truly great saying attributed to Jesus—"God is Spirit." The idea of form is purely a material one, and cannot in any way be spiritualized. The vast majority of people, even in Christian countries, are still worshipping idols in no figurative sense,—worshipping mere pictures or mental images of God, rather than God himself. The world has hardly yet attained the faintest conception of a spiritual God; and because I cannot help believing that this gross image-worship tends to keep human life on a low level, I wish to suggest, however inadequately, a higher idea of God, and thus, perhaps, help to worship him "in spirit and in truth."

If what I have said be true—if form is, indeed, an attribute of matter, and of matter only,—then it is plain that God, who is Spirit, must be altogether without form. Think a moment what form implies. A tree, a house, a mountain, all have form, because they are all limited and composed of parts; they have definite outlines or boundaries, which depend on the arrangement or mutual relation of these parts. By its very nature, form is a boundary or limitation; it terminates and circumscribes whatever it belongs to, and hence can belong only to that which is limited and finite. But God, who is infinite, cannot possess an attribute inconsistent with his own infinity; he cannot have any form, for all form is limitation. He is Spirit; and if Spirit be not another name for absolute nothingness, all spirit must be formless, invisible, intangible, unimaginable. To trace in thought any form or feature, however airy or shadowy; to paint on the background of infinity any shape, outline, or figure of any kind; to conceive any lineaments, however august, beautiful, or divine,—is to lose all conception of spirit in a vague effort to bring God within the field of human vision or fancy. "No man hath seen God at any time, nor indeed can see." It must be by other faculties than sense or imagination that we are to know God, if he can indeed be known. Spirit is that which thinks, wills, loves; but what form has thought? What features has will? What outline has love? Cannot we comprehend these, the supreme realities of our life, without the help of a picture-book, even though our own imagination be the artist? Shall fancy bring up her camera obscura and endeavor to photograph Infinite Being? Spirit may indeed dwell in visible forms; but who shall say that the forms are essential? Behind the form of your face and features, there is a soul which I discern through my senses, but not with them; a soul I can neither see, nor touch, nor even imagine. It is invisible to me, possessed of no form or likeness that my eyes can behold; yet it is the most real thing in your face. It is that with which I hold converse. It is that which speaks to me inculcably more, now better and now worse, than your lips. Nay, it is you yourself. The form of a face is, as it were, a mask, from which no conclusion is to be drawn as to the masker; but the expression which animates it, and which, uncontrollable by will, not seldom gives the lie to the tongue, is a true witness of the quality of the spirit within. Form is but the expressive sign and symbol of something other than itself; and this unimaginable but not unintelligible something, be it what it may, is what I mean by the invisible, the formless spirit. Spirit is thought, intelligence, will, affection, conscience; to attribute form or shape to these is simply absurd. Hence we neither see spirit, nor imagine it; if it indeed exists in reality, it must be known by higher faculties than sense or imagination. Either there is no such thing as spirit at all, or it is something whose portrait cannot be painted even on the ethereal canvases of imagination; something formless, invisible, divine. Whether finite or infinite, spirit can have only spiritual attributes; but form is not one of these. It is as childish, therefore, to inquire about the form of the soul or the form of God, as it would be to inquire about the shape of righteousness or the stature of wisdom or the features of virtue. Form belongs to matter alone; it cannot, therefore, belong to spirit, unless spirit is matter, too.

"But," perhaps you object in your own mind, "I believe in a spiritual body; my soul, when I die, will not dissolve into thin air, but will issue from this perishable frame in a new, a spiritual body. The spirits of the dead must have form and feature, as truly as the spirits of the living. Paul plainly teaches this doctrine of a spiritual body; and I believe it!"

Perhaps this is so,—perhaps Paul is right; I neither deny nor affirm it. For myself, I profess to know nothing of that life which I hope awaits us beyond the grave; and I have no faith in other men's professions of knowledge on the subject, even if they call themselves apostles and seers. We may be clothed in celestial bodies after death, or we may not,—he is wise indeed who knows. But granting the truth of your belief,—granting that our souls at death rise in celestial bodies,—all that I have said remains true nevertheless. If we are to have such bodies, they must still be material bodies, although of a higher order of matter. You surely cannot believe that what you call your "spiritual body" is your spirit itself? Have you never thought of this,—that, just as you are obliged to think of a soul within this material body, so, if you imagine a "spiritual body," you must think of a soul within that, too? The eyes, mouth, and other features, through which the spirit of your friend shines out upon you, are not that spirit itself; and if, in a life to come, through other and more glorious features the same spirit shall again shine out upon you, even those celestial features, beautiful as they may be, will not be the beloved spirit itself. If we are constrained to believe in a soul within the earthly body here, just as much as we are constrained to believe in a soul within the heavenly body hereafter. Let us talk no more of "spiritual" bodies,—all bodies, celestial as terrestrial, are material, all forms are material, and the living spirit will be forever formless and unseen. It will hide itself as truly within that celestial body you believe in, as it hides itself here in these earthly bodies; and if you are unable to believe in formless spirit in these, you do not really believe in spirit at all. What you call spirit is only matter a little rarefied. Let us, therefore, learn to distinguish between matter and spirit here, and rise to that loftier idea of spirit which is born not of sense or imagination, but of pure thought, cultivated reason, and spiritual consciousness. Spirit is that wonderful something in us which thinks, wills, aspires, hopes, loves, worships,—which, in pure devotion to truth and humanity and noble principles, is able to give such courage even to weak natures, that they can trample pain and danger and death itself under foot; and thus it asserts proudly its own superiority to matter. It is the sight of men who can die for an idea, or, better still, who can live for it in constant and cheerful sacrifice, that most invigorates my own faith in spirit as something more than an idle dream. Unprofaned with the touch of hands, unshamed by the impudent inspection of eyes, spirit is deeper and diviner than any form, and through form but manifests its own wondrous and mysterious presence.

If, then, it be a coarse and gross mistake to attribute form even to a finite spirit, how much coarser and grosser it is to attribute form to Infinite Spirit! Is he not omnipresent, existing equally in all parts of boundless space, and filling it with the fulness of his own divine life? Then is he without body, feature, or form, as devoid of figure or shape as space itself. But I shrink from the very mention of form as pertaining to God; he is to me so truly spirit, and spirit is a thought so far above the heavy, crass atmosphere of sense and imagination, that it seems to me almost irreverence even to state so bald and pagan a conception. When the Hebrews portray their Jehovah in human guise, or when Swedenborg literally attributes to God the human form and speaks of him as the "Divine Man," I would as soon consent to worship the Belgian Giant as such a God. God can have no form, because all forms are his. He is the Illimitable Power, the unsearchable Intelligence, the absolute Benignity, the eternal Beauty, the perfect Rectitude, of which the universe of Nature, with all its myriad forms, is but a symbol or sign. I cannot associate him with any particular form because we find him in all forms. The infinite variety of sublime and beautiful shapes which throng the fields of space, and which dissolve and melt into each other like the cloud-palaces of a sunset sky, are all his,—all instinct with his life and throbbing with the electric currents of his activity; and any one is as much his, as truly the form of God, as any other. Their whole value and eloquence lie in their ever-fresh suggestion of the Eternal One whose broken lights they are; and the face of Nature, glorious, serene, majestic, derives all its loveliness from the Omnipresent Reality that shines through every feature and lends it the eternal charm of beauty and law. To him, formless as the sunlight which floods the skies, no form is high, none low; all forms are his, and become visible only through him who is himself invisible. The modest grass wet with showers and the superb rainbow arched above it from horizon to horizon; the white-plumed armies of the surf thundering against the land, and the shell on the beach that with tiny voice mimics their everlasting roar; the sky-piercing peak of the mountain, and the raspberry that blushes on its rugged declivity; the boundless sweep of the landscape, dotted with towns and countless homes, and the flushed child that chases the butterflies through the meadows; the enormous city with its sea of humanity, and the lonely heart that floats like a bubble on its heaving surface,—all these, and myriads besides, are forms of God, all parts of that awful mystery of Being—

"Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

In the form of the fuchsia, the icicle, the star, God exists as truly as in the form of man,—no more, no less. Between all forms and the Divine Spirit they express, I must forever distinguish, admiring those as broken gleams of this, and worshipping the Eternal Spirit itself as the origin and goal of all that is. To associate him exclusively with any one form is to dissociate him from all other forms, and thus isolate him in a corner of his own universe. Whoever has come to realize the truth of God's spirituality shrinks from every effort to clothe him in imaginable shape, perceiving that formlessness is the attribute of all spirit as such. The senses and the imagination know not how to worship him; these must be dumb in the hour of spiritual adoration.

I have taken all this pains to explain the contrariety of spirit and form, or rather the independence of the idea of spirit on any particular form, because it is the forgetfulness or ignorance of this truth which is the origin of all kinds of idolatry. The essence of all image-worship is the imprisonment of the Divine in a single form, or in a few forms. The idol-worshipper seldom, I believe, mistakes the rude materials of his idol for God himself; he only believes that his god resides in that particular form in some especial manner. It is the consciousness of superior being that must lie at the root of all worship, however degraded; and in all the different kinds of idolatry, this is the universal and characteristic feature—not the denial of invisible and mysterious power, but its incarceration in some special form or idol. Whether an object of sense or of imagination, it is all one; the belief in the exclusive presence of the Divine in any single form is disbelief in its equal presence in all other forms. Hence any form, material or imagined, which becomes in the thought of the worshipper the inseparable companion of the God he worships, is thereby made an idol in the strictest sense of the word. Observe, that the essence of idolatry is always the same,—the supposed inseparable association of the Divine with some actual form, whether visible and tangible to sense, or only picturable by imagination. There may be countless degrees in the strength of the connection between the idol itself and the real object of worship, from absolute inability to conceive them apart to a mere use of the idol as a convenient means of awakening the spirit of worship through the senses; but the essence of the idolatry is the dependence upon sensible forms or objects as a condition of worship. Whoever cannot worship except by the aid of his senses or his imagination is a stranger to that "worship in spirit and in truth" which alone is the truest worship,—is, in fact, an idolater. So understood, idolatry is nearly as common in Christian as in pagan countries; and in either pure worship is rare indeed.

The Bible, as you doubtless know, is very severe upon idolatry, and describes it as one of the worst, if not the worst, of sins. No judgment could be more harsh or unjust than this. There is nothing wrong in idolatry to those who know no better. It is, doubtless, a low and immature form of worship; but all worship, so far as it springs from the heart, and is its honest, sincere homage to the highest it can comprehend, is beautiful and ennobling. To God we are all as babes and babblers, at the best. Whoever expresses, I care not in what fashion, his soul's reverence for his own god or gods, and strives as best he may to assimilate himself to this his loftiest ideal of excellence, is a worshipper of the one true God, by whatever name he names him.

What are our names to him? Every sincere aspiration of the soul is true worship. It is not to condemn idolatry that I speak of it to-night, but rather, if I may, to enable some to comprehend it better. There are grades of spiritual life, different, yet all good in their kind; and the ardent worship of some so-called Pagans puts to shame the worldly hypocrisy of their Christian contemporaries. "There is, perhaps," says Max Müller [Chips from a German Workshop, Vol. I. p. 80], "no race of men so low and degraded as the Papuans. It has frequently been asserted they had no religion at all. And yet these same Papuans, when they want to know whether what they are going to undertake is right or wrong, squat before their karwar, clasp their hands over the forehead, and bow repeatedly, at the same time stating their intentions. If they are seized with any nervous feeling during this process, it is considered as a bad sign, and the project is abandoned for a time; if otherwise, the idol is supposed to approve. Here we have but to translate what they in their helpless language call 'nervous feeling' by our word 'conscience,' and we shall not only understand what they really mean, but confess, perhaps, that it would be well for us if in our own hearts the karwar occupied the same prominent place which it occupies in the cottage of every Papua." I must confess that in my own heart I find no abhorrence of this idol-worship, but rather a mingled reverence and pity. The moral sentiment is worthy of such profound veneration that, even in unenlightened men, its activity seems to shed a holy light about them. When we hold such honest converse with our own souls, and follow our best impulses with the simple fidelity of these poor Papuans, then, but not till then, can we afford to despise their ignorant superstition.

It would be unjust in the extreme to accuse all idol-worshippers of confounding the real object of their worship with the idols before them. I doubt if even the most degraded savages do this. Some dim consciousness of superior being must accompany, I think, every act of worship. In the case of the more enlightened heathen, however, the practice of idol-worship means little more than the use of relics and roaries among Catholics or the parade of man-millinery among ritualistic Protestants. The emperor Julian, called the "Apostate" by the early Christians because he had returned to that faith of his forefathers from which they themselves had apostatized, makes this plea for representative worship of the gods:—"Statues, and altars, and the preservation of the unextinguished fire, and in short all such particulars, have been established by our fathers as symbols of the presence of the gods; not that we should believe that these symbols are gods, but that through these we should worship the gods. For since we are connected with the body, it is also necessary that our worship of the gods should be performed in a corporeal manner; but they are incorporeal." [Arguments of Celsus, Porphyry, and the Emperor Julian, against the Christians. London, 1830. p. 82. A very scarce collection of translations by Thomas Taylor, the "Modern Platonist," which was privately printed, and suppressed.] The ancient author of the Bhagavad Gita, an episodic portion of the great Indian epic called the Mahabharata, puts these words into the mouth of Krishna, the incarnate Brahman:—"Whatever image any supplicant is desirous of worshipping in faith, it is I alone who inspire him with that steady faith; with which being endued, he endeavoreth to render that image propitious, and at length he obtaineth the object of his wishes as it is appointed by me. . . . The ignorant, being unacquainted with my supreme nature, which is superior to all things and exempt from decay, believe me, who am invisible, to exist in the visible form under which they see me. . . . That Supreme Being is to be obtained by him who worshippeth no other gods. In him is included all Nature; by him all things are spread abroad."

Listen also to the evidence of a Hindu of Benares, who in a public lecture defended the faith of his countrymen before a mixed audience of English people and natives:—

"If by idolatry," he says, "is meant a system of worship which confines our ideas of the Deity to a mere image of clay or stone, which prevents our hearts from being expanded and elevated with lofty notions of the attributes of God, if this is what is meant by idolatry, we disclaim idolatry, we abhor idolatry, and deplore the ignorance or uncharitableness of those that charge us with this grovelling system of worship. . . . But if, firmly believing, as we do, in the omnipresence of God, we behold, by the aid of our imagination, in the form of an image any of his glorious manifestations, ought we to be charged with identifying them with the matter of the image, whilst during those moments of sincere and fervent devotion we do not even think of matter? If at the sight of a portrait of a beloved and venerated friend no longer existing in this world our heart is filled with sentiments of love and reverence; if we fancy him present in the picture, still looking upon us with his wonted tenderness and affection, and then indulge our feelings of love and gratitude, should we be charged with offering the grossest insult to him—that of fancying him to be no other than a piece of painted paper? We really lament the ignorance or uncharitableness of those who confound our representative worship with the Phenician, Grecian, or Roman idolatry as represented by European writers, and then charge us with polytheism in the teeth of thousands of texts in the Puranas, declaring in clear and unmistakable terms that there is but one God who manifests himself as Brahma, Vishnu, and Rudra (Siva) in his functions of creation, preservation and destruction." [Max Müller, Chips from a German Workshop, Vol. I. p. 17.]

In this defence of idol-worship by a native Hindu, we get an inside view of idolatry, and see that, at least among the more cultivated heathen, it is worthy of quite as much respect as the average Christianity of our own country. The same defence is here made which must be made by all who appeal to the imagination in aid of worship, and seek to move the feelings by pictures, statues, music, or other sensuous means. I doubt not that this worship may be very sincere and helpful to persons in a certain stage of development; but it is not spiritual worship, and cannot have so controlling an influence on the character as intelligent, inward homage to a purely spiritual God.

To give an adequate idea of the varieties of idol-worship which have prevailed among men, would be impossible in a lecture like this. A few facts, however, I will state, showing the great range of idolatry in the choice of objects of worship. There is scarcely anything within reach of the senses, or even of the imagination, which has not somewhere been worshipped. Nature-worship, or the adoration of the sun, moon, stars, fire, wind, mountains, seas, rivers, etc., is perhaps the most ancient of all idolatries. The earth and the sky are in most mythologies, as in those of Greece, Rome and China, the parent-gods who gave birth to all that is. Mr. McClatchie gives a curious dialogue between himself and a Chinaman, revealing a very gross idea of God. "Whom do you worship?" I asked. "I worship Heaven, just as you foreigners do," he replied. "Who is the heaven you worship?" "Why, Shang-te, of course," said he. "Can you see Shang-te or not?" I inquired. "Why," replied he, looking at me with surprise at my ignorance, and leading me to the door while he pointed up to the sky, "there he is." "What," said I, "do you mean that blue sky up there?" "Of course," said he, "that is Shang-te, the same as your Jesus!" I have never yet asked the above questions without receiving precisely the same answers; for all classes of Confucianists in China consider Shang-te to be the animated, material heaven." This story seems to exhibit a very low phase of idolatry—the confusion of the idol with the god it represents; but I suspect, if we could have read the Chinaman's heart, he really worshipped something more than the bare expanse of blue above him. Herodotus [I, 131] says the Persians worshipped the sky, "calling the entire circle of the heavens Zeus." In some parts of the world, as on the plains of Upper Asia and in some regions of Africa, the chief objects of worship are devils or demons; as the Christians have their Satan, so the American Indians had their Matchi Manito, the Egyptians had their Typhon, the Scandinavians their Loki, the Persians their Ahirman, etc., etc. The worship of departed ancestors prevails extensively in China, among the Papuans of Oceania (some of whom make annual offerings of betel-nuts and tobacco at the tombs), among the Maoris of New Zealand, and elsewhere. The worship of fetiches—a word derived from the Portuguese fetisso, and signifying a "magical charm" or "spell"—is very common in Greenland, Africa, Australia, and Siberia. Anything may be a fetiche, and thus become the god or patron-spirit of the savage; a piece of sculpture, as a snake, lizard, or other reptile, a bit of bone or mineral, a bird's beak, a fish's fin, a horse's hoof, may be adopted as a charm or amulet, and invested with divine dignities, as the abode of a mysterious power. Animal-worship, which can be detected in the primitive paganism of the Grecian and German tribes and among the American Indians, was developed to a singular degree among the Egyptians, who, according to Plutarch, worshipped beasts not merely as symbols, but as themselves gods. Clement of Alexandria, after expatiating on the splendor of the Egyptian temples, and especially dwelling on the veil wrought with gold which curtained off the adytum or shrine from the rest of the building, goes on to say:—"But if you pass beyond into the remotest part of the inclosure, hastening to behold something more worthy of your search, and seek for the image which dwells in the temple, a shrine-bearer or some one else of those who minister in sacred things, with a grave air singing a Pæan in the Egyptian tongue, draws aside a small portion of the veil, as if about to show us the god; and makes us burst into a loud laugh. For the god you sought is not there, but a cat, or a crocodile, or a serpent sprung from the soil, or some such brute animal better suited to a cave than a temple. The Egyptian deity appears,—a beast rolling himself on a purple coverlet!" Chief among these deified brutes was the sacred bull Apis, who was regarded as the living shrine of Ptah, the chief god of Memphis, and thus appeared to be a perpetual incarnation of the deity. At death he was embalmed, and his funeral conducted with a magnificence worthy of Pharaoh himself; and even after death he was worshipped still under the name of Serapis, until the god had become incarnate in a new calf.

Idols of various kinds, whether adopted from Nature or fashioned by art or created by imagination, have in all ages held sway over the minds of the populace, not only in pagan, but in Christian lands. The history of the Christian Church is almost from its commencement the history of an idolatry. The worship of images, representing the Virgin Mary, the apostles, the martyrs, the saints, and others, became in the course of time so grievous an abuse that two of the Byzantine Emperors, Leo Isauricus and Constantine Capronymus, headed the party of the iconoclasts, or image-breakers, and did all in their power to abolish the worship of images in Christian churches. In the year A. D. 787, the second council of Nicea, convened by the Empress Irene, restored the images, and actually passed decrees against all who maintained that God was the sole object of worship! Similar decrees were passed at the councils held in Constantinople in A. D. 869 and 879. This image-worship was mildly condemned in a special treatise by the French Emperor Charlemagne; but this treatise was refuted by no less a personage than Pope Hadrian himself! Thomas Aquinas, one of the greatest fathers of the church, went so far as to assert that "since Christ is adored with supreme adoration, therefore his image, or the crucifix, ought to be adored with supreme adoration."

But this image-worship, which was an abuse of the Romish and Greek churches, and drew out stout protests from John Huss and the other reformers, is only a superficial indication of the deeper idolatry which lies at the very heart of historical Christianity. The claim of Jesus to be the Messiah or Christ of God, which he himself made the foundation of his church, early ripened into his elevation to the Godhead. The theology of the Orthodox party in the Christian church, culminating in the doctrines of the Trinity and the Atonement, was only the ripening of the seed planted by Jesus himself. Nevertheless, it remains true that the worship of Jesus, practised to-day throughout Christendom, is the rankest idolatry. It is incompatible with that spiritual worship of God as the formless and unimpeachable Spirit which Jesus himself is said to have commanded. When Henry Ward Beecher said (I am not sure of the exact words):—"The Father is to me only a dim and impalpable essence; Christ is the only God I know,"—he spoke for thousands and thousands of Christians, though he spoke like an idolater. Christ-worship, like all hero-worship, is idolatry. To worship God under the form of Christ is no better than to worship him under the form of Confucius. We cannot worship God in "spirit and in truth," until we worship him by some higher faculty than sense or imagination. It is the husking of the spirit in the presence of the Formless and Indwelling, the still, rapt homage of the soul before the Viewless and Eternal, that constitutes spiritual worship. In the temple of Solomon, the great seraphs in the Holy of Holies were represented as shielding their eyes with their wings in presence of the awful Shekinah. So let our imaginations in profound humility cover their eyes with their wings, that we may bow in mute adoration before him who has no likeness in the heavens above or in the earth beneath.

It was no new thing when the early church deified Jesus. The whole empire of China is to-day dotted over with temples to Confucius, and more than sixty thousand animals are provided annually for sacrifice in them, in addition to the countless offerings brought by his worshippers. So also the disciples of Lao-tse, another great teacher of religion in China, who was in many respects superior to Confucius, began to deify him as early as the fourth century of the Christian era, and to relate the same marvels about his birth which cluster around the infancy of Jesus. The inhabitants of Java worship another deified prophet, Batara Guru, or the "Venerated Teacher." Gautama or Sakya-muni, the founder of the great Buddhist religion which includes a third of the inhabitants of the globe, became the object of supreme veneration to many of his followers. So, too, the hero Krishna, between whose story and that of Jesus there exist the most wonderful resemblances, was worshipped as the eighth avatar or incarnation of Vishnu, the Supreme Being, long before the Christian era. Even in America, we find the Mexicans deifying their benefactor Quetzalcoatl, and the Peruvians deifying their benefactor Manco Capac. Everywhere we find evidences of a tendency to apotheosize human beings who have connected themselves in any way with the instinct of worship. It needs very little philosophy to see that the worship of Jesus is, as it were, the phantasmagoric enlargement of a human figure in the magic lantern of imagination.

My friends, I count it a thing of no slight import how we think of God. If we make an image of him, even in our own thought, to bow down before and worship, it will be hard, if not impossible, to realize his presence in our own souls, out of which grows our holiest feeling and our noblest living. The image seems outside of us, far from us, up in the sky, out of our reach; we cannot feel its omnipresence, or rest in its all-embracingness; the earth cannot seem permeated with its invisible power, nor our own spirits fed by its inwardly working life; Nature cannot seem throbbing with divine pulses, nor man, even in his degradations, crowned by a redeeming and transfiguring possibility of better things. All this can come only through a recognition of the formless, immanent, universal Divinity that is above our heads in the skies we venerate, also beneath our feet in the solid ground we tread,—in the great and starry souls of all ages, also in the poor sots and brutes and desperadoes that crowd the prisons and infest the streets of to-day. Out of this faith in the invisible God that inhabits all, spring the noblest virtues, the divinest affections, the tenderest graces, the sweetest and bravest humanities, that are possible to man. Though idolatry is by no means unmixt evil,—though it has its own lower and higher forms,—spiritual worship alone is purely good. To worship "in spirit and in truth" is to discard all idols from the fetiche up to Jesus, and consecrate our hearts and lives to the Formless, Indwelling, and All-Encompassing God. To this high faith I would we might all attain!

THE CHILDREN OF NATURE.

FROM THE GERMAN OF KEURMACHER.

On a plain, shut in by mountains, in the land of Asia, lived a little community in simplicity and with few wants. Long ago, one family had fled thither from the persecutions of the tyrants of the earth. The father died soon after his coming, and left in the wilderness a few lisping children; from these descended this little people.

They knew few forms of speech, but a tradition had remained to them that there was an all-powerful being, called God. Where this being was, and of what form, and how he acted, they knew not; so they honored the mountain stream that flowed through the vale, as their God, for they drank from its wave; and the stream was the only water of the valley, and roared fearfully.

Suddenly the snow from the mountain-tops swelled the river, so that it filled the vale, and swept away men and houses. Then the people trembled before their God, and said—"He is angry with us. Up! let us sacrifice our dearest to him when his wrath rises again."

So they spake, and resolved, when the stream should overflow, to throw their youngest children into its waves to appease it; the fathers and mothers wept and awaited the day of the offering. So superstition crushed the tenderest feelings of their hearts.

The day of sacrifice came; the weeping parents brought their children; then came to them a stranger, whom they called Maho, that is, the Son of the Sea, and said—"Would you fly from bad to worse? Control the stream." But the people were affrighted and fell back; many said—"He blasphemes God."

The stranger bore a lyre in his hand; he struck the chords and sang; then the people gathered about him, and, in joyful dances, followed the tones of his lyre into the mountain; here they tore up rocks, and made dykes about the stream; the mountain snows melted, the waters rose, but they roared shut up within their walls. Men were astonished, and cried—"The Son of the Sea is God!" But he smiled and said—"Then are you all God; for have you not conquered the stream by your own might? You know not your power; try and use what lies in you; then will you begin to know God."

"Where does he live?" they asked among themselves.

Maho answered them not, but he taught them to till the land and to plant trees; then they saw that the rain and dew from the clouds made the fields fruitful, and sent increase from above; so they said—"There above dwells God; the clouds are his tent; he makes the vale fruitful; we will give him of our fruits that he may come down." Then they built an altar upon a mound, and burned the first fruits, and let the smoke rise up for a sweet odor to their God; for they said—"He dwells above, the sky is his house, and the clouds are the curtains to his tent."

In the meantime, although they knew so little of God, the valley grew fairer and finer with trees and fruit, and the people were happy in their simplicity; but they longed ardently to see the Unknown, and said to the wise man—"Make us an image, by which we may think of him, since he does not come down." Then Maho smiled, and carved a fine image in the form of a man, and they placed it in a tent, and called the tent the house of God; and they ceased to ask who and where God was, for they called the image God, and set costly food before it, and ate and drank; so they degraded the Highest and themselves.

This grieved the stranger, and he stepped forward and said—"See if this be the powerful Unknown!" Then he cast fire into the tent of their God, and it was burned to ashes with the image; and the people cried—"The image is not He!" And they said again—"Where shall we find Him?" Then said the stranger—"See, the trees and plants grow and blossom in quiet beauty, and the earth produces of all kinds; for an unseen spirit hovers about and quickens them by day and night; yet ye know not the face and figure of the spirit that fills mountain and valley and men and beast." And the people said—"Now we know; his name is Spirit; he moves over the earth, and dwells also in man and beast." But the wise man answered—"Trouble not yourselves about name and form, but be helpful to one another, since one spirit acts in all; then will the Unseen come near to you."

Then arose among the people a man of proud and envious mind towards the stranger, who hated him because all honored his wisdom; and him they called Zalml, that is, the Gloomy, for he separated himself from them with a gloomy look. But suddenly appeared in the valley a monster, which came from afar over the mountains, a shaggy lion, who seized men and beasts, and then returned with bloody mane to his cave. The dwellers in the vale thought it an angry creature from under the earth, and hid themselves in their houses, but the wise man said—"We must meet the monster;" and he led the people towards the mountain.

When they drew near to Zalml's house, he came out and derided Maho, and said to the people—"He will lead you into the jaws of the monster, that he may make you fewer, and rule over you more easily; he stands in league with evil."

The wise stranger was silent, but the people were afraid.

In the meantime had Zalml's little son run far from the house, and Zalml loved the child much; then came the lion from the wood and roared, and the men were frightened and fell back; and the lion ran upon the little boy with open jaws and licked his chaps, while Zalml and the mother of the boy stood at a distance wringing their hands. Then Maho went to meet the raging beast, gave him such a blow on his head that he fell, and strangled him to death; then, faint and blood-stained, he brought the rescued son to his bitter enemy; the father and mother of the boy threw themselves on their faces and wept, and said—"We are not worthy to lift up our eyes before thee." Then came the people, and would worship the conqueror of the lion, and said—"Art thou a mortal or the Unseen in mortal form, that thou showest such kindness to thine enemy, and despoilest thine own life to do good? What is this?" So said the people, but the wise stranger answered:—"Children, I am a man like you; a low voice in my heart tells me so to act; such a voice speaks also in your hearts, for you praise my deed more than my strength; and also in the soul of our brother Zalml, who hated me, has it now spoken loudly, so that he threw himself upon his face and wept; and see, it dwells even in the heart of the child, for it embraced my neck with its little arms and kissed me. See, my beloved, this is the spirit and the voice of the Unseen in your hearts; follow it wherever it commands you; so shall you know it better, for the godlike is nowhere nearer to us than in our own hearts."

And the people cried:—"Now we see truly that it needs no dwelling, neither form, nor name!" From that time they honored the invisible spirit in childlike simplicity by faith and love, and their eyes became ever clearer; and they asked no more, where and of what form was God.

THE NEW STYLE OF PRAYER.

The Japanese, we believe, pray by machinery; the supplication, placed in a proper receptacle, is hoisted by a windlass, and goes up a little distance, at all events. Many among us who are rationally inclined, doubt if prayer has more than a subjective efficacy. Puzzled by philosophic doubt, they cannot see how, under the order of the universe, prayer can be directly answered. They cannot accept the idea of the interposition of a personal will in the affairs of men. The chief end for which praying was instituted being thus surrendered, praying becomes with them a sort of speech-making; prayer becomes a monologue addressed to an infinite nowhere. Some of the specimens of this kind are ludicrous enough. One by the Unitarian chaplain of the Massachusetts Assembly has travelled over to England and back again. It might be called railroad devotion. Here it is: "All Thy works praise Thee, Architect Divine, in all places of Thy dominion. We rejoice before Thee to-day that, although fire and water mingled produce antagonism, from that antagonism we derive power and progress most promotive of human welfare; and we pray, amid the fire and water of opposing convictions touching a great common interest under consideration, that the throttle-valve of circumstance may start a power among us which shall force the driving-wheel of opportunity along the broad high-way of human good until the grand Democratic terminus is reached, the greatest good of the greatest number. Amen."

We suspect that there is no little of this kind of orating done by legislative chaplains. One could wish that all such functionaries were limited to the sober words of some good manual of devotion. This talking at a legislature, and calling it prayer, begins to be nauseating.—The Methodist.

Some one said to a reformer, "The whole world is against you." He calmly replied, "Then I am against the whole world!"—Union Advocate.

present year one student declined, on account of conscientious scruples, to make the declaration which the vote of the Trustees required. By advice of the Faculty he sent a statement of his views on the point in question to the proper Committee of the Trustees, with his reasons for withholding his name from the proposed paper. The Faculty also by special vote recommended him to the Committee for the customary aid "as every way worthy on account of diligence, fidelity, attainment and moral conduct," and closed their very friendly letter in his behalf by expressing the hope that his statement would be "satisfactory" to them. His own statement to this Committee was as follows:—

"I purpose to become a minister of Religion,—I may say of the 'Christian religion' to every one who takes it as a synonyme for that which aspires after the holiest, sweetest, strongest and most human—which is striving toward the ideal excellence; but I may not say so to any who will understand me as thereby committed to the holding or promulgating of any special views touching the Messiahship, the Bible, or the Church. I would not be considered un-Christian nor anti-Christian; but while the contents of the term are a matter of such dispute, I cannot bring myself to assert my right to the name of 'Christian' as a condition for receiving the benefits of any fund.

In Jesus of Nazareth, as portrayed by the Gospel-writers, I have found a revered teacher, an example at once rebuking and inspiring, and a most precious spiritual friend; I desire to co-operate with him,—and with all consecrated souls of whatever time and lineage,—in making known the Truth, in uplifting the ideal and ennobling the character of man, in promoting upon the earth a spirit of mutual love and of cheerful compliance with the will of God.

In accordance with the precedent furnished by Matthew, xi, 2-6, I leave it to be determined from the foregoing data whether I am preparing to enter the Christian ministry."

The decision of the Committee in this case was that it "did not come within the rules established by the Society, by which the Committee are bound," and no appropriation was granted. This Society is "The Society for promoting Theological Education," which holds in trust the Williams Fund.

That the members of this Society have acted conscientiously in establishing rules which would exclude an applicant who comes with such a statement as the foregoing in addition to a handsome recommendation from the Harvard Divinity School, must be assumed; but how they find authority for such action in the terms of the Williams bequest is difficult to see. We should be very reluctant to believe what we have heard asserted, and on very good authority, in their behalf, that in asking the students to sign a statement that they intended to become ministers of the "Christian" religion, or, as it was once put, if we are correctly informed, "ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ," they have had no thought of imposing a test of belief as a condition of receiving aid, but have simply wished to ascertain whether the applicants intended to enter practically the ministerial profession, on the ground of that clause in the Williams will which says that aid shall be given to those who are "preparing themselves for the ministry." Were this all, were it meant simply to exclude from the benefit of the fund an occasional student who may be in the school for theological study merely and not with any purpose of entering the ministry—a very rare occurrence—such phrases would hardly have been thought of for accomplishing the object. And to alip in intentionally a test of belief under cover of inquiry into a purpose, is a subterfuge, a dishonest trick, of which it must be impossible that the gentlemen composing this Society could be guilty. The greater probability is that they reconcile their action to their consciences in this way: they assume that Mr. Williams meant the "Christian ministry," because none other is likely in this country to have been in his mind at that time, and they think as Trustees of his bequest they ought to protect his intention against the defect of his own language.

But such assumption as to a testator's intentions against the plain letter of his will is certainly dangerous business for Trustees to undertake. As a matter of fact, the Trustees in this case are laying down a test of belief other than that provided for in the will, though Mr. Williams expressly said that no such test should be applied, it being understood that the applicant is "a Protestant." Are they, then, truly executing the will? Further, if they can be allowed, assuming certain intentions of the testator, to supplement his language with expressions of their own, it were certainly fairer to assume, judging from the one proviso in respect to belief that he did make, that his intentions were in the direction of full liberty of thought rather than the opposite. He was evidently a staunch believer in Protestantism; and were he alive, we believe he would say unhesitatingly to his Trustees—"Give aid especially to the writer of the Protestant declaration above cited." Possibly all the evidence in this matter is not before the public. But it is time that it were; for unless the Trustees can give better reasons for their action than have yet been shown, there are very many persons who cannot help believing that they are faithless to their trust.

W. J. P.

A WITNESS.

Among the foolish are some thoughtful. In the crowd that daily fluttered and chirped on the wide piazza of the grand hotel, in view of the wide landscape, was a silent, grave man of serious, even ungracious countenance, but evidently of observing power. He was a Bostonian born and reared, of course a Unitarian; wealthy by inheritance, well connected, intimate among the intelligent and influential, and, though without profession or calling, neither a man of fashion nor an idler, but a solid, substantial, much respected citizen. He had travelled to the farthest regions of the globe,—to Egypt, India, China, Palestine, Japan,—not running hurriedly over the surface of the territory, but staying long enough to note men and manners.

With this man of the world in the literal and just sense of the word, I fell into frequent and somewhat close talk on many subjects, seeking from him information and thoughts which he seemed perfectly willing to impart. One day, having exhausted our ready conversation on the topics of the hour, I said to him:—"You have been a great traveller and an observing one; you have lived with all kinds of people, under all modes of faith, Mohammedan, Buddhist, Jewish, Christian; tell me which religion, in your judgment, exerts the best influence on its professors." He paused a moment and then said:—"The Christian, on the whole. Buddhism comes very near it; indeed, Buddhism is pretty much the same thing; but Christianity, on the whole, brings the greatest moral force to bear on the greatest number of mankind." "You are a Christian yourself," I remarked. "O, yes," he replied, "I was born a Unitarian and am connected with a Unitarian society." "Do you get much satisfaction or benefit from it?" I inquired. "No, not much; the minister has a dry and uninteresting mind; he is dogmatic and mystical; his manner is bad; his voice is disagreeable; his tone is not cheerful, and what he says is neither very instructive nor very edifying. But I always go, and I pay my pew tax, which is rather heavy; for he is a good man, industrious and earnest, a warm friend, a faithful minister, and he devotes himself with much success to the children, who are his most hopeful disciples." "Then," I rejoined, "you support the church as an institution needful to the community?" "That is it," was his reply; "I regard religion as part of the restraining force of society, a sort of moral police, representing moral rule and responsibility, training men to obedience, and keeping before them all the time the duties of honest, sober and just living. Perhaps one man in ten thousand thinks; the rest are unthinking, inconsiderate, irrational, and must be kept under the influence of awful hopes and terrors. My friend in India had the images of Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva, before his door. He did not believe in them at all, but his people did, and behaved better for their belief." "But," I suggested, "would not the moral power of religion be vastly increased if it could be made to meet the wants of intelligent people also? For they are none too much under the influence of moral considerations, and would not be any the worse for a pretty steady admonition of their duties and responsibilities." At this point we were interrupted by friends accosting us, and the conversation was broken off. I had no suitable opportunity of renewing it, but I could not help following it out in my thoughts and fancying what my companion would have said to my inquiry. I think he would have said:—"Yes, certainly; it would be much better; all people must live well, justly, honorably, accountably. But how can such a thing be done?" I suspect that my friend was himself a doubter; perhaps his own faith was dim; perhaps he had none. But he was a man of honor and manly character, and if his view of the ends of religion was not the highest or noblest, it was at least honest and sensible. Men like him, and they are not few, would give their countenance and support to well-directed efforts after a rational faith, such as thinking men might accept, and straightforward men might respect; a faith that preserved the genuine safeguards of order and good conduct, that even made these clearer and more impressive at the same time that it widened the field of mental vision and activity.

This is the practical problem before us. It is the problem the believers in Free Religion are undertaking to solve. If they can do it, they will recover from formalism and indifference some of the strongest minds and sturdiest hearts of the age. To make religion tell fairly on character and on society is the work to be attempted and if possible to be achieved. The highest questions of abstract truth are intensely interesting to sincere minds, in themselves and for the sake of the inspiration they impart; but the practical relations of truth are also of immense importance, and it is in view of these that the supporter of Free Religion labors with confidence and zeal. A religion which the intelligent care nothing for, on their own account, is no boon to the unintelligent. A religion which the intelligent are interested in will command the respect of the unintelligent as well. I doubt if my friend's support of Christianity amounts to as much as he imagines. Scepticism finds its way out through the most careful custom, and the simplest soul will catch it. Not till the intellect recovers faith will the heart respond to it.

O. B. F.

"I have no need of the hypothesis of God," said Laplace. Certainly not in the science of mathematics. But there are other sciences—notably the "science of sciences," philosophy. It is the ignorant only who take the word of the specialist as the ultimate dictum of universal science. How few there are who can distinguish, or at least who take the pains to distinguish, between the utterances of individual promoters of science, often peevish, prejudiced, or blind of an eye, and that slowly-matured verdict of the universal intelligence of man from which all such weaknesses or defects are eliminated by mutual neutralization! This is the "authority" which must finally prevail in shaping the beliefs of the future. Every devotee of an ism is quick to assume that science has rendered judgment in his own favor, confounding his own petty and conceited thought with the impersonal and slowly clarifying thought of humanity itself. But this is the Judge to which all appeal must lie—this is that Science without whose approval no human belief, however solid it may look, can be other than a fleck of mist on the hillside, waiting only the first beam of the sunrise to dissolve into invisible vapor.

This is Professor Huxley's definition of education, and it might stand as a definition of Free Religion too:—"Education is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of Nature, under which name I include not merely things and their forces, but also men and their doings; and the fashioning of the affections and of the will into an earnest and loving desire to move in harmony with those laws."

"If only one woman in these United States desires to vote," says Mr. Cronin, "she has a natural right to do so; and no other woman and on man, nor all the other women, nor all the other men, can justly prevent her exercise of such a right." True.

MODERN SCRIPTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—We have been making an experiment in our services at St. George's Hall which, as far as I know, had been tried only in one congregation in England before—namely, in Mr. Conway's. We have been reading, in place of the Bible, sundry books by modern authors.

My first experiment was with Newman's "Theism," which, as you know, is written in a style remarkably suited to stately and solemn occasions. It did not at all surprise me to find Newman more welcome than Paul, and I heard of only one person who objected to the innovation. One could not but notice how the congregation set themselves to listen with an eager and unwonted attention—something much more than mere silence—when the lesson was announced from any other book than the Bible. Such interest silently gave testimony to this effect:—"We like what is read out of the Bible, but we are so dreadfully familiar with it! You give out the first verse or two, and we know all the rest that is coming. We lose the beauty of it through the 'trodden familiarity of sound;' and the truth of what we hear no longer arrests our conviction. But these new writings are like the opening of a new world to us. Read in public and in a solemn manner as part of the ceremonial of united worship, the words seem to have a wonderful inspiring power; and when the book is closed, a refreshing sense of having been fed lingers in our souls."

I need hardly tell you what a welcome was given also to the writings of Theodore Parker, from whom, indeed, may be gathered some of the most eloquent, powerful, and instructive passages in the English language. Never a Sunday passes but an inquiry is made—"What did you read from to-day?" "Where can I get that beautiful book?" and so forth, from many an interested listener.

Now and then, I take as a text for my sermon a passage from some modern author, and this too is welcomed as a wise innovation. There are gems suitable for public reading in most books that have been produced by able writers; so we have had lessons from Miss Cobbe's work, from John Ruskin and others, and even a splendid chapter on the "exercise of private judgment" from the great Evangelical, the Rev. J. C. Ryle. Milton and Isaac Watts, I see, have abundance of charming and profitable matter which may be thus utilized.

But in our progress we have stumbled across a really wonderful book, which would have lain I know not how many years longer in oblivion, but for the timely mention of it by one of our congregation. It is called the "New Koran," or "Text-book of Turkish Reformers in the teaching and example of their esteemed master, Jaldo Morata." It was published in 1861, and the authorship is still untraced. Most probably it is the work of an enlightened Jew; it is certainly the work of a very clever man, a deep thinker, and a careful observer. I will not attempt to give you any list of its contents, for the subjects are too numerous; it aims at the exaltation of brotherly duty into a religion; and, as a code of morals, I say openly it is as yet the best and most elaborate which the world has seen. Garnished with parables of exquisite quaintness, it is suited to the cultured and the uncultured alike. It is written in imitation of the style of our English Bible, and divided into chapters and verses, so as to resemble it in form as well as to be easy of reference. Indeed, it is plain enough that the writer only refrained from calling it the "New Bible" out of his own modesty, or regard for the prejudice of religious folks. "The life and teaching of Jaldo Morata" is, indeed, an improvement on the life and teaching of Jesus himself, as reported in the Gospels. Just as I expected, the book is having now a rapid sale, and we cannot supply copies fast enough to satisfy our congregation. I send you a copy for review. The price here is two shillings and sixpence; and it would be a good speculation to reproduce it in America. I must ask you to remember that it is literally a mine of treasures, and therefore will require digging and sifting.

Of course I feel most heartily glad to have found such a substitute for the Holy Scriptures which have worthily held their place so long in human regard; for this "New Koran" is a book to put into the hands of children and illiterate persons, without a shade of fear that it will do them harm. But all my pleasure in this new book is not a tithe of what I feel in our having broken the spell which forced us to place the Bible, alone and by itself, far above all other human writings. The exclusive use of it in our devotional assemblies was in itself a stronghold for the superstitious reverence in which the Bible has been held; but when we place the writings of other men, in modern times, too, on a level with the Bible, and find their power to sway the human feelings and quicken aspiration, we have then made a step onward in our liberty which nothing can ever make us retrace; we have then discovered by experiment that the one great spirit which gave the Bible all its virtue to teach and to comfort men's souls was no monopoly of any men, of any age, or of any creed, but the good gift of a bounteous Father to every child of his who lifted up his soul to be filled with it.

If Moses, Samuel, Isaiah, Jesus and Paul spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, not less surely and manifestly inspired were Newman, Frances Power Cobbe, Theodore Parker, and the unknown author of this "New Koran." For inasmuch as Truth only is the test of Inspiration (whatever this word may really mean), they who utter the most perfect truths must be the most truly inspired. The new lights, however, shine more brightly than they of old by reason of their deeper humility. They never palm off their wisest sayings under the pretension of "thus saith the Lord."

I conclude this letter with a text from the "New Koran" (Counsels, XLVI, 28):—"If there be any fault in your Koran, confess it; if there be any error, cast it out; for no inspired book that goeth forth from among men can claim to be perfect, but only a poor copy of God's truth."

I am very sincerely yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, DULWICH,
LONDON, S. E., August 1, 1872.

EDITORIAL BOOK NOTICE.

PRE-HISTORIC TIMES, AS ILLUSTRATED BY ANCIENT REMAINS, AND THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF MODERN SAVAGES. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M. P., etc. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1872. 8vo, pp. 649. Price $5.00.

In no way can we so well discharge the critic's duty in the case of this admirable work of Sir John Lubbock as by giving a brief summary of its contents. Every page is rich with valuable and authentic information concerning the investigations of modern science into the antiquity of man and the earliest indications of his appearance on the historic or rather pre-historic stage. That so much should have been learned from data seemingly so scanty is simply a marvel; and nothing could give a better idea of the value of the scientific method than the perusal of these pages. Patient observation of facts, diligent comparison, and cautious induction, combined with the wise use of hypothesis and the "scientific imagination," have already achieved great triumphs in this most interesting field of research; and it cannot be doubted that still greater triumphs await the little band of trained inquirers who are so faithfully cultivating it. The name of Sir John Lubbock is intimately connected with most of these labors; and the great multitude of those whose time is necessarily occupied with other things have reason to be grateful to him for presenting the chief results thus far gained in a form at once so trustworthy, so encyclopedical, and so fascinating. The Messrs. Appleton, also, are entitled to no small praise for the excellent style in which the original English edition of Williams & Norgate is here reproduced at a price within the means of almost every one who is interested in the subject. The fine quality of the typography, wood-cuts and general execution renders it really one of the cheapest works now in the market. But we must hasten to give some account of the contents of the book itself, of which this is the second and latest edition.

The first chapter is introductory. Pre-historic archaeology is divided into four great epochs,—the Paleolithic or Drift period, when man was a contemporary of the mammoth, the great cave-bear, the woolly-haired rhinoceros, and other now extinct animals, and used only weapons and tools coarsely made of stone; the Neolithic or later Stone Age, in which man seems to have been ignorant of all the metals excepting gold, and yet to have attained no slight skill in the manufacture of stone implements; the Bronze Age, in which bronze was made use of for arms and other instruments; and the Iron Age, in which bronze was partially superseded by iron, although it was still employed to some extent in the manufacture of ornaments, sword-handles, etc. The author devotes several pages to proving that the bronze weapons which have been discovered in England and elsewhere were not of Roman origin, but belonged to an earlier age.

The second chapter explains the use of bronze in ancient times, and is full of illustrations of celts (chiefs), axes, swords, spear-heads, knives, bracelets, hair-pins, brooches, etc., as also of woollen garments, which in a few instances have been fortunately preserved, and of some singular houses and forts of the period.

The third chapter explains the four principal theories of the Bronze Age,—some attributing these bronze remains to the Roman armies, others to the Phœnician merchants, others to a more civilized people of Indo-European origin who supplanted the men of the Stone Age, and others to the gradual and peaceable development of the Stone Age men themselves. Sir J. Lubbock inclines to the opinion that the art of bronze-making was introduced into Europe by some race of which "we have still very much to learn."

The fourth chapter treats of the use of stone in the ages preceding that of bronze. Although both bronze and stone were in use simultaneously in the earlier portions of the Bronze Age, yet there was a period when stone (with sticks, horns and bones) was exclusively employed. Very interesting details of the manufacture of flint implements are given.

The fifth chapter is devoted to megalithic monuments and tumuli. Sepulchral stone circles, dolmens, barrows, the stone structures at Abury and Stonehenge (erroneously attributed to the Druids), chambered mounds, with an eight-page table of the various implements discovered in them, are here considered at length.

The sixth chapter describes the discoveries made in the ancient lake-habitations of Switzerland and other countries, and the Irish crannogs; discusses the fauna and flora of the period; notices the scarcity of human remains, and concludes that we have "no direct evidence" as to the race to which these pile-villages should be ascribed.

The seventh chapter is devoted to the Danish Kjekken-møddings, or mounds formed of the refuse shells and bones which accumulated in the neighborhood of tents and huts on the sea-shore during the Stone Age. The investigations of Professors Steenstrup, Forchhammer, and Worsaae are described, as also those made by the author himself, Mr. Bask, and others. Similar mounds, though not so ancient, have been discovered in Scotland, the largest on Loch Spynie, in which a bronze-pin was found of comparatively recent date. The chief shells found in these mounds are oysters, cockles, mussels, and periwinkles. Sir J. Lubbock refers the Danish shell-mounds to the early part of the Neolithic Stone Age, but regards it as impossible to determine the date in years.

The eighth chapter treats of North American archaeology, nearly forty pages being given to the subject. This will to some of our readers be the most interesting chapter of the book; but we would refer them for fuller information to a special and most excellent work on the same subject by Mr. J. D. Baldwin, entitled "Ancient America," and just published by Appleton & Co.

The ninth chapter considers the fauna of Northern Europe during the Paleolithic period, including many species of mammals now extinct, such as the cave-bear, the cave-hyena, the cave-lion, the mammoth, the hairy rhinoceros, the Irish elk, etc. All these, though no longer existent, were undoubtedly contemporaneous with the men of the earlier part of the Stone Age. In fact, M. Lartet subdivides the Stone Age into four periods according to the order of succession of the cave-bear, the mammoth and rhinoceros, the reindeer, and the aurochs.

The tenth chapter relates what is known concerning the cave-men of the Stone Age. The discoveries of Tournal and Christol in the south of France, of Schœnhering and Dupont in Belgium, of Vivian, Godwin-Austen and many others in England, etc., are referred to; and the author mentions very modestly his own share in these investigations. The rude drawings on bone, and the sculptured poulard of reindeer-bone representing the animal itself, show that even in his infancy man was susceptible of the love of art; yet metals were unknown, pottery was not invented, even the flint implements were unpolished, no knowledge of agriculture was possessed, and even the dog was not yet domesticated. All this implies a very low state of civilization and a very remote antiquity. In fact, the Esquimaux best represent them to-day. Very few skulls have been recovered. The Naulette jaw, according to Dupont, closely approaches the simian type; the Engis skull bears no mark of degradation, while the Neanderthal skull, according to Huxley, is "the most pithecoloid [monkey-like] of human crania yet discovered."

Chapter eleven rehearses the now famous discoveries of Boucher de Perthes in the river-drift gravel-beds of Abbeville, and similar discoveries of worked flints. The objection, brought against these proofs of human agency at that early period, that almost no human bones accompany the flints, is strikingly offset by some calculations as to the scarcity of men in that age, based on the returns of the Hudson Bay Company. These show that it takes in that territory about 108,000,000 animals fit for the chase to support about 129,000 Indians; from which it plainly appears how scanty must be the population where man lives by hunting, and how rare necessarily must be his remains. The general formation of river-drift gravel-beds is discussed in this chapter at considerable length.

The twelfth chapter treats of the antiquity of man. The various calculations of Morlot, of Gilléron, of Horner, and others, are considered; and Sir J. Lubbock inclines to attribute to the Paleolithic period an antiquity of from 100,000 to 240,000 years. "It may be doubted whether even geologists yet realize the great antiquity of our race." He thinks, however, that there is as yet no satisfactory evidence of the existence of man in the Pliocene Age; and concludes that "our nearest relatives in the animal kingdom are confined to hot, almost to tropical climates, and it is in such countries that we are most likely to find the earliest traces of the human race."

The thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth chapters are given to a description of the condition of modern savages, as best throwing light on the probable condition of our remote ancestors; a fuller treatise on this subject, however, is already well known in our author's "Origin of Civilization and Primitive Condition of Man."

The sixteenth chapter has "concluding remarks" of a cheerful and eminently rational character. The teaching of science concerning the future of man are full of hope and encouragement, and encounter opposition only from the wilfully ignorant; and Sir John Lubbock, by helping to spread abroad these teachings and thus to dissipate the ignorance, renders such service to his times as his fellow-men will remember with gratitude.

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but hereafter no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 8, 1872.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

THE INDEX of this date contains an article on the "Japanese Religion," taken from the New York Commercial, which in my judgment ought to be thrown into tract form, and sent on the wings of every wind all over the country. Its "heathen" yet intelligent source arms its sentences with a power to command attention and enforce conviction which it could not have if it had an American origin. Here I see, although the Radicals do not, how much good might be done with a fund which could be drawn upon to publish such valuable matter as this to advance the cause of enlightenment for which your paper was established.

I am pleased to see everywhere I go the growing influence of THE INDEX. You may think it a weakness, but I feel flattered when I remember what you once told me, that my name was the very first on your subscription list. On reading your "Prospectus," I saw and felt that our age and country needed, and would sustain, just such a paper as you proposed to publish—a paper sincerely devoted to the ascertainment of truth—a paper that, with entire equanimity of feeling in regard to results, could publish Mr. Underwood's compact "Plea for Materialism" on one page, and Mrs. Louisa Andrews' touching letter on the other.

What an enviable position you occupy as captain of the "Little Monitor" (as I call THE INDEX) which fires such hot shot into the old hulks of superstition! To change the figure, what a constituency you have, for both numbers and intelligence, to address every week, every member of which is anxious to know what you and your aids have to say upon the great question of the age!

Parker Pillsbury is doing a great work in opening the blind eyes of the people. He is one of the old fleet of Ironsides that opened fire upon the system of African bondage thirty-odd years ago. What a pity you could not take out the old engine, which is just as good as ever, and put it into a new hull to do service in the cause of the new phase of the old abolitionism! The cause of Free Religion needs three things exceedingly—organization, unity of purpose, and a set of lecturers who will combine the zeal, intelligence, and moral purity of the old anti-slavery men. You see, in the success of Mr. Butts, what can be done by a single man when he believes in a thing with all his heart.

As to politics, remembering that THE INDEX is not a political paper, I may say historically that there is a tremendous undertow in Massachusetts in favor of Mr. Greeley as President which may give him the State next November. The moral perpendicularity of this man all through life, and his untiring devotion to the public good, as editor of the Tribune, are beginning to make an impression in his favor, on the convictions of the people. There is immense defection in the Republican ranks, from some cause or other, which betokens disaster to the party unless it can be checked. Theodore Tilton, by his Golden Age, and by his popular eloquence, is doing much to win the people to the old former of Chappaqua, and away from Gen. Grant. If, however, the platforms of the two parties are a fair index to their policy, we need shed no tears over the failure of either one of them to elect their nominee.

R. S. D.

CONSCIOUS AND UNCONSCIOUS KNOWLEDGE.

"WE KNOW HIM, BUT WE DO NOT KNOW THAT WE KNOW HIM."

Paley taught in his "Natural Theology" that the outward evidence of the existence of a Being higher than our highest thought is to be found everywhere in Nature; that this Being is infinite, immutable, creating by the fiat of his will animate and inanimate objects; that behind the mechanism of the "watch" and the mind of the human creature who made it is the Divine mind, designing, planning and doing all.

But it seems that, with the increase of knowledge, and the earnest inquiry of a large number who are propounding grave and startling questions, there comes not the certainty that men were looking for, but the scepticism of the present age. It is foolish to cry it down. Those who attempt to meet it with simple assertion do not belong legitimately to the time, and the march of events must sweep on and over them.

Paley's reasoning is not inward enough to be read now with pleasure. His analogies were once all that men wanted, but now something deeper is demanded. It does not fathom the mysterious depths in the human soul where scepticism is latent.

Our knowledge of God is at present unconscious knowledge. Man is looking deeper, and more into the inward evidences, than he once did. By searching into the depths, we come upon mysteries which the spiritually minded alone can discern. Science can only answer our questions by refining away gross matter and evolving the spiritual elements of everything material.

How shall man discern God, who is a spirit? "We know him, but we do not know that we know him."

Our impressions, at certain times, attain to something like a comprehension of the Divine Mind and Presence; but all will testify that the rapturous vision seems to be abnormal, and does not stay. A few exalted natures, very spiritually organized, clear-seeing, impressional, are nearer to the certainty of a conscious knowledge than another class of minds who suppose that, in order to know a thing, we must be able to prove it.

It is not a sin to be sceptical. We are nearer the truth than when we were not seeking, and doubting, and waiting in the midway position between unconscious and conscious knowledge of God. "Seek and ye shall find"—rings down through the centuries with solemn emphasis. To-day, in a wider and deeper sense than heretofore, men are seeking; and the gathering signs of late seem to betray the fact that we are actually living in a day that will by and by prove to have been a new religious era.

It is a notorious fact that no really great thinker can abide by the creeds of the Christian Church. The noblest men and women the world has ever seen were stifled with the prescriptions of sect and ritual, and toiled painfully upward, scaling cliff after cliff to find God's free air on the mountain-tops!

Shelley, like all men of genius, broke away from the narrowness of his time; and what to others seemed truth was but a half-truth to him. Ignorance and folly, illogical and satirical, have stigmatized as "infidel" what was too great to be understood. That unorthodox saint, Lucretia Mott, with a saintly nature and the inner light so refining away the material and gross that "the angel can be seen," is a beautiful prophecy of the higher spiritual development of the race.

If the new thought grows clear, discerning, it should be made to stand for a glory and a hope, not for a reproach.

C. A. B.

THE GOLDEN MEAN.

F. E. ABBOT:—

Sometimes the advocates of deduction and intuition, and those of induction and science and the study of books, fail to understand and appreciate each other.

As a help to this appreciation, I send a word from a private letter from my friend Lyman C. Howe, of Fredonia, New York. He is a man of entire integrity, as well as of fine capacity and good sense, and is speaking in Chicago for a year to good audiences. He is a "trance speaker," and you will see is just and broad in his ideas. He says:—

"We need the purest and highest element of mind to build the temples on the chaotic ruins of religious revolution. We must not bate our fervor, or blind the windows of heaven by forms and outwardness; but we need to bring in all the culture possible, to help rather than hinder the spontaneous inspirations of today. There is a class of extremists who ignore all normal effort, and leave to angels and to fate the work that belongs to voluntary effort. Another class of extremists trust entirely to books and to the despotism of forms and conventional scholarship. These help to polish, but 'their letter killeth.' We want to strike the balance of these extremes and get 'the truth that shall make us free.' Books and scholarship, when used as servants, are of inestimable value; but when we submit to them as masters, they imprison our best thoughts and freeze out the life of inspiration and truth."

We have much to learn, and much pride and prejudice to overcome, before we can appreciate that true and harmonious philosophy which would recognize and develop in healthful beauty and fit proportion our every power and faculty, and recognize the wondrous wealth of intuition and deduction on one side, and the eminent excellence of logic and induction on the other.

Yours truly,

G. B. STEBBINS.

SLEEPY LIBERALS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 1, 1872.

MR. ABBOT:—

I feel glad to think that you and others notice and appreciate the very little we have done in the way of Free Religion. Since the notice of our meeting and my letter in THE INDEX, I have been favored and gladdened by receiving several private communications from friends in sympathy with the plan of organizing societies everywhere of similar sentiment. I have been long since convinced that we must concentrate our forces, or we can accomplish but little.

I was reared in the strictest sense an Orthodox (old-school) Presbyterian; but as my mind became liberated from the dogmas, I felt free, and had little or no taste for dogmatical society. I felt the moral, social and religious instinct as strong as ever; but there were no congenial societies, so I stood outside of all but that of the Progressive Friends in Wabash county, Indiana, where I still retain a membership. But living here in Iowa seventeen years by myself, I saw plainly that I could do nothing without making some efforts toward uniting the friends of Free Religion.

When leaving the yoke of the Orthodox church, I felt like falling back on my own individuality, being responsible to nobody, and having nobody responsible to me. Liberals are too slow to form societies; they are, as a class, men and women of the finest and purest type; they are quick to see and detect the smallest and largest defects in society; they have been yoked when young, and have felt the galls, and have had a hard time to heal them. Now, being free, they are hard to "yoke" again; they are shy of every movement; they stand off; they look on; they say: "That's all right—go ahead—there must be something done—these fanatical Orthodox will rule our conventions, nominate the officers, take possession of our government, rule over us with rigor, and we shall have no chance after awhile." Yes, they can see all this; but when we ask them to support an organization (which is the only remedy), they will bring up all the objections that they had to their old galls and chafes. I have come to the conclusion that, unless we fall on some plan to bring in the mass of the people, these old and well-organized Orthodox sects will consolidate and seize the power before we discover their design.

Just let two hundred men into Congress of the Christian Amendment persuasion, and how soon the Amendment would be sent to the States for ratification! If we wish to retain our liberties, we must do something more than talk.

I received the pamphlets and tracts and have circulated them at our meetings.

The Orthodox pronounce our Society a very wicked institution; call us infidels, &c. We expected nothing else.

DAVID WRIGHT.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the month of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending August 17th.—Eldor Bush, $2; J. L. Bauer, $2; S. W. Wolfenstein, $2; Albion Morris, $2; C. Randall, $2; Kansas City Turnverein, $2; Kansas City News Co., $1.10; J. D. Cozad, $1; J. W. Dunn, $1; J. H. Dow, $1; A. S. Sherman, $2; Henry White, $1.20; P. V. Wice, 50 cts.; J. S. Sparks, 50 cts.; Jas. H. Burnett, 50 cts.; B. Wiles, $2; L. Kahn, $2; A. S. Long, 50 cts.; E. C. Zimmerman, 50 cts.; R. C. Bradshaw, 50 cts.; Robert Allen, 50 cts.; G. W. Mead, 50; Charles Fieldner, $2; A. W. French, $2; Jacob Mueller, $2; W. P. Foy, $2; H. M. Chapin, $2; Hugo Benesch, $1; Geo. H. Stone, $1; H. L. Melton, $1; E. P. Wright, $1; Louis Freitag, 50 cts.; J. C. Hubbard, $2; D. G. Mills, $2; Bond & Martin, $2.75; E. J. Chaffin, 10 cts.; D. Parker, 15 cts.; James Ford, 50 cts.; H. E. Parsons, $100.00; S. B. King, $2; Joseph Singer, $2; J. S. Hill, $10; Rev. Charles Voysey, $5; K. Napier, 10 cts.; New England News Co., $17.55; J. Boeck, $1.50; Mrs. Isabella G. Hardy, 50 cts.; W. H. Goddard, 30 cts.; J. E. Williams, 50 cts.; E. E. Potter, $1.25; Herbert B. Fletcher, $1.50; Abner Forbes, $1; S. R. Filley, $2; J. Fisher, $2; Edward Dewey, $2; Abner French, $2; A. Fleming, 50 cts.; M. S. Nichols, $1.50; L. S. Bryant, $1; Wm. Hill, $1; Hon. G. Hoadley, $5; A. L. Grinnell, $2; Wm. I. Davis, $2; Rev. D. G. Thompson, $2; Wm. Garaborn, $2; S. G. Coray, $1; Tiffany Brockway, $2; Jno. W. Tuttle, 10 cts.; P. P. Field, 50 cts.; Buhler & Bro., $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—THE INDEX is payable in advance. Its friends should not be offended if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tags. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—If your INDEX mail-tag is not changed within three weeks after renewing your subscription, please notify us immediately. But do not write before the expiration of that time.

N. B.—In case of any error in your mail-tag, always state the post-office at which the paper is received, and also the name just as it is now printed. Then state any desired corrections.

RECEIVED.

LECTURES ON THE TRUTH OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION. Delivered before the Students of the University of Michigan, on Sunday Afternoons. By Prof. B. F. COCKER, D. D. Published at the Request of the Senior Class. Ann Arbor, Mich.: GILMORE AND FISKE, Booksellers. 1872. 8vo. pp. 188.

THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY ON "THE RELIGION OF CUSTOM." A Sermon preached at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, July 14th, 1872.

THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER EXAMINED IN THE LIGHT OF THE PRESENT AGE. By WILLIAM JEVONS.—THE PRAYER BOOK ADAPTED TO THE AGE. By WILLIAM JEVONS.—CRITICAL INTRODUCTION. By THOMAS WILKINSON. All published by THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., Mount Pleasant, Ramsgate, England.

THE NEW TESTAMENT BROWN IN ITS TRUE LIGHT. By J. P. WHITFIELD. Chicago: Office of THE LIBERAL, 163 Madison Street.

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR July, 1872. Washington: GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE. 1872.

THE MANCHESTER FRIEND for July, 1872. London: F. BOWTER KITTO, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without.

THE JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY for July, 1872. St. Louis: E. P. GRAY.

LITTLE'S LIVING AGE. No. 1444. LITTLE & GAY, No. 50, Bromfield St., Boston. $3.00 a year.

OLD AND NEW. August, 1872. Published Monthly. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS, 143 Washington St. $4.00 a year.

THE RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE AND MONTHLY REVIEW. August, 1872. Rev. JOHN H. MORRISON, D. D., Editor. Boston: LEONARD C. BOWLES. $5.00 a year.

THE LADIES' OWN MAGAZINE. Mrs. M. CORA BLAND, Editor and Proprietor. Chicago: Office 325 West Madison St. $1.50 a year.

INDEX TRACTS

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, or REPRESENTATIVE PAPERS FROM THE INDEX, contains the "Fifty Affirmations and Modern Principles" it gives a bird's-eye view of Free Religion as conceived by the Editor of THE INDEX, and states the "irrepressible conflict" between it and Christianity. Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the Editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my innermost heart; and I agree to almost every word." PRICE—Ten Cents (New Edition.)

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, an eloquent and beautiful discourse by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents a conception of him that is worthy of the nineteenth century. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of England, who has recently been deprived of his benefice by the ecclesiastical courts on account of his bold and outspoken heresies, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. Passages sustaining the argument are copiously quoted, with references to chapters and verses in every instance, and no able, fairer, or more high-toned treatise on the subject can be found in the English language. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is a complete exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the system of Foreign Missions. Full of Errors, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Also, a very remarkable article by a Siamese Buddhist is appended, giving an account of a spicy conversation between himself and a missionary. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Six copies Fifty Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution? Would it be right to incorporate Religious Dogmas into the United States Constitution? By Rev. ARTHUR B. BRADFORD. A very clear, pointed, and able argument against the Proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution, which ought to be circulated throughout the country. PRICE—Single Copies Ten Cents; Six Copies Fifty Cents; Twelve Copies One Dollar.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by PARKER PILLSBURY, is a scathing denunciation of Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, is a singularly felicitous treatment of a subject that interests everybody. PRICE—Single copies Five Cents; Twelve copies Fifty Cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, contains in full the Call for the Cincinnati Convention of the "National Reform Association," which proposes to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution,—the list of its most prominent supporters,—and a full exposure of the dangerous and revolutionary character of the movement. PRICE—Single Copies, Five Cents; Twelve Copies, Fifty Cents.

Also, The Bible Argument Against Woman Suffrage, and Answered from a Bible Standpoint, a pungent pamphlet by J. GROVER, is for sale at THE INDEX OFFICE. PRICE—Single copies Ten Cents; Twelve copies One Dollar.

Address, THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

BACK NUMBERS

THE RADICAL

FOR SALE CHEAP.

Parties sending to my address One Dollar or more, will receive liberal packages, according to the amount.

Address S. H. MORSE, 25 BRONFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.

F. J. SCOTT, J. H. STOPPLET,

ARCHITECTS,

75 MADISON STREET (Near Boody House), TOLEDO, [180-181]

Back Numbers of the Index!

FOR 1870 AND 1871.

IT is no longer possible to furnish a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning, whether bound or unbound. But we have on hand a large number of single copies, some of them containing the most valuable articles hitherto published. These will be mailed to any address at

Twenty-five Cents a Dozen!

Persons ordering copies of any particular date will be supplied, if possible. It is hoped that friends interested in the Free Religious movement will send in their orders at once, as much good can be done in this way at small cost.

Address THE INDEX, Toledo, Ohio.

Guns for the People.

Breech-Loading Double Guns, $40 to $300. Double-Barrel Shot-Guns $25 to $150. Single Guns, $3 to $20. Breech-Loading and Repeating Rifles, $20 to $100. Revolvers $6 to $25. Pistols $2 to $5. SEND STAMP FOR PRICE-LIST TO GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, P. O. Box 1979, Pittsburgh, Pa.

N. B.—Army Guns, Revolvers, etc., bought or traded for. [187-187ew]

THE EXAMINER.—A limited number of Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 will be sent postpaid—the four numbers for 30 cents. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 for 40 cents. Nos. 1 and 3 for 20 cents. No. 1 for 10 cents. What remain of full sets are reserved for binding. Zion's Herald says:—"The boldest heretic of today." The Independent says:—"The most pronounced radical in the land." The Chicago Post says:—"Equal to the writings of Theodore Parker." Address THE EXAMINER, Winnetka, Ill., where the numbers for sale remain. [186-187]

ENGLISH AND FRENCH FAMILY AND DAY SCHOOL.

87 W. Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

MISS C. E. NOURSE will re-open her School for Young LADIES and CHILDREN, Monday, Sept. 22. Her address during the summer will be No. 23 Derne St., Boston, and from Sept. 1 as above. [185-143.]

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

Capital, $100,000.

Shares, $100.

OFFICERS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON,
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
P. H. BATESON,
A. E. MACOMBER,

President.
Vice President.
Secretary.
Treasurer.

DIRECTORS:

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON,
WILLIAM J. POTTER,
ASA K. BUTTS,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL,
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
A. E. MACOMBER,
CALVIN E. ABBOT,
EDWARD BISSELL,
P. H. BATESON.

Newport, R. I.
New Bedford, Mass.
New York, N. Y.
Boston, Mass.
Toledo, O.
" "
" "
" "
" "

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

D. E. LOCKE,	Toledo, O.,	Twenty Shares,	$2,000
A. E. MACOMBER,	" "	Fifteen "	1,500
C. COKE,	" "	" "	1,000
EDWARD BISSELL,	" "	" "	1,000
F. E. ABBOT,	" "	Forty "	4,000
H. L. HOLLOWAY,	" "	Ten "	1,000
GUIDO MARX,	" "	" "	1,000
P. H. BATESON,	" "	" "	1,000
E. P. BARNETT,	" "	" "	1,000
H. E. HOWE,	" "	Three "	300
W. C. FISK,	" "	" "	300
J. M. RITCHIE,	" "	" "	300
V. KEEN,	" "	" "	300
ALANSON WOOD,	" "	" "	300
WILLIAM KRAUS,	" "	Five "	500
J. G. HOLZWARTH,	" "	One "	100
JOS. E. MARK,	" "	" "	100
C. ACCHARD,	New York, N. Y.,	Thirty "	3,000
ASA K. BUTTS,	Newport, R. I.,	Two "	200
T. W. HIGGINSON,	Franklin, Pa.,	Five "	500
ALEX. COCHRAN,	Cincinnati, O.,	Two "	200
GEO. HOADLY,	Delfiance, Pa.,	One "	100
MISS A. HALL,	Northampton, Mass.,	" "	100
G. N. JENNINGS,	Tonica, Ill.,	" "	100
J. S. JENNINGS,	Fairbairn, Minn.,	" "	100
CARL POPE,	Monroe, Mich.,	Three "	300
HENRY MILLER,	Sacramento, Cal.,	Five "	500
L. R. SUNDERLAND,	Quincy, Mass.,	One "	100
J. L. WHITING,	Boston, N. H.,	" "	100
LOUIS BRISTOL,	Croydon, N. H.,	" "	100
J. E. SUTTON,	Olathe, Kan.,	" "	100
SAM. T. DUKES,	" "	" "	100
J. M. HADLEY,	" "	" "	100
S. L. HILL,	Florence, Mass.,	Ten "	1,000
W. H. SPENCER,	Haverhill, Mass.,	Two "	200
JOS. F. BARNETT,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	200
E. W. WELLS,	La Grange, Ind.,	" "	200
FRANK PRATHER,	Wellsville, Mass.,	Five "	500
E. F. DICKINSON,	New York, N. Y.,	One "	100
J. T. DICKINSON,	Middlefield, N. Y.,	Fourteen "	1,400
W. J. POTTER,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Three "	300
G. C. GLATTE,	Kendallville, Ind.,	" "	300
W. C. GANNETT,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	300
MISS M. C. PERKINS,	" "	One "	100
MRS. S. EMMERSON,	Dover, N. H.,	" "	100
MISS E. EMMERSON,	" "	" "	100
W. H. DOWD,	" "	" "	100
B. B. SMITH,	Birmingham, Ala.,	" "	100
R. B. SMITH,	Lansing, Mich.,	" "	100
W. C. RUSSEL,	Warren, Pa.,	" "	100
WM. CLARK,	Ithaca, N. Y.,	" "	100
C. L. SMITH,	Toledo, O.,	Three "	300
J. N. LYMAN,	" "	One "	100
L. C. ELY,	Cincinnati, O.,	Twenty "	2,000
A. FOLLOM,	Monroe Centre, Mass.,	One "	100
L. O. BASS,	Colebrook, Conn.,	Three "	300
S. E. SEWALL,	Boston, Mass.,	Five "	500
ELIUR WRIGHT,	" "	" "	500
E. B. WARD,	Detroit, Mich.,	Twenty "	2,000
A. D. WILT,	Dayton, O.,	One "	100
S. S. BOWEN,	Keokuk, Iowa,	" "	100
WM. JONES,	Peekskill, N. Y.,	" "	100
S. E. DANE,	Oskaloosa, Iowa,	" "	100
J. H. YORR,	Dover, N. H.,	" "	100
JOS. HAYES,	" "	" "	100
G. P. FOLLOM,	" "	" "	100
"A FRIEND,"	" "	" "	100
MRS. H. E. PERKINS,	" "	Two "	200
WILLIAM GREEN,	Boston, Mass.,	One "	100
"A FRIEND,"	Orange, N. J.,	" "	100
"A FRIEND,"	Lowell, Mass.,	" "	100
D. B. STEINMAN,	Brattleboro, Vt.,	" "	100
Mrs. F. W. CHRISTIAN,	New York, N. Y.,	" "	100
C. W. FARGOT,	Kelly's Island, O.,	Two "	200
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	One "	100
Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT,	" "	" "	100
MISS M. A. WAGNETT,	Jersey City, N. J.,	" "	100
A. S. BROWN,	Worcester, Mass.,	" "	100
EDWIN BROWN,	" "	" "	100
R. P. HALLOWELL,	Boston, Mass.,	Five "	500
BENJ. RODMAN,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Three "	300
H. B. CLARKE,	" "	" "	300
FRANK J. SCOTT,	Toledo, O.,	Six "	600
M. L. HOLBROOK,	Honolulu, Me.,	One "	100
W. H. BOUGHTON,	New York, N. Y.,	" "	100
HERBERT H. RICHARDSON,	" "	" "	100
E. G. BURNETT,	Webster, Mass.,	Two "	200
J. E. FOLLETT,	Winona, Minn.,	One "	100
JOS. WARRASSE,	Newton, N. J.,	" "	100
T. M. LANE,	Franklin, Pa.,	" "	100
W. H. DYKE,	Worcester, Mass.,	" "	100
W. H. SPALDING,	Princeton, N. J.,	" "	100
LOUIS BELMONT,	Duluth, Minn.,	" "	100
LEWIS KURTZ,	Augusta, Kan.,	Two "	200
SAM'L WARRASSE,	La Fayette, N. J.,	" "	100
W. L. RAYNE,	Amesbury, Mass.,	" "	100
M. EMMERSON,	Boston, Mass.,	" "	100
C. H. HOSCHKE,	Dover, N. H.,	Two "	200
MISS J. THOMSON,	" "	One "	100
BENJ. HALLOWELL,	Sandy Spring, Md.,	" "	100
Mrs. M. R. VAN KENSLEY,	N. Y. City, N. Y.,	" "	100
R. B. STONE,	Warren, Penn.,	" "	100
WM. ROTCH,	Fall River, Mass.,	Two "	200
MRS. J. WHITAKER,	New Bedford, Mass.,	Five "	500
S. H. ROYCE,	Kerkonkson, N. Y.,	One "	100
MRS. R. D. FRANCIS,	Boston Highlands, Mass.,	Two "	200
CHAR. BONALL,	Salem, N. Y.,	" "	100
G. H. BRIGGS,	Amesbury, Mass.,	Two "	200
J. T. CLARKSON,	" "	" "	200
G. W. NEWTON,	Castleton, Ill.,	One "	100
ENRY KILBY,	Toledo, O.,	Two "	200
OTTO KLEIN,	" "	" "	200
H. G. NEUBERT,	" "	One "	100
A. RUMST,	" "	Two "	200
TOLEDO PRINTING CO.,	Detroit, Mich.,	Thirty "	3,000
T. K. PECK,	Co. Toledo, O.,	Thirty "	3,000
" "	Westminster, Ct.,	Two "	200

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

With offices at 90 St. Clair Street, TOLEDO, O., and 22 Vesey Street, NEW YORK CITY, has been organized with a Capital Stock of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion. It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions. THE INDEX is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, of New York City.
THOMAS W. HIGGINSON, of Newport, R. I.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, of New Bedford, Mass.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, of Boston, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, of Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, of Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, of London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, of Weston super Mare, Eng.
Rev. MONCURE D. CONWAY, of London, England.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism.

Every Christian minister and every thinking church-member should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid and most scholarly expositor of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Send $2.00 for one year, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

New Tracts!

Intended to Teach Religion Without Superstitions.

FIRST SERIES.....No. 1 to No. 30

SECOND SERIES.....No. 31 to No. 60

Either Series, 30 Cents; Both, 50 Cents.

Address CHAS. E. WHIPPLE,
[35-38] 19 PINEBURY ST., BOSTON.

GIVEN AWAY

TO ANY BOOK AGENT,

A $5.00 GREENBACK

AND A SPECIMEN OF THE

GREAT INDUSTRIES

OF THE UNITED STATES.

1800 PAGES AND 500 ENGRAVINGS.

PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

Written by 30 Eminent Authors, including Horace Greeley and John B. Gough.

We want Agents in every town to solicit orders for this work, on liberal terms. It sells to all classes, and no library should be without it. It is a complete history of all branches of industry, processes of manufactures, etc. No like work ever before published. One agent sold 138 in eight days, another 358 in two weeks. An early application will secure a choice in territory. Full particulars and terms will be sent free, with a specimen of this Great Work, and a $5 Greenback.

[126-151.] J. B. BURR & HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

SALEMEN WANTED.—I wish to employ as Commercial Travellers three young men of good character, industrious habits and fair address. Must be hearty Radicals and glad to devote spare time to canvassing for THE INDEX. State particulars as to experience, references and expectations. Address A. K. BUTTS, Care Lock Box 38, Toledo, Ohio.

HALL'S MAGIC SHADE FIXTURES!

An ingenious arrangement by which a Shade may be rolled down from the top, or raised from the bottom of the window, or both, as may be desired; thus securing PERFECT VENTILATION, GOOD LIGHT, and at the same time COMPLETE PRIVACY in the room.

They are an admirable and cheap substitute for Inside Blinds.

Are easily attached to Shades now in use. Are especially adapted for Office and Store Windows.

For sale by dealers in shades generally.

MANUFACTURED BY THE

CHICAGO CURTAIN FIXTURE COMPANY.

101 WEST LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

[1871]

THE series of "INDEX TRACTS" (No. 1 to No. 10) will be sent postpaid on receipt of sixty cents. These include "Truths for the Times" (of which Mr. Charles Darwin, author of "The Origin of Species," says:—"I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my innermost heart; and I agree to almost every word"); "Lecture on the Bible," by Rev. Charles Voysey; "Christian Propagandism," by F. E. ABBOT; "God in the Constitution," by Rev. A. B. BRADFORD; "The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury; "The Present Heaven," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; "The Christian Amendment," by F. E. ABBOT. This series contains in the aggregate over two hundred pages of closely printed reading matter. Address THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio.

FOR ENGLISH AND AMERICAN BOOKS of all kinds, send to J. F. RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich. [186ewf]

The Index.

Two Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Five Cents.

VOLUME 3.

TOLEDO, O., AND NEW YORK, AUGUST 31, 1872.

WHOLE No. 140.

The Index

Accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love. The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B. No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual contributions. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS PROTERINGHAM, THOMAS WESTWORTH HIGGINSON, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD F. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), Rev. MORDECAI D. CONWAY (England), Editorial Contributors.
P. H. BATESON, Business Agent.

The Religion of Custom.

BY THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY.

A SERMON PREACHED AT ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE, JULY 14TH, 1872.

"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye."—ACTS, IV, 19.

Conformity to custom may be innocent or guilty. Just as conformity to our natural impulses is, more often than it is not, perfectly innocent and justifiable, so conformity to custom is in general perfectly innocent and justifiable. But as in the one, so also in the other there are times when compliance is wrong and culpable. Now and then, in varying frequency, men are checked in the indulgence of their natural desires by the voice of conscience, which absolutely forbids such and such an action. It can hardly be doubted that everything is lawful to a man which his own conscience unmistakably sanctions, and that in proportion as he takes conscience for his guide, and cultivates it by earnest obedience, he will become more and more master of himself, and therefore more wise and good.

Now compliance with custom is generally a very innocent and proper thing. Being comparatively easy, and requiring scarcely any moral effort, it can hardly deserve the name of virtue but still it is good so far as it goes, and helps largely to preserve social order, and even domestic happiness. But there are times when compliance is no longer innocent, but absolutely wrong; when conscience as plainly forbids compliance as it plainly forbids the unlawful gratification of some natural desire. And wherever individuals have violated the laws of custom at the bidding of conscience, there has been for its result the same elevation of society as takes place in the whole nature of the individual when he subdues his natural impulses at the bidding of conscience. All that is good and exalted in the customs of English society to-day may be traced back from stage to stage to the moral courage of some one or two individuals who broke through the established usages, and at the cost of much social obloquy chose the approval of conscience rather than the praise of men. It is in this way that the standard of public opinion is ever gradually rising. A custom may prevail a long time without being challenged, until some one man arises fortified only by a strong sense of duty and makes his protest heard. His own generation, of course, condemn him; but the next generation, having had time to test the merits of the protest, adopt that one man's higher law and make it their own. As time advances, defects hitherto unperceived are detected in like manner through the moral superiority of an individual or two, and the same process is repeated, the same ill-treatment of the innovator by society, and the same subsequent triumph of the usage or principle for which he had suffered.

There are those who point to the many and deep immoralities of our own times and people as tokens, not of an elevation but of a degradation of public opinion. But in spite of all the facts which I have no desire to palliate or to gloss over, public opinion was never more healthy than it is now; in spite of its many terrible shortcomings, it may contrast most favorably with any preceding age in our country's history.

There is an abundance of shameless lying, of direct statement of untruth, and still more of vile insinuations, misrepresentations, and distortions of facts, made use of for base purposes; but those who use such methods are ashamed to own it, and pretend all the while to have a high regard for truth. Why? Because public opinion with us is now decidedly on the side of truth and honest speech. There is an abundance of fraud and trickery in our trade; our walls are covered with advertisements, many of which are intended to deceive and defraud. Commerce is known to be conducted in many instances according to trade customs, which no one ever ventures to approve or to justify on moral grounds. It is looked upon as a sort of war in which any stratagem is considered to be fair. But side by side with this, gigantic efforts are being made to stem the flood of immoral custom, and hardly a man in business but bewails the lamentably rotten condition of things in which he finds himself. Public opinion is on the side of honesty and fair dealing. It is not so very long ago that duelling and pugilism were driven out from amongst us by public opinion. Before long betting and gambling will follow them into disgrace. Though no one will yet venture to prophesy the extinction of war, it is manifest that everything is tending to lead us to settle our disputes by arbitration rather than by shot and shell. The abolition of capital punishment for all crimes but that of murder marks another step in advance, while the speakers at the Conference relating to Prison discipline furnish a remarkable instance of the elevation of public opinion, through the powerful influence of one or two determined innovators. The humane principles of Howard and Mrs. Fry, though much laughed at in their day, are spreading rapidly over the present generation.

Perhaps the worst feature on the other side is the overwhelming love of money, which may fairly be called the real religion of England. Public opinion does not openly say, "You may do anything for money." But there is scarcely anything it will not tacitly excuse or palliate for the sake of wealth. It is true we have no churches or temples built for the worship of the golden idol, but that is because our belief in it is so strong, and our homage so real and devout, that such lip service is not needed to kindle or to quicken our adoration. Just as some men's lives are spent in conscious devotion to what they believe to be the will of God, and are ever in peace by a sense of His friendliness, so the lives of others are ruled all along by the service of mammon; every step they take is guided by it, every interest of their whole being is centred in the great object of getting rich; and all their peace of mind is drawn from the amount of wealth which they have accumulated. Without attempting to disguise the prevalence and intensity of this worship of money, we find, even here, tokens of a rise in public opinion. Men no longer seek to be rich for mere money's sake. They no longer hoard, and store, and live in swinish misery, as the old school of misers did, for the sake of looking at and counting their golden coin; but they seek to be rich—some that they may gain power, some to gain the smiles and favors of society, when they possess no other attraction, and most of them seek wealth for the salvation of themselves and their families—to lift themselves above the rising tide of misery and high prices. With them, it is a struggle for existence, and we blame them not. It is perhaps but an excessive action of parental instinct, which, if a man have not in his breast, he is rightly condemned. So I gather, even from this wide-spread worship of money, the conviction that the standard of public opinion is really rising, in spite of all the dark side of the picture on which I have not touched, the unworthy means used to gain wealth, and the unworthy method in which it is too often ostentatiously squandered.

One more feature of society which I must notice will bring us more immediately to the subject of my discourse, namely, conformity to custom. Almost superior to the worship of money is the worship of society by itself. Money is, indeed, widely pursued that it may qualify for admission into society. But here we must bear in mind that society is really broken up into several distinct circles, all more or less exclusive, and only touching each other at the circumferences. The members of each circle bow down before the custom and public opinion of their own society as to a goddess. They are more or less in a state of abject slavery to their own little circle of public opinion. They put the oracles of this goddess before them as the Divine law of their lives; the controller and dictator of their spoken opinions, and of their professed religion. This goddess will enforce on you ready-made principles, ready-made habits, ready-made creeds. Whether you aspire to the deanery of a cathedral, or to the deaconship of a Salem chapel, according to your rank in life, you cannot get your wish but by the most faithful and untiring obedience to the goddess of custom. There is nothing before you but dismay and disappointment, perhaps, also, temporal ruin, if you venture to think and to speak your own free thought, to turn aside by a hair's breadth from the orbit of custom laid down for you and your brother planets in your own little solar system. Far more binding than the decrees of popes and councils, more threatening than the denunciations of Sinai, more terrible than the prospect of everlasting woe is the decree of your goddess, her denunciation of your restlessness, her doom of your rebellion. The worst terrors of religion lie far away. Hell cannot frighten you much when you are basking in the smiles of the world and have plenty of money. The ten commandments you can explain away if they are at all obstructive. But the goddess sits hard by on her throne, and her system is prompt and inevitable—a word and a blow. One warning given, and often not even that, and vengeance overtakes you swiftly, ruthlessly, and leaves its scar on your limbs that you may be branded as a deserter or traitor for the rest of your life. If you offend but in one point, you are treated as if you were guilty of all.

Now to speak without metaphor, I affirm that the chief hold which a given religion has upon a people is due to the authority of the goddess custom. Before that religion becomes the fashion, it is execrated as heresy, ever afterwards it is orthodox, and only heresy to deny it. The half-pagan compound called Christianity was itself a heresy until an emperor became a Christian. Protestantism was the vilest abomination, even amongst us Englishmen, until King Henry VIII found it useful to him in his domestic relations, and threw aside the old Roman bondage. And I deliberately say that what is now called Orthodoxy to-day in this country, and in our colonies, owes the strongest part of its hold over the people to nothing but fashion. The goddess custom is far too strong to allow of rebellion on the part of a whole nation at once. One or two must first defy her rule and strike the blow for their own liberties, and then the revolution will surely, though silently follow. Shall we always have this goddess to reign over us, or will the day ever dawn in which society will only exist for the perfect enfranchisement of the individual, and a willing conformity be substituted for one that is enforced? We cannot answer this question; but if we know anything of our own struggles and difficulties, we shall leave behind us warnings enough against the despotism of custom.

Let us look at the state of average religious prosperous people in this country. We cannot, of course, give the actual figures without a process of examination that would be impossible. But observation during the last five years, private correspondence which is enormous, and private conversations innumerable force us to believe that out of the church-going people, not more than half, if so many, really believe the religion they profess. They go to church purely because the practice is enjoined in the Goddess's Decalogue, because custom demands it, and they can neither be successful in trade, nor in the learned professions, nor be visited by the persons whose society they seek, unless they keep this law. If the change could be effected with a decent amount of slowness and deceit, they would accept Brahminism, or Mohammedanism, or any other creed without a murmur, as long as they were not called upon to notice the difference between that and Christianity, and so long as they might keep their pews and society made no objection to the change. Of these, and such like men and women, are the buttresses of the State religion built up. The real believers, on the other hand, whenever they are consistent and active, are a great peril to the Church, are always, by their earnestness, being led on to some developed idea which occasions dispute and often ends in litigation; sometimes in schism. But for strength and durability, there is no support like the support of thousands, millions, of people who don't care a straw what the creeds are or what the minister may read or preach, so long as society goes to hear him. These are the warp and woof of the prevailing religion, and nothing but the decay of Nature and the ravages of the moth of time will diminish their obstructive power. In every one of these religious circles, however, there are continually arising individuals whose consciences tell them that conformity to the fashionable religion is wrong; that custom has usurped the very throne and sceptre of the most High; and that it has become their duty to turn round and brave the tide of public opinion. There is not, I say, in all England, nay in all Christendom, a sect which has not now its heretics.

Let us see what is the prevailing attitude of these rebels against Orthodoxy. They may be roughly divided into three classes.

1. There are those who, having utterly discarded their old belief, and having gone a long way towards embracing a higher religion—so far indeed as to be satisfied that their secret convictions are true, yet will not venture to face the opposition and persecution to which an open avowal of their opinions would expose them. They still play the part of the orthodox while they believe in their hearts that orthodoxy is a lie. They still rigidly conform to the usages of society, attending Church or Chapel with regularity, and suffering their children to be brought up at orthodox schools, so that they may not be looked upon with coldness or shut out from the gaieties of the world. They will scrupulously avoid congregating with those whom they most agree with, lest the world should suspect them of being unorthodox—i. e., out of fashion. Their whole religious life is one of hypocrisy, and, supposing that they are wealthy enough to be secure of the means of livelihood, their only motive in concealing their opinions is to save themselves trouble. They deliberately prefer ease to duty. They know that every voice raised in protest against detected error and falsehood is of incalculable value, and yet they remain silent. Truth, although made so clear to their minds, does not seem worth any sacrifice, and they, at all events, will have nothing to do with it, but leave to others the perilous and despised occupation of setting free the slaves of superstition.

2. The second class of heretics differ not outwardly from the first; though their heresy is the same, and their continued conformity the same, yet their motive or excuse is entirely different. They are in such a position that they depend on their orthodoxy for bread, and what is far worse, they have families or relations dependent on them, and the sacrifice is too awful to be contemplated. Let not any one imagine that the day of persecution, or even the possibilities of martyrdom, are passed. Cases are continually coming under my notice which make my heart heavy with sorrow. Cases of men made poor and nearly friendless, of families reduced almost to beggary, by the bigotry of those who have discovered their heterodoxy; and I say it is not for us to dictate to any man what sacrifices he ought to make for his religious opinions. Only a man's own conscience can direct him in such a matter. But the fact that there is such a class, kept down under the heel of orthodoxy by the dread of public opinion, is enough to rouse our rebellious indignation to the very depths. Think what a result would follow if we could canvass the people of this country by a genuine ballot upon the question of their religious opinion! The issue would, I feel sure, strike a panic into the very heart of orthodoxy and make even Rome tremble to her foundations. But the mass of men and women who are thus silenced are not free but slaves. No despotism ever heard of is so organized, so complete, so cruel. People are afraid of each other, and while half the ministers and hierarchy know this as well as we do, and rejoice in it as their only hope of keeping things quiet, the other half are deceived by the prevailing conformity into the notion that the mass of men and women really believe in Christianity. Such a canvass as I describe would indeed open their eyes.

3. The third class of heretics are few in number; it is in the very nature of things that they should be few. They are produced only by the prevailing cowardice and slavery. When these pass away, there is little left to call forth their courage, or fanaticism, or whatever it is that makes them open antagonists of the religion of Custom. These few are those whose consciences have driven them to make public confession of the abandonment of their old errors, and of the acceptance of a higher faith; they choose to obey God rather than men. Some have made this confession by word of mouth, others by writing books, pamphlets and letters duly signed in their own names; others by joining heterodox societies, giving their open adhesion, and in many instances their liberal support, to those who are working for the same end. Others—the most honored of all—have given not only the little money they could spare, but also much precious time and labor to the work, to the detriment of their own business, and at the cost of many valuable friends. The day draws near when the great host of freethinkers will be marshalled in battle array, and where one poor, trembling, but brave outpost stood alone, the ground will be heavy with the tramp of armies. The courage needed now will be wanted then no longer. The struggle of this class, with the mighty powers that be, has been sharp and painful, but it cannot last much longer, and the costly efforts and manifold attacks of to-day will be exchanged for the spoils of war, and the repose of a magnificent triumph. The list of pioneers must soon be closed.

My friends and brothers, if we have any share in this great war, however small it be, oh do not let us forget, in the tremendous interest of present details, the real issue which is at stake. We want not merely to overthrow all falsehood and superstition; but we want to set up forever the principles of true liberty, to break the yoke, once and for all, of the tyranny of custom and public opinion. Even to defend our own higher faith, we ought to scorn such help as that of the pressure of custom and fashion. We ought to bequeath to those that come after us this our dying protest—"God made men to be free, and not slaves." Neither slaves to an arbitrary despot, crowned though he be with the prestige of a thousand royal ancestors. No! Nor yet slaves of the puny men and women whose imbecile following of prevailing opinion and custom mark their incompetence to rule the lives of great-hearted men. Never place yourselves under the crushing wheels of the car of our English Juggernaut, nor suffer the Goddess Custom, in anything great or small, to make you her slave. Be independent at heart, and you may then make what concessions you please without forfeiting your manhood; but once feel "I cannot do this," or, "I must do that for fear of what other people may say of me," and your birthright has been bartered away, your manhood despoiled, and your boasted English liberty exchanged for the fetters of the slave. If conscience be worth anything, it will yet conquer society as it has conquered individual men and women, and surely no plainer words does it ever speak than these, "We ought to obey God rather than men."

ENGLISH HERETICS.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

(By Thomas Westworth Higginson, in the New York Independent.)

One Sunday evening, in London, I walked, under the pilotage of Mr. Odger, to the new Hall of Science, in Old street, City Road. My companion strode along beside me—short, erect, square-shouldered, resolute—making his way through the crowd like some bluff little English brig, driving doggedly through a heavy sea. I was too busy in conversation to heed through what streets we went, only that we threaded a maze of highways and byways, all densely filled with lower-class Londoners, out for their Sunday evening airing. I remember the young workmen, such as Dickens describes, dressed in their best, to lean against lamp-posts all day; and I can recall the hordes of bonnetless girls, Arabs of the street, yet less visibly degraded than those to be seen of a Sunday evening in Edinburgh or Glasgow. I remember, too, an occasional temperance orator holding forth on the sidewalk to some knot of people, who looked as if they needed his ministrations more than they enjoyed them. And out of these groups we presently passed through a low doorway, into the New Hall of Science.

Our fourpences being duly paid, the inner door opened, and we looked upon a scene such as must always be intellectually interesting, whether the scene be hall or church or hillside—a crowd of people in the grasp of a born orator. The very first glance showed that one might as well deny that epithet to Gough or Beecher as to Bradlaugh. The scene told its own story. There were perhaps fifteen hundred people in the Hall, many of whom were standing, all listening closely. The small platform, too, was full, and at its front edge stood the speaker, as near as he could get to his audience—so near, indeed, that one foot rested on the railing, as if he were prepared to spring over at any moment on an opponent. The man himself was over six feet in height, powerfully built, with a fine, commanding head, reminding me at first, as did his whole bearing, of Chief-Justice Chase in his prime. This is saying a good deal for the personal appearance of any one; but truth compels me to add that the lower part of the face by no means bore out the general effect. If the brow was statesmanlike, yet the mouth had a look of the demagogue.

There was something in the voice, too, which suggested a tinge of suspicion; and yet it was the voice of a born orator—full, sonorous, varied, penetrating, sympathetic, subtle. He was free from the extravagances of action which mar Gough's eloquence, and from Beecher's extremes of vocal gymnastics. I should class him rather with Frederick Douglass in natural grasp and range of oratorical effects. This is high praise; but after all, you are struck with the power of the man in Bradlaugh, while with Douglass you are carried along by the subject, and only remember afterward how great was the power of the man. This marks, I suppose, the higher grade of eloquence—to make conversions.

Mr. Bradlaugh is not, as many people suppose, a mechanic. I believe that he is an attorney's clerk. He was dressed in black that night, with a flower in his buttonhole. His intonations showed some cultivation, and I observed that he claimed knowledge of French and Hebrew. There was nothing coarse or vulgar in his style. On the contrary, considering his subject and his audience, it seemed to me that he held himself and them up—above a low and abusive tone—in a way that surprised me. His theme was "Jehovah." We know how the average "village blasphemer," as Emerson says, would handle that theme—what texts he would make the most of, what phrases he would cite. The thing which surprised me was that this speaker took a higher line of argument. Undoubtedly, much that he said would have shocked any evangelical believer; but my point is that many an American freethinker, of far better reputation than Bradlaugh's would have shocked them with more justice. I make no claim to represent evangelical believers; but I think I know the difference between a merely coarse and virulent style of argument and one that is thoughtful and discriminating. What surprised me was that this speaker kept himself on so high a level. "I am not a mocker," he said. "I wish to avoid mockery, and to guard you against it." I do not wish to make you mere unbelievers. Mere unbelief is a poor thing. I would not care to make infidels who could only disbelieve. You should disbelieve what is false, in order that you may believe what is true." And it is fair to say that this was the key-note of his address.

Yet he made a good point in favor of the negative style of reasoning where necessary. "People complain," he said, "whenever you appear to be destroying and not creating. Why so? You prepare your garden bed for planting by first clearing it of weeds. Nobody calls to you over the fence to rebuke you for not planting and weeding at the same time. There is a time to weed and a time to plant. To-night I am weeding. Let me alone."

The tone of all this seemed to me very different from the tone of Atheism thirty years ago. His attitude in regard to the Bible was still further unlike the old Atheism. I remember when to men of his stamp the whole Bible was a mere forgery, and the whole priesthood a body of liars. But he conceded honesty, at least, to the writers, and did not charge absolute dishonesty on the expounders. "The Bible was not a forgery, in any sense," he said, "either as a whole or in its parts. It was a natural outgrowth of the mind of man; grew up as all other books have grown, as the world itself has grown." He disclaimed all hostility to the Book itself; only to the effort to give it a meaning which, as he maintained, was never intended by its writers. This attitude in the leading Atheist of London is certainly a mark of progress, showing a tendency toward doing justice to the very religions that are attacked.

Of course, he occasionally devoted himself, as Emerson used to describe certain New England radicals as doing, "to the worrying of clergymen." I remember one hit that was heartily applauded by some of my neighbors, who had manifestly disapproved some of his other sayings. "They translate the Bible into all the languages of the world, and then meet in solemn convocation to untranslate what they have translated." There were many unexpected turns like this always given off-hand and without the slightest effect of premeditation.

He frankly avowed himself an Atheist, and on this ground defended himself from the charge of blasphemy. "They say I blaspheme. How can I? For me blasphemy is impossible. It implies belief; whereas I am an Atheist. It is you who blaspheme, if you believe in a God and yet attribute to him any action that would dishonor a man." This was Plutarch's ground, of old, stated brilliantly in his essay on "Atheism and Superstition."

But it seemed to me that the speaker never reviled religion in the old atheistic style, as a thing evil in itself; but only criticised it, in the modern scientific way, as a thing sincere, respectable, often useful, but inadequate and temporary. And I remember this distinct statement:—"Every religion is better for the people who hold it than the religion which preceded."

All this was said in a perfectly easy, colloquial, cogent way—sometimes rising to real eloquence, and again passing into keen sarcasm—with none of the awkwardness or hesitation attributed to Englishmen, and without the slightest aid from notes or memoranda. The audience, in turn, listened with absorbed attention; often applauding, but sometimes dissenting. Nine-tenths were men; almost all were well-dressed. They looked as if all classes might be represented there; and, while the majority were plainly artisans, I was afterward told that a peer of the realm stood just behind me. It certainly seemed to me that neither peer nor prelate could afford to be ignorant of these meetings; for I encountered no one in England who seemed to me to possess such a special gift of oratory. The quality in which he seemed weakest was the power of consecutive thought; but this is so commonly wanting in great "stump speakers," whether in the pulpit or out of it, that the defect is hardly a just ground of complaint. Great power in moving masses by public speech is rarely found in combination, I suspect, with the very highest intellectual endowments, though it is, doubtless, the most dazzling and popular of all.

In this case I can testify that Mr. Bradlaugh spoke for an hour and twenty minutes to an undiminished crowd, and that then, on offering to stop, he was urged to go on. Soon closing, however, he introduced Mrs. Rose, from America, who said a little in a dignified and pleasing way; after which the audience dispersed. Some lingered, however, by a table of pamphlets, political and theological, among which I noticed a "Theistic Catechism." Others adjourned to a "Republican Club," which met up stairs. I afterward met Mr. Bradlaugh in private; but I hope to have grace to say nothing about private intercourse with Englishmen, and shall not go beyond his public relations. I did not hear him speak directly on any political theme, and cannot judge of his comparative success on that ground. His friends wish to see him in Parliament, while other radicals predict for him utter failure in that novel sphere. I shall always think of him as one of the most remarkable popular orators I ever heard; and yet I cannot think of him as supplying the one thing that English republicanism seems to need—a leader.

ENGLISH HERETICS.

CHARLES VOYSEY.

[By Thomas Wentworth Higginson, in the New York Independent.]

I do not know what law of Nature it is that draws the "best society" in large cities to the West End. But preachers follow according to their kind; and, as in London you go east for Bradlaugh, so you go west for Voysey, and find him at St. George's Hall, Langham Place. And, in accordance with these more aristocratic surroundings, there still hangs round this reformer a certain odor of good society, attractive to some, while repelling others. "Why do you wish to hear Voysey?" said a radical to me. "He preaches in a surplice!" But this very ground of condemnation proves a propitiation to others; and you may see Voysey's pamphlets on the table in houses where you will only hear Bradlaugh mentioned as "the Beast."

I did not hear Mr. Voysey preach, as it happened, in surplice or otherwise; but I heard him lecture on "Church Reform," on a week-day evening, where such array would have been clearly out of place. The audience was smaller than I should have expected—perhaps two hundred; but it was one of those audiences which soon make you forget their numbers in their earnestness of response—a thing in which, as it seemed to me, the English audiences excel our own. The "hear, hear!" came with an emphasis worthy of a thousand men; and everything suggested a force to be weighed rather than counted.

And, in truth, something of this discrepancy between size and weight of metal might be attributed to the speaker also. I saw no one else in England whose photograph came so near the man. The clear eyes, the youthful look, the expression of alertness, the combined sensitiveness and decision of the mouth—these are perfectly reproduced in the likeness. I should know him anywhere after seeing the picture; but when he came on the stage it was an entire astonishment to see so small a man. When he spoke there was another astonishment, for his voice was so clear and resonant as to fill the large and half empty hall. All thought of personal insignificance vanished, and he seemed to weigh a ton.

As if to complete this vindication of the superiority of mind to numbers, the chair was taken by a Colonel somebody—a handsome Englishman, of the very best physical type and noble, manly figure, whose powerful voice and resolute, easy handling would have carried any meeting through triumphantly, I thought, had the regular orator been only a piping bulfinch. I am thus particular about these accessories, because I have seldom been present at a public demonstration where the platform did so thoroughly the work of the pews.

We are accustomed to think that Englishmen are poor speakers. In this respect I was often agreeably disappointed, and certainly I never saw a better "light weight," at least, on his own ground, than Mr. Voysey; never a man who hit straighter or harder. He may wear a surplice; but it does not encumber his arms, that is certain. His voice was very telling, as I have said; his statements were clear, his points always well taken, his illustrations apt and popular. His treatment of his subject, also, was quite new to me, and was claimed by one or two country clergymen, who spoke after him, as being a wholly new and triumphant solution of the problem.

His attitude is, in brief, one of entire opposition to both disestablishment and disendowment in the Church, and to "voluntarism" out of it. The Church, he declares, belongs to the state; and for the state to forego its control would be utter cowardice. Turn the established clergy free, with all their revenues intact, and their tyranny will be worse than ever, since there will be no law to check it. Free them from state control, even without revenues, and their dogmatism will be without limit. The people have a right to the use of these great endowments for religious purposes. On the other hand, voluntarism is a failure, except in large cities. The state, therefore, must still exercise control, and yet secure to the congregations some direct voice in the management of their churches. There must be churches. Mere intellectual education is not enough.

Here he drew a fine picture of the good done by the majority of the country clergy, their self-devotion and practical philanthropy. He spoke with real feeling and eloquence of his own enjoyment of life in the church, "a body to which I belong and in which I have served for twenty years." The Church, he thought, was a magnificent organization, which must not be destroyed, but reformed.

Church reform, without disestablishment or disendowment—this is Mr. Voysey's platform. The wealthier endowments may be cut down or differently appropriated, he thinks; but the greater part of the machinery should remain unchanged. But the Thirty-nine Articles should be abolished and the state should cease to support a creed. All doctrinal tests should be abolished, and each parish should be authorized to select its own pastor, as under the voluntary system. This should be done under proper restrictions and guarantees, not involving, however, any point of creed. If any parish choose the ministrations of an atheist, that is their own affair, Mr. Voysey thinks, and the state has no right to interfere. All that any one has a right to demand is that the personal character of the nominee be unimpeached. "If a man seeks truth," he ought to be called religious. If a man elevates human duty into a religion, he is a religious man.

With this variety of ingredients, Mr. Voysey admits that the state church will certainly be unlike anything now called by that name. But names are nothing. If the proposed organization is not a church, it is, at least, a sort of national soup-kitchen, in which all sorts of good food are brought and boiled down together. The Church of England, which is now the most inconsistent and arrogant of sects, he asserts, will thus open its doors to every honest preacher of truth, and will regain its full power over the people. So predicts Mr. Voysey—or predicted, at least, in the lecture which I heard.

One or two other speakers heartily endorsed his views, and after the proceedings there was much thronging around him in the ante-room, where there was a tableful of tracts, quite as various as Mr. Bradlaugh's. "The Sling and the Stone" especially seems to be an annual bound volume of his discourses, comprising some which the American journal, THE INDEX, has also printed. Whether Mr. Voysey's plan of Church Reform is destined, as his admirers say, to save the Church of England I am not competent to guess. But, if that Church needs preachers who are fearless, resolute, single-minded, and able, I am sure that it cannot afford to lose such men as Charles Voysey.

THE DESTRUCTION OF MR. EMERSON'S RESIDENCE.—A correspondent of the Springfield Republican says the burning of Mr. Emerson's house at Concord was not so complete a conflagration as the Boston papers represented, and the house is to be rebuilt at once on the same spot, and probably of the same form and size. The wing containing the kitchen was not burned at all, and half the walls and the lower floor of the main house are but little injured. The furniture was nearly all saved, and all of Mr. Emerson's books, manuscripts and pictures are safe, and have been deposited in a room under the town library in the public square. The books, papers and photographs in the attic, where the fire began, were more or less injured, and some of them are destroyed. The fire was probably set, for it could not have caught from the kitchen chimney, and there had been no fire for some days in the chimney near which it began. It was first discovered by Mr. Emerson himself between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning, when the flames were dropping through from the attic into a closet in his sleeping-room. He gave the alarm to his family and the neighbors, who gathered hastily, and, under his direction, with the help of the fire companies, saved the valuables and finally extinguished the fire. The fine trees about the house are uninjured, and nothing except the upper part of the main house is burned. A chimney has fallen, and the water from the engines and from subsequent rain has added to the injury done by the fire. The small amount of insurance will not cover the loss, however, and the trouble and annoyance caused by the fire to a quiet student like Mr. Emerson are very great. He has taken shelter with his family in the Old Manse, belonging to his cousins of the Ripley family, in which his father was born, and where he lived himself for awhile in 1835 before occupying the house that has just been burnt. It is said (by Hawthorne, too, if the correspondent mistakes not) that Mr. Emerson's first book, "Nature," was written in that home of his ancestors, which Hawthorne has made famous. But his own house, though much more modern, is endeared by more intimate associations than the historic Old Manse. In it his children were born, and from it his mother, his first-born son, and the last of his brothers were buried; his books were nearly all written in the now dismantled study, and there he has received hundreds, perhaps thousands, of friends and strangers, who have made pilgrimage to Concord to see and hear him. If there were any doubt or delay about rebuilding this house these friends and admirers might well put their hands to the work and rebuild it themselves, as a memorial of what they owe to the gentle spirit of its hospitable host. The plain library, with its simple book-shelves and cabinets, its heads of Dante and Carlyle and Tennyson on the walls, and Michael Angelo's "Fates" over the mantelpiece, will dwell in the memory of many a scholar, and should be as imperishable as the recollection of it in their minds, and as the thoughts that have there found expression. It is pleasant to hear that it will be restored to its old aspect and proportions. —Commonwealth.

Four little children were playing by a creek near Buffalo. One of them, a girl, fell in, but was rescued by a dog in plenty of time to be restored to life by proper remedies. Instead of taking her to a house near by, her playmates organized a prayer-meeting over the body, and put up devout petitions for her instantaneous recovery. Strange to say, she died. This is a very touching exhibition of faith, no doubt, but a slight tincture of common sense would have saved the poor child's life.

The declaration of principles adopted by the Free Christian Church of Italy, which Father Gavazzi now represents in this country, contains what is considered a sound orthodox creed. An Old School Presbyterian and a Methodist can accept it with equal heartiness. The independence of each church in local affairs is Congregational, all, however, combined into a general assembly.

MISTAKES.—Mr. Justin McCarthy says that it is the habit of Guizot to ascribe the mistakes of President Thiers to his youth and want of experience. Guizot is a mature man of nearly ninety years, while Thiers is a boyish fellow of seventy-five.

LOCAL NOTICES.

FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY.—The meetings of this Society will be suspended during the months of July and August.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

Cash Receipts for the week ending August 25th.—Aaron Brooks, $2; Hannah E. Stevenson, $10; H. L. Green, $1; John S. Scott, $2; F. W. Webber, $1; G. N. Jennings, 15 cts.; Merritt Peckham, $2; Dyer D. Lum, $1; Walter Craig, 50 cts.; N. S. Townsend, 50 cts.; Abel Edick, $2; G. S. Hall, 10 cts.; John Linke, $2; Mrs. Martin, $2; Haco Andriessen, 50 cts.; Henry Lantz, 50 cts.; S. C. Gale, $10.00; C. S. Watkins, 50 cts.; Mrs. F. W. Chastern, $20.00; Mrs. H. B. Bortwick, 10 cts.; Eliza Wright, $5.00; Wm. Becker, $10; C. E. Ash, $1; A. J. Simpson, $1; N. McLeod, 50 cts.; H. D. West, 50 cts.; Daniel McCain, $2; Geo. A. Hamilton, $2; Edward Barrean, $2; M. T. C. Flowers, $2; C. A. Fuller, $2; J. N. Poores, $2; H. M. Kent, $1; Mrs. L. C. Smith, $1.50; Geo. H. French, $2; W. J. Birchard, $2; Henry Dart, $2; Stephen Woodin, $1; W. W. Grant, $10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within two or three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or Single Numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—THE INDEX is payable in advance. Its friends should not be misled if the paper is stopped at the expiration of their terms as indicated by the mail-tags. We have no means of knowing whether they wish it continued or not except by the receipt or non-receipt of the subscription price.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—If your INDEX mail-tag is not changed within three weeks after renewing your subscription, please notify us immediately. But do not write before the expiration of that time.

N. B.—In case of any error in your mail-tag, always state the post-office at which the paper is received, and also the name just as it is now printed. Then state any desired corrections.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on New York. Cheques on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionately shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Postage on THE INDEX is five cents per quarter, dating from receipt of the first number, payable in advance at the place of delivery.

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

CAPITAL, $100,000. SHAREHOLDERS EACH $100.

The Association having assumed the publication of THE INDEX, the Directors have levied an assessment of ten per cent. on each share for the year ending Oct. 31, 1873. All future subscriptions are subject to this assessment. Not more than ten per cent. on each share can be assessed in any one year. By the original terms of subscription, the Directors are forbidden to incur any indebtedness beyond ten per cent. of the stock actually subscribed; and this provision will be strictly complied with. It is very desirable that the entire stock of the Association should be taken, and subscriptions are respectfully solicited from all friends of Free Religion.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK.

ACKNOWLEDGED elsewhere, Five Hundred Shares, $50,000
THOMAS MUMFORD,	New Harmony, Ind.,	One Share, 100
D. AYRES, JR.,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	100
MRS L. E. BLOUNT,	Baltimore, Md.,	100
—	Defiance, Ohio,	100
J. T. BRADY,	Bryan, Ohio,	100
—	Sabetha, Kan.,	100
MAX PRAGHT,	Northampton, Mass.,	100
H. HETTERMAN,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	100
C. FOLSON,	Toledo, Ohio,	100
S. C. EASTMAN,	Zanesville, Ohio,	100
J. O. MARTIN,	Palmyra, Mo.,	100
A. FOLSON,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	100
W. F. HEIKES,	Boston, Mass.,	Two 200
HIRSH COLE,	Dayton, Ohio,	100
SAMUEL COLE,	Snap'n Bridge, N. Y.,	One 100
CHARLES NASH,	Snap'n Bridge, N. Y.,	Two 200
—	Worcester, Mass.,	One 100
S. F. WOODARD,	Livonia, N. Y.,	One 100
H. A. MILLS,	Osborn, Ohio,	Two 200
J. W. BARTLETT,	Mt. Carroll, Ill.,	One 100
OSCAR ROOS,	Dover, N. H.,	100
MRS E. S. MILLER,	Taylor's Falls, Minn.,	100
JAS. R. STONE,	Geneva, N. Y.,	100
D. E. IRWIN,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	100
A. TAPP,	—	Five 500
S. L. WILDER,	—	One 100
PETER H. CLARK,	—	100
G. K. WINTINGTON,	—	100
J. T. SUTTON,	—	100
WANT. F. ADSTON,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	100
MRS C. E. NOUBER,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two 200
JAS. FISCHER,	Shreveport, La.,	One 100
G. H. HOLTMAN,	Pittsburgh, Pa.,	100
L. VON BLESSING,	N. Y. City,	Five 500
W. H. BOUGHTON,	Brooklyn, N. Y.,	One 100
W. F. CHAMBERS,	—	100
TATUS L. BROWN,	Binghampton, N. Y.,	100
A. McD. YOUNG,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	100
G. W. PECKHAM,	—	100
C. T. HAWLEY,	—	100
WM. BROOKS,	—	100
MRS. G. D. NORMA,	—	Five 500
ROBT. C. SPENCER,	—	One 100
C. M. LAUREN,	—	100
E. K. LELAND,	—	100
WM. BLACKMORE,	Falmesville, Ohio,	100
R. H. RANNEY,	Boston, Mass.,	100
O. B. BROTHINGHAM,	New York, N. Y.,	Five 500
MRS. J. G. KINLEY,	Richmond, Ind.,	One 100
J. R. WEST,	—	100
JAMES SHELDER,	—	100
JOHN E. POFF,	—	100
THOMAS DAVIS,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	100
ALXI. METZGER,	—	100
HERMANN LIEBER,	—	100
CLEMENS VONNIGT,	—	100
FRED. CHRISTMANN,	—	100
HENRY SCHULZ,	—	100
—	New Bedford, Mass.,	100
M. H. DOOLITTLE,	Washington, D. C.,	100
M. S. BRACE,	Lawrence, Kan.,	100
L. S. BACON,	—	100
C. ROBINSON,	—	100
HENRY STAGO,	St. Louis, Mo.,	100
J. C. ROONEY,	—	Two 200
JACOB SPRINKEL,	St. Joseph, Mo.,	One 100
R. P. HALLOWELL,	Boston, Mass.,	Five 500
ELIZON WRIGHT,	—	100
JAS. A. DUFRE,	—	One 100
E. S. DUNHAM,	—	100
JOHN F. MILLS,	—	100
J. C. HAYNES,	—	Three 300
O. W. PARK,	—	One 100
FREDERICK BECK,	—	100
J. W. WINKLEY,	—	100
D. J. KING,	—	100
MRS R. BOWKER,	—	100
"A Friend,"	—	100
Mrs H. E. STEVENSON,	—	Two 200
M. LUCE,	—	Two 200
HENRY N. STONE,	—	One 100
E. S. BARROWS,	Davenport, Iowa,	100
W. W. GRANT,	—	100
MRS. F. W. CHRISTIAN,	New York, N. Y.,	100
A. WEBSTER,	New York, N. Y.,	100
W. E. BOORAH,	—	100
J. LIENAG,	—	100
H. G. WHITE,	Buffalo, N. Y.,	100
R. P. DUNMORE,	New York, N. Y.,	Two 200
B. W. PIERCE,	—	Ten 1,000
JOE. T. WHITE,	—	Five 500
L. T. IVES,	Detroit, Mich.,	Two 200
E. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit, Mich.,	Five 500
EDW. M. DAVIS,	Philadelphia, Pa.,	One 100
MRS. LUCRETIA MOY,	—	100
WENNER BORCKLIN,	Burlington, Iowa,	100
D. G. CHITTENDEN,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	One 100
MRS. FRED. SIMS,	Kokuk, Iowa,	100
E. B. WOLCOTT,	Milwaukee, Wis.,	100
C. D. KENDRICK,	—	100
THOS. HOOVER,	—	100
MRS. MARY C. DAVIS,	—	Two 200
ERNEST FROTHINGHAM,	Chicago, Ill.,	Five 500
S. H. FRANK,	Boston, Mass.,	100
J. L. TAYLOR,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	Two 200
H. L. HALL,	Chicago, Ill.,	One 100
A. RETZMAN,	Wheeling, Va.,	One 100
VALENTINE LUDWIG,	Allegheny City, Pa.,	100
MRS. NANCY GERHART,	—	100
CHAR. CHURCHILL,	Cincinnati, Ohio,	100
D. J. DAYTON,	Detroit, Mich.,	100
JOHN HARPER,	Battle Creek, Mich.,	100
C. M. STILES,	—	100
E. C. STILES,	—	100
WM. NEWMAN,	—	100
W. P. WILSON,	—	100
CHAR. GRABER,	Vincennes, Ind.,	100
GURT. ZSCHOCKE,	Indianapolis, Ind.,	100
W. H. OVERTON,	Boston, Mass.,	100
O. A. NICHOLSON,	Allegheny City, Pa.,	One 100
—	Rockelle, Ill.,	100
G. M. DAUMANN,	Evansville, Ind.,	100
C. S. BURT,	Dunleith, Ill.,	100
JOHN H. LULL,	Dubuque, Iowa,	100
S. B. WEMOTT,	—	100
D. HENDERSON,	—	100
HENRY A. DEAN,	—	Two 200
CHAR. M. WETTERHED,	—	One 100
MRS. M. N. ADAMS,	Dubuque, Iowa,	One 100
MRS. MARY WESTRAL,	—	100
C. R. WOODWARD,	Cairo, Ill.,	100
H. S. BRUGHAM,	—	100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

THE TRUE QUESTION.

"Why disturb the faith of the multitude in the absolute truth of the Christian Revelation? Why utter a word against the veracity of the Holy Scriptures, which have done so much for the happiness, the advancement, the virtue of mankind? Why publicly raise questions which unsettle the minds and distress the hearts of thousands who have been educated to believe that all of man's highest good comes through Christianity alone, and who are simply thrown into mental and spiritual confusion by the insidious influences of doubt? Do you not see that Christianity has been the fountain-head of the highest spiritual benefits to man, and that to destroy it is to ensure the return of universal barbarism? Even if you are right in your sceptical opinions, why harass with them the souls of those who are unprepared to comprehend your own substitute for the time-honored religion of Christendom? Truth is relative; it is not the same to all minds; what is one man's meat is another man's poison; and even conceding the truth of Free Religion to those who can comprehend it, it still remains certain that Christianity is the highest truth that can be received by the great majority of the people. Why, then, seek to destroy what you cannot replace, and to snatch the crutch from a cripple whom you can never enable to walk? How can you, as friends of humanity, persist in thus plunging humanity into irretrievable disaster?"

Such in substance, though greatly varied in phrase and tone, is the expostulation of many against the course pursued by the workers in the free religious reform. What shall be said to it?

There is one single thought underlying all these complaints, namely, that Christianity is the best religion for the world whether it is true or false, and that to disturb it, even in the name of truth itself, is a crime against humanity. This idea is not advanced by those undoubting Christians to whom the very suggestion that Christianity is anything less than the absolute truth sounds like blasphemy; but it is the idea substantially held by many others, who deprecate the course of THE INDEX and its sympathizers without so much as fairly inquiring whether its leading ideas are true or not. Among these are many (not all) Unitarians. The Unitarian papers do not seriously grapple with the real questions now fermenting in the people's minds, but actually seem to dread the discussion of them. We have always tried to pursue a fairer course, and think we have justly represented above the feelings and the objections of a large number of persons who now stand aloof from this reform in perplexity, annoyance, and fear. Without undertaking to reply in detail to the complaints we have endeavored, at least, to state impartially, we wish to reply in few words to the one assumption running through them all, namely, that Christianity is the best religion for the world whether true or false.

To one who has learned to love the truth for its own sake, as the highest good of mankind in the very nature of things, there is something peculiarly odious in this assumption. He will have the greatest respect for a Christian who battles for his faith because to him it is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; but he will find it hard to discover any common ground between himself and an opponent who defends it merely on the score of its practical advantages. He cannot admit that truth itself is relative, although man's knowledge of it undoubtedly is; nor that anything but blessing can possibly result in the end from the increase of man's knowledge of it. This postponement of the inquiry into truth itself because error may be sweet and seemingly beneficial—this deliberate butchery of truth at the altar of expediency—seems to him indeed a "crime against humanity," and a crime against God. If error can possibly be better than truth in its influence on human welfare; if ignorance can possibly be more fruitful of virtue, joy or civilization than real and growing knowledge,—why not in despair put out this eye of intelligence in the human soul, and surrender at once to priestly rule? If Christianity is the truth, no doubt it is a terrible mistake, a blunder pregnant with awful woes, to call its claims in

THE INDEX ASSOCIATION:

CONDITIONAL STOCK LIST.

We, the undersigned, subscribers to the capital stock of the Index Association, agree to double our previous subscriptions to said stock on the same terms as before, taking respectively the additional number of shares set opposite to our names in the list below:

PROVIDED, That the full sum of One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000) shall have been subscribed in good faith by the twenty-sixth day of October, 1873,—that is, within one year from the date when THE INDEX passed into the hands of the Index Association.

ALEX. COCHRAN, Franklin, Pa., Five Shares, $500
CHAS. A. GURLEY, Pulaski, N. Y., Two 200
MAX PRAGHT, Cincinnati, Ohio, " 200

$900

The Index.

AUGUST 31, 1873.

The Editor of THE INDEX does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of correspondents or contributors. Its columns are open for the free discussion of all questions included under the general purpose.

N. B.—All letters, business or otherwise, should be addressed to "THE INDEX, Drawer 38, Toledo, Ohio."

In a footnote to the lively dialogue on "Atoms," contained in Sir John Herschel's "Familiar Lectures on Scientific Subjects," facts are stated about the rate of increase of human population which are quite enough to set one's head spinning:—"For the benefit of those who discuss the subjects of Population, War, Pestilence, Famine, &c., it may be as well to mention that the number of human beings living at the end of the hundredth generation, commencing from a single pair, doubling at each generation (say in thirty years), and allowing for each man, woman and child an average space of four feet in height and one foot square, would form a vertical column having for its base the whole surface of the earth and sea spread out into a plane, and for its height 3,674 times the sun's distance from the earth! The number of human strata thus piled one on the other would amount to 460,790,000,000,000." This being only for one hundred generations or three thousand years, we leave it to nimble calculators to compute the number of human beings born in the "hundreds of thousands of years" since the first appearance of man on the planet. If all the "unconverted" eventually tumble into the "lake of fire and brimstone," will some one please cypher out the dimensions of said lake, and inform the bewildered sceptic whether, in order to find room for this fiery fishpond, it will not be necessary to make an addition to infinite space?

Rev. A. E. Kittredge, of Chicago, says in a recent sermon: "Let that little word 'I' drop out entirely from your religious experience, and substitute 'Jesus' in its place." That strikes the key-note of Orthodoxy. You cannot be a good Orthodox Christian without putting out your "I"—or your eye. It matters little which way you spell it; the Orthodox "I" is always blind.

A correspondent writes from a town in the State of New York:—"The priesthood hereabouts call the distributors of Index Tracts 'bad men,' and try to pledge their Sabbath School scholars not to read them."

question. But if it is not the truth, how can any one dare to hint that it is better than Free Religion in its ultimate effects? Such a position is surely the very dellirium of unreason and unfaith. What have we to depend on but the deep conviction that truth alone is the parent of all true happiness and all high virtue, and that man best fulfils his "being's end and aim" by searching for it as the very elixir of life? We dread no athelam but disloyalty to truth; for whoever loves truth with all the deep passion of his soul—loves it so profoundly and absorbingly that he is willing to sell all that he hath to purchase this one pearl of great price, carries the very signet-seal of God in his own heart, and proves the Divine by his life, though honestly denying it with his lips.

It is not, then, a question which any noble spirit will pause long to debate, whether Christianity may not, even though a delusion, be a real benefit to man. On that supposition, the reply leaps swiftly to his tongue—"No! A thousand times no!" The only question he can without self-murder entertain is the question whether Christianity is true or false. That question he will ponder and consider and re-consider, just so long as a shadow of doubt rests over the answer. Once satisfied that there is a higher truth than Christianity, he will be as stable as the rock-ribbed globe itself in the conviction that only that higher truth can bring to man the purest and the noblest peace; he will know that man is blessed just in proportion as he attains the knowledge of that higher truth; and he will do his utmost to make it known to the very ends of the earth, sure that no one who comes within its influence can fail to be made wiser, happier, better. O friends, if Free Religion has nothing else to give the world but this heroic passion for the truth, this divine determination to search for it high and low, early and late, in season and out of season, at all risks and at all sacrifices, it will have contributed to the general enrichment of the race a wealth of purpose and spirit infinitely finer than the very finest gift of Christianity. It will pay a million times over for all the doubt and distress, all the heaviness of heart and travail of soul, that may follow in the wake of religious revolution. That pain must attend all changes of rooted thoughts on matters of great moment, we do not dream of denying. But what a craven is he who will not pay the price of truth, and abides a slave to error rather than submit to the uncomfortable knocking-off of his chains! If this servile spirit of acquiescence in even possible falsehood for the sake of its honey-sweets is indeed the real fruit of the Christian gospel, then welcome, in the name of humanity itself, to the stern and painful tonic of Free Religion! Out of no such wretched bondage to comfort shall the future of the world be born. No, a nobler destiny awaits it. Man loves the truth, with all his faults; and in this love lies germinant the healing herb that shall cure them all.

Not—"Does it pay?" but—"Is it true?" Stoop to put no meaner question to your soul.

CHRONIC MEASLES.

It is hard to imagine that Robert Collyer can have spoken, in any but the brightest or most genial way, of heresies among young men as being merely the "measles" of mental growth. For if spoken seriously, this would be such a very trite and commonplace thing to say, besides being erroneous;—and he is not given to saying what is merely commonplace.

I cannot remember the time when young men about Boston and Cambridge, who had studied theology, were not charged with being, in good Dr. Palfrey's phrase, "mystics, sceptics or dyspeptics." When they had outlived these phrases, they still were pelted with that crushing imputation of youth. They were constantly told that if they lived long enough and behaved themselves, they would believe as their fathers did. All doubts and difficulties would vanish; in five years they would believe in the miracle of the loaves and fishes; ten years would give them the miraculous birth of Jesus; and all the five points of Calvinism would come to them, for aught I know, at the rate of one point per decade.

Meantime let them keep silence, or testify with a mental reservation, uttering what they were supposed to think, and hoping, with honest Dogberry, that it might "come to be thought so, presently."

Whose were those stirring words that we used to declaim, in those days:—"The unfortunate crime of being a young man, which the honorable gentleman has with such spirit and justice charged upon me, I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny, but content myself with wishing that I may be one of those whose follies may cease with their youth," etc. etc.? But our youth never ceased—if free thinking must imply youth,—nor, if free thinking be a folly, did our follies. Twenty-five years have passed since Frothingham and Longfellow and Johnson and myself, for instance, were first held up as flagrant examples of immature youth and intellectual "measles." And now, if our youth lasts, it can only be because these measles have become chronic and have kept us forever young.

No doubt in some cases the result has been otherwise. But I can certainly declare, looking back upon a generation, that nine out of ten of those brought up around me are, at least, as heretical in their forties, as in their twenties, and that those who have renounced their early faith are not, as a rule, the most studious or thoughtful or earnest. This being the case, it seems to me better to tell young men the truth. If they feel obliged by conscience and reason, at twenty-five, to believe in Natural Religion, and to reject the exclusive claims of the Christian church, they will probably hold these opinions at forty-five, but more strongly. By that time, they will have tested their faith,—will have carried it through study and action, joy and sorrow, and to the verge of life and death. Their early disease, if such it was, will have grown chronic; or rather, let us hope that what was charged upon them as disease, will have proved to be health and happiness and strength.

T. W. H.

GREAT-MAN THEORY OF HISTORY.

Some persons, as Herbert Spencer says, see in the course of civilization only the record of remarkable persons and their doings. The history of a nation is to them simply a history of her rulers; who invaded England, and when; what Alfred did and what Canute said; who fought at Agincourt and who conquered at Flodden; how many wives Henry VIII had, and how many dresses Queen Bess, etc. The king on his throne has been the historian's point of light. He was the hub of history; all events circled round him. As geologists talk about the Age of stone, bronze and iron, the historian talks about the Age of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Anne, of Charlemagne and Louis XVI, of Frederick the Great, and Peter the Great, etc. Kings and queens are made the pivot of centuries—are regarded as the cause of events rather than an accidental and often an insignificant result of general historical forces. "D'état c'est moi," said Louis XIV, and historians have granted the monstrous assumption.

The titles which we have given to rulers are an evidence of our hero-worshipping tendency, and of our faith in the Great-man theory of history. Some king's soldiers win a battle, and people immediately dub him "the Great;" another gives his old clothes to beggars, and he goes down to posterity as "the Good;" another is fair faced, and is immortalized as "the Beautiful;" another is brave, and is christened "the Lion Heart;" and thus it is that we give exclusive titles to rulers, simply because they happen to be rulers, as though they belonged to some distinct and superior species—were the mastodons among men.

Washington is sometimes called the "Father of his Country," and Lincoln the "Savior of the Nation;" and they deserve those honorable titles if any men could. But such language robs the laurels from the brow of Franklin and Adams, Warren and Greene, of revolutionary days, and usurps the glory that belongs to a million soldiers who fought to save our country in the late rebellion. Such titles as "Father" or "Savior" of our country are, strictly speaking, merited by no man. We can be grateful, and still be just to our country's benefactors. We believe this great-naming practice springs from the Great-man theory of history. And this Great-man theory is so simple, as Herbert Spencer shows, it is no wonder it was accepted. It is easy to say, "Lincoln was the Savior of his country," and rest there, without investigation of the record to see how much he did or did not do to save it.

But when we come to look at history as a whole, to take a bird's-eye view of the centuries and see the wide-sweeping operation of general causes, then individuals do not loom above the masses but blend with them, like icebergs melting in the gulf stream, and are borne along by the broad gulf stream of thought, of which the "great" king is but a drop. The great man is the product of the age. He must be classed with all other phenomena in the society that gave him birth, as the product of its antecedents. "Along with the whole generation of which he forms a minute part—along with its institutions, language, knowledge, manners, and its multitudinous arts and appliances, he is a resultant of an enormous aggregate of causes that have been co-operating for ages." A Newton was never born among the Hottentots, nor a Milton among the Patagonians, nor a Howard or Clarkson or Garrison among the Fiji Islanders. "If," says Herbert Spencer, "it be a fact that the great man may modify his nation in its structure and actions, it is also a fact that there must have been these antecedent modifications constituting material progress before he could be evolved. Before he can make his society, his society must make him."

If this principle is true of political history, why is it not true of religious history? In order to account for a religious genius like Jesus, Christians have ascribed to him a supernatural origin. It seemed inconceivable that a plain man like Joseph the Carpenter could have been the father of so divine a son, and therefore Jesus must have been begotten of the Holy Ghost. This is the easy, short-cut explanation.

Since we cannot see the ante-natal causes of the babe of Bethlehem, cannot see the ancestral blood and brain that fruited in Jesus, it is easier and quicker to assume that his paternity was supernatural, and at once get rid of perplexing genealogical inquiries,—as the child refers his origin to the storks or the ubiquitous doctor.

In the infancy of the race the gestation and parturition of great characters is conveniently explained by saying,—"They were begotten of the Holy Ghost." The birth, life, and death of Jesus were looked upon as miraculous, simply because men could not see the thread of law which strung these events. It was the habit of thought to explain extraordinary phenomena by the power of God or the work of the Devil. The heavens were full of miracles; no wonder if a god should drop to earth, or spring from a virgin, or rise from the dead, or ascend to heaven bodily after death.

But to-day the heavens and earth are full of law, and the presumption is that the man Jesus was a product of law, lived according to law, and died because he was killed by wicked men, according to law. And Christianity instead of being regarded as a supernatural religion, resting upon Christ as the corner-stone, is beginning to be looked upon as a natural outgrowth of the times, the expression of the brain and heart of the last eighteen centuries, one religion among many, and to be studied in comparison with other religions, and measured by the same rules of historical criticism. The result of this we believe will be that Jesus will no longer be regarded as a God, a Savior, a supernatural or anomalous being, but as a radical human reformer, like hundreds of others—the natural offspring of Jewish parents and Jewish ideas—and that he was not the cause of Christianity, but simply the initiator of it, or one of the initiators (as Garrison was of the anti-slavery movement); that Jesus was not the fountain but a tributary of the modern current of religious thought; that Christianity, as loosely called by some, is not trap dike shot up through the historical crust during the first century, but the slow sedimentary deposit of ideas

F. R. A. REPORT.

The pamphlet Report of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for the present year is now ready for distribution.

It contains the report of the Executive Committee; Essays, by John W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by Chas. D. B. Mills on the question—"Does Religion represent a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind or is it a Perishable Superstition?" and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity;" and addresses and remarks by Dr. Bartol, A. B. Alcott, Lucretia Mott, Celia Burleigh, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Price of the Pamphlet Thirty-five cents. For this sum it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on addressing the undersigned at New Bedford, Mass.

Members of the Association who have paid the annual fee, and those who will now make themselves members by the payment of One Dollar, will receive the Report without additional cost.

WM. J. POTTER,

Secretary

Communications.

N. B.—Correspondents must run the risk of typographical errors. The utmost care will be taken to avoid them; but here after no space will be spared to Errata.

N. B.—Illegibly written articles stand a very poor chance of publication.

COUNTER-CRITICISMS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Permit me to offer a reply to some criticisms on my lecture on "Materialism," which have appeared in THE INDEX recently.

To "K. N." I have only to say that no intelligent materialist claims or believes that he "has any better proof of the existence of matter than he has of the existence of mind or thought." When an individual assumes his own existence, he necessarily assumes the reality of mind or thought. But that mind or thought is an entity, that it does or can exist independently of a material basis, even if true, is not a self-evident truth, and therefore cannot properly be assumed or taken for granted. "K. N.'s" communication shows not only confusion of thought, but misapprehension of the real issue between the Theist and the Atheist.

Another critic, "C. E. M.," in your issue of the 10th, says:—"So far as we know, all laws and processes, together with their results, are due to Intelligence." If by this statement nothing more is meant than that the laws which men make, and the work which they perform, are due to intelligence, no one will contradict it; but if the writer means to assert more than this—means to say that any of the natural laws or processes are due to intelligence, the statement begs the whole question, and takes for granted what the Theist should at least attempt to establish by proof.

Simply because men make rules to govern or restrain the conduct of intelligent beings, and form and carry out plans, it by no means follows that the laws of nature and the operations of the universe are also ascribable to intelligence. The laws of Nature are Nature's uniform modes of action. If matter is eternal, as Theists like Mr. Abbot as well as Atheists believe, its laws must be eternal also, unless matter once existed without laws. Can we imagine matter existing without laws? By the law of gravitation every particle of matter in the universe attracts every other particle with a force which diminishes as the square of the distance increases. This is one of the most wonderful laws of Nature. "Were the matter of the universe," says Tyndall, "cast in cold, detached fragments into space, and these abandoned to the mutual gravitation of its own parts, the collision of the fragments would in the end produce the fires of the stars. The action of gravity upon matter, originally cold, may in fact be the origin of all light and heat, and the proximate source of other such powers as are generated by light and heat." Shall we say that matter has always existed, but that there was a time when there was no gravitation—when there was no attraction between either particles or masses of matter? To grant the eternity of matter, and to claim an origin for its uniform modes of action or sequences of motion, seems to me most absurd. If it be said the laws of Nature are eternal, but nevertheless dependent on God since they are the expressions of his will, I reply they are not, then, due to intelligence; for if they had no beginning, if they are the eternal expression of an Eternal Will, they cannot have been caused by intelligence any more than God himself. On the supposition that the laws of Nature are the eternal decrees of God (if such an absurd expression may be used), they are just as inexplicable as on the theory that regards them simply as the eternal and necessary modes by which the action of matter on matter is performed.

On the supposition of a Deity, we must believe he exists in accordance with laws over which he has no control, and which are co-eternal with him, the laws of his being, the laws, for instance, by which he exists, perceives his plan, and acts on matter. These laws are not due to intelligence, surely, and they must be quite as wonderful as any of the laws of the material world. But if there are laws which are not ascribable to and exist independently of intelligence, intelligence cannot be logically inferred from the mere existence of laws.

Again. Our critic says:—"We should laugh at the idea of a beautiful work of art being produced by force alone, because mere force as we know it is not only insufficient for any such definite result, but is incapable of any kind of continuous motion."

In this statement, the real position taken in my lecture is ignored, namely, that thought is a form of force. The Materialist takes the ground that, as the forms of the organic world contain no elements that do not exist in the inorganic world, so the former have no forces that are not in the latter: that, as Tyndall observes, "it is the compounding in the organic world of forces belonging equally to the inorganic that constitutes the mystery and the miracle of vitality," that as light is converted into electricity, electricity into magnetism, magnetism into mechanical force, etc., so there is reason to believe that the unintelligent forces of the egg, in its development into a chick, are converted into life and thought. This is the real position for the Theist to assail. Nobody imagines that the mere uncombined energy of heat and light can produce an Iliad or a locomotive.

The statement that force as we know it is incapable of sustaining continuous motion of any kind, is obviously incorrect; at least it is an assumption in flat contradiction to the teachings of modern science. The revolution of this earth on its axis and around the sun is a "continuous motion." Is it not due to fire?

Again:—"So when we see around us innumerable intricate and beautiful forms, we naturally, and I think justly, refer them to intelligence; because, if not that, it is something analogous to it, although infinitely superior to it, it must be confessed."

Works of art are evidence to us of intelligence, not, as is popularly supposed, because they show beauty and fitness, but because we have learned that they are the work of intelligent beings. We trace the connection from design up to an intelligent designer, because we have before traced the connection down from the designer to the design. We reason from the watch to the watchmaker, because we have learned that men make watches. We cannot infer in the same manner that the productions of Nature are the result of a Divine intelligence, for we have never seen God, nor have we ever learned anything about him. It may be said, however, that when for the first time we see a work of art, we infer from its resemblance to other human productions that it, too, was made by man; and since there is some analogy between some of the works of art which we know are the work of intelligence and some of the productions of Nature with whose cause we are unacquainted, may we not reasonably infer that the latter, like the former, have been produced by a conscious, intelligent, designing Being? I think not; but the length of this article induces me to defer anything like a statement of my reasons until some other time.

As Atkinson says:—"Man designs; Nature is." Unquestionably there is the appearance of design in some of Nature's productions; but I believe this appearance is wholly illusory. The design evidently exists only in the human mind. "It is reflecting reason," says Kant, "which brought design into the world, and which admires a wonder created by itself;" or, as Humboldt expresses it, man "uses Nature as a mirror wherein are reflected the properties of his own being." Man calculates, contrives, forms plans, and uses means to accomplish his purposes, because he can neither perceive all truth at a glance nor carry out his wishes by a magical fiat. Because he thus designs, he supposes God designs, forgetting that contrivance and the use of means imply ignorance and weakness, or limited power. In like manner, because man has intelligence and love, he ascribed these qualities to Deity. As a rigid analysis of our conceptions of God shows that the predicates of God are only our own qualities, so I believe that, reduced to its simplest form, the belief in God is but a belief in our own existence; that in affirming God's existence, we but indirectly affirm our own; and that anthropology is the true key to theology.

The complicated and beautiful forms of Nature are indeed wonderful; but the believers in a Deity, in order to sustain their position, have something more to do than to go into ecstasies over these productions. The theory of Mr. Darwin, through nearly nineteen hundred years. As Jesus drew inspiration from Jewish Rabbins, from the lilies and sparrows, Beecher draws inspiration from Darwin and Tyndall, from Patent Office Reports and New York papers, possibly. One is the product of Judea, the other of America. To account for the religion of Jesus you must have a chart of his head, and peep into the books that made his library, and into other influences that educated him—a history, in fact, of the age that bore him. Then we should probably see that the Holy Ghost was several centuries in begetting him. And to account for Beecher you must have something more than Judea, Jesus and the Bible. You must have something of all these, besides a part of England, Germany, France and America thrown in—a little of Jesusism plus a good deal of Beecherism.

So modern "Christianity," which such a man as Beecher very well represents, is a compound of the gospel according to Matthew and Mark, John and Paul, added to revelations according to "profane" history and comparative religions, plus the gospels of astronomy, geology, biology, sociology, and all inventions and discoveries in mind and matter since the Christian era. As to understand our national history we must know something besides the biography of the "Father of his Country," so to understand our religion we must study something besides the lives of Christ. The history of religion, like that of kingdoms, is not simply a history of a few kings or great men, but is the resultant of many and complex social forces, the product of antecedents reaching through many generations, the effect of causes deeper than the working of a few "miracles,"—causes that can only be fully understood when we learn the laws of mental and moral evolution. The man Jesus is only one of the factors in the product, religion as it exists to-day.

W. H. S.

PARKER PILLSBURY STILL FOR THE WEST.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Permit a single correction of your types in my lecture honored with insertion in your gallant little INDEX of the 17th instant.

Near the bottom of last column but one, a paragraph begins:—"Some of you remember our early struggles against the slave power, &c." The word remember was printed surrender. But in that strife, we abolitionists knew no surrender, in our doings or dictionaries.

With your kind permission, I wish to state that during the autumn my field of labor will be chiefly Ohio, with head-quarters at Toledo. I have already accepted a few calls, commencing at Ashfield, Mass., on the 18th inst., and go to Painesville, Ohio, for the 25th, the last Sunday in August.

I can make a few more engagements for single lectures or short courses, if applications are made soon. Readers of THE INDEX know something of my manner and subjects.

My friends at Salem, Ohio, where I have already spent two winters and am expected again next winter, agree with me that, during the mild autumn weather, my work may be worth more to the cause if diffused abroad than if all devoted to one place. When cold weather comes, declining health compels me into winter-quarters, accordingly.

It is pleasant to find that, even in the din and strife of party politics, always so violent in a presidential canvass, there are some brave men and noble women, determined to sustain also our great enterprise for Truth and Freedom, and keep its banner still gallantly flying, whatever breezes blow or tempests prevail. Desiring ever to be found worthy to stand at the side of such,

I am truly yours, from the field,

PARKER PILLSBURY.

It is commonly claimed that the solution of the problem how to get rid of intemperance awaits only the arrival of woman suffrage. That is a dreary blunder. It awaits the arrival of Free Religion in the head and heart of every individual. Suffrage, whether male or female, can never deal with that problem. Look for its solution to education, industry and virtue.

if true, and it is gaining ground every day among scientific men, pretty effectually disposes of the teleological view of Nature, and takes from the popular illustrations of the design argument nearly all their force and appositeness.

I think, Mr. Editor, that in your comments on the communication of "C. E. M." you have stated clearly the issue between theism and atheism. Allow me, in conclusion, to say that I admire the fairness and candor with which, while earnestly maintaining your own position, you treat the other schools of thought.

Respectfully,
B. F. UNDERWOOD.
THORNDIKE, Mass., Aug. 14, 1872.

REV. J. D. FULTON.

BY REV. E. C. TOWNE.

NEW HAVEN, Aug. 11, 1872.

Rev. J. D. Fulton, who took so much pains to bestow Charles Dickens in hell not long since, preached this morning in New Haven, and I went to hear him. I expected to see a gaunt, severe man, of the sort that seem to have some right to be severe and grim in their theology. Imagine, then, my surprise when there skipped in a rather dressed-up performer, a man of good size and in good flesh, who was evidently so tickled with the thought of the figure he was cutting that he could not help smiling almost audibly. It was the self-consciousness of a boy, and was all the more ridiculous in a man of over forty, the top of whose head is nearly bald. In my ready sympathy I had put on a countenance of Puritan gravity, and was expecting to see an evangelist worthy of such a reception; when, behold, a jolly youngster of forty-five, a bald-headed, grinning school-boy, putting himself on exhibition! I could hardly help laughing right out in meeting. If a laugh had been appropriate to the place, mine would have been as hearty as if Mr. Fulton had intended to produce a comic effect. But being in a place of worship, with so ridiculous a prospect, I heartily wished myself away. Juvenile comedy done by boys as big as Mr. Fulton is the most disgusting substitute for religion which I can imagine. The fun of it beamed out all over Mr. Fulton, except that he was evidently disappointed at not seeing the church full; and I had to settle myself to a jolly dose from this theological Artemus Ward.

The first thing was a few words meant for prayer. When Mr. Fulton prays, he uses the same tone which a negro minstrel would in getting off a good thing. He speaks to the audience undisguisedly, and in a familiar, free and easy tone, as if with a slap on every man's back, and a chuckle of conceit. To open his service, he thus, with closed eyes, remarked to the audience that he thanked the Lord that he had the pleasure, &c.—he did not say of performing before this audience, but that was the spirit of it. In his long prayer, he similarly said to the Lord:—"It's a hot day, but, if we have a gale from heaven, we'll have a royal time!" And at one point he exclaimed:—"Isn't it grand, Father!" and you could almost see him give the Lord a slap on the back of familiar recognition. In a portion, however, of his prayer, there was a subdued and tender feeling for a moment, and a tone more like that of address to a higher Power.

The sermon was the most distressing mixture of snivel, snuffle, and conceit, with a little Orthodox commonplace. "Complete in Christ"—was its subject, and its great burden was sentimental egotism. "A Christian is independent of the world. He is king of everything. God and I are enough. The world may not know much about him, but the bulletin will be read every day in Heaven. We are right and the whole world is wrong"—these are specimen sentences from the jerky harangue which Mr. Fulton gave as a sermon. The sermon was written, but was more than doubled in length by extemporization of stories, whining exhortations, and claptrap declamation. To perform these parts, Mr. Fulton would swing out at the side of the desk, lean against it, and throw one leg across in front of the other, with foot resting on toe, and with perhaps a thumb in waistcoat pocket, while with half-closed eyes he piped out a sing-song of pious anecdote and sentimental exclamation, with a nasal twang, only saved from being blasphemous twaddle by the evident want of intellect of the performer. The man is a pious animal; he has about as much mind as a highly intelligent circus beast; and he evidently does as well as he knows, in swinging himself on to one leg, and saying "gee-zo-zus" through his nose, some twenty dozen times in the course of what he calls a sermon. He has a soft voice, not fine or pure, but sentimental and female; and sent out by the nose, it suggests the absence of intellect as much as many of the cries of animals do. And that is the explanation of the man—arrest of intellectual development while still a boy, and excess of sentimental piety.

To such persons as this Fulton is now largely left the attempt to keep the old fashion of Orthodoxy still above ground. It would be too much to say "keep it alive;" for it is a funeral wake which these feeble-minded sentimentalists celebrate, not a prolonged life. The thing is dead, and the best that can now be done is to string out the old hacks in procession, and ride round in honor of it, until that also becomes too foolish and futile to be continued any longer.

It is next to impossible to hear anywhere nowadays a really strong Orthodox sermon. The uncompromising Orthodoxy is rattled off by a few big boys, and a good many small ones, who never get beyond sensational declamation, the weakness of which is almost blasphemous. If religion were kept in the world by no other means than this, it would go out, like a burned-out lamp, with a very bad smell. Just in proportion as we find mind and heart, real power of intellect and sensibility, we find a leaning towards radicalism. It cannot but be so, with all the light which is poured into the world in our age; and, in fact, it is so, and every day more and more. The time must soon come when "radical" will be synonymous with intelligent, truthful, learned, and when ignorance alone will be a cover for such gross heathenism as Fulton is an illustration of.

EXPLANATORY.

MR. ABBOT:—

Dear Sir,—In THE INDEX of August 10th, Mr. LaRoy Sunderland has a communication which represents me as having preferred a "very serious" charge against Free Religion, namely, that it is "utterly powerless" in providing for the great, the transcendent want of humanity. Not even suspecting that I had done anything of the kind, at least in the unqualified sense here expressed, and knowing myself to be even an enthusiastic adherent of the cause of Free Religion as maintained by Mr. Abbot and his able corps of contributors, I was for a moment bewildered, and indeed pained. But remembering one or two kind remarks appended to my communication by Mr. Abbot himself, which contained no such imputation against me, I breathed more freely and recovered my equanimity.

Still, a word of explanation may not be out of place or be without its use even now, since Mr. Sunderland, to whom I impute no intentional misrepresentation of my meaning, may have given currency to the notion that I am an enemy to the cause of Free Religion.

I was defending Spiritualism against an attack not only appearing in, but deriving "aid and comfort" from, the principal organ of Free Religion. This led me to the consideration of the professed neutrality of the latter respecting a future state. I took this neutrality, not as a fault to be complained of, but as a fact to be used in favor of Spiritualism, which professes to occupy itself with the great question of man's future. I did not mean to disparage Free Religion (which has its own proper sphere of activity), but to set forth the separate value of Spiritualism, which professes fully to meet a human want which I have, rightly or erroneously, placed above every other want of man. Up to this point, namely, the question of a future state, both systems go hand in hand together; and although they here part company (temporarily I hope), the Spiritualist is and must be a Free Religionist—not only in time but in eternity—so long as the soul desires to drink at the fountain of truth and the fountain itself does not become dry.

